PAGEANT OF NATIONS AT MAY FESTIVAL

Education Committee of Quincy Womens' Club Interest the Children

Marches and Dances Richly Staged at Music Hall

A Pageant of Nations, in which 186 children from all parts of the city participated, was given in Music hall this afternoon at the annual May Day festival of the Education Committee of the Quincy Women's Club. A hall full or happy care free children accompanied by their mothers, comprised the audience and as each succeeding number appeared shouts of joy and handclapping greeted the performers.

Many who did not purchase tickets in advance were unable to obtain admission to the hall.

The presentation of the pageant was after the Old English custom and was a new departure. Its success while assured from the start proved to be so complete that a similar observance will be held next year.

The Pageant of Nations consisted of stage pictures of beauty, marches and dances, all richly and elaborately staged, and those who took part were attractively costumed.

The pageant opened with the grand presentation of participants to the matrons and the reception to Miss Margery Pinkham, the May Queen, who after being enthroned and crowned waves her sceptre and dismisses those in her court. The matrons were Mrs. Chandler W. Smith. Mrs. Charles A. Spear, Mrs Theophilus King. Mrs. Herbert Pinkham, Mrs. Nathaniel S. Hunting and Mrs. Charles R. Safford.

The first part of the program consisting of the American revelries, brought out the character of the Negro, the Indian, the American farmer, sailors girls, an enthusiastic mock fight, concluding with the Camp Fire Girls and the war dance of the American Indian. All wore the costume of their parts Miss Florence Barker appeared in a solo dance, skilfully executed, and the act closed with tableaux.

The second part, containing many delightful novelties, opened with the appearance of dashing little Blue Birds and was followed by gay and jaunty American jockey girls, the poetry of the Norwegian Mountain Climbers, the courtly Colonial Gavotte, concluding with the May Pole dance. Miss Florence Barker gave a Greek solo dance in this act.

MAY SALE AT ATLANTIC

Under Auspices of the Ladies Benevolent Society

The annual May basket sale and entertainment given by the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Atlantic Memorial church, in the vestry on Wednesday afternoon and evening, met with its usual success in spite of the weather.

The evening's entertainment opened with the farce "A Paper Match," which met with great success at the Easter sale and was repeated by request. The cast included, as before, Miss Hazel Davison, as Aunt Sophronia; Miss Margaret Read, as Rose White, her niece; Arthur Hall as Sam Hunt; and Ralph Knapp, Atlantic's foremost young actor, as Corporal Hezikiah Jehosephat Brown.

Following the drama, August Fchaffer, of Boston, rendered several zither solos. His first selection was an original march, and to the long and hearty aplause, he responded with "The Swan Song" from Lohengrin and "The Odor of the Roses" by Bohm.

The next number was a reading, entitled "Rosa," by Miss Maud E. Read, this being read by request. Miss Read, who is a graduate of the Leland Powers school of oratory, is a great favorite in Atlantic and responded to a prolonged applause with "My Rival," by Kipling, and to a second call with "Minor Reflections."

Mr. Fchaffer played "The Pilgrims Chorus" by request. To the generous aplause, he responded with "Step Quick Polka" by Longing and as a second encore, "Hungarian Melodies" and third, "To Meet Again." This is the first time Atlantic people have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Fchaffer, but they showed that they hoped it would not be the last.

The program closed with duets by Miss Maud E. Read and Mrs. Harvey Holt, their selections were "Barcorola," and "On Rosy Wings of Summer."

Mrs. William Cummings was in charge of the sale, assisted by several other members of the Benevolent Society and much credit is due to them for its success.

NEARLY 100 YEARS OLD.

Mrs. Susan J. Lund died at the home of her daughter Florence H. Adams North Weymouth, Thursday at the age of 96 years and 3 months. She was born Jan. 12, 1818, on Fleet street, at the north end of Boston. Her father was sexton of "Father" Streeter's church on Hanover street. She passed her early life in that city, attended the Hancock school, being a schoolmate of Mary A. Livermore. She was married to John H. Lund, moving to Milford, N. H., about 1857, where she spent many years of her life. After the death of her son, George H. Lund in 1897, she went to live with her daughter. She was a member of the W. R. C., until her removal from Milford. She leaves a granddaughter, Beatrice F. Adams, book-keeper at Nathan Ames hardware store.

SCHOOL BOYS ARE ANXIOUS

May Lose Merrymount Park for Base Ball Games

No one in the city is more interested in the proposed mobilization of troops of the regular army on Merrymount Park than the grammar school pupils, who, if the order comes from President Wilson to take possession of the field so as to turn the Coast Artillery into infantry, will lose the lower field where they intend to play all their American league games. The field is large enough for two games, and is said to be the only one that has this accommodation in the city.

Dr. J. Gardiner Smith is anxiously awaiting the outcome of the Mexican crisis, because on that alone depends the success of the grammar school base ball season. He has repeatedly assured the players that beyond a doubt the schedule can be played without any interference.

During the past few days at the practice grounds, the boys and rooters have discussed the possibility of the regular army coming here, but their patriotism seemed to surmount their base ball enthusiasm, and they are apparently willing to put up with any inconveniences in order that Uncle Sam can make a good showing across the border line.

The opening games will be played next Tuesday afternoon when the Cranch meets Wollaston and the Montclair team faces the Atherton Hough.

The opening of the National league takes place Wednesday afternoon, when the Adams and Massachusetts Field play on the Ward Three playground, and the Gridley Bryants and the Coddington on the Old Colony league grounds.

Wollaston women and children and also others who live in the vicinity of Park lane are fearful that they may lose their bathing beaches at Blacks creek this summer.

EXTENSION OF BOULEVARD

Mayor Urges Metropolitan Board to Begin Work

A determined effort is being made to have the Metropolitan Park Commissioners commence work on the completion of the boulevard from the Quincy Shore Reservation to Hancock street for which the sum of $100,000 has been appropriated. The Commissioners say that the job cannot be completed for the amount named, but Mayor Miller informed the commissioners that he would be willing to give a bond to complete the job for that amount.

The contention of the commissioners was that in order to complete the job for the amount available the street would have to be narrower, and that later when more money was available it could be widened to its full width.

At the hearing held before the Commissioners the Mayor stated that the Park Commission had taken a large amount of taxable property from the city, for which the city had derived no direct benefit, and that the boulevard should be completed as far as Hancock street to make it available for use.

The Metropolitan Park Commissioners claimed that they had two years in which to complete the work, but the Mayor urged that it be commenced at once. It was pointed out that while other parts of the district had been taken care of, and boulevards built, Quincy seemed to have been sidetracked in some manner.

The hearing was attended by Representatives Sullivan and Sandberg and several citizens all of whom spoke and urged that the work be undertaken at an early date.

After the hearing the commissioners promised to begin work on the boulevard as soon as the plans were completed.

GENERAL ALARM AT BRAINTREE

Long's Block Fire Threatened the Whole Block

An alarm from box 34 at Braintree at 3.30 o'clock this morning, followed almost immediately by a second, with the third about ten minutes later, called out the entire fire department to a blaze in Long's block at the corner of Elm and Railroad streets.

The flames, which had gained considerable headway when discovered, evidently started in the room on the second story on the Elm street side, used by the janitor as a store room for various supplies needed in the upkeep of the building.

The fire worked its way up to the roof, but the good work of the department aided by the fact that the light wind was from the northwest, no doubt saved the town from a conflagration.

On the top floor are the rooms of the Braintree Athletic Association and Long's hall with various smaller apartments on the second floor.

On the street floor are the Braintree pharmacy, the Navillus market store of Clarence L. Smith, the Braintree pharmacy, the Navillus market and Chin Bing's laundry. The United States mail some of the contents of the stores, and a large quantity of laundry ready for delivery were removed from the building.

The greater portion of the roof was consumed but the principal damage resulted from the deluge of water which was necessary to drown out the flames.

The fine gymnasium of the B. A. A. on the upper floor was badly damaged, both by smoke and water. The proximity of many wooden buildings to the fire caused their occupants much uneasiness, as all the structures in the section bounded by Elm, Railroad and River streets were in the danger zone. The "all out" was sounded at 5.15 o'clock.

The invitation dance and May pole features which were to be given in Long's hall this evening by the Braintree A. A. will be held in Cochato hall.

The loss is estimated at $15,000 of which $8,000 is on bulding and $7,000 by the tenants.

COMEDIES BY GARDNER CLUB

"Be'sy Baker" and "Done on Both Sides" Presented

Two English comedies were given in Colonial hall Thursday evening under the auspices of the Gardner club of Christ church to a crowded house. Those who took part in the playlets given last year were the guests of the evening and were presented with enormous bouquets of sweet peas.

The characters in "Betsy Baker," the first comedy, were Everett Andrews, as Mr. Mouser, too attentive by half; R. Ellis Young, as Mr. Crummy, his junior partner; Miss Louise Moyle, as Mrs. Mouser, Miss Olive Barnicoat as Betsy Baker.

The second comedy was "Done on Both Sides." Everett McLaughlin was Mr. Whiffles, and Miss Cora Barnicoat was Mrs. Whiffles. Henry Boutilier impersonated Mrs. Lydia Whiffles, and Dr. Thomas H. Veale took the part of Pygmalion Phibbs.

The comedies were presented in a way that brought out their finer points. Erastus Osgood was the coach and superintended the stage management.

The ushers of the evening were Everett Prout, Fred Barnicoat, Vernon Birnie and Earl Bill. Dancing followed and was enjoyed until 11.30, music being furnished by Gould's orchestra of Braintree.

Between the two comedies Verner Birnie sang "Clang of the forge," and Elton Chase sang, "My Dream," and for an encore an Italian song entitled ""Suol Dar la Vita All'or."

GRAND CLEAN-UP AT THE SHIPYARD

Several of the Smaller Buildings Are Being Razed and Removed

Other Stuff Is Being Burned in Large Bonfires

Evidently the Fore River shipyard is having a spring cleaning. Huge bonfires have been observed in the yard this week especially near the office building. It is said that orders have been given to discard and destroy everything that is obsolete and unnecessary. On the bonfires were noticed many plans that have been prepared probably in anticipation of contracts. also books and even office furnishings no longer wanted.

Reconstruction work is in full swing in the shipyard at the present time, and a large amount of work is being done. Visitors to the yard will remember that there were a large number of small wooden buildings used for various purposes scattered throughout the yard. It is these buildings that are disappearing as fast as the workmen engaged can raze them. Some of the old lumber is being burned up in the yard while some of it is being carried off, the buildings having been purchased by Representative Sandberg who is tearing them down and carting off the old lumber.

One of the main structures being torn down is the old shed within which the submarines were constructed. This building has been occupied by a large crane.

The other buildings that have been torn down are to be replaced with steel structures which will be covered with iron. In other words it is a grand clean up of the yard and about one hundred workmen are engaged in the work.

CAUGHT WITH 492 SMELTS

Game Commissioner Tribou and five of his deputies made a haul of smelters at the herring brook in East Weymouth about 5.30 this morning and arrested five smelters having in their possession 492 smelts and several seins. According to the game officers, some of the hmen were down the brook beating it with sticks driving the smelts up the river to a point where the other men stood with seins scooping them in. The five men were brought to Quincy early this morning all handcuffed together. Later they were arraigned in court.

NO TRANSFER FOR NAVY YARD

The Boston navy yard is having a fight in Congress to get that transfer of $148,000 to fit up the yard for shipbuiding. The vote Thursday was 69 to 4 in favor, but the point was raised of no quorum, and the House adjourned.

Commencing Sunday, May 3, the Epworth League of the Hall Place M. E. church will hold devotional service at 6 P. M. instead of 6.15. The service will close promptly at 6.55.

That was an interesting bit of yachting history which James L. Edwards gave Daily Ledger readers on Wednesday, recalling the yachts and skippers of 1874, forty years ago. Some of the veterans of today will remember the races of 30 to 40 years ago when all the entries were Quincy boats and great local rivalry existed, particularly between the Wildfire, Dolly Varden, Dolphin, Here-We-Are, Louisa, Fanny and Lizzie.

DEMOCRACY OF TRAVEL.

A leading railroad company recently cut off the customary supply of bread and butter from its dining cars and made a special extra charge of 10 cents for the same. The incident while unimportant in itself, has started some criticism as one of many tendencies that bear hard on the ordinary traveller.

If a fashionable hotel, patronized by those of social pretensions, introduces extra expense or frills and fads the public can go somewhere else. But a railroad is the broad highway which all sorts and conditions of men are forced to use. On long distance trains there should be comfortable eating arrangements for all. The drummer, the school teacher, or the workingman, should not be compelled to scramble for food when the train stops five minutes. It is not fair that they should have to gulp down a dyspeptic lunch at the standup counter, while their neighbor eats a high priced meal in quiet and peace in the dinner.

Formerly the railroad charged a fixed price for all dining car meals, commonly $1.00. Ordinarily while travelling, two square meals, with a bite between, would be enough. Yet if one merely wanted a banana and a few saltines, he must go into the diner and pay his dollar.

Many roads have made a strong bid for popularity lately by running a lunch counter on trains. Not many of them keep the old custom of a high table d'hote meal at fixed prices.

Some railroad restaurants put on Smart Set manners by stationing a boy at the door to take coats and hats, he expecting a tip for his unasked service. The tipping system is particularly obnoxious when it is enforced by waiters and others in the democracy of the railroad dining room. Railroad travel should provide simple fare and customs for all who desire to travel inexpensively.

THE HOME LAND.

My land was the west land, my home was on the hill,
I never think of my land but it makes my heart to thrill;
I never smell the west wind that blows the golden skies
But old desire is in my feet and dreams are in my eyes.

My home crowned the highland, it had a stately grace;
I never think of my land but I see my mother's face.
I never smell the west wind that blows the silver ships
But old delight is in my heart and youth is on my lips.

My land was a high land; my house was near the skies;
I never think of my land but a light is in my eyes.
I never smell the west wind that blows the summer rain
But I am at my mother's knee a little lad again.

A SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES

Huerta Agrees With United States Upon That Point

CARRANZA IMPORTANT FACTOR

Not Made Clear Whether Dictator's Acceptance Applies Also to Constitutionalist Leader—Each Will Probably Send Representatives to Deal With Mediators, Who Are Making Progress In Plans For Peace—European Powers Are Lending Influence to South Americans

Washington, May 1.—Restrained but steady preparation for any military eventualities, and the quiet but definite progress of the mediation program being worked out behind closed doors—these are the two outstanding features of the Mexican situation here.

The three mediation envoys of Argentine, Brazil and Chile continue their private sittings. Their first move for an armistice was succeeded by the virtual suspension of hostilities, or a truce, between the forces of the United States and the Huerta regime, although the conflict between the Huerta and Carranza forces continues.

Word From Mexico

General Huerta last night accepted the proposal that there be no further hostilities between the United States and Mexico, pending the efforts of the envoys of Argentine, Brazil and Chile to bring about an amicable settlement of difficulties between the countries.

Advices from Chihuahua say significantly that "the preparations now being made by Villa to take the field with 15,000 troops against the Mexican federal garrison at Saltillo are the best answer to any possible request by the Latin-American countries for a cessation of hostilities between the federals and the constitutionalists.

No Acts of Aggression

Secretary Bryan formally notified the three South American envoys that the American government took it for granted that there would be no hostilities during the mediation proceedings, and had intended no further acts of aggression while the conferences were being held. While no period had been set within which the negotiations must be concluded, Bryan said he believed they would move forward "as rapidly as possible."

While the envoys were not yet ready to ake any announcement, several interesting phases of what has come up during their discussion were learned from authoritative sources. It appears that while the attitude of Huerta was definite in accepting intermediation as between the United States and the Huerta government, it has not yet been made clear that his acceptance will apply also to intermediation which includes Carranza.

An Important Point

Another outgrowth of the discussion was an intimation that both the Huerta and Carranza elements would send representatives to deal directly with the mediators.

Francisco de la Barra, now at Paris as ambassador for the Huerta authorities, would probably be designated to act for Huerta. It is known that the mediators themselves made no move to secure a personal representative from either party, but there was reason to believe de la Barra's coming was being considered at Mexico City and that a representative of Carranza, who is on his way here, may be authorized to act in that direct capacity.

The intermediaries received word of the encouraging attitude of some of the foremost European powers, notably Great Britain, with France and Germany. This was not conveyed in any formal adherence to the mediation work, but was none the less definite and satisfying as the result of an informal conference between Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, and one of the mediators, which was later made known to the envoys as a body.

The ambassador also talked with Bryan along the same lines.

The mediators' home governments have enlisted their ambassadors and ministers in European capitals to secure friendly co-operation from those quarters.

Europe Asked to Aid

In spite of all denials it apparently is true that the Latin-American envoys did appeal to the European governments to exert influence on the United States to facilitate mediation. Every effort has been made to keep this act secret as it probably was very well understood that public opinion in the United States might not appreciate the bringing in of Europe into the affair.

It is declared this appeal already has borne fruit and that European diplomats have consulted with Secretary Bryan in the matter—not to suggest modification of the American attitude or interfere they hasten to explain, but to help.

Having brought President Wilson, General Huerta and General Carranza to accept in principle the proposition to discuss ways and means for a settlement the real work of the envoys begins—an agreement on a basis for actual negotiations. This is where the rub will come. It must be distinctly understood that no faction has as yet committed itself to anything beyond a willingness to talk. Not even the terms of truce have as yet been agreed to.

President Wilson indicated in talks with callers that he was very hopeful of the situation. As an indication of the feeling in Washington were instructions issued by the state department to certain consuls in Mexican cities, authorizing them to return to their posts and resume their official duties, "in their personal discretion." The American consuls had all been ordered out of Mexico.

False Reports From Mexico

As expected, there was absolutely no truth in the Mexico City report that American warships had bombarded Manzanillo on the west coast of Mexico. An incendiary fire in the port was the sole basis for the rumor. Other reports of a like nature from the Mexican capital may be dismissed in like manner. These reports probably have been circulated in Mexico for the purpose of arousing resentment against Americans.

Fighting is still going on at Tampico, Mazatlan and Acapulco, and Villa is preparing to move south from Torreon and Monterey. On the Mexican border the government has 13,000 troops for patrol duty.

For the first time during the present revolution the constitutionalists are in control of the entire northern frontier. The territory is hundreds of miles long and includes several strategic towns. The rebels completed control when Nuevo Laredo and Piedras Negras were occupied. There is no large federal force north of Saltillo.

PRESSED ON ALL SIDES

Huerta Being Urged to Yield by Representatives of Civilized Nations

Washington, May 1.—In the opinion of diplomats and others, never before in the history of the world has so much pressure been exerted on a single individual as will be exerted on Huerta to yield to the demands of the United States by all the nations of the civilized world.

Moreover, it is the belief of the administration that Huerta now has had ample evidence of the determination of the United States to employ force to compass its purposes if other means fail, a step regarding which the Mexican executive appears in the past to have been decidedly sceptical.

And finally, it is believed that many Mexicans who heretofore have dreaded the consequences of freely expressing their views, and have, therefore, refrained from urging an unwelcome step on Huerta, will now gather courage to urge upon him the futility of resistance to the United States and the expediency of yielding to its demands that he eliminate himself from the Mexican situation.

LINER IS FIRED ON

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 1.—The Ward line steamer Antilla was fired upon by both the federals and the rebels at Tampico, according to a dispatch from that seaport. The steersman of the vessel was struck by one of the shots and killed.

The Antilla left New York April 18 and was flying the Cuban flag. The liner was first raked by the federal guns, and then as she was running out from the city the rebels from their position near the mouth of the Panuco river opened fire on her.

REBEL WAR ON HUERTA

Will Be Continued by Villa and Carranza In Northern Mexico

El Paso, Tex., May 1.—General Villa's forces from northern Mexico will not be halted pending mediation proceedings.

General Carranza will not consider a proprosal for an armistice between his troops and those of General Huerta.

This statement was made at constitutionalist headquarters in Juarez. It was made in answer to a query regarding Washington dispatches that an effort would be made to halt the warfare in northern Mexico temporarily.

"Villa will begin his campaign against Saltillo immediately," said the informant. "It would be the height of folly for him to permit the federal forces in northern Mexico, numbering 15,000, to concentrate at Saltillo during an armistice."

AMMUNITION IS HELD

Million Rounds For Rebels to Be Returned to Manufacturers

Galveston, May 1.—One million rounds of small-arm ammunition consigned to constitutionalist forces along the northern border of Mexico have been stopped here and will be returned to the manufacturers. Because of the recent embargo of arms into Mexico, the authorities have been keeping a sharp watch for shipments.

Non-American refugees who claim they were brought here by the United States against their will formed an organization last night to secure their return to Mexico. They assert the United States will not do anything for them, as the appropriation by congress was for the aid of American refugees. Refugees held a mass meeting to discuss the situation.

VALUABLE INFORMATION

Obtained by Aviators In Their Flights Around Vera Cruz

Washington, May 1.—The navy department is immensely pleased over the reports which have come from Vera Cruz of the scouting work done by the American aviators. Information of tangible value has evidently been obtained by the birdmen.

It is the first time in the history of the nation that this has been done, and naval officers generally feel that proof is being furnished of the value of all the aviation work that has been done, even though lives have been lost in perfecting aerial work.

FINDS NEW RIVER IN SOUTH AMERICA

Roosevelt Cables Succesful Results of His Expedition

New York, May 1.—The following cablegram from Theodore Roosevelt, who, with his son Kermit, has safely arrived in Manaos, Brazil, was received by President Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History:

"Hard, but very successful trip. Cherrie is best man possible for such a trip. Miller doing admirably. They have collected 1500 bird skins, all told, and 500 mammals. We have also put on map river running from north of thirteenth degree to south of fifth degree, the largest affluent of the Madera, the upper part hitherto utterly unknown to anyone and the lower part utterly unknown to cartographs. Inform Mrs. Cherrie."

Cherrie is attached to the staff of the museum and in charge of the bird collection of the expedition. Miller, also attached to the museum, has been in charge of the collection of the skins of mammals.

CHINA'S CONSTITUTION

It Gives Unusually Broad Powers to President of Republic

Pekin, May 1.—The amended constitution for the republic of China, which was formally promulgated today, is notable for the widespread powers it gives the president.

The president is empowered to convoke, open, suspend, close and dissolve the legislature; submit to it the budget as well as other bills, and refer back to the legislature for reconsideration bills already passed by it; if such measures are repassed by a three-fourths majority, the president may, with the consent of the administrative council, still withhold their promulgation.

The president is given sole power to appoint and dismiss civil and military officials, to declare war and conclude peace, and he will be in complete control of the army and navy as well as of all expenditures for those branches of the government.

Explosion Wrecks Fireworks Plant

Hanover, Mass., May 1.—With a series of terrific explosions the big wooden building which houses the sparkler department of the National Fireworks company was destroyed by fire, causing an estimated loss of $15,000.

Senators Favor Suffrage

Washington, May 1.—The senate woman suffrage committee favorably reported the constitutional amendment providing that 8 percent of the voters of any state may demand a referendum vote on equal suffrage.

Crash of Freight Trains

Westminster, Mass., May 1.—Herbert Stockwell, 23, is dying, the local railroad station is wrecked and traffic was tied up as a result of a derailment that piled seventeen freight cars in a heap here.

CHINA SHOWER FOR MISS READ

Presented Twelve Articles All Hand Painted

A hand-painted china shower was given Miss Maud E. Read of Squantum street at the home of Mrs. Albert Hall of Faxon road Wednesday afternoon, by Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Alva Beede, and Mrs. William Hersey, assisted by the members of the whist club, of which Miss Read is a member. The ladies met at Mrs. Hall's at 12 o'clock and a luncheon was served at 12.45. Covers were laid for fourteen, and the room was artistically decorated with pink and green. This color scheme prevailed throughout the courses of the luncheon. In back of Miss Read's chair, a wedding bell was suspended, festooned with pink streamers. Each lady found her place at the table by an appropriate hand-painted card, bearing her name. A menu pamphlet arranged for the occasion with pink and green covers and an umbrella. Maybasket containing nuts and raisins were at each place.

The luncheon was served in this order:—grape fruit with cherries, lobster patties, potato salad, lettuce, tomato and cucumber salad, rolls, nuts, olives, candy, strawberry shortcake, coffee, crackers and cheese. Beneath the electric dome in the center of the table was a large Maybasket containing twelve articles of hand painted china.

Miss Read was given quite a surprise when the dining room door was opened she discovered the room a perfect picture of pink carnations and the decorations, of pink and green, also her mother standing at the opposite end of the table. After she had recovered herself somewhat everyone started in for a jolly time. When the luncheon was over, at about two-fifteen, the articles were opened and very clever verses accompanying each one, were read, and thoroughly enjoyed.

Among the gifts were five cake plates with designs of yellow roses, poppies, black-berries, pink roses and gold, and red and pink roses; a sugar bowl and creamer; a syrup pitcher; an olive dish; a mayonnaise pitcher and tray, salt and pepper shakers, vase, and butter ball dish. Everyone voted that they had never seen such an exquisite display of hand-painted china and certainly Miss Read was a most fortunate young lady. The remainder of the afternoon was filled in by piano selections by Mrs. Levi Haines, soprano solos by Mrs. Harvey Holt and various other numbers of musical selection.

HONORARY GUEST.

One of the original Woman Suffragists in Quincy is Mrs. Charles A. Spear of Washington street. A special invitation has been extended to her to ride in an automobile in the Boston parade tomorrow, and her first impulse was to decline, as she has no use for automobiles or telephones, but it is possible she may accept, although over 90 years of age.

The line of march will start, rain or shine, from Beacon street. It will form at 4.30 and will move at 5. First the parade will march to the State House where Governor Walsh and Mayor Curley will review it. Then it will proceed to School, Washington and Eliot streets, to Park Square, Boyston and Tremont streets to Tremont Temple where a mass meeting will be held.

The regular monthly meeting of the board of directors was held Wednesday evening. The annual meeting will take place on the evening of the fourth Wednesday, May 27.

Plans for the summer camp are being started but as yet it is not definitely decided whether a camp will be purchased this year or not. Mr. Blanchard is to take charge of the camp in Sharon, where the boys have been for the last two years during the first week in July. Probably a number of the boys will want to go there, for one week at least.

The committee is still busily engaged in the membership campaign and the resuts are fairly encouraging.

Attendance at the Business Mens gym classes still continue good, and the men have a lot of fun and get very beneficial exercise from indoor baseball, volley ball, hand ball and hurling the medicine ball at one another. The policemen, carmen, and civil service class specialize in handball and most of them have become quite proficient.

Work on the Minstrel Show is progressing favorably and with the date less than three weeks away the whole cast is enthusiastic in preparation. The end men were selected at the rehearsal Tuesday evening by Coach dancing are as follows:—Misses Juanita Metherell, Eleanor Whitte-Lindberg, James McDonald and Bud Masher. The young ladies who are to do special tambourine, singing and dancing are as follows:—Missess Dorothy Packard, Ruth Packard, Juanita Metherell, Eleanor Whitte more, Marion Simmons, Florence Barker, Minnie Hardwick, Louise Prout, Gladys Doane, Margery Mosher, Daisy Brooks and Margaret Johnson.

The doubles bowling tournament is to start next week with ten teams competing. The doubles bowling tournament is to start next week with ten teams competing. The committee is to meet tonight and pair up the teams. No two men whose combined averages exceed 165 will be allowed to form a team. The tournament will probably be round robin.

The high monthly scores for the season thus far as follows: October—R. McFarlane, 127. November — O. Djerf, 126. December—Flanders 109 January—Beane, 116. February—Wesselsfi, 125. March, Blanchard, 130 So far this month Rbbertson is high man with 115. In the weekly competition Robertson's 115 was high last week and Jones was second with 105. This week R. McFarlane is high with 104, but it is more than probable that much higher strings will be turned in before the week is out.

The annual meeting of the Women's Auxiliary will be held Friday afternoon, May 8, at 3 o'clock. The election of officers and reading of annual reports will be the order of business.

The standing of the Junior teams in gymnasium work is as follows: Giants, 44.9; Athletics, 30.3; Tigers, 22.1; Red Sox, 17.5.

The fiscal year of the Y. M. C. A. ended yesterday and the treasurer, auditor and general secretary will be very busy with the years accounts during the next week.

CASTLE SQUARE.

"The Deep Purple" is a play that has met with overwhelming success wherever produced. John Craig presents it at the Castle Square next week, and in every moment of it the audience will find a stirring melodrama filled with not a little wholesome sensation intermingled with laughable comedy. It is a play of the New York of today, and it is the work of Paul Armstrong, who has already to his credit a number of other successes, including the equally famous "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

The cast will be carefully selected from the long list of Craig players, in the leading role being William P. Carleton, Doris Olsson, Mabel Colcord, Florence Shirley, Frederic Ormonde, Walter Walker, etc. "The Deep Purple" will be seen for only one week at the Castle Square.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"Within the Law," the intensely interesting play of modern conditions in New York life by Bayard Veiller, enters its 12th record-breaking week Monday evening, at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. The original company is headed by Jane Cowl, the creator of Mary Turner, the shop-girl heroine of the play. The story deals with the life of a shop girl who, after spending three years in prison for a crime of which she is innocent, attempts to re-establish herself among reputable people, but is persecuted by the police, hounded out of honest employment and forced into crime. From a timid shrinking girl she develops into a daring woman and she becomes the leader of a band of crooks. She also revenges herself upon the man who unjustly sent her to prison. The play is said to expose the injustices of our law courts, the partiality of influence for the wealthy, and the questionable police practices of large cities.

THE POPS.

The season of Pop Concerts in Symphony hall, Boston, eagerly awaited by a large public in Boston and the surrounding towns will have its formal opening next Tuesday evening, May 5th. The Pop Concerts will be given every evening up to and including Saturday, July 4th, excepting, of course, Sundays. The orchestra this year will consist of sixty-five men which makes it the largest orchestra employed for such a purpose anywhere in the world and it goes almost without saying that it is the best orchestra of its kind in the world for it is composed exclusively of Symphony players.

The first three weeks the conductor will be Otto Urack, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the second three weeks the conductor will be Mr. Andre Maquarre, a well tried favorite with Pop audiences and Mr. Clement Lenom, who made his debut as conductor last season will have charge of the orchestra the final three weeks. There will be the usual number of college nights the first of which will come Friday, May 8th, when Amherst college will celebrate.

WILBUR THEATRE.

Doris Keane, in "Romance" by Edward Sheldon, author of "Salvation Nell," "The Boss," "The Nigger" and other contributions to American dramatic literature, continues to be the attraction at the Wilbur Theatre.

Though the star and the play are new to Boston they have enjoyed long runs in New York City, Chicago and Philadelphia. First produced at the Maxine Elliott Theatre in New York in January last year, "Romance" ran without a break until the middle of July and then only taken off to afford Miss Keane a short vacation of one month. "Romance" is told in a prologue of today, three acts of fifty years ago, and an epilogue of today. Bishop Armstrong in an effort to stop his young grandson's impending and impetuous marriage with an actress tells the boy a story of his own early love for an Italian singer. As the lights in the prologue fade they give place to the lights in Cornelius Van Tuyl's ballroom at his New York mansion nearly fifty years ago and there, amid crinoline, music and flowers, is represented the love story of a young New York curate for a sophisticated and brilliant singer of grand opera. The third week of Doris Keane's engagement at the Wilbur begins Monday night.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Typical of New England's rugged honesty, simple ways, sterling traits and character "The Old Homestead" is back again at the famous Boston Theatre, the scene of its first production twenty-eight years ago. Like a piece of old tapestry or a painting by the old masters, its colors, the light and shade of country and city life have stood the test of a generation, and its appeal to old and young is as strong as ever.

"The Old Homestead" is as familiar to the majority of theatre-goers as a household word. For that reason no description of it is necessary and all that needs to be said is that there is no purer, sweeter or more wholesome play in existence, none of which holds the mirror up to nature more truly, and none which has more real inspiration in its every line and feature than "The Old Homestead." It is simple of plot, deals with homely interest and is replete with genuine humor. Sunshine and shadow, laughter and tears, humor and pathos —these are the inevitable associates of "The Old Homestead." It makes a direct and immediate appeal to the human heart, for it preaches a sermon of faith, hope and charity.

The original company under the personal direction of Frank Thompson, is appearing here. The famous musical features are of the same high order Mr. Thompson has always provided including the celebrated double male quartet, and grand choir of twenty voices in the Grace church scene.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

"The Reformers," the new three act comedy by John Cumberland, which appeared for the first time before a metropolitan audience at the Hollis Street Theatre last Monday night, and which was only scheduled for a week's engagement, being, in fact, more in the nature of a tryout, will continue its engagement for another week. This change of plans on the part of the management is due to the pronounced success of the piece and the unqualified praise accorded it by the entire press of Boston. Not in years has a play been produced in Boston showing so many amusing complications and side-splitting comedy. The fun is uproarious from the beginning of the first act to the fall of the last curtain. Donald Meek scored a decided hit in the part of "Archie," the timid and mild-mannered young man who is hectored alike by his family and friends, and finally driven, much against his will to allow himself to be nominated for the office of mayor on the reformers' ticket. The cast in support of Mr. Meek was excellent and no better scenic production has ever been seen in Boston. The usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given.

Great Climax.

"How was the play you saw last night?" "Pretty melodramatic. In the second act when the skulking villain descends upon Hickory farm and forecloses the mortgage on old Uncle Zeke's automobile there was hardly a dry eye in the house."

"SHOOTING THE SUN."

Out of sight of land a ship's geographical position is determined either by keeping a careful record of the course steered and the distance run, known as dead reckoning, or by the combined use of chronometer and sextant—that is, by observation of the heavenly bodies. The operation of finding the latitude and longitude of observation can be performed in a number of ways, of which the simplest and most convenient is by measuring the altitude of the sun above the horizon at noon, as is indicated on the vernier of the sextant and spoken of at sea as "shooting the sun." An arithmetical computation by the aid of logarithms is thus quickly made which shows exactly how far the ship is north or south of the equator, or, in other words, the latitude.

Finding the longitude, however, is a somewhat longer process. An observation is made either in the forenoon or afternoon, the chronometer time of the horizon contact of the sun's image being noted. A calculation is then made which gives the exact time at the spot where the ship happens to be, and, as the chronometer carried aboard shows the exact time at Greenwich, the prime meridian of longitude, the difference between the two expresses in hours and minutes (easily convertible into degrees and miles) the distance east or west of Greenwich.

FLOGGED THE FAT MEN.

Spartan Cure For Those Who Grew Too Stout For Military Duty.

Among the ancient Spartans everything was considered secondary to military efficiency, and with a view to securing this the boys and men were by law kept in a continual state of "training." No deformed child was allowed to live. Boys were taken from their homes and subjected to military regulations at the age of seven. They were compelled to wear the same single garment winter and summer. At twenty they joined the ranks and from that age till they reached sixty were required to dine at the public tables, where only a certain quantity was supplied for each man. The magistrates interfered in absurdly small matters. They regulated the degree of fatness to which it was lawful for any citizen to extend his body.

Those who dared to grow too fat or too soft for military service and exercise were sometimes soundly flogged. Aelian in his history relates that Nauclis, son of Polytus, was brought before the ephors (magistrates) and the whole assembly of Sparta, and "his unlawful fatness" was publicly exposed and he was threatened with perpetual banishment if he did not bring his body within the regular Spartan compass and give up the culpable mode of living, which was declared to be more worthy of an Ionian than a Spartan.

A Literary Coterie.

Gubbins, who calls his living room the library, but is otherwise a good sort enough, brought home a near-sighted friend to dinner the other night. A young lady was standing near the door to welcome the guest.

"Allow me," said Gubbins, "to present you to my daughter."

The guest bowed, but the courteous inclination was directed not toward Miss Gubbins, but toward another of the household treasures, a plaster pillar surmounted by a bust.

Very Little Difference.

"Men have an advantage that woman never can possess," she complained. "Whenever a man wishes to hide his identity he can, by letting his whiskers grow or by shaving them off as the case may be, change his expression completely."

"That isn't so much of an advantage," he replied. "A woman can by putting on her complexion or leaving it off as the case may be, make just as much of a change in her appearance as a man is able to make in his with or without the aid of his whiskers."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Glaciers.

It has been demonstrated that the glacier does not move in one block, but flows, accommodating itself to the channel in which it moves. Professor Tyndall planted a row of sticks in a straight line across a glacier, and after a few days the line had become a crescent, showing that the middle of the glacier moved faster than the sides, just as in a river the stream is stronger in the center.

Ma Knew.

It was nearly midnight. "That fellow who is calling on Maude hates to go," growled Maude's papa.

"Why, it seems to me the young man is pretty far gone already," replied Maude's mamma, complacently.—Philadelphia Record.

Too True.

"No," was the artist's comment; "few men are."

Never Did.

"While you were standing in the doorway telling the sweet young thing goodnight did it ever dawn upon you"—

"Oh, no! I never stayed that late."—Judge.

During the early part of the evening there was a concert by Joyce's orchestra after which the grand march was formed, the leading couple being James Donovan and Miss Lillian Donovan. About 100 couples participated in the march.

Among the guests of the evening were Senator Joseph Leonard of Ward 9, Boston, who gave a short talk in which he endorsed organization; Councilman James O'Dowd of Ward Four, who spoke along similar lines; William A. Carey, former councilman from Ward two; Dr. John H. Ash, and other prominent men of the city.

BELCHER SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

About 225 people attended the meeting of the Belcher School Parents' Association, which was held Tuesday evening in the school hall. The report of the last meeting was read by O. A. Andrews in the absence of the secretary, and accepted. The president, Mr. McCurdy, appointed the following committee to bring in a list of nominees for the officers next year, James H. Maguire, Louis Harlowe, Mrs. Charles Johnson, Mrs. James Gallagher and Miss Ella Smith.

Superintendent of schools Frank Marsh made a few remarks on the "School Gardens" and told the parents what the plans were for gardening for the children this spring.

Then with a few remarks the president introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. Edward F. O'Dowd, master of the Frothingham School of Boston.

Mr. O'Dowd gave an illustrated lecture, consisting of 180 slides, on "Up through Italy and across the Alps." The speaker proved to be a wonderful entertainer and lecturer and the slides were most beautiful. Everyone received a good idea of the customs of the people of Italy especially of the Neapolitans. The trip which Mr. O'Dowd travelled started with leaving Boston habor across to the Azores, past Gibralter, into the Mediterranean over to Italy. In Italy he passed through Naples, Rome, Venice, Pompeii up across the Alps, through Germany on to France. The last view shown was a picture of the American flag, and when thrown on the screen brought long applause from the audience. The lecture was most interesting and instructive.

At the close of the lecture the audience gave a rising vote of thanks to Mr. O'Dowd. Refreshments were served by Mrs. W. D. Parsons and a very helpful hospitality committee.

—"Man has put an aura of myth and poetry about the home, but did you ever see a man who would stay there for any length of time?" asks Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman. Smart, to be sure; but try it the other way: "Did you ever see a woman who would stay there for any length of time?" Staying at home is not necessarily a virtue. Mrs. Gilman implies that men ought to stay at home, but most of those who do, barring the invalid, are those who are so tired that their wives have to support them. —New Bedford Standard.

—Clean-up week is rapidly approaching, May third to May ninth inclusive. All individuals are urged to make this week a success by co-operating; clean up your house; clean up your cellar; clean up your yard and make Quincy, "Spick and Span." Judging by the activity of many citizens on Patriots' day, they have already accomplished much along these lines.

COMEDY AT KINCAIDES.

One of the best shows of the season is now playing at Kincaide Theatre and a full house was on hand last night to enjoy it. All the different features are fine, but the best of all is the one-act Musical Comedy, "The Vegetable Garden" which is certainly "some show."

The stage is dressed very prettily to represent the garden of Hotel Golden Rooster. Six pretty girls and three clever comedians are included in the cast of characters. The costumes were gorgeous, the dancing delightful, and the singing splendid. There are five musical numbers. The other vaudeville attractions were extra good. The pictures are all very interesting, especially the comedy in which John Bunny plays the leading part. Manager Wardwell has another splendid show coming Monday including that great feature "The Perils of Pauline" a continued story that is being followed with great interest by thousands.

Progress.

"Thirty years ago," said a woman of middle age, "it was the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-gloved wrists crossed. It is now the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-stockinged ankles crossed."—New York Sun.

POOR BLOOD

Poor, thin, devitalized blood may be caused by a weakness of the digestive organs, an accumulation of waste matter in the system, an inactive liver or lack of exercise.

Whatever the cause the best remedy we know is our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol. It will purify and enrich the blood, tone up the digestive organs, give you a hearty appetite and create strength.

A case has just come to our attention from Gulfport, Miss. Mrs. Armelise Saucier says: "For months I was in a run-down condition and my blood was very poor. I had taken several medicines prescribed by physicians but they seemed to do me no good. Vinol was recommended and from the first bottle I noticed an improvement. I continued its use and now feel as strong and well as ever."

If you have the slightest indication of poor blood take Vinol. If it fails to help you we will give back your money. E. J. Murphy, Druggist, Quincy, Mass.

BACK TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT

FUNSTON RELIEVES FLETCHER

Bluejackets Sent Back to Ships and Thanked by Admiral For Their Gallant Services—City Goes Back to Lethargy, Realizing the Friendship of Americans

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 1.—Vera Cruz has gone back to civil government, under the laws of Mexico administered by American officials. The civil government, however, remains subordinate to martial law while the work of restoring the municipal organization goes forward.

General Funston's brigade trooped off the transports and marched to the sand hill barracks and other quarters to relieve Rear Admiral Fletcher's bluejackets, who went back to the men-of-war. Funston established his headquarters in the barracks deserted by General Maas, and Fletcher withdrew his staff. The marine corps was distributed to work with the army.

Fletcher's order for the withdrawal of bluejackets paid a high tribute to officers and men, not only for valor in action but also for orderly conduct and the resourcefulness which resulted in the quick restoration of normal living conditions for the citizens of Vera Cruz. The admiral personally thanked his command and declared:

"The highest honor is due those who gave their lives in the service of their country."

Refugees continue to arrive and preparations are being carried forward for their departure. The navy transport Hancock is lying at Puerto Mexico to take aboard those coming down from Mexico City.

Vera Cruz, roused from its tropical drowse by the street battle and landing of foreign forces, has gone back to its lethargy, its dancing and its promenading through the plaza.

There are no evidences that Mexico is in the throes of a crisis, torn within and pressed from without. The shops, scarred by rifle balls, are busy reaping the harvest of trade from the foreign invasion.

Women, who hid in terror of what they believed would be the consequences of the landing of foreign troops, walk safely abroad. Men who held closely to walls in fear and danger of snipers, now go boldly about their business.

The inhabitants have taken a new and happier view of the Americans. They have learned that the troops have come not to loot but to govern not harshly but well.

The release of prisoners from the water-soaked dungeons of Fort San Juan de Ulua, where many came forth blinded from the years of confinement in darkness, was a revelation of the character and the attitude of the United States.

Mexicans of the better class openly express gratification at the restoration of order and the resumption of business, but aside from the fact that the troops are present Vera Cruz knows little and only wonders when the invaders will leave or will go to Mexico City.

The progress of mediation is entirely unknown in Vera Cruz, but is discussed with animation. Opinion among competent observers is divided, some believing that Huerta, by accepting the proposal for mediation in spirit, as reported in Washington dispatches, is playing for more time for a surprise, as he did in the Tampico incident.

Shuttle trains continue to run from Vera Cruz to the point where General Maas destroyed the railroads to the capital, and there they meet passengers from trains coming down from Mexico City. Consul Canada says that practically all Americans in his district have been accounted for.

The first military hospital was established in the preparatory school building. Dr. Guiteras, of the marine hospital service, is in charge of quarantine work.

The scouring work of aviators continues, but the men in charge are not permitted to carry their investigations far into the interior.

Milton High school base ball team won its first victory Thursday afternoon with the Stetson High School of Randolph. The score was 4 to 3 in favor of the home team, and there was an enthusiastic "bunch" of fans present. Poole of Milton pitched an excellent game striking out 14 men and only passing 1. Hogan, pitcher for Stetson, did some good pitching near the end of the game and struck out six men. Milton's infield has improved wonderfully and the team is ready to meet Milton Academy Saturday afternoon when a very fast game is anticipated.

Milton Academy played a 16-inning game on Thursday with Stone School and the score stood 1 to 1. The game was called on account of darkness, it being 6.45 before it stopped. It was a close game throughout especially on the part of the pitchers of both sides. Stone's infield was extremely good and there was hardly any hitting. The batteries for Milton included Swigget Felton, Trainor; for Stone; Booes, Buckley.

Fourteen events are to he run off Saturday afternoon at the South Weymouth park by the Old Colony Gentlemens Driving club. A large number of entries have been received for each of the fourteen events which give promise of some good racing. There are a number of Quincy admirers of horse flesh who are members of this driving club and they can always be found at the weekly events.

Weymouth High was beaten by Brookline High, 5 to 2 at Brookline, Thursday afternoon. Arbhru, the winning pitcher was touched for five hits while Callahan of Weymouth allowed six.

RESCUE WORK OF NO AVAIL

Hundred and Seventy-Two Miners Probably Dead

HOPE ABSOLUTELY ABANDONED

Bodies of Fifty Victims of Explosion In West Virginia Colliery Have Been Located—Wreckage and Water Retard Work of Those Who Are Conducting Search

Eccles, W. Va., May 1.—Hope that that any of the 172 men caught in mine No. 5 of the New River Collieries company, wrecked by a gas and dust explosion Tuesday, are alive, has been abandoned absolutely by government and state experts. Fifty bodies have been located.

A majority of he bodies are said to be badly burned, and apparently to have been blown by the explosion from the mine interior to the main passage leading to the shaft.

It is believed no additional bodies will be found near the mouth of the mine, and that many of the other victims are buried under heavy debris.

A thorough search is being retarded by falls of rock and timbers and by three feet of water. Electrical pumps are being installed as rapidly as possible to clear away the water.

As rescue parties penetrated the mine their hopes of taking out any of the men alive dwindled rapidly. The condition of the bodies located, the water and the wreckage that blocked passages and rooms, made it evident that all the miners had perished.

When the word spread that many bodies were being found the whole population of Eccles and hundreds of persons from surrounding communities rushed to the scene. Several attempts were made to break through the ropes, and miners sworn in as deputy sheriffs held back the crowd with difficulty.

Two crews from the government rescue cars, equipped with oxygen tanks, went into the mine to make a complete search.

SUED FOR ALLEGED FICTITIOUS SALES

Court Orders Verdict of $116,068 Against Hub Brokers

Boston, May 1.—A verdict of $116,068.22 was ordered by Judge Brown in the superior civil court in the suit of James M. Hall, a lawyer, against Paine, Webber & Co., brokers.

The suit alleged the fictitious sales of 1415 shares of Copper Range Consolidated stock. It will go to the full bench of the supreme court for final decision.

The court ruled in the first of the two suits brought by Hall against the brokerage firm that the plaintiff could not recover, or if he could, it would be for a nominal sum. That suit alleged breach of an agreement to carry 1415 shares of Copper River Consolidated Mining company stock.

This is the fourth trial of the two suits. Each time they were tried jointly.

RIFLES ARE LAID ASIDE

Government Cavalry Squadron Brings Peace In Mine District

Trinidad, Col., May 1.—In the strike zone, strikers and guards who had battled intermittently in southern Colorado for ten days laid aside their rifles.

This was because Major Holbrook, in command of the Second squadron, Fifth United States cavalry, had brought some 300 regulars to Trinidad and announced he was here to restore peace.

"We are not here to take sides between the strikers and their former employers," explained the major. "We are here to restore order. I have been assured of co-operation from the warring factions, and I am confident of our ultimate success."

Holbrook admitted that negotiations had been opened in connection with the disarmament of the strikers. He declined, however, to reveal the exact nature of the negotiations, or the success with which they had been attended.

Poindexter contended Rear Admiral Peary's report on his trip to the pole corroborated all Cook's data. No action was taken on the resolution.

J. FREDERICK TRUNDY, Petitioner.

Respectfully represents your petitioner, J. Frederick Trundy, of Boston in our County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that he is the owner in fee of a certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated in Randolph, in our County of Norfolk bounded as follows:—

Westerly on High Street; Northerly on land formerly of the late George L. Binney; Easterly on land formerly of the heirs of Joshua Mann; and Southerly on land formerly of the heirs of Thomas Reed. Containing about one acre of land and being all and the same premises described in deed to me from Thomas Kiley dated August 6, 1913 recorded with Norfolk Deeds, Book 1266, Page 137.

Your petitioner further says that said premises were formerly owned by one Ellen Simpson, now Ellen Howard, then of said Randolph but now of Canton in our said County of Norfolk; that on the 8th day of March, 1870 she, together with her then husband, William H. Simpson, conveyed said property by mortgage deed to one Loring Binney, of said Randolph, which mortgage was duly recorded with Norfolk Deeds Book 390, Page 226 and given to secure the payment of the principal sum of fifty (50) dollars one year from the date thereof with interest at the rate of eight per cent. The property was subsequently conveyed by said Ellen Howard to said Thomas Kiley by deed dated August 30, 1883, recorded as aforesaid Book 549, Page 561.

Your petitioner further says that he and his predecessors in title have been in uninterrupted possession of said premises for more than twenty years after the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the full performance of the condition thereof; and that said mortgage has never been discharged of record and is a cloud on the title.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that this Honorable Court shall adjudge, order and decree that said mortgage is not a valid incumbrance upon the title of said premises and that the same be discharged, and for such other and further relief as to this Honorable Court shall seem proper.

JOHN FREDERICK TRUNDY

A Matrimonial Lottery

In Which One Man Owned Most of the Tickets

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

There are in various countries curious customs with regard to matrimony. In Lapland the groom must chase his bride in a foot race. In Russia, which has a very large area, with many different peoples, one and all having their own peculiar methods, there are a number of varied customs. One of these is that a girl may go into the house of any man whom she wishes to marry and remain there till he marries her. If he refuses he is considered to have insulted her and her family, and they take revenge on him if they can.

Another Russian custom among a certain people is this: They have a lottery. A girl is put up as the prize. Sufficient tickets are sold to give her a dowry. The holder of the winning ticket is compelled to marry the prize he has drawn, but she may decline him. If she does they may divide between them the money paid for the tickets. If a married man is the winner he may give the prize to any bachelor he may select. In N., a village in the northern part of Russia near the Siberian border, there were four of these lotteries held each year, thus providing for four girls who had reached a marriageable age and had not the necessary dowries.

The simple people of this village, buried in the heart of what might almost be called a wilderness, naturally resorted to simple amusements. They were an athletic people, especially adapted to the management of animals. One of the chief recreations of the people of N. was a sort of circus in which the young men performed in gymnastics and trained animals and feats of horsemanship were exhibited.

At one of these performances a slender young man named Ivan Ivanoff, with a figure fit for a statue, led the rest in riding. He would ride several barebacked horses at one time, stepping from one horse to another.

Among those who looked at the feats of this young man was Nina Dimitrieff, a girl barely sixteen years old. To her Ivan, standing erect with a foot on each of two horses, guiding them wherever he wished, was the most beautiful sight she had ever beheld. When he had finished his performance and stood bowing before the plaudits of his audience Nina Dimitrieff took from her girdle a bunch of hardy flowers that grew wild in the woods of that region and threw them at his feet. He picked them up, meeting at the same time her admiring gaze.

In that glance which passed between these two simple creatures was an instantaneous flash of love. No courtship was needed. The mingling of two spirits was complete. Long associations might strengthen it, as constant use will develop a muscle, but it was from that moment a perfect love.

These two children—they were not much more than children—did not stop to follow out the consequences of this newborn passion, the nature of which in their innocence they did not understand. Among these people parents regulate marriages, and no marriage is permitted except where the bride has a dowry. Nina's parents could give her no dowry, and Ivan could not afford to marry her without one.

Not that they would, if left to themselves, consider this as a barrier. They would consider nothing but their love and mate like a pair of doves. It was the older heads of their parents, foreseeing the wretchedness of poverty for them and their children, that would keep them apart. It was some time before their attachment was discovered, but as soon as it was known to exist Nina was forbidden to have anything to do with her young lover.

For some time there were clandestine meetings, usual in such forbidden affairs. Then, the two being caught together by Nina's father, he took measures to marry her off. One of the marriage lotteries was about to come off, and he arranged that his daughter should be offered as the prize.

It was a terrible blow to the lovers. A thousand chances were to be sold at 4 rubles a chance. If they were all disposed of the bride would have a dowry of 4,000 rubles, or $2,000 of our money, a very large sum in that region for a young couple with which to set up housekeeping. If the chances were not all sold the deficiency would be made up by the wealthier citizens of the village. In this case, where Nina was the prize offered, the chances would have doubtless all been sold had it not been that her love for Ivan was generally known. As it was, but a quarter of the chances had been taken up. So great was the deficiency that it was doubted whether those who usually made up such sums would do so in this case.

Almost directly north of N. is Kara, in Siberia, where political offenders are sent to work in the mines. N. is the nearest town of any importance on the western side of the border between Russia and Siberia. Not long before the drawing of the marriage lottery was to take place Ivan and Nina, by a preconcerted arrangement, met in a wood to the northward of the village. The meeting was not to devise a plan, but to lament together over their approaching separation. They were in the heart of the forest under snow laden branches when, hearing a stirring in a thicket near by, they turned and saw a face that caused Nina to shriek. It was the face of a man, but so wild looking that for a moment they thought it some creature of the forest. Then a figure stepped forth, a man with unkempt hair and beard, ragged, shoeless, with cheeks shrunken and eyes glaring like those of a hunted beast.

"My children," he said, "can you not hide me? If they get me they will take me back to the mines."

Ivan had once before seen an escaped prisoner from Kara who had been pursued and arrested in N. and had never forgotten the despair on his face when, loaded with chains, he was taken away on his dismal march back to prison. Ivan knew well that this man was a fugitive, and the hearts of the children went out to him. They asked him what they could do for him, and after consultation it was arranged that they should return to the town and bring him food. This they did, and as soon as night came on they took him into the town, where Ivan hid him in his father's barn among the hay.

Early in the morning a number of officials entered the town looking for an escaped prisoner. But he whom they sought was safely hidden and ministered to by Ivan and Nina. After searching the village in vain the party left, and the fugitive as well as his preservers breathed more freely. Two or three days after the officials' departure Ivan took clothes and shaving materials to the loft, and the fugitive relieved himself of his beard, cut his hair and put on a peasant's suit. Then he asked Ivan to bring him pen, ink and paper, and he wrote a letter, which he addressed to some one in Moscow, and asked Ivan to put it in the post for him.

After this the fugitive occasionally left the barn and, growing more venturesome, at last took up his quarters at an inn. He invented a story that he had a little money, with which he proposed to buy a few acres of ground, and was looking about him for that purpose. This explanation of his presence in N. was weakened by his manner, which, since he was rid of his wild appearance, marked him for a gentleman. However, the people with whom he mingled were not very acute, and even had they known that he was an escaped political prisoner would have shielded him so far as was possible. After awhile he began to receive mail, which, of course, was addressed to him under an assumed name.

Meanwhile the lottery scheme by which Nina was to be disposed of dragged because so few tickets had been sold. But at last they were disposed of, and the drawing was announced to take place at once. Some curiosity was manifested to know who had taken them. But the managers of the affair would give no information.

On the evening of the drawing Nina was present, as was customary for the bride, with a despairing look on her face that excited the commiseration of all. Ivan had saved enough money to pay for ten tickets. But what were ten chances in a thousand? The same as one in a hundred. He could not bring himself to attend the drawing, so he remained away. During the drawing he walked back and forth before the building in which it took place, looking up at the place where the girl he loved was to be disposed of.

Presently he heard a commotion, which he believed followed the announcement of the name of the winner. A wild hope sprang up in his breast that one of his chances had won. He ran up into the hall and asked who had drawn the prize. He was told that the name was Nicholas Axelrod, but who Nicholas Axelrod was no one seemed to know. His heart fell. Wringing his hands, he was about to turn away when the manager of the lottery, standing on the platform where the drawing had taken place, advanced and read from a paper he held in his hands:

If I, Nicholas Axelrod, win the prize, being a married man, I give it to Ivan Ivanoff.

Shouts arose, and cries for Ivan were heard. A man caught him by the arm as he was leaving and, turning him around, led him up to the platform where Nina sat, a smile of delight on her features. He kissed her, and the shouting broke forth anew.

But who was Nicholas Axelrod? There were cries for him, but he did not respond. Persons looked about them, expecting to see him arise and make his way to the platform to receive the ovation which it was evident was awaiting him. But he did not appear, nor was he ever seen again in N. The happy couple sought him, but did not find him. It was rumored that he was a member of a noble family; that he had been pardoned by the czar; that he had been returned to Siberia. None of these rumors was ever proved. Both Ivan and his wife believe today that he bought all the unsubscribed chances in the lottery, thus having three out of four chances of winning, and that he had done this to repay them for succoring him.

Nicholas Axelrod's real name was Paul Gerowsky, a Pole, whose family, related to the kings of Poland, submitted only because they were obliged to submit to the partition of their country among the three powers—Austria, Germany and Russia. But the Gerowskys did not give up hope that Poland would be redeemed and were ever watching for an opportunity to assert its reunion and independence. Some years before the marriage of Ivan and Nina, Paul Gerowsky became the leader of a plot with this end in view. It was discovered, and he was sent to Siberia. His escape from there, his succor by the lovers, his purchase of the unsold tickets to the lottery, as has been stated, were all that was ever known of him by the people of N. Under his own name he spent the rest of his life as a citizen of the United States.

CHANGED HIS SHAPE.

"The American man, the American business man of forty or forty-five, has got a new shape," said a tailor. "He's got a lean, straight shape—full chest, narrow hips. But if you could have seen him a generation ago!

"The business man of forty expected to be fat and soft a generation ago. He rather admired, in fact, a fat, soft shape. The richest business men were fat and soft, and that made a fashion of it, just as Queen Alexandra's lameness made a limp fashionable in Victorian times.

"What stomachs our fathers had at forty or forty-five—feather bed stomachs, which they balanced by bending backward! A big stomach was a sign of success, a sign of gentility. If you were lean—why, you must be a laborer. Perhaps you didn't get enough to eat.

"What is the cause of the slender, agile figures of today? Open air and exercise, that's the cause. Golf is the cause. Motoring is the cause.

"My friend," the tailor impressively ended, "my books show that the middle aged business man of today is four inches bigger around the chest than the middle aged business man of 1890 and eighteen inches smaller around the stomach."—New York Tribune.

ANCIENT HIGH FINANCE.

When White Deerskins Passed as Currency In China.

In China, the first country to use banknotes, certain skins were once of such great value that they were accepted as cash, passing from hand to hand in the same way as banknotes of the present day. The negotiability of these skins was established in this way:

The Emperor Ou Ti, being in want of money, gave his treasurer to understand that such a state of affairs must not continue. At that time it was customary for princes and courtiers on entering the royal presence to cover their faces with pieces of skin. Taking advantage of this custom, the treasurer procured the issuance of a decree forbidding the use of any other skins for this purpose save those of a certain species of white deer in the royal parks. Immediately, of course, there arose a demand for pieces of these skins, which, being a monopoly, were sold at a high price.

Thus were the royal coffers refilled. The steady value of the skins thus obtained made them readily a substitute for coin of the realm.

Wyoming Has Many High Mountains.

Wyoming has nine mountains exceeding 13,000 feet in height and of these three approach the 14,000 foot mark, according to the United States geological survey. They are Gannett peak, 13,785 feet; Grand Teton, 13,747 feet, and Fremont peak, 13,730 feet. Cloud peak, one of the most beautiful mountains in the state, is 13,730 feet above sea level. Besides these mountains Wyoming has thirty-one other named peaks upward of 12,000 feet in height and some forty unnamed mountains which exceed that altitude.

An interesting story might be written of the thousands of lofty unnamed mountain peaks of the west which are nearly double the height of the very highest mountains in the entire Appalachian mountain system in the eastern portion of the country. Colorado alone has dozens of mountains without name which are more than double the height of our most lofty eastern mountain.

Stones and Glass Houses.

The origin of the saying "Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones" is as follows: At the time of the union of England and Scotland London was inundated with Scotchmen, and the London roughs used to go about at night breaking their windows. Buckingham being considered the chief instigator of the mischief, a party of Scotchmen smashed the windows of the duke's mansion, known as the Glass House. The court favorite appealed to the king, who replied, "Steenie, Steenie, those who live in glass houses should be careful how they fling stones!"

Feeding on Sunlight.

Major Miramond de la Roquette of the French army medical corps in reporting to the Academie des Sciences the results of some observations in southern Algeria on the relation between diet and sunlight gave it as his opinion that the tissues of the human body directly utilize the radiant energy of the sunshine. The normal diet of the natives of hot and sunny climes is far lower both in quantity and in nutritive quality than that of inhabitants of less favored regions, the sunlight seeming to make up the difference.

An Extraordinary Man.

"Yes, indeed, my husband is a remarkable man."

"I suppose nearly every woman has that opinion of her husband."

"But I'm sure my husband is an extraordinary man. I told him this morning where something was in one of the closets, and he found it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Howard Dunstan of Bigelow streets are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son.

J. W. Powell, the newly elected president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation is a young man. It is said that he was with Hobson at Santiago.

Friends of Miss Lillian Johnson of Arthur street surprised her Wednesday evening and presented her a gold bracelet. Music and games were enjoyed.

A meeting of the Ladies Aid society of the Hall Place M. E. church was held at the home of Mrs. Fred L. Badger, Crescent street, Thursday evening. Several plans were discussed. Refreshments were served and a pleasant hour was enjoyed.

The funeral of Eunice B. Tarbox, wife of Stephen K. Tarbox, who died Tuesday in her 73rd year, was held this afternoon. Services were conducted at her home at 1632 Hancock street by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of the Bethany Congregational Church and were well attended. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The body of Mrs. Mary L. Briggs, wife of Albert H. Briggs, was taken to Norwell this afternoon for burial Funeral services were held at her late home at 231 South Central avenue. Rev. Carl G. Horst of the Wollatson Unitarian church officiated. There was a good attendance.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW.

A morning paper reports that the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs of the Legislature, in executive session Thursday afternoon, voted leave to withdraw on the petition of John Stuart for $5,000 damages to his property at Wollaston beach by the construction of a drawless bridge. Stuarts boat building shop is situated on the Hancock street side of the Quincy Shore boulevard at Wollaston beach, and a brook runs from his premises to the bay. When the Park Commissioners built the boulevard they also built a bridge over this brook which prevented boats passing through to his shop. He claimed that his business was greatly damaged by the construction of this drawless bridge and asked the Commonwealth to reimburse him to the extent of $5,000.

Parents are getting more deeply interested than ever in school affairs. It's a good plan. The closer the people follow up school affairs the better for the teachers, the children and the system.

NEW LAW ON MARRIAGES

Lice se Permits Must Be Used Within Six Months

Under the new act of the legislature, which became a law this week on the signature of Gov. Walsh, it will be impossible for anyone to obtain a marriage license and carry it about in the pocket for an indefinite length of time waiting for the prospective bride to make up her mind whether she really wants to be married or not.

It has often happened that a prospective groom has paid his good dollar for a marriage license and at the last minute almost the prospective bride hesitates and the ceremony is off for a time.

Under the old law the license held good until used. Now, however if at the end of six months the license is not used it becomes invalid and must be returned to the office of the issuing clerk. Failure to return the unused license means a fine. Although the unused license must be returned no mention is made of the dollar paid for it, and the chances are that the disappointed holder of the license will have to whistle against the wind for his dollar.

The object of the law according to Representative Cronin of Boston who introduced it, is to correct several abuses that are said to have existed under the old law that covered an indefinite period of time. It will also prevent persons with wrongful intent from using marriage certificates to attain their own unlawful ends.

In case of serious illness, or other good and sufficient reason, persons intending marriage are obliged to postpone the ceremony beyond six months, the original license may be returned and a new one will be issued without extra charge.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

Those who were depending upon their expressmen to bring them out a case of beer today will have to quench their thirst for a time at least for up to noon, none of the liquor permits passed by the City Council at the meeting last Monday had been issued.

The orders reached the Mayor early Tuesday morning, and while it is understood that the Mayor has signed some of the permits, just which he has signed is not known, for none of them have been returned to the City Clerk, who has to issue the licenses or permits when signed.

Under the law no expressman can transport any liquor today unless he has received his permit. Several of the expressmen called upon the City Clerk this morning, but were told that there was nothing doing, as none of them had as yet reached him from the Mayor's office.

This means that for one day at least Quincy is dry. Some of those who have been in the habit of having a case of beer delivered for over Sunday, are worrying for unless the expressmen get their permits before tomorrow noon it will also be dry over Sunday.

An expressman delivered a small mysterious looking package at the office of the City Clerk this morning, for which the clerk gave a receipt. After the expressman had departed the clerk became curious to know just what the package contained, for although it was addressed to him he did not remember of giving any order to the firm from which it came. Curiosity got the better of him after a while, and he opened the package to find that it contained two colt automatic revolvers. A reporter picked one up to examine it when he was startled by the cry "Don't point that at me, revolvers have a way of going off when they are not loaded." The guns were then placed carefully back in the package and the police department notified to come and remove the dangerous weapons.

—It will surprise some to learn that electric power is much more widely used in Sweden and in Norway than in this country, and at a much cheaper cost. It is used there for domestic lighting and cooking as well as for manufacturing. Its use now only costs one cent per kilo-watt hour, and even as low as one-half cent at certain times in the day. The secret of this low rate is in the use made everywhere of the power of the numerous waterfalls of those countries.—Christian Register.

N. B. FURNALD PASSES AWAY

In His 86th Year, and 64th Year of Married Life

Napoleon B. Furnald of Washington street passed away at midnight in his 86th year, closing an eventful life. With Mrs. Furnald he enjoyed the distinction of being the longest married couple in the city, as June 9 next would have been their 64th anniversary. He was a large real estate owner, successful in business, and up to a few years ago prominent in local affairs.

In the death of Napoleon B. Furnald Quincy loses one of its life long citizens, and one who in his active days was the best known criminal officer in Norfolk county. He was born in Quincy, Aug. 24, 1828, a son of Lemuel Furnald who came to this city from Nottingham, N. H., shortly after his marriage, Mr. Furnald being the youngest of a family of ten children.

Obtaining his early education in the public schools of the town he left school at the age of 12 years and was engaged in various employments until 1854 when he opened a furniture store, which he carried on for many years.

When the State constabulary was established in the early 70s Mr. Furnald was appointed a member of that force by Governor Washburn in 1872 and continuel a member of that body until it was abolished in 1875.

He has also been a constable of the city for 47 years and with the exception of one year this has been a continued service, first being elected at the annual town meetings and afterward receiving his appointment from the Mayors.

After giving up active work with the State constabulary, he did considerable work in the detective line.

JUNK DEALERS FOUND GUILTY

Must Have License to Store Junk In Quincy

Junk dealers were out in full force at the Quincy court this morning to hear the cases of the two junk dealers who were summoned into court earlier in the week for violation of the ordinance which prohibits the keeping or storing of junk within the City of Quincy without first having obtained a license for the same.

Councilman William P. Thompson appeared for the two defendants, and City Solicitor Walter S. Pinkham appeared for the government. After the hearing the court intimated that it would dismiss the cases on payment of $10 on account of costs, but the City Solicitor insisted on a direct finding. The court then found both men guilty and imposed a fine of $10 each. An appeal was taken.

These are the first cases brought into court under the ordinance which was passed last year, and which was passed in order to prohibit junk dealers who did not have a license to collect junk in this city from storing their junk here.

PEACEFUL MAY FIRST.

For the first time for several years, May 1 passed in Quincy with peace and harmony existing between employer and employee, as there was no labor trouble of any kind. May 1 is usually the time when new wage schedules go into effect, and if there is to be a strike of any particular trade it comes on that date. There was no labor difficulty in Quincy as far as known on May 1. There was some little trouble at the shipyard a week or so ago but that has been peacefully settled, and everything is serene.

REDUCTION IN CITY DEBT

No New Bonds Issued Thus Far During Year 1914

The May 1 report of City Auditor Fairbanks shows that no new loans have been made by the city government of 1914, and that the total debt of the city has been reduced $95,950.00 The matured bonds which have been paid were: City or municipal debt, $42,150.00; water debt, $28,500.00; sewer debt, $20,500.00; and permanent street improvement debt, $4,800.00 This leaves the net debt $2,089,095.00.

It might be stated that a few loan orders have passed the City Council, but that the money has not been borrowed. Before deducting these loans the borrowing margin for current city expenses was $322,147.00 the largest for many years.

The receipts from taxes in 1914 have been $21,197.53 less than for the same period in 1913, while the water receipts were $396.27 larger. The receipts were as follows:

TAXES
1914 to May 1	$158,659.47
1913 to May 1	179,857.00
1912 to May 1	133,857.15

HOUGHS NECK TO BE HEARD

Important Hearing Before the City Council

The piece-de-resistance at Monday night's meeting of the City Council will be the public hearing on the petition and order making Houghs Neck a separate ward of the city to be known as Ward Seven. The dividing line, according to the order introduced some weeks ago, states that all that territory east of the Mt. Wollaston cemetery and Black Creek shall be included in the new ward.

The residents of Houghs Neck have always claimed that they have had no representation in the City Council and that is what they desire. In order to make this section a separate ward it requires favorable action for two successive years by the City Council. Should it eventually become a separate ward it would be entitled to three councilmen from the ward and another Councilman-at-large would be created, for according to the City Charter there shall be one less Councilman-at-large than there are wards. In other words should the section be set off, the City Council would be composed of 27 members instead of 23 as at present.

In addition to the public hearing a number of committee reports will be received, and it is said that the Committee on Public Buildings will report an order for the four room addition to the Houghs Neck school, so that while the meeting of a week ago was known as License night, that of Monday evening can be called Houghs Neck night.

RIDE TO FIRE ON APPARATUS

Council Committee Have a Thrilling Experience

Some of the City Council Committee on Fire Department had their first experience Friday in riding to a fire on a piece of fire apparatus. The committee were at the Central Fire Station in the afternoon looking at an exhibition of tractor truck for the steamer. The tractor given a try out Friday was a three wheel affair, that is there is a small wheel in front by which the apparatus is steered. The tractor comes entirely separate from the steamer and can be attached to the present apparatus in a few hours.

The committee boarded the tractor which was run about the city for an hour, during which it was tried out on some of the heavy grade hills. One of these extremely bad hills tried was that leading to the new Adams school. The apparatus readily climbed this hill at a good speed. It was also run through the streets at a good speed and running light as it was, the committee got pretty well shaken up.

They had just returned to the Central fire station when the alarm from Box 175 sounded. Chief Billings extended an invitation to the committee to respond to the alarm on the auto combination, an invitation which several accepted, and they were given the ride of their lives.

The street between the Central station and the box in Newcomb Square is a straight run, and as the street for most of the way is a State road it was in good condition, so the apparatus was able to make exceptionally good time and certainly did it. According to one of the committee they went through the air like a streak of lightning, and they had to hang on for dear life. They like automobile riding as a rule, but for a steady thing they beg to be excused from riding on auto fire apparatus.

The fire proved to be in a house just across the line into East Braintree, which had been seen from the Quincy side and an alarm sounded. The Quincy apparatus went over the line and had the fire practically out before the Braintree alarm sounded and the East Braintree apparatus arrived on the scene.

The fire evidently started at the rear of the house, in a pile of old shingles which had recently been taken from the house which was being reshingled. The rear end of the building was burning briskly and the shingles made a heavy smoke.

The house is what is known as the old Daniel Hayward house and was occupied by Miss Annie E. Hayward an aged lady and Charles Foster and his family. Miss Hayward was in the upper part of the house at the time and was helped out of the burning building by her brother Charles Hayward and Mr. Foster. The fire was confined to the rear part of the house and the damage is estimated at $700.

HERO GISBURN LOSES LEG

Necessary to Amputate Because of Injury

The right leg of Edward Gisburn of this city, who was wounded in the first day's fighting at Vera Cruz, has been amputated above the knee, according to information received by his grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Allen of 54 Summer street.

He is pronounced out of danger and when opportunity offers will be taken from the hospital ship Solace to the home of his aunt, Mrs. Nellie Green in Washington, where it is expected that he will recover.

Mrs. Allen, a few days ago, received a letter from "Hero" Gisburne dated April 21, in which he stated that he was ready to go ashore and participate in the capture of the port, and that he had prepared a small radio with which to send messages to the fleet from shore. It was while signaling from a house top that he was struck by a bullet from a Mexican rifle which shattered his right femur.

FOURTH OF JULY COMMITTEE.

The executive committee of the Fourth of July Association will meet this evening in the rooms of the Quincy Board of Trade, and will further consider plans for a celebration of the National holiday this year. The committee reports that they find sentiment in general favoring a celebration along similar lines to that conducted by the association during the past three years.

LANGELIER VOTED YES

Lined Up With Democrats on Boston Council Bill

Many constituents of Senator Langelier were surprised to see him vote on Friday in favor of enlarging the Boston city council, which was only defeated when President Coolidge voted and made a tie, 14 to 14 with six pairs. They are at a loss to understand why Senator Langelier elected as a Republican should ally himself with Lomasney.

An effort will be made on Monday to reconsider the vote, when a single change would secure the passage of the bill. A longer trial should be given the new Boston charter.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

It is not often that the City Clerk gets scooped, as newspaper men say, but he did Friday, by a newspaper that announced that "just as it went to press the Mayor had handed the City Clerk three liquor permits which he had approved." The paper also gave the names of the three which it was alleged were granted.

While it is doubtless a fact that the three expressmen mentioned may get their permit, they had not received them up to the closing hour of City Hall on Friday, and City Clerk Crane who was in his office in the evening stated that he had no official knowledge of any of the permits being signed, as none had reached him, as they naturally would when signed, as he has to issue the licenses.

Mayor Miller when informed Thursday that unless the orders were signed that day no expressman could transport liquor on Friday, replied all right, and that he guessed it would not harm anyone if no liquor was brought into Quincy for a few days. The Mayor has ten days in which to approve or disapprove the licenses, and he can take the full time if he desires.

At 11.30 this noon, Mayor Miller, when asked if he had signed any of the orders granting permits to transport liquor, said that he had signed three, W. F. Loud & Son, Adams Express and Bert Miller. They had not been issued however, as in order to be issued they must be handed to the City Clerk. It is probable that they will be given to the City Clerk before closing time this noon.

The Mayor further said that he did not see as any great harm had come from no one having a permit Friday, and that he guessed the city could stand it.

City Clerk Crane was kept busy this morning by callers asking if their licenses were ready. It will be remembered that the council passed a large number of licenses last Monday, among which aside from the liquor transportation permits were licenses to drive wagons for the collection of junk, and it is these latter class that are the most worried, although several expressmen have called about their permits.

The School Committee did a commendable thing the other evening when they voted to let the Civic League for Immigrants have the free use of a room in the old Adams school building for its work. The work of the League is educational as well as patriotic. It is also strictly unsectarian, such men as Dr. Eliot, Cardinal O'Connell and Bishop Lawrence being in active sympathy with it. There are many immigrants coming to Quincy who need such advice and assistance as the League proposes to give.

People who read sensational newspapers these days are not obtaining much real news. They are not only wasting their pennies, but encouraging mendacity. Affairs in Mexico are bad enough, but not nearly as bad as the yellow journals would have us believe. The regularity with which their inflammatory stories are proved false ought to open the eyes of their readers. The way to get the facts and preserve one's peace of mind is to read only reliable papers. The same observation might well be applied to local journalism also.

Two remarkable tributes were paid the Scottish race Monday evening at Music hall. Governor Walsh stated that the Commonwealth has fewer calls for assistance from the Scotch than from any other nationality and Judge Avery declared that, although he saw Scotsmen "within the bar." (meaning attorneys,) he seldom saw a Scotsmen "at the bar" meaning, of course, that the Scotch were seldom charged with crime. Here was strong evidence that the Scotsman is law-abiding and self-supporting, two highly desirable qualities.

Any city should gladly consent to having a mobilization camp located within its bounds unless there are special reasons for refusing that privilege. It is on our soldiers that we depend to protect our citizens in Mexico and uphold the honor of our Nation and it ill behooves any locality to refuse to accommodate them. In this crisis it is not enough to cheer the flag. We should do something practical whenever called upon to uphold the hands of our President and those who are entrusted with him with serious responsibility. Real patriotism often demands sacrifices on the part of those who remain safely at home as well as from those who face danger for us. To give a field in which the troops may be mobilized is but a small contribution to the cause and no sacrifice is too great when the honor of the country or the protection of our citizens is at stake.

THE MARINE CORPS.

The landing at Vera Cruz of a force from the United States Marine Corps brings into the theater of national conflict a body of men to whose work and service the public pays little attention.

The story is told of a writer who was preparing a sketch of certain services rendered by the navy. Being a land-lubber, he referred several times to the United States marines, where he should have spoken of the "Bluejackets" or "Jackies." "Cut out the marines," said a naval officer, "if you want to sell any copies in the navy."

In times of peace there would seem to have been some friction or at least lack of sympathy between marines and bluejackets. In any such crisis as the Mexican trouble, all arms of the service probably work together in better harmony than is the case with European powers.

Formerly in the English navy, the marine corps controlled the turbulent spirits of the sailors. The crew of a battleship was commonly recruited by force from the gutters of seaport towns. In the early days of the American navy, the marine corps similarly provided a police force to hold down the wilder characters who might create ructions.

Of recent years there has been a great improvement in the personnel of the bluejackets. They are perfectly capable of policing themselves. The marine corps could never be really popular in the navy as long as it was recalled as a club to compel the obedience of sailors.

Under the rules issued in 1908, the marine's service is mostly confined to police work at naval bases, and to expeditions on shore like the taking of Vera Cruz. Little romance attaches to him in the public eye. But when there is a duty to be performed in some miasmatic tropic clime, or under the cover of hostile guns as at Vera Cruz, he offers his service and his life with fine efficiency and patriotism.

ANNUAL FAIR T EAST MILTON

The annual fair of the Neighborhood Club of East Milton was held Friday afternoon and evening at the church and it proved to be a grand success. The success is due to the efficient work of Mrs. Carleton Rowe and Miss Bessie Hill, who had general charge of affairs. In the afternoon the fair was held in the church vestry and the chairmen of the various tables were as follows:

Ice Cream—Mrs. M. L. Abbot.
Candy—Miss Hutchinson.
Apron—Mrs. Benj. Fuller.

Childrens'—Mrs. A. H. McCurdy.

The selling of the tickets was in charge of Mrs. W. T. Parsons. The evening's entertainment consisted of a play called "Hiawatha" and piano duets by Louis Gosselin and Lewis Harlow. The latter also played selections which he has composed himself and which he will give at a recital in Boston in a few weeks. The play went off finely and much credit is due to Mrs. Rowe and Miss Hill for the excellent way in which they trained the children.

The following took part in the play:
Hiawatha—J. Randall Pratt.
Minnehaha—Doris Pearce.
Makomis—Dorothy Fuler.
Gitche—Manitou—Langdon Parsons
Arrow maker and priest—Kenneth Hecker.

The part of the Indian girls was taken by the Hoosic-Whisick Camp Fire Girls: Ernesta Libbey, Emily Doherty, Marion Hastings, Elizabeth Eaton, Alice Whittemore, Annie Leary and Marion Clark. The Indian boys were William and Gordon Hecker, Eliot Olsen, Albert Parsons, Hugh Robertson, Fred Gruner and Sherman Ellsworth.

CAVALRY FORCE IS QUADRUPLED

Ordered to Scene of Miner's Strike In Colorado

ALLAYS AN UNEASY FEELING

Situation Unchanged, With Exception That No Violence Is Reported—Governor's Proposals For Settlement of Trouble Declared by Operators to Be Acceptable to Them

Washington, May 2.—Orders to quadruple the force of federal cavalrymen in the Colorado coal strike regions went from the war department late last night.

The entire Eleventh regiment from Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and two troops of the Twelfth from Fort Robinson, Neb., were ordered to proceed to the scene at once, Colonel Lockett of the Eleventh to take supreme command of the situation.

EFFORTS TO END STRIKE

Governor's Terms of Agreement Are Agreeable to the Operators

Denver, May 2.—State and federal authorities co-operated in an effort to settle the Colorado strike of coal miners, but the situation is still unchange, except that no violence has been reported.

Regular troops occupy the Trinidad, Fremont county, and Walsenburg districts, and state troops are still in service at Ludlow and in the northern coal fields. Additional state troops were sent from Ludlow to Aguilar.

The action of Secretary Garrison in granting the joint request of Major Holbrook and Governor Ammons for more federal troops has served to allay uneasiness in quarters where it was feared the quota of regular soldiers would not be sufficient to maintain order.

While Holbrook and Ammons were devoting efforts to secure additional troops, the question of disarming strikers and mine employes remained in a secondary position.

In a telegram addressed to Martin D. Foster, chairman of the house committee on mines and mining, the presidents of twenty-one Colorado coal companies reiterated their willingness to agree to a settlement of the coal strike on the terms suggested by Ammons in a letter of Nov. 27, 1913, which was laid before representatives of the operatives and miners at a conference on that date.

Governor Ammons in the letter urged that the point of recognition of the union be waived, but that the miners be permitted to maintain their organization. He urged further that the operators guarantee the employment of a check weighman; abolish the scrip system; observe the regulations of the eight-hour law; permit employes to trade where they choose; insure observance of the semi-monthly pay day; observe to the letter all the provisions of the coal mine inspection law, and employ again all strikers whose places had not been filled and who had not been guilty of law violation during the strike.

The telegram includes the letter of Ammons and says:

The strikers refused to accept the terms of settlement proposed by the governor and approved by the operators, and all the disorders and bloodshed in this state since Nov. 27 has been due to this attitude of the officers and members of the United Mine Workers of America. We still consider the governor legally and industrially sound and have never retracted our formal approval thereof."

HOME IS GUARDED

Demonstrations Against Rockefeller Have Become Violent

New York, May 2.—So violent have the demonstrations against John D. Rockefeller, Jr., become, as a result of the Colorado mine strike, that a guard was established about the home of the millionaire. His residence is to be guarded day and night.

The "mourning" picketing of the Rockefeller and Standard Oil offices at 26 Broadway was resumed and even more extensive demonstrations of protest are planned by Upton Sinclair, who is now serving a jail sentence for having "picketed" the Broadway building.

CRITICIZES GOTHAM'S MAYOR

Man Who Sent Threatening Letters to Mitchel Is Arrested

New York, May 2.—Jacob Hellman, who for a time resided at 83 Bowery, where Michael P. Mahoney, who recently attempted to assassinate Mayor Mitchel, also lived, was arrested on a charge of sending threatening letters to the mayor.

After his arrest Hellman criticized the mayor and said it seemed he did not care to be warned by the bullet fired by Mahoney. "Mayor Gaynor was warned by a bullet not to cross the ocean, but he disobeyed and died," said Hellman.

State Auditor Quits

Concord, N. H., May 2.—Frank A. Musgrove, state auditor, tendered his resignation to Governor Felker, to take effect June 30. Health and private business were given as reasons for his action.

ONE DAYS WORK OF SECRETARY

Does Quincy Appreciate Work of Associated Charities?

It is probably well known that the Secretary of the Associated Charities is a busy person, and that the work of the society is saving many thousands of dollars yearly would be acknowledged by many, but simply as a matter concerning the public well being, what is such work worth to the community?

Here is the outline of one day's work:—In the morning the Secretary visits the office of the Society for Prevention Cruelty to Children to consult in regard to the case of a young girl, aged 12 years, with no father or mother, wayward and neglected. Then a visit to an old lady, sick, worked out, living in one room, no one to take care of her.

Then, a visit to the Overseer of the Poor, to ask aid for a family, and to give information as to immorality in another family, which results in stopping the aid which has been given. Then a visit to the Quincy court, pausing to report to the Probation Officer that a young girl, who came to us less than a year ago, and attempted suicide, and constantly visited since, is to be happily married.

Then, back to the office to keep office hours; consult with a mother in regard to securing care for a sick child, and shoes for two other children; consult with a man in regard to two daughters who are wayward and will not work; see an old lady who calls occasionally to tell her troubles; arrange work for five volunteers for following day in visiting families, and prepare for conference, answering telephone in between and writing six letters.

After office hours arrange with her physician and several interested ladies to have the old lady, who was visited in the morning, sent to a private hospital for two weeks, and later to a convalescent home, and also arrange to get some money to pay for her care in the hospital, and with the Hospital, to receive her. Also write to a Society in another city to have the daughter of the old lady visited in her home to learn if she and her husband are willing to receive and care for her, and if it is advisable to send her to them or continue to care for her in Quincy. Arrange to provide shoes for two children and to secure a physician's care for a sick child.

This is a fair day's work, a recent day, and not an unusually busy one. The Society needs more money in order to maintain the office and meet their expenses. Rupert F. Claflin, Granite Trust Co., is the treasurer and is always pleased to receive subscriptions; or money may be sent directly to the office, 148 Goffe street members of the Quincy Teachers' Association are going to give the play "A Scrap of Paper" for the benefit of the Associated Charities in Alpha hall, May 12, at 8 P. M. This is a chance to help the society and spend a pleasant evening at the same time. Tickets are now being sold by Mrs. Wilson Marsh, Mrs. Francis Abele, Mrs. Frank Emery and others.

WILL CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY.

The Quincy branch of the Marine Plumbers and Steamfitters met in Wilson's hall Friday evening and arranged to celebrate their fourth anniversary on June 24. The nature of the observance will be decided by the committee in charge of which Andrew Kehoe is chairman. A series of educational hours, similar to those held by the Boston Central Labor Union, has been inaugurated, and at the next meting there will be a speaker from the American Federation of Labor bureau to discuss events of interest to the craft and other topics. President John Regan presided during the evening and there was a good attendance.

REBEKAH DANCE.

The George L. Gill Associates, prominent members of the George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, I. O. O. F., held a social dance in Electa hall on Friday evening, which was well attended. Welch was in charge and she was assisted by a committee consisting of Mrs. Sadie Wood, Mrs. Lillian Baker, Mrs. Marie G. Hall, Mrs. Annie L. MAY CLEAN THE COURT HOUSE

It is probable that another attempt will be made at an early date to clean the granite at the Court House, and it is believed that this time a permanent job will be accomplished.

The granite originally was burned with acid by the workmen cleaning it. Sometime later it was given a sand blast cleaning, but this did not do the business. Still later A. B. Smith came forward and used a powerful acid which made the granite look worse than before.

Today however John C. Murray, the chairman of the Board of Health formerly president of the Granite Manufacturers Association, has been demonstrating what he can do in the way of cleaning the granite. He has cleaned several spots on the front of the building and his preparation certainly does the business. Just what he uses is not known, but it is not the powerful acid used by Mr. Smith for Mr. Murray can readily handle his preparation which does not burn the hands and does not spoil the clothing.

Some eight months ago Mr. Murray tried some of his preparation on City Hall, which had begun to turn yellow, and it worked to perfection. Today the spot cleaned is as bright as it was the day it was applied eight months ago.

This demonstrates the staying qualities of Mr. Murrays preparation. Mr. Murray said that it would be a long job cleaning the building as in some cases two or perhaps three applications would have to be made to do the work. The liquid used is first applied and then later washed off with a scrubbing brush. The liquid in the first place is applied with an ordinary paint brush.

SERIOUS FALL.

H. G. Pratt, 86 years, a retired carpenter of this city, is confined to his home on Edwards street as the result of a fall received Wednesday evening, and is reported to be doing as well as can be expected. The accident occurred while he was crossing a corridor in his home which was in partial darkness, and through a misstep he fell down a flight of stairs. A physician was summoned and found he had sustained minor cuts about the head and a sprained arm.

BETHANY SERVICES.

At the Sunday morning service at Bethany church the pastor will preach and seventeen new members will be received into the church. The pleasant Sunday evening service will be of especial interest to all citizens of Quincy not attending another church. Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, D. D. is of national reputation, he is especially enjoyed by young men. The young ladies chorus will be assisted by James S. Whyte, bass soloist.

MAY NIGHT DANCE.

In spite of the fire which seriously damaged the headquarters of the Braintree Athletic Association in Long's block early yesterday morning, their May night dance which was to have taken place there last evening was held instead in Cochato hall and there was a very enjoyable time for all who attended. There were about 300 persons present, the majority in evening dress and the affair was one of the prettiest functions of the season. The music was furnished by Maxam's four piece orchestra. The feature of the evening was the May pole dance, beautifully done by the following young ladies: Misses Evelyn Bridgham, Helen Averill, Olive Crocker, Susan Avery, Florence Bent, Florence Robinson, Almira Fuller, Bertha Smith, Lillian Ness and Mrs. Clayton Marstin, the Misses Murial Badger, Edith Chapman, Dorothy Kingsbury all of Wollaston, Miss Beatrice Morrison of Quincy and Miss Lillian Harlow of Weymouth.

Dancing was enjoyed until 10.30 o'clock when ice cream was served. The dance was then resumed and enjoyed until a late hour. Lemonade and frappe were an ever ready encouragement to the strenuous dancers the entire evening.

The affair was in charge of the following gentlemen: President, Elmer E. Abercrombie, Seth Catlin, Jr., vice president, Willard E. Davenport, treasurer, Stillman F. Pratt, secretary, J. Windsor Davy, F. E. M. South, Oscar A. Hubbard, Ralph L. Wiggin, Robert F. Tonner and Albert F. Hollis.

The young ladies in the maypole dance were instructed by Miss Louise Abercrombie and the pianist was Mrs. George A. Ellsworth.

CARNEGIE MEDAL.

The spring meeting of the Carnegie hero fund commission was held at Pittsburg, Penn., on Friday and 32 acts of heroism were recognized. In nine cases silver medals were awarded, in 23 cases bronze medals.

Among those awarded bronze medals is Isaac L. Jones of Braintree who is a crossing-tender at the Braintree station and last summer rescued Mrs. Edward V. Heffernan of Braintree and her small child from death on the tracks at his crossing. The child ran under the gates as two trains were approaching from opposite directions. Instinctively the mother followed her child, and both were in imminent danger of being struck by one or both trains. Jones, without hesitation, ran to the rescue of the mother and her child, pushing them from the tracks barely in time to save their lives and his own.

MET WITH ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Wilson, wife of Rev. Daniel Monro Wilson, former pastor of First church now of Kennebunk, Maine, met with a severe accident April 23. In crossing the street after passing an express wagon, she stepped into a loop of rope which was dragging from the tailboard and was flung down heavily. The family physician found the larger bone of the left arm above the wrist broken, her knees bruised and other injuries. Mrs. Wilson was on her way back to the church to enjoy the entertainment, after having gone home on an errand.

MAPLE LODGE ANNIVERSARY.

Maple lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, has completed arrangements to observe its 34th anniversary in Electa hall next Wednesday evening, and a cordial invitation has been extended to friends of the members to attend. The committee in charge has arranged an elaborate program. Maple lodge, since its institution, has been one of the most popular organizations in the city and on its roll of membership are many people who have been prominently identified with the city's progress.

OFF TO EUROPE.

1st Thursday morning Rev. Fr. Matthew F. McDonnell, pastor of the St. Francis church of this town sailed from Boston for a trip to Europe, his destination being Rome, Italy. Father McDonnell has been in poor health for some time past and it is hoped that he will be greatly benefited by the outing. On the eve of his departure, he was given a substantial sum of money in gold as a slight token of the esteem of his many friends. The purse was presented by James W. Colbert, who is a prominent member of the St. Francis church and who as chairman of a committee of several gentlemen of the parish was instrumental in collecting the money.

Wanted to Help.

One day little Laura came into the kitchen and found her grandmother shelling peas. After watching her a moment, Laura said: "Oh, grandma, please let me help you unbutt the beans."

PRESCOTT APARTMENTS

Something New for Quincy But Popular Elsewhere

The "Prescott Apartments," a six-suite apartment house which has been building through the winter on Spear street on the estate of the late George W. Prescott is practically completed, the contractor William R. Dimock of Wollaston expecting to turn the building over to its owners next week. It is a most substantial building of stucco with slate roof, brick partition walls, fire proof doors, and probably the best built apartment house in the city.

In architecture it is pleasing for although containing six apartments it is of low construction being only two stories high with broad overhanging roof and wide piazzas. The location is open and sunny insuring coolness in summer and warmth in winter. The building is steam heated requiring janitor service.

The suites are what is known as Kitchenette apartments, something new for Quincy but very popular in other places, especially Back Bay, Boston, the Newtons, Brookline and Cambridge, and are intended for small families desiring all the comforts of a nice home without its burdens, especially the care of the heater and grounds. It is a comfort to many making week end visits or longer trips in winter to be able to return to a warm house and without fear of frozen water pipes.

Each apartment has a large living room, dining room, two bedrooms, bath, kitchenette and a large locker in basement. The kitchenettes are unique in many ways and equipped with large gas range, refrigerator, sink and tray, cupboards and shelves.

They are ideal homes for a small family and particularly adapted for two or three ladies who would like a cosy home with ample room to entertain friends at less cost and much more comfort than could possibly be had in one room in a boarding or private house and going out to meals.

Following out the policy of the owners and contractor, Quincy men and firms have been given all the work with the result that the workmanship is of the best. Horace G. Crocker did the inside plaster work and chimneys; K. S. Ruggles the slate roof; William H. Haslett the stucco work, cement steps and bath room and kitchen floors of the new material called petrosilo; the William A. Bradford Co. handled all the plumbing and fixtures also the steam heating plant; Beckford & Lynch the electric wiring, speaking tubes, bells, etc; James H. Lalley had charge of the interior and exterior painting; Axel Nelson, paper and papering; Holmes & Hall window shades and screens and H. L. Kincaide & Co., the gas ranges and refrigerators. With such reliable men behind the work it is no wonder that the results have proved so satisfactory.

Contractor Dimock expects to turn the building over to its owners next week who will open the unrented apartments for inspection on application to Miss Annie L. Prescott, or the real estate agencies.

The Junior Auxiliary of Christ church will have a May Pole party on Tuesday afternoon.

Revere High schools visit to this city Friday afternoon cost Quincy High another game by a score of 10 to 3. The game was slowly played, the cold high wind which swept the field making it uncomfortable for players and spectators alike. There was no improvement in the Quincy style of play.

The feature of the game was the home run of Sabbetti, the visiting right fielder who smashed out the longest drive made on the grounds for several seasons. Larkin made the fastest play of the game by knocking down a liner that was headed for centre, recovering it in time to throw the runner out at first and retire the side.

WOLLASTON MEN OUT.

All the Wollaston club men were eliminated in the second round of the Wollaston golf club spring tourney on Friday, the cards being: J. D. Standish, Jr., Detroit defeated F. G. PUTS ATTACHMENT ON ELEPHANT'S SIDE

How Connecticut Sheriff Brought Circus Men to Terms

South Norwalk, Conn., May 2.—Sheriff Ladrigan had a new experience when he was called upon to attach Wheeler Bros.' trick elephant, Tango.

Tango was doing a sort of "lame duck" sideways during the parade, when she accidentally bumped a horse owned by Lawrence Flynn. The horse landed in the gutter and died in 2½ seconds. Ladrigan wanted $200 for the killing of the horse. Wheeler Bros. said the animal was worth $40.

Ladrigan brought a bill poster along and pasted a notice of attachment upon Tango's ample side. Wheeler Bros. paid the $200.

Mediators Are Making Slow but Steady Progress

CARRANZA HOLDING THE KEY

Hard to Broaden Scope of Work In Head of Rebel Forces Refuses to Declare Armistice—Ryan Not to Be Shot by Mexican Federals—Active Endeavors to Save Oil Wells at Tampico From Destruction—Large Force Being Organized by Constitutionalists to Take City—Carranza Will Try to Protect Foreigners

Washington, May 2.—Assurance of peace, with a steady abatement of "war talk," is the dominant feature in the Mexican developments here. Attention is stil centered on the work of the South American mediators, who report steady progress and the avoidance of any deadlock between the parties.

In other quarters, however, the failure of Carranza thus far to accept the mediators' proposal for a suspension of hostilities against Huerta causes continued doubt over the outlook for broadening the scope of the mediators' work to a settlement of the whole Mexican situation.

Whether Secretary Bryan can induce the Carranza-Villa combination to arrange an armistice with Huerta pending the efforts of the Latin-American envoys to arrange a settlement of the Mexican trouble is the paramount subject of discussion. Without this consent there seems little likelihood that anything of a permanent nature can be arranged.

The diplomatic agent of Carranza says the constitutionalists cannot afford to declare a truce and the Carranza headquarters deliberately ordered an advance south and redoubled efforts of their troops before Tampico.

One of the mediators likened their work to a hard climb up a precipitous mountain, one dangerous cliff being reached. Fortunately, he added, the dangers thus far had been overcome and the advance was steady.

What Has Been Done

Summing up what the mediators had done thus far, a well-posted authority said it represented more actually accomplished in a given time than had ever occurred in the history of intermediation. He specified, beginning April 26 and continuing six days:

First, acceptance of good offices by the United States; second, acceptance by Huerta; third, acceptance by Carranza; fourth, suspension of hostilities by the United States; fifth, suspension of hostilities by Huerta.

The report that Dr. Ryan, an American in the service of the United States government, was about to be shot as a spy by the Mexican federals at Zacatecas, caused serious apprehension, but reassurances as to Ryan came direct from Huerta.

While the gravity and the hopefulness of the situation varied from hour to hour, the envoys of Argentine, Brazil and Chile kept steadily at their work. A long conference with Secretary Bryan was followed by a conference with Spanish Ambassador Riano, who represented the Huerta government.

The Spanish ambassador did not deliver any communication from Huerta, but went over the general situation. As showing the directness of the mediators they are putting aside all diplomatic circumlotion and sending cables direct to Huerta and Carranza and receiving direct replies.

A Hopeful Feeling

The regular meeting of the cabinet was devoted largely to affairs other than Mexico, showing that much of the tension over the situation has disappeared in administration quarters. Members of the cabinet spoke hopefully of the mediation proceedings, and felt, from its present aspect, that it would "work out." Bryan said the point in the negotiations where it was necessary to submit a basis for the American government's position had not yet been reached.

Secretaries Bryan and Daniels were active in their endeavors to neutralize the oil wells at Tampico. It developed that the local authorities at the town would take no action until advised by their superiors. So the British embassy continued its efforts to secure an understanding with the Huerta government while the United States communicated with Carranza.

American Consulate Reopened

The reopening of the American consulate at Tampico is expected to assist in keeping the wells from being destroyed. General Zaragoza, the federal commander there, has promised American Consul Miller protection.

Daniels said he had been informed that most of the wells had been capped with cement and that ordinary gun fire would not ignite them. Most of the wells are far in the interior, too, out of range of the fighting in the city.

Interference with foreign commerce at Tampico produced much discussion at the state and navy departments, but no announcement of policy. According to precedent, it was said, neither the constitutionalists or federals have any right to interfere with commercial vessels, though they may seize the cargoes after they land.

At the war department Secretary Garrison announced his intention of removing all the civil officers at Vera Cruz and replacing them with army officers. Garrison said no reflection was intended on the men already chosen, as he did not know any of them, but that it was customary under military occupation for all officers to be directly responsible to the war department.

The Tampico Situation

The situation at Tampico from an international point of view grows steadily worse. The incident of the firing on the Antilla and the waste that is going on there of foreign-owned property is fast leading President Wilson into another complication. The British ambassador made representations to the state department in the case.

Neutralization of the oil centre has been repeatedly suggested, but the administration evidently is putting off the evil hour of taking decisive action in the expectation or hope that the constitutionalists will take the town. As an indication of the president's attitude is the statement that no notice whatever would be taken of the firing on the Cuban flag which covered the ship.

Americans Are Safe

Consul Canada at Vera Cruz caused some surprise by a dispatch stating that there are 1500 refugees still in Mexico City. It is not believed, however, that they will suffer anything except the inconvenience and hardship inseparable from the slow, interrupted journey from the capital to the seacoast. It is figured that more than 10,000 Americans have fled from Mexico within the past week.

General Funston has taken hold of Vera Cruz and the American troops seem planted for an indefinite period. Under these conditions, with the rainy season at hand, every precaution must be taken against disease produced by the myriads of mosquitoes which are regarded as germ carriers.

General Gorgas, with his Panama experience in mind, recommends the allotment of money for sanitary measures such as the protection of troops in their sleeping quarters, wholesale vaccination against smallpox, the administration of typhoid prophylaxis and other precautions.

CARRANZA'S PROMISE

Will Try to Protect Foreigners In Making Attack Upon Tampico

Chihuahua, Mex., May 2.—General Carranza is determined to use every effort to protect the immense oil properties of Tampico, owned by foreigners, principally British, and he telegraphed the British ambassador at Washington to that effect, but will not agree to establish a neutral zone.

A large force is now being organized to capture Tampico, and the danger to the oil wells and to the great tanks was called to Carranza's attention by Sir Cecil Spring-Rice through H. C. Myles, British consul at El Paso.

The ambassador's notes recited that the British interests had suffered in the recent unsuccessful rebel attacks on the city and that foreign employes had been forced to leave their posts.

Carranza's reply stated that foreigners who left Tampico did so of their own accord, and were welcome to return under every assurance of protection lying within his power. He added that immediate attention would be given to driving out roving bands of marauders. To this end orders were telegraphed to General Cepellero, governor of the state of Tamaulipas.

Carranza also telegraphed George C. Carothers, confidential agent of the United States at El Paso, declaring that in the forthcoming attack he would do all in his power to safeguard the lives and property of foreigners.

The federals at Tampico control the river along which the oil tanks are built, but the rebels occupy a large oil field lying in the outskirts of the city.

REPORTED WRECK OF SIBERIA UNTRUE

Big Pacific Mail Liner Reports Safe at Manila

Manila, May 2.—The Pacific Mail steamer Siberia arrived here at 11 o'clock today. The report she was in a wreck was untrue.

The fate of the big Pacific Mail liner Siberia in the Yellow sea, with 520 passengers and a crew of 200 aboard, was a marine mystery since yesterday morning, when a wireless call for help, purporting to come from Captain Zeeder of the Siberia, stated she was aground on the island of Formosa.

Warships of several nations had been sent to her assistance, but not a word has been heard from them.

TO CHECK ROCKEFELLER

Bill Attacking His Aid to Government Introduced In Senate

Washington, May 2.—A bill to prohibit the payment of the salaries of officials and farm demonstrators in the department of agriculture by the Rockefeller foundation fund was introduced in the senate by Senator Kenyon of Iowa, who was the author of the resolution which revealed that 625 persons, nominally employes of the government, are paid with Rockefeller money.

It is stated that the indorsement of Secretary Buttrick of the Rockefeller foundation is necessary before an individual can obtain employment under the government as an expert in the department of agriculture. The charge is made by Kenyon that while the foundation has been dealing largely with the south, yet it is known that Rockefeller money is ready to finance all the states of the north if the selection of the farm demonstrators can be controlled by the foundation.

ARRESTED AS FIREBUG

Police Say Lynn Boy Is Resposible For Fifteen Fires

Lynn, Mass., May 2.—Police inspectors arrested Hyman Cullum, aged 15, on a charge of arson, claiming him to be resposible for fifteen small fires in Lynn during the past week. The inspectors claim that they arrested the boy as he was in the act of destroying a postal card addressed to a Lynn newspaper, on which was written:

"I had to set one more fire today. I see the police questioning other boys in place of me. The Fire Bug."

Practically all the fires were in cellars and were probably started by dropping matches or blazing rags through open windows. In no case was the damage large.

SIX MONTHS IN "SOLITARY"

Punishment of German Aeronauts Who Landed In Russia

Berlin, May 2.—Hans Berliner, the German aeronaut, who was made a prisoner at Kirgischansk, Russia, when he came to earth at the end of a balloon trip from Bitterfield, Ger., and the two passengers who accompanied him, have been sentenced by the Russian authorities to six months' solitary confinement.

Kirgishansk is in the Ural mountains. The aeronauts landed there after a balloon voyage of forty-seven hours, in which they made a world's record, the distance of 1863 miles. The Russian authorities took the travelers into custody on suspicion of espionage.

TROLLEY MEN TO PLAY BALL

League Formed With Brockton and Taunton

Morning games will be the program of the Bay State Trolley league which was formed early last week at the Torrey street car barn, Brockton. This four team organization takes in the employees of the Torrey street and Campello barns of Brockton, and the Taunton and the Quincy barns. The Quincy team will play its games on Merrymount park.

The team has organized with Edward Sullivan, captain. Roland Batson is the manager-coach, and during the past week has been directing the practice of a large squad of candidates. The first game will be played Tuesday morning with the Campello team as the opponents.

The probable lineup will be: Ross, catcher; Bock, pitcher; Gaw, first base; O'Donnell, second; Rooney, short stop; Harris, third base; Findlay, left field; P. Kerr, centre field; Keegan, right field. Hawes and Sullivan are the second string pitchers and McCluskey the substitute catcher.

All the games will be called at 10 o'clock and arrangements are being made to carry the visiting teams and rooters in special cars. The organization of the league has aroused the interest of the car employees, principally because a man who is not actively engaged in the operation of cars is not eligible to play. The schedule:

May 5—Campello at Quincy.
May 12—Quincy at Torrey street.
May 19—Quincy at Taunton.
May 26—Torrey street at Quincy.
June 2—Taunton at Quincy.
June 9—Campello at Quincy.
June 16—Quincy at Taunton.

The Claimant

He Had Recourse to a Brute For a Witness

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

There is in man a faculty for development that the lower animals do not possess.

An illustration of this diversity between men and animals occurred during the eighteenth century in the case of a young Irishman who emigrated to America and later returned to his native country. Arthur Donovan was a younger son of the Earl of Strongford. Young Donovan was devoted to hunting, and, since there was a fine pack of hounds on the estate, he occupied himself largely with the sport. Neither of his two older brothers cared for it, so that the dogs came to look upon Arthur as their master, and he never went among them that they did not show the greatest affection for him.

Arthur was not only beloved by his dogs, but by every one who knew him. He was a fine, manly fellow, while his older brothers were disposed to lead a dissolute city life. The heir to the title and estates spent most of his time in London, while the second was an officer in one of the aristocratic English regiments. Arthur, having only the remotest chance to inherit the title, became restive and did what a great many younger sons of British noblemen did in those days—he emigrated to America.

Arthur Donovan was but eighteen years old when he left Ireland for America. The last goodby he spoke was to the dogs. Going out to the kennels, he called to them, and they gathered about him, barking their joy, supposing that they were going for a hunt. There was one dog, Hector, of which Arthur had made an especial pet. He was very young, but Arthur had found him capable of being trained far easier than the other hunters. Hector loved his master, and his master loved Hector. When it came to bidding farewell to this dog Arthur's eyes became wet, and, breaking away from his pet and waving adieu to the pack, he returned to the house, where a conveyance was waiting to take him to Belfast, from which point he was to sail for Virginia.

Arthur reached America not long before the breaking out of the Revolutionary war. In civil strifes the side youngsters take is liable to be decided by circumstances. Perhaps young Donovan was influenced by a hereditary antagonism to England, but the immediate cause of his advocating the American cause was meeting with John Paul Jones, who became famous as a naval commander. Jones was as much Scotch as Donovan was Irish. Donovan joined the future conqueror of the Serapis and was with him during that famous battle, receiving a wound in the face which left a scar which largely changed his expression.

At the end of the war Donovan had been in America ten years. Between eighteen and twenty-eight there is always a considerable change in a man's appearance, but in this case there was much more than is usual. When Arthur left Ireland his face was smooth. Now it was covered with a beard, which he wore partly to hide the scar he had received in battle. Then he had a thick head of hair, which was now thin, and he had inherited a family predisposition to become gray early. As soon as hostilities ceased, with some prize money he had received he bought a tobacco plantation in Virginia, and, settling down on it, there was every prospect of his living the life of an American southern planter.

When Arthur joined Paul Jones he wrote his family in Ireland of the fact, and his father ordered that his name should never again be mentioned by any of the family. Eight years passed without a word between him and them. The oldest son died of dissipation, and the next younger brother, who had been sent with his regiment to America, was killed at the siege of Yorktown, which occurred near the end of the war. Neither of these men was married.

This left Arthur Donovan Earl of Strongford by right, but there was a barrier between him and the title which would be difficult to pass. In the first place, a cousin, Herbert Donovan, a keen and unscrupulous lawyer, was next of kin and, with Arthur out of the way, would possess the title and entailed estates. Secondly, Arthur, having had no communication with his family for years, would likely have difficulty in proving his identity. Thirdly, in endeavoring to establish his claim against his cousin his having fought England, especially with the so called pirate, Paul Jones, would prejudice every one against him.

When the Earl of Strongford died Herbert Donovan laid claim to the inheritance, taking the ground that Arthur was dead. To prove this he sent an agent to America with instructions to find a record of the death of some one bearing the name of Donovan and manufacture evidence that the deceased was the youngest son of the Earl of Strongford. This was not difficult. There were plenty of Donovans in America, and a record was found of an Arthur Donovan who had been killed at the battle of Trenton. Ireland was much farther from America in those days than now, and to make up a case proving this man was a son of the Earl of Strongford was not the task it would be today.

The position taken by Herbert Donovan was well fortified before Arthur heard of the great changes that had occurred since he left home. The occasion of his hearing of it at all was that the case became known to a Dublin attorney, O'Rourke, who knew the Strongfords, especially Herbert, and through a desire for gain, as well as a sense of justice, concluded to find Arthur, if alive, and notify him that his inheritance was about to pass to another. He, too, sent an agent to America in the matter of the Strongford title and estates.

Arthur was riding over the broad acres of his tobacco plantation when a man accosted him and handed him a letter from O'Rourke notifying him of the death of his father and brother and saying his cousin had laid claim to the title and estate. Arthur at once put his affairs in America in a position to go to Ireland and took the next vessel that sailed from Philadelphia. Arriving in Dublin, he went straight to O'Rourke, whom he had known before leaving home, and introduced himself as Arthur Donovan. He received his first setback in the fact that the attorney recognized nothing in his appearance of the youth he had seen more than ten years before. He asked Arthur what proof he had of his identity, and Arthur was obliged to confess that the life he had led as a sailor during the American war had resulted in the destruction of every paper he had possessed connecting him with the family.

O'Rourke was disheartened. He had spent some money in sending an agent to America, which it now appeared he was likely to lose. He was very doubtful about his client being the real Arthur Donovan. But Arthur, who had learned in his experience with the colonists how to put up a good fight, persevered and succeeded by narrating events which had happened in his family with which O'Rourke was conversant in putting sufficient confidence in the attorney to induce him to undertake his case, though Arthur was obliged to send to America for means to pay the costs.

When Herbert Donovan saw the claimant to the Strongford title he felt quite comforted. He had seen his cousin frequently in years gone by and now saw not the slightest resemblance between this man and Arthur Donovan. He had taken possession of the late earl's residence and ransacked the house, searching for any papers or likeness that might aid in establishing Arthur's claim. He had found some letters and a miniature painting on ivory made when Arthur was sixteen years of age. He had destroyed the letters and kept the portrait till he could discover whether it would aid his own case or his cousin's.

Death and change had played havoc with the Strongford household. Lady Strongford had died before Arthur left home. Most of the servants had gone elsewhere, and of those who remained many pronounced him an impostor, the rest being in doubt. Michael Monahan, the keeper of the hounds, was still there, though but two or three dogs were left of the pack, since no member of the family had hunted since his departure. Michael when he saw Arthur was in doubt whether he was the man he had known as a youth or an impostor. Asking Arthur for his hat, he put the lining up to his nostrils and drew a long breath.

"Ah, Mr. Arthur," he exclaimed, "you're the rale hunter that went to Ameriky! I know you by the fine perfume of you."

Arthur at once communicated the fact to his attorney as important proof. But O'Rourke saw nothing in it, and if there had been he said it could not be utilized in court. If Michael had not seen Arthur since his return to Ireland and would pick him out by his personal odor among a number of men it would go far toward establishing his claim. Was there any one else who had not seen him who would recognize him by this odor, which was very like musk and agreeable rather than unpleasant?

Unfortunately not a person could be found who had ever detected this personal odor. Arthur worked hard to get other evidence, but for every bit he got in his favor his cousin secured one against him. His counsel took the matter up for trial with misgivings, but hoped for the best. Michael Monahan made an excellent witness, and O'Rourke told Arthur that if he could get anything in the same line to reenforce it he believed that he could win the case for him.

Arthur asked Michael if any of the dogs he left behind when he went away were still living. Michael thought awhile, then replied that there was one left, old Hector, but he was half blind. After a conference between O'Rourke and Arthur it was decided to bring Hector into court as a last hope.

The scene when the old hunter was led up to Donovan was long remembered in those parts. Hector cast a glance at his master and looked away. Donovan drew nearer the dog till he was within a few inches of the animal's nose. Then Hector began to sniff, nosing about as though trying to remember something. Then he gave a low moan, which he kept repeating.

"Hec!" said Donovan.

It was now evident that the dog remembered his former master, laying his head against Donovan's breast and crooning like an old woman over a newly found child.

The case was won. What it is difficult to describe in words was easy for the jury to interpret. Donovan won and soon after took possession of the title and estates. The most valued creature on the premises was old Hector, which died at the advanced age of thirteen.

PASSES AWAY

and later took up the work of a constable which he followed for many years. He was appointed a justice of the peace way back in the early 70s, and has since that time held a commission as such; and has frequently been sought by parties desiring to be united in marriage.

During his active police days he gained considerable prominence in murder trials. He was engaged in the Langmaid murder case in New Hampshire, and helped to capture and convict Joseph LePaige who later paid the penalty for his crime. He was also largely instrumental in securing the conviction of James Henry Costley of Hanover for the murder of Julia Hawkes. Another important case in which he was concerned was that of the McCormick murder at Braintree for which James McKenney was sentenced to State's prison for life.

With the exception of a few months, Mr. Furnald has always resided in Quincy, this exception being when he was absent on a trip to California in 1852. In the early 40s he was engaged for a few years in the United States coast survey under Prof. Glink, the trip being made in the sailing ship Flying Childers, by way of Cape Horn. In the early 40s he was also for a time engaged in the United States coast survey under Prof. Glink.

It might be added that in adition to his various other offices, he was for years the local agent of the Massachusetts Society for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

On July 9, 1850, he married Miss Elizabeth Fowles Dodge. Three children have been born to them, Thomas E. Furnald, Miss Mary Lizzie Furnald and Henry P. Furnald, who with his widow and grandchildren and one great grandchild survive him.

Mr. and Mrs. Furnald celebrated their fiftieth wedding June 9, 1900, for although no invitations were issued for the event it did not pass unnoticed. In 1910 they quietly observed their 60th anniversary, and on July 9, last year, they celebrated their 63d wedding anniversary, but on account of the poor health of each, their celebration was confined to the immediate family. A remarkable record for married life.

It is only up within a short time that Mr. Furnald has been unable to be about and to attend functions of any kind. When the First Parish club was formed last year he was the first to step forward and pay his membership fee. He was a regular attendant at all of the club dinners last year, but has been unable on account of failing health to attend this year.

He was affiliated with several secret societies, being one of the earliest members of Mt. Wollaston lodge I. O. O. F., a charter member of George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, a charter member of Manet Encampment and a charter member of Merrymount lodge Knights of Honor. He was also a member of the Red Men of Braintree and other organizations.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at the First Parish church at 2.30, and will be attended by the Odd eFllows, Rebekahs, Knights of Honor and other organizations.

DISTRICT COURT.

The continued case of Charles H. Tobey, for keeping a disorderly house at Braintree, was further continued until May 16.

Assaid Kouri was arraigned on complaint of the Board of Health for not having his garbage properly protected. His case was placed on file on payment of $10.20 costs.

The continued cases of David Silverman and Isaac Cutler for violation of the City Ordinances by storing junk at Quincy without a license was heard and they were fined $10 each.

Thomas Tracy was arraigned for having smelt nets in his possession at Weymouth. He was fined $50.

BRIEFS

The Wollaston Yacht club will open the season this evening with a banquet at the clubhouse. An entertainment will follow.

The Quincy band headed a delegation of 200 members of the local branch who paraded in the Socialist celebration in Boston on May day.

Miss Elizabeth G. Dickie of 173 Centre street was given a linen shower on Thursday evening, her engagement to John S. King, having been announced.

The recent entertainment for the benefit of the Wellesley college fund netted over $300 and the Quincy Wellesley committee are gratified and pleased over the result.

Congratulations are being extended to M. J. L. Kennedy, the genial manager of Joyce Bros., on the birth Thursday of a little daughter, at his home 288 Washington street. Both Mrs. Kennedy and daughter are doing nicely.

One of the attractions at the annual May dancing party of the Quincy Catholic club next Tuesday evening will be the fancy dancing exhibition by Miss Marion Frances Bill and Joseph Paul Gardner. They will give several special dances.

Henry M. Faxon, president of the Electric Light Co., has been confined to his home for several days with an attack of rheumatism. Many people have complained of rheumatism this spring which is doubtless due to the large amount of damp weather.

A business meeting of the Epworth League of the Atlantic M. E. church is called for Sunday at 6.45 P. M., to select a new president to take the place of Rev. J. W. Hall who has moved from Atlantic. The league will observe the anniversary of the founding of the League on Sunday evening, May 17.

The winners at the whist party of the George L. Gill Associates in Odd Fellows' hall on Thursday afternoon, conducted under the direction of Mrs. Sadie M. Wood, were Mrs. A. Smith, Mrs. Herbert Johnson, Mrs. Sarah C. Williams, Mrs. A. T. Gates, Mrs. Margaret Tenney. The consolation prize was awarded to Mrs. B. Walsh.

Through an error in the account of the death of the late Elizabeth E. C. Linton her oldest son and next of kin, Benjamin F. Linton was not mentioned. This has caused a number to think Mr. Linton was dead and he wishes it rectified. His residence is 655 East Sixth street, South Boston, Mass., where he has lived with wife and family for the past sixteen years. He was present at the funeral of both father and mother. Mr. Linton has followed in his fathers footsteps and is a stationary engineer, for Codman & Shurtleff, manufacturers of surgical instruments, Columbus avenue, Boston, where he has worked for years.

The dancing by the children at the May Festival was a splendid exhibition of the result of thorough training and team work. Aside from the accomplishment of being able to do something acceptable to the audience, these children were helping to raise money for the summer school work. The credit for the fine exhibition on Friday afternoon at Music Hall is due Miss Ruth A. Bass, a Quincy girl, who is a graduate of Sargent's school of physical culture at Cambridge. For weeks Miss Bass has drilled the children in their various parts and Saturday's results showed that she is a young woman especially fitted for this line of work.

FUNERAL OF C. N. DITSON.

The funeral of Charles N. Ditson, for many years a prominent resident of Quincy, who passed away at Brighton two days ago, was held this morning from the First church. The services which were of a simple nature were conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, assisted by Rev. Edward Cummings of the South Congregational church, Boston. There were many beautiful flowers. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

WASHINGTON STREET GARAGE.

It is reported that Henry L. Kincaide is to commence work soon on the erection of a garage on Washington street. The garage is to be located on the old Kenison estate adjoining the Electric Express depot. It will have a frontage of 90 feet and a depth of 150 feet.

One of Best Entertainments in Quincy for Long Time

Many who would liked to have attended the Pageant of Nations given at Music hall, Friday afternoon, under the auspices of the Educational Committee of the Quincy Women's club, were unable to obtain admission when they applied at the door as the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. For this reason there is a most general wish that the Pageant should be repeated at an early date.

Everybody who attended the presentation were enthusiastic over it. The dances and marches were finely executed and the costumes of the young people were very dainty and some of them very handsome. Much credit is due to Mrs. Mellen and other members of her committee, for it must have meant an enormous amount of hard work for the committee, also to Miss Marie Bass who arranged the dances.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The pupils of the High School received their reports Friday for the fourth term.

Prof. Sarret of Oxford University, England gave a very interesting and instructive lecture on "Folk Songs" Friday morning at the Town Hall to 700 school pupils. Prof. Sarret told about the history of folk songs and illustrated the various tones of music on the piano. He was accompanied by Mrs. Littlefield, the well known soloist of Boston. Prof. Sarret began his lecture with English folk songs and gave the following selections "Richard of Taunton Dee," "Come Lassies and Ladds," "Barbara Allen" and "The British Grenadiers." Then came "Men of Harlech" representing the Welsh folk song which was followed by the French songs: "The Poor Laborer" and "Muset." The professor closed his lecture with two German songs: "A Good-night Song" and "A Dance Song." The lecture was given by the music committee of the Milton Educational society for the further training of the pupils of the public schools for the love and knowledge of music.

FIRE CHIEF'S YEAR EXPIRES

The term of Edward McHugh, chief of the fire department of Milton, who despite the sensational attempts to oust him from office, finished out the year, expired today. There is little possibility of his reappointment, however, because the new board of Engineers, Harry Holmes, Joseph Manning and Horatio A. Gilbert, are said to be opposed to him.

Several weeks ago charges were preferred against Chief McHugh and after a public hearing, which at times bordered near a riot, the matter was taken under advisement by the board of Selectmen before whom the hearing was held. They have exonerated him from the charges.

Friends of Chief McHugh claim that he is a civil service employe and cannot be removed from office except for cause. They contend that the act placing all men connected with the fire department under Civil service as accepted 12 years ago, applies to Chief McHugh, who before his appointment was a call man covered by the act.

The board of engineers, it is expected, will ask for his resignation so that they can appoint one of the several candidates to the office, and it is also expected that Chief McHugh will not tender it. Both parties may have to resort to the courts to have the matter adjudicated.

TEACHERS IN QUARANTINE.

All of the teachers of the Sharon schools are quarantined in their cozy home on Summit avenue since Miss Mertice P. Thrasher of the High school one of their number developed the measles. This necessitated the closing of all the schools of the town. Early in the year the teachers organized a Teachers Club and have conducted co-operative housekeeping in their home. When the nature of Miss Thrasher's malady was discovered a quarantine was extended.

PERCENTAGE OF SKILLED WORKMEN

Is Probably Higher at Quincy Shipyard Than In Most Other Large Industries

Men Are Advanced Along Civil Service Lines

At the works of the Fore River Ship Building Corporation in Quincy, where in 1913 the average number of men employed was about 4000, there has been in the last few years a progressive installation of a system of records by which the abilities of employes are appraised and their qualifications and advancement definitely determined.

This means that the advancement of an employe depends upon himself, not upon the whims, the prejudices or the personal favor of his superiors. It means, also that if he stays upon the same rung of the ladder year after year, or if he is demoted rather than promoted, the responsibility will be his, and that he will not be able to extenuate his lack of progress by vague references to unfair conditions.

The use of this system of personal records for individual employes is more significant at the great ship building plant than in any of the other industrial establishments which have installed it, because at Fore River the percentage of skilled men is very large.

THREE OUT OF EVERY FIVE.

Three of every five men on the payrolls of the Quincy concern are rated as skilled employes, and only two of each five as unskilled. It is to the skilled men that the filing system is especially applicable. The vice-president is of the opinion that there is scarcely another industrial plant in the country of any magnitude in which the percentage of skilled workmen is so large. In many of them the proportion is as one to two, while in others it ranges up from one to four and even to one to 10.

This does not mean, however, that at Fore River all the 4000 employes are rated in exactly the same way. There are so many departments in the great plant, and the work done in them is so various, that as yet a uniform system has not been adopted. Vice-President H. G. Smith, who is general manager of the works, says that the tendency in industry in general is undoubtedly toward an exact and elaborate rating of all the qualities and attainments of every employe. At Fore River today the 300 men in the drafting department are so rated. The thousands of men in the various mechanical departments are rated upon another system, which gives an accurate and comprehensive record of the work they do and thus affords evidence of their fitness for promotion. But in all the divisions of the industry the effort is to advance men "along civil service lines," to use the vice-president's own phrase.

MORE THAN MACHINES.

Mr. Smith realizes to the full that industry deals with "humans as well as with machines," and he comments in these terms upon the resulting problem:

"Efficiency is the basis of industrial success as business has been developed in these times. Without doubt efficiency is essential, if for no other reason than that competition makes it so. But we must all of us take pains not to lose sight of the fact that we are dealing, not with machines, but with men, and men are in a sense machines, only they operate with hundreds and thousands of variables, and these variables must not be forgotten.

"Here in the Fore River we try to ascertain the qualifications of our men, their special aptitudes, their ambitions, the efforts they make to fit themselves for better stations. We wish to know just where in the great machine they will fit. But they are something more than mere machines, and the very fact that these human pieces can be shifted about until they are fitted into the exact place in which they will be most useful makes one of the chief differences between them and a machine of steel levers and wheels, in which each part must fit into one place or go out of the machine altogether."

The 200 draughtsmen at Fore River are more carefully indexed at present than the employees in any other department. A poor draughtsman can do a lot of harm. Let him get a drawing wrong and he may pile up enough work to keep a score of men

ONLY SEVEN ARE GRANTED

Mayor Holds Up Six of the Liquor Permits

For the first time in many years, Quincy was absolutely in the dry column over Sunday. Many people have been in the habit of ordering a Sunday supply of wet goods on Friday and Saturday which are brought out from Boston by the expressmen. The failure of the Mayor however to sign the liquor transportation permits, or to turn over to the City Clerk the three which he did approve, made it impossible for any of the expressmen to bring liquor into the city Saturday without violation of the law.

None of the express companies cared to violate the law, and all refused to transport liquor unless they received their permit. The police were on the watch to see that no expressmen violated the law and the result was that while usually a large amount of beer is brought into Quincy on Saturday none came last Saturday.

One express company cited a particular case that had come to its attention. A certain man had arranged for a gathering of friends Saturday night to celebrate his birthday or some other event, and had planned to have some liquid refreshments along with the other things on the program. Several cases of beer had been ordered for the event, as it was supposed that the expressman would bring it out all right. Not getting his permit however the expressman refused to violate the law and the party was called up by telephone and told that if he wanted any liquid refreshment for his party he would have to go to Neponset or Boston after it himself.

This was doubtless one of many cases, and report has it that the liquor places at Neponset did a thriving bottle business on Saturday and that many quarts of the stuff found their way into the city by men who made the trip to Neponset especially for their over Sunday supply.

The Mayor of course knew what would happen if he did not sign any of the permit orders, but he said that it would not hurt Quincy to go dry for a few days. As had been stated, the Mayor has ten days in which to approve or sign the orders, and the ten days are not up until next Friday.

Mayor Miller did a little skirmishing on his own account Sunday afternoon, and it is reported that during the day he visited several of the places, whose proprietors have permits pending before him for the transportation of liquor. The idea of the Mayor was that he desired to see for himself just what the condition was at their premises and how they conducted their business.

There were several callers at the City Clerks office this morning relative to the permits granted by the City Council, but it was not until 11.30 that the Mayor appeared at the Clerks office with seven which he had approved.

The seven concerns are G. Saltamatchie, Nicholas T. Murphy, Nazarino Di Panfilo, Bruce & Warner, Bert Miller, Adams Express and W. F. Loud & Son.

There are still pending before the Mayor six more permits as follows: Maloney's Express, A. S. Issacson of Andrews Express, Carl Lilja, Thomas H. Farrell, M. J. Connelly and Peter Gacicia. What will be done with these six remains to be seen.

The whist party to have been held by the Knights and Ladies of Honor on Tuesday afternoon in Protection hall has been postponed.

PLANNING FOR THE FOURTH

Regulars May Take the Place of Marines

An enthusiastic meeting of the executive committee of the Fourth of July celebration association was held Saturday evening at the rooms of the Board of Trade, with President Eugene R. Stone presiding. Mr. DuPlessis, chairman of the Finance committee reported that committees on collection had been appointed for each ward and that they would start in immediately to raise funds.

The City Council will not be asked to make any appropriation this year so that what funds are needed must be raised zby subscription. Letters have been received from a number of citizens promising their moral and financial support and the indications are that this year's celebration will eclipse that of previous years.

While the full outline of the day's program has not as yet been decided upon, it will include a parade in the morning, band concerts and sports in the various wards during the day, with special entertainments for the children in each ward, the day to wind up with a grand display of fireworks in the evening.

Owing to the present difficulty in Mexico it is probable that the committee will be unable to get a battleship in Quincy waters that day, but it was believed that if the regulars were encamped at Merrymount park at that time it would be possible to have them take part in the morning parade.

A circular to the citizens asking their co-operation was outlined, and will be printed this week, so as to be sent out early next week. The buttons ordered will be received sometime this week and will be ready to be placed in the hands of the collectors Saturday.

One of the possible features of the morning parade, it was announced, was that it was planned to make a special feature of the Boy Scouts and that the camps of Boy Scouts from all over the state would be in Quincy on the morning of the Fourth to take part in the parade.

ESCAPES FROM MEXICO CITY

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Baker of Wollaston were much cheered this morning by the good news that their son Clair L. Baker was well outside of Mexico. A dispatch was received from Mobile, Alabama, saying he had arrived in that city, and would proceed by steamship to New York where he expects to arrive Saturday, May 9. A previous dispatch reported his arrival at Vera Cruz. For several years he has been at Mexico City, being assistant general manager of the American Smelting and Refining Company.

The funeral of Mrs. Henrika Erickson was held Sunday from the Finnish Workingmen's Association hall. The procession was led by the band of the association, and 250 men and women, members of the Finnish Workingmen's Association followed the body to its last resting place. Mrs. Erickson was well known among the members of the association, and it was one of the largest funeral ever held in Quincy. J. A. Paakkan spoke in the hall in behalf of the members, and K. Wehteri spoke at the grave in behalf of the passed member and the sorrow stricken husband. Mrs. Erickson was born in Finland and had been in this country thirteen years, all that time in Quincy. On her death she was 32 years old.

FINED FOR SUNDAY WORK

Complaint was received by the police Sunday that men were at work near Quincy woods building a summer cottage. As it is against the law to do work of this kind on the Lord's day an officer was sent down and three young men from the Neponset district, who were building themselves a summer cottage, were arrested. They gave their names and home address as follows: Charles M. Currier, aged 19 years, of 124 Park street; Herman Sissenwine, aged 18 years of 6 Greenwood park, and Harry Sevenbaum, aged 18 years of 48 Park street, all of Neponset. They were arraigned in court for violation of the Sunday law and were fined $3 each.

OPENING NIGHT OF WOLLASTON CLUB

Jolly Tars Burn Mortgage and Raise Funds to Meet Bonds

Banquet Followed by Addresses and Entertainment

The grand "opening night" for the season of 1914 was observed by the Wollaston Yacht club Saturday evening, with a banquet, speeches and entertainment. Large number of members and their friends together with many visiting yachtsmen from all along the coast sat down at seven o'clock.

At the head table were: Commodore Frank F. Taylor of the Wollaston Yacht club; Commodore Henry S. Crane, of the Quincy Yacht club; Walter E. Stone; Jack Hylands, president of the Interclub; Senator Louis F. R. Langelier; Representative Edward J. Sandberg, President John L. Hamilton of the Quincy Board of Trade; Commodore Charles A. Blazo, of the Winthrop Yacht club; Commodore M. V. Scott of the South Boston Yacht club; William L. Carlton of the Corinthian Yacht club; President William L. Barnard of the Y. R. A.; and Vice Commodore Q. A. Lothrop, Secretary A. N. Potterton, Treasurer Carroll E. Bates, ex-commodore Edward A. Bean, ex-Commodore Frank Burgess, ex-Commodore F. E. Dawes, ex-Commodore William M. Chase, ex-Commodore J. A. Fenno, C. Wesley Fraser and C. A. Pinkham, H. C. Seymour all of the Wollaston Yacht club.

A feature of the opening night was the burning of the club mortgage by ex-Commodore Frank Burgess, and the raising of a large sum to cover the bond issue.

Commodore Taylor opened the exercise with a brief outline of the club's history and called on ex-Commodore Burgess to apply the match. As the mortgage was burning all arose and the mortgage was consumed to the tunes of "Auld Lang Syne" and "The smoke went up the chimney just the same."

A new issue of bonds takes care of the old bond issue and the mortgage. Commodore Taylor stated that $400 of the new bonds were yet unsubscribed. Then the fun began. "Jack Hamilton of the Board of Trade started things by taking two bonds, later changing it to three. Senator Langelier promised to take the last five if the other $350 was subscribed.

Then subscriptions began to flow in from all over the hall, each new name announced being signal for loud bursts of applause, until the entire amount was subscribed.

Senator Langelier was the first speaker and manifested his pleasure at being present. Representative Sandberg followed and promised the yacht club more water in the channel.

"Bill" Stone the jovial yachtsman and willing entertainer gave a long dissertation on matrimony, beginning with the meeting of his lady love in Pohokus and closing with the rendition of "The old Fall River line."

Commodore Taylor asked all the speakers to "cut it short" on account of the entertainment that was to follow.

President Hamilton of the Board of Trade made one of the hits of the evening. He said he never had been witty but he could be brief. He thanked those present.

Ex-Commodore Dawes stated that married life would make no difference in his interest in the club, and that he would be with the boys as usual.

"Jack" Hylands of the Interclub called attention to the Interclub races on May 30. There will be a special race for power boats at 10 and the sailboats will start at one.

Commodore Blazo of the Winthrop club, President Barnard of the Y. R. A. and Commodore Crane of the Quincy Yacht club were other speakers.

The entertainment opened with Grace Rochelle Sis Hopkins girl. The act included "A perfect lady," "My darling daughter" and ended with a song in rube costume ""Gid ap Napoleon."

Miller and Cleveland in a sketch "At the bookmakers," were followed by Burns and Delay, cabaret duo, in tuneful melodies.

Harry Martell tickled the ivories and Ted and Clara Steele put over a clever sketch entitled "The man, the book and the girl."

The club opener was one of the best of recent years and the enthusiasm manifested bodes well for the STRIKING POWER OF OUR NAVY.

Every spring and fall the United States ships of war get out for target practice. The results are supposed to be secret, but information leaks out more or less. If the lamentable troubles in Mexico result in bombardment of cities, the American people look with confidence to records of accurate gunnery away ahead of the Spanish war.

The Americans have always been good marksmen. They won the war of 1812 in that way. The British authorities tearfully complained of some "secret" which the Americans had by which they shot with deadly aim.

The nature of the "secret" is suggested in the log of any old ship of war, in the frequent records that "ye guns were exercised today." It took 14 men to handle one of the old 32 pounders on their awkward and clumsy wooden carriages, with the most primitive methods of aiming them. This laborious process the Americans were rehearsing regularly. The British spent their time polishing their guns and holding afternoon teas.

Previous to the Spanish war the gunnery in our navy was poor, as it was in most navies. The officers considered that target practice soiled the decks, blackened the paint, and was a general nuisance.

In 1901 a 13-inch gun was allowed about fire minutes and 20 seconds for firing. Within a short time on the battleship South Carolina, a record of 16 hits in 16 shots was fired within four minutes and 31 seconds.

No matter how costly ships are provided, the whole thing comes down to the human element of marksmanship. Our naval forces have put the best scientific information and a high degree of personal enthusiasm into this training. Scandals may develop in case of war, but the man behind the gun will do himself proud. In case of serious trouble with Mexico, the navy may not have much work, but every task will be well performed.

VALUE OF BEAUTY.

It used often to be remarked that "Beauty is a luxury." This spirit has made the majority of American towns quite ugly. Meanwhile, as education advances and people travel, they learn that good taste is not costly. Also ugliness is often terribly expensive.

The spring is the time of much new construction. It is the season for cleaning up and beautifying towns. The time has gone by when the community as a whole views with indifference the character which new growth takes. There is a growing desire for simple lines, harmonious colors, avoidance of the monstrosities and eccentricities that one sees nearly everywhere.

When people are looking for a place for residence, the first thing they ask is to the chances for business. The second question may be "What kind of schools do you have?" In perhaps even more cases it is "Is your town an attractive place to live in?" If on visiting the prospective home, the streets are seen to be slatternly, the buildings grotesque and ill kept, it will take very good business or educational prospects to neutralize these disadvantages.

Many towns have increased their taxable property by the simple and inexpensive expedient of cleaning out unsightly buildings around the railroad station, and planting trees and shrubbery.

Thus beauty has its distinct commercial value. A street with trees and flowers makes every house more salable at higher prices. Other things being equal, prospective residents will pay more money to live in a town where a consistent attempt is made toward beautifying the place.

An ugly house cheapens nearby property. The people who do not have good taste on such matters should not arrogantly parade their lacks before the public. Let them ask advice from some one who does possess good taste.

HUERTA READY TO QUIT OFFICE

Rumors to That Effect Gain In Their Persistency

ASKS ASSURANCE OF SAFETY

Resignation of Foreign Minister and Continued Rebel Successes Likely to Bring About Rapid Change In Mexico City—Peaceful Occupation of Vera Cruz Favorably Impresses Mexicans—Threat to Take Water Works Believed to Have Been Made by Junior Mexican Officer

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 4.—Persistent reports continue to circulate here that General Huerta intends to retire from the provisional presidency of Mexico on condition that he be assured a safe conduct to a port and placed on board a foreign warship.

It is declared in some Mexican circles in Vera Cruz that Huerta was ready to resign a week ago, but was prevented from doing so by internal dissensions in his cabinet.

The disappearance from the Mexican cabinet of Foreign Minister Rojas, coupled with reports that there is a growing undercurrent of feeling in Mexico City against the Huerta government, is interpreted as foreshadowing a change in the situation in the federal capital.

Some of the closest observers at Vera Cruz of the government's situation express an inclination to the view that Rojas' resignation may clear the way eventually for the appointment of a foreign minister who, under the Mexican constitution, could succeed Huerta as president. In these circles it is pointed out that while General Carranza declined to treat with Huerta he might consent to enter into negotiations with his successor and thus facilitate mediation.

Affected by Rebel Successes

The effect of the continued rebel successes in the north and the outcome of the pending attack on Tampico may, according to well-informed opinion, bring about a rapid change in Mexico City.

While the federal capital was reported quiet, people who arrived at Vera Cruz from the seat of government declared that the populace there was beginning to learn that Huerta had been deceiving the people all the time by issuing false reports of federal successes over the constitutionalists.

The news of the peaceful way in which the Americans are occupying Vera Cruz, it is said, has spread to the capital and has convinced Mexicans there that the American invasion of the port is not for conquest or aggression. Refugees declare the inhabitants of the capital fear the coming of General Villa more than that of the American troops.

The elements in Mexico City which cling to the memory of the late President Madero are reported to have been incensed by the arrest of some of the deputies who were formally cast into jail on charges of conspiracy.

Mass and Bullfight

After Saturday's acute alarm, all was quite at Vera Cruz. Many of the American soldiers attended mass in the old cathedral Sunday morning while in the afternoon great crowds attended the bullfight.

The question of the food supply still occupies general attention, but it has not reached a stage which may be regarded as critical, although many products have run short.

Strict orders were issued from headquarters for the American soldiers and marines in Vera Cruz and vicinity to remain in the same positions and not to advance or to bring on an encounter with the Mexican troops.

Navy Ready For Business

During the alarm over the flurry at the water works at El Tejar Saturday, detachments of marines and bluejackets were prepared for an immediate landing.

Field guns were put into readiness for conveyance ashore, but at the last moment, when headquarters had established the fact that there was no need of assistance from the fleet, all orders were cancelled.

Official reports declare not a shot was fired, but other sources are persistent in their opinion that shots were exchanged by the outposts.

One marine battalion ordered to hurry out to El Tejar made the march under a blazing sun. Another battalion of marines and a battalion of the Fourth infantry were taken forward as quickly as the rickety narrow gauge railroad and the patched up locomotives could take them. At the same time artillery and mounted detachments with machine gun platoons were held in readiness.

Subordinate Makes Threat

The threat to take El Tejar is regarded here as having been made by one of the junior Mexican officers and not by General Maas himself.

The outpost under Major Butler at El Tejar, which has been increased to 600 men with field pieces and machine guns since the alarm, is in a naturally strong position, easy to defend, but is isolated from the city.

Lieutenant Selbie of the Fourth infantry, with a corporal and some of his men, proceeded to the break in the railroad where it was torn up by the Mexican troops and was astonished to find a squad of the Eighteenth Mexican infantry regiment on duty. The Mexicans were carrying hundreds of rounds of ammunition.

They were very friendly, and informed the Americans that a troop train had gone out along the other line and it was in that direction that the battle, if any, must be in progress. The Americans thanked them and retraced their steps to El Tejar.

Railroad Being Destroyed

A Mexican corporal during the meeting declared he did not know how far back Maas was nor how strong his forces were, except that there was a party of forty men a few miles beyond the break in the line. Much smoke was seen along the railroad and it was deduced that the Mexicans were engaged in burning the ties and destroying the line.

Some vessels of the torpedo boat flotilla are leaving for the north and others are expected to follow shortly.

The only communication between Vera Cruz and Tampico is by means of the naval wireless instruments, and through these Rear Admiral Badger is keeping in close touch with the situation there.

Heard at Mexico City

Mexico City, May 4.—General Huerta, according to one report prevalent here, is preparing to flee the country aboard the French cruiser Conde, which, it is said, may be ordered from Vera Cruz to Puerto Mexico. Another report is current that he has made arrangements to go agoard the Spanish cruiser Emperador Carlos V., which would meet him at Puerto Mexico.

Much of Huerta's fortune, which is believed to have been greatly increased in the time he has been dictator, has been sent to France, which lends color to the belief that when he leaves Mexico City his ultimate destination will be France.

Huerta is not alone keeping his nerve up by brandy, it is said, but his very life. It is said here by medical men that, should he cease drinking brandy now, he would surely die.

RYAN IS FREED

American Confidential Agent Taken Care of by Huerta

Mexico City, May 4.—Dr. Edward W. Ryan, the American who was under sentence of death at Zacatecas as a spy, and who was ordered freed by Huerta on the vigorous protest of W. W. Canada, the United States consul at Vera Cruz, arrived here under a heavy military escort.

The authorities offered no explanation of his arrest. He has been acting as a confidential agent of the state department and his sentence to death as a spy is said to havé followed his refusal to translate the state department code for General Barron, military commander at Zacatecas.

SOLEMN HONORS PAID

Bodies of Americans Killed at Vera Cruz Homeward Bound

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 4.—The bodies of seventeen American bluejackets and marines who fell victims to the Mexican snipers in the street fighting during the operations accompanying the occupation of Vera Cruz by the United States fleet, started on their way to New York on board the armored cruiser Montana.

Solemn honors were paid by the great assemblage of United States war vessels as the Montana passed out of Vera Cruz harbor, and these were joined in by the vessels of the British, French and Spanish navies which represented their countries in Mexican waters.

ILLICIT STILL UNEARTHED

Nashville, May 4.—More than 10,000 gallons of moonshine whisky, the greater portion of it still in process of manufacture, was found near Gainsboro at the largest illicit distillery discovered in Tennessee in many years by revenue officers.

In addition to the products a fine distillery was found in operation, complete in every detail, including an expensive 150-gallon copper still of the latest improved type.

W. L. Haney, the operator, was arrested and was held for the federal court.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, May 4.—The Duke of Argyll, ninth in succession of the House of Campbell, John D. S. Campbell, twice governor general of Canada and since 1892 governor and constable of Windsor castle, died here at the age of 69.

He was the son-in-law of a queen and the uncle of a king, having married the Princess Louise, King George's aunt.

He was a writer of note, one of his works being "The U. S. A. After the War." He also wrote several literary volumes, including poems and letters, and in later years was notable as a composer, having written an opera and other compositions.

ROBBED AND THROWN INTO LITTLE POND

Police Believe Millville Man Was Slain by Thieves

Millville, Mass., May 4.—The mystery of the fate of Wasil Mikovar, who went to his death on Easter Sunday, and whose body has just been found in a little pond near here, was increased when an autopsy showed that he had been killed by a violent blow on the back of the neck.

Homicide was the verdict of Medical Examiner Johnson and robbery was the probable motive assigned by the state police.

According to the widow of Kikovar, he had over $100 with him when he went out for a little walk in his Easter finery. No money or valuables were found on the corpse.

MISHAPS MAR TEST

But the Resolute Logs Thirteen Statute Miles a Hour

Bristol, R. I., May 4.—A builders' test of what may prove the fastest seventy-five-foot sail yacht in the world, the Resolute, took place off Bristol under favorable weather conditions.

Two mishaps occurred to mar the trial. The centreplate got away from its chain pennant, necessitating delay till a diver could make repairs; the inner bridle of the peak halyards went adrift toward the finish of the test and the sloop crept back to the mooring.

At one time during the test the Resolute logged fully thirteen statute miles an hour, which is excellent going even for a ninety-footer. The wind was out of the north and came in lusty puffs, and the water was capped with little white horses.

Under lower sail the Resolute demonstrated that she can carry canvas to the limit, for her lee rail was not wet during the journey of fifteen miles on all points of sailing.

ENDS LIFE IN PRISON

Convict's Note Says He Was "Forsaken by God and Man"

Boston, May 4.—Barney Frank, 22 years old, who was sentenced from Boston Feb. 10 last, to serve a term of from six to eight years in the state prison for breaking and entering and carrying burglar's toous, committed suicide in his cell.

In his cell was found a note written by him and addressed to relatives in Boston. It begged their forgiveness for his act and complained that he had been forsaken by "God and man."

When the prison officials notified Frank's relatives, they refused to have anything to do with the body. The state will bury it.

SKILLED WORKMEN

busy for a week trying to locate the error and make the necessary rectifications. Therefore, when a new draughtsman is taken on his whole record is studied and recorded, and afterward careful tabulations are filed of the actual work he does for the concern.

WHAT THE CARDS SHOW.

Each man has his card in the index case. The card bears his name, of course, and his age, residence and the position he is to fill. Into the account go his education and his previous employments. Where did he study? What courses did he take? What was his standing? Is he a college man, a graduate of a technical school, or both? And where has he previously worked? What was his record in his earlier positions? Has he credentials and what testimony do they bear to his qualifications? In some instances also there may be filed a fact or two about the physical condition of the new employe.

Once assigned his place in the department, the employee begins to make his own record under the scrutiny of his new superiors. An "absolute record" is made of every drawing which is entrusted to him, the time which he requires for the execution of the task and the accuracy with which the work is done. In a short time a general notion will have been acquired as to the probable value of "the new man." But general notions are not relied upon at all in making up the returns. Together with the actual tabulation of the work and the time, there will be recorded the conclusions of the heads of the department as to such questions as these:

Is the draughtsman sufficiently trained? Is he suited to the work in hand? What is his general attitude toward his duties? Is he prompt, careful, faithful? Must he be watched? What habits has he that will be of value to the plant and the department? What habits that will hinder his advancement? Is he capable of filling a better position?

Thus it becomes easy to single out the men or the man who stands out in this department as of special value. He is master of his own fortune. He determines himself whether he shall be rated high or low. No company can provide a man with abilities with which nature may not have endowed him, but the Fore River company is seeing to it that exact information shall be recorded as to the abilities of its draughtsmen and the degree of seriousness with which they are making the most of their abilities, whether they be brilliant, fair, plodding or dull.

MECHANICAL DEPARTMENT.

Far the larger number of Fore River employes are in the mechanical departments, and by another system careful records are kept of the value of each man to the company, whether his work may be rated as "highly skilled" or only "skilled." The earnings of these employes afford a definite token as to whether their work is excellent, fair or indifferent.

This is possible through the system of schedules which indicate the standard prices for the filling of orders. Certain operations have to be performed over and over again. Holes have to be driven by machinery through steel plates. Rivets have to be hammered into place. How many holes can this man drill in a certain time? His pay envelope will tell. How many rivets can that man drive home in a certain time? Again the envelope will tell. It is well known that a competent man will be able to drill 1000 holes or hammer home 1000 rivets in a certain time. That is the standard for comparison. If an employe beats that standard 10 per cent. or more the fact will be indicated infallibly upon the records. If he falls below the standard that fact also will be recorded.

But there are many operations also which imply skilled work of the highest type, as the laying of steel plates and angles from templates, a task which requires the utmost care and accuracy. It has been found at Fore River that some men will do three and even four times as much in this department as others will do in the same time. The pay envelopes show the fact, and the infallible record again comes into the keeping of the company.

MACHINE SHOPS.

Now in the great machine shops there are thousands of operations which have thus been standardized. The men may take hold of the assigned tasks at a schedule of so much per unit, as in manufacturing bolts or machining flanges in a lathe.

Twice every week the work that has been done by each man is computed and the record of the pay he has received is recorded. Thus emerges the fact that a very accurate account of each man's abilities may be compiled and filed away in what is tantamount to the card system in use in the draughting department.

Thus the corporation discovers its best mechanics. From the counts made as indicated above a tabulation is compiled every month, and these are the tabulations which are filed away for the use of the company whenever promotions—or for that matter, demotions—come up for consideration.

Says the vice-president: "We make every possible endeavor to promote the men in these departments along civil service lines, considering primarily their efficiency and the length of their service with the concern. Other things being equal, the longer the service, the better chance a man has to get the promotion to which equal efficiency might make other candidates as eligible, always provided that his physical equipment also qualifies him for advancement."

Through the supervisors and others in the various departments, the company also acquires a very intimate knowledge of the general abilities of the skilled mechanics. The general habits of the men are studied and theeir fitnss for executive positions. But in the nature of the case whatever the files may show as to their efficiency, the qualifications of a man for an executive position usually have to be decided by experience and experiment.

Thus in these departments also the man's own record decides his destiny, and from week to week and month to month he will be putting into the filing cabinets the materials which will determine whether he is to go up a step on the ladder of promotion.

APPRENTICES RATED ALSO

In one other respect at Fore River the efficiency record system has been put into operation. Among the large number of departments into which the plant is subdivided there are 14 which carry courses for apprentices. There are taken on at the works numbers of young men every year, and these while usually assigned to some one of the departments in which the apprentice system has been established, may upon occasion be placed in a department which has no apprentices.

But, whether assigned to an apprentice class or not, these young men are recorded with the utmost care when they come into the employ of the corporation and from the beginning of their connection with the plant a minute record is filed of their progress. Their educational qualifications go on to their cards and, what pleases the company more than anything else, the record of their efforts to fit themselves for higher places. Are they taking correspondence instruction? Are they attending night schools? What private educational work are they doing?

These apprentices are kept under careful observation. A good deal of raw material comes into the plant through this door which in time develops into a finished product of great value. It is by means of a card index system similar to that in use in the draughting department that ratings are made of the value of these apprentices. Occasionally also, mechanics long in the employ of the company will be found to be taking evening courses.

In general the aim is to keep in touch with the actual attainments of all the men in the plant as could not be done by any general manager where the number of employes goes to the 4000 mark. And the results upon the men themselves are declared to be excellent. They realize that they make or mar their own fortunes. The incentive offered appeals to them. They wish to "make good." And the proposition that promotion—or—demotion depends not at all upon any personal favors or preferences but upon the tabulation of the workman's own career inspires them to do their best and make the most of themselves.

—It is a matter of honor, with most newspaper men not to reveal the sources of news in cases where such a revelation is likely to work harm to their informants. To what lengths they will go to keep faith in such cases is now being shown in New York where a grand jury is trying to find out where the Tribune got its information about the Littauer and Heitmeyer smuggling cases. The city editor and ship news reporter of the paper were both summoned before the investigating body and both refused to tell where they obtained their news. Both have been held in contempt of court but the case has been put over until April 7, to give the two men a chance to tell.

—A Wakefield business man, when asked why he did not attend a certain public affair some time ago, said that he usually met so many people who owed him money, and who didn't seem to care about it, that it took off the pleasure of going to public places.—Chelsea Record.

Among Our Churches

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Communion was observed Sunday at Bethany church, the morning message of the pastor was "Remember." The following were welcomed into the church by letter: John F. MacMillan, George B. Dexheimer, Mrs. A. Louise Hussey, Nels Anderson and Mrs. Selman Anderson, Harry Brooks and Mrs. Ella Brooks.

On Confession of Faith: Walter E. Piper, Jr., Alexander Davidson and Agnes M. Davidson, George A. Thompson and Nellie A. Thompson, James W. Mavers and Anna A. Mavers, Miss Beatrice C. Isaacson and Miss Julia M. Little.

The speaker at the pleasant Sunday evening service was Rev. W. I. Puddefoot, D. D., of Indiana whose subject was "The fate of Nations that forget God." It was a remarkable address for a Sunday church service inasmuch as the speaker kept the audience in almost continual laughter by his pointed illustrations. He noted the great progress made by nations that existed before the Christian era, noting some stone work which was superior to anything o Quincy granite, but these nation had been destroyed and the ruins ha been discovered only by accident.

Dr. Puddifoot went back to th year 1858 when he himself arrived a New York, and the population of th United States was only 33,000,00 Had anyone then predicted a popula tion of 90,000,000,000 in fifty years, it would have been regarded as incre ible. Many of the immigrants ha gone West and there had been re markable developments. There wer some good people among them, an the country had nothing to fear fro them. The problem today is on th Atlantic coast in the big cities.

He predicted a population of 300 000,000 English speaking people i the United States fifty years henc and 500,000,000 English speaking pe ple outside the United States. Wha a wonderful opportunity if they do n forget God. He looked to New Eng land to do some big things in the f ture as in the early days of the cou try.

Mr. and Mrs. Abbott L. Melche Simeon F. Scammell and John I Hunt are the delegates of the churc to the spring meeting of the Norfol association of Congregational church es at Sharon on Tuesday.

All the tickets are sold for the mi day luncheon to be served Wedne day by the Bethany Women's Unio in the chapel, when they hold an al day meeting.

Wednesday evening Bethany Broth erhood will hold its annual ladies night with a banquet in the chapel at 7 o'clock. Rev. Clarence L. Vincent, D. D., of Washington, D. C., will be the speaker.

Mothers' day will be observed at Bethany church next Sunday.

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.

At the First Parish the minister preached upon "The Hunger for Happiness." Recognizing that "the pursuit of happiness" was a legitimate definition of the activities of life he proceeded to an analysis of lifes values from the contrasted points of view of the Stoics and the Epicureans. From both, however, one reaches the same conclusion, that the way to happiness is not through the avenue of self indulgence.

In the last analysis happiness, or the permanent satisfactions of lif, must be reached through the adjustment of ones desires to his higher ideals. And this brings us to the plain simple teaching of Jesus: "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might be in you and that your joy might be full."

At five o'clock there was a large attendance at the organ recital by Mr. William E. Weston. The programme was as given in the Ledger and was most interesting and impressive. Many expressed the wish that such recitals might be heard in the old Church frequently.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." (Matt. 1, 21) was the text yesterday morning from which the pastor preached an instructive and helpful sermon. He said: There is no such thing as inherited sin. Sin is not a transferable commodity. Jesus came to save us not from the consequences of sin, but from sin. What is the nature of sin? Prof. Clarke defines sin as "the placing of self-will and selfishness above the claims of love and duty." The punishment of selfishness is more selfishness and the punishment of meanness is more meanness. Whatsoever a man soweth, that (and not something else) he must also reap. The harvest always answers to the kind of seed planted. To save our souls we must "repent and turn again," we must be transformed by the renewing of our hearts and minds and souls, and adopt the great life principles as laid down by Jesus in his eternal gospel.

"Through this world, uncertain, dim
We must ever lean on him;
From his precepts wisdom draw,
Make his life our solemn law."—Amen.

An important meeting to which all the members and friends of the church are cordially invited, will be held in the Vestry, Wednesday evening, May 6 at 8 o'clock. The committee appointed at the annual parish meeting to consider the feasibility of erecting a parish house will report and present plans, providing for a hall with large stage, banquet room, kitchen, committee rooms, coat rooms etc. The parish has outgrown its present quarters and the growth of the Men's club and Sunday School make larger quarters absolutely necessary. The plans, to be presented, will be thrown upon a large screen, so that every one can see them with ease and comfort. Every one old and young interested in the Wollaston Unitarian church is invited and urged to come.

The Social Service Council of Unitarian Women will meet Thursday, May 7, at 10.30 A. M. in the Vestry of the Arlington Street church. The students of the Tuckerman School will be present and reports will be given of the social service work for the past year in each parish represented in the council.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

This church, together with the Methodist and Congregational held a special service Sunday morning on Evangelism. The subject of the sermon was "Personal Evangelism" and the text" One of the two which heard John speak and followed him was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. He first findeth his own brother Simon and saith unto him, "We have found the Messiah as which is being interpreted, the Christ." Rev. Joseph Walther, the pastor, emphasized the fact that there were three kinds of evangelists, professional, pastoral and personal. The latter is the most important and is the work of every christian.

The following received the hand of fellowship—Philip Stokes Wood, Arthur Harold Axberg, Marion Clayton Porter, Alice D. Porter, Mrs. Florence D. Jackson, George Quincy Cobb, Carlton N. Merrill, Mrs. Nellie Merrill, Harry Van Horn Dresser, Mrs. Elizabeth Butler, James S. Butler and Frank Gardner.

All departments of the Sunday School were crowded. The men's classes (Walther and Rand) were addressed by Arthur J. Davis, secretary of the Anti-Saloon League. A general discussion followed the address.

The Juniors met with Mrs. Walther at 3.30 and the regular monthly consecration meeting of the Senior C. E. was held at 6. Miss Lois Waring, leader.

An unusually fine service was held in the evening. There was special music by the chorus choir, solo by James S. Butler, duets upon piano and organ and a short sermon by the pastor subject "Farsightedness."

This evening a cottage prayer meeting will be held at the home of Mr and Mrs. H. L. Forsyth, 25 Rawson road.

Tuesday, at 1.00 P. M. a mystery luncheon will be served in the chapel. All women of the church and congregation invited. The annual meeting of the Social and Benevolent Society will be held at 3 P. M. Tuesday.

Friday afternoon a Junior Endeavor social will be held in the chapel.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

At the Sunday morning service the pastor gave a brief address upon "Personal work," preliminary to the "Win One More" fellowship campaign which several Wollaston churches are inaugurating. The communion service was then celebrated as customary upon the first Sunday of each month.

A song service was held at the opening of the evening service after which Rev. Bailey spoke from the text, "There is joy in the presence of the angels over one sinner that repenteth." The choir rendered an anthem in which the solo part was taken by Mr. Raymond Cassidy. Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook also gave a very pleasing solo.

The Royal Daughters Bible class held the annual election of officers during the Sunday School hour, at which the following were chosen for the ensuing year: President,—Mrs. J. A. Sedgwick; Vice President—Mrs. T. N. Lane; Secretary and Treasurer—Miss Helena Euerle; Teacher—Mrs. Turner.

The choir was entertained by the Ladies Aid Society in the church recently, where a pleasant social time was enjoyed and various amusing games indulged in under the direction of Mrs. A. R. Poquette. Cake and ice cream served by Mrs. Eric Ewert assisted by her group of ladies.

On Friday evening, May 1, the annual business and social meeting of the Epworth League was held in the vestry. The following were the officers elected for the coming year; President,—Mr. F. G. Bennett; 1st. Vice President—Mrs. F. H. Morgan; 2nd. Vice President—Mrs. A. R Poquette; 3rd. Vice President—Miss Lucy Palmer; 4th. Vice President—Mrs. T. N. Lane; Secretary—Mr. Nelson Merrill; Treasurer—Miss Beulah Collett.

PAPER GLOBES AND FANS.

Interesting Pose of a Youthful Impersonator—Many Things That Little People Like to Know—Some Distinguished Royal Animals.

As an impersonator Master Grenville Temple Emmett is a success, as the photograph here reproduced shows. He is a little New York boy, son of Grenville Emmett, and posed not long ago at a public entertainment. He represents Lord Althorp as painted by the famous artist Sir Joshua Reynolds. Of course Master Emmett had help in arranging for the picture. But he kept as still as a mouse when the curtain arose and tried not to so much as wink an eye. It is doubtful if Emmett succeeded in not winking, for that is very hard to do. Let any one try it himself. At any rate, the young poser made a very nice picture.

Japanese Fan Game.

Provide yourselves with ordinary inexpensive Japanese fans and Japanese paper globes of various colors. These globes are six or seven inches in diameter. They come folded flat, but all the players have to do is to unfold them and inflate them through the tiny hole which will be found in one end.

Have a goal—make it of two poles six feet apart, with a top crosspiece—at each end of your field. The field should be about the size of a tennis court. Have a smaller goal also in the center of the field.

Choose two captains and let them choose up their sides, the same number on each side. One from each side—two in all—play at a time, each standing in front of his own goal and at a signal from the umpire advancing toward the center, fan in hand.

At the next signal the two captains toss their balls high in the air. It is up to the two players now to keep the balls from touching the ground and to guide them toward the opponent's goal, causing them to pass meanwhile either over or under the middle goal. The only means either one can employ is his fan.

Supposing either ball falls to the ground, the player is privileged to lift it up on his fan without touching it with his fingers and to resume the play, provided his opponent has not yet reached his desired goal.

Royal Beasts.

No other race of animals can show such a history as the black oxen that draw the funeral cars of Japanese emperors. They are of a special breed and for centuries have been kept for the sole use of the imperial family.

The cream colored Hanoverian horses reserved for the British royal family are nearly as famous, but some of these animals once wore the yoke of an alien and an enemy. When Napoleon occupied Hanover in 1804 he seized all the cream colored horses in the royal stables and took them to Paris. The state carriage at his coronation was drawn by eight of these animals.

This insult, as he regarded it, made George III. so angry that he would not use the others of the breed that were stabled in London. Until the fall of Napoleon the state coach was always drawn by black horses when the king opened parliament.

THE SURGEON'S GLOVES.

He Wears Them While Operating Since He Can't Get Clean Hands.

While the surgeon's success depends to a large extent upon his hands, they are at the same time a source of the greatest danger to himself and his patient.

No process has yet been discovered which makes it certain that a surgeon's hands are free from microbes and incapable of carrying infection to a patient. This is why the good surgeon will not perform the most trivial operation without first covering his hands with properly sterilized gloves.

Prolonged scrubbing with soap and running water, followed by another thorough scrubbing in from 70 to 80 per cent alcohol, removes the outer layers of skin and bacteria and makes the surface of the hands sufficiently clean.

But there still remains the danger that many microbes which stay concealed in the tiny crevices at the base of the little hair glands will be forced to the surface by perspiration and the use of the hands in handling instruments and make an infection of the wound possible. While practical experience shows that his danger is very slight, yet its possibility is sufficient to make it undesirable ever to operate with the bare hands.—New York American.

SHOOTING THE RAPIDS.

Feats of the Arab Boys of Egypt, Who Are Expert Swimmers.

Among the most expert of swimmers are the Arab boys of Egypt. Like all other boys, they are fond of displaying their skill before strangers. This is how they shoot the rapids of the Nile:

Seating themselves astride a log of wood about six feet long and buoyant enough to support them waist high out of water, they ride it with the seat and gestures of a jockey and with hands and feet keep it straight with the line of the current.

The fall is shot with an ease and grace that do away with the sense of danger one would expect to feel at seeing a human being hurled along amid such a boil and turmoil of waters, but once at the bottom the youngsters have a hard struggle to induce their "horses" to turn out of the course.

To do this they avail themselves of the impetus acquired by the log in its shoot, and, throwing themselves full length upon it, they seem, with a sudden stroke from the left leg and arm, to drive it and themselves out of the current.

To fail in this would be dangerous even to Arab swimmers. Immediately below lie ugly rocks on which the heavy stream breaks with great violence.—Exchange.

They Were Solid.

Which bonmot leads me up to the story that a teacher in one of the west side schools told me the other day about a little girl. Her parents, it seems, had been celebrating their silver wedding, and little Rosie the next morning, with commendable family pride, was boasting of the quality of the presents received.

"There was a whole set," she said, "of solid silver teaspoons."

"Are you sure, Rosie," asked the teacher, "that the spoons were solid?"

"Oh, yes," was the reply triumphant; "solid silver—triple plate."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Candle Power.

In computing candle power it must be remembered that as there are many different sizes of candles the rate of burning and intensity of light radiated would vary, so that the standard candle, upon which England and the United States agree, must be used. This standard candle is made of pure spermaceti, exactly round, seven-eighths inch in diameter and of a length such that six weigh one pound, and with wick adjusted to burn 120 grains of spermaceti per hour. And the 1,000,000 candle power searchlight must emit a light equal to 1,000,000 standard candles.—New York American.

Maybe He Got It Back.

Brown and Jones were leaning on a polished counter and talking intimately. Then said Brown to Jones:

"Look here, old man. Suppose you were to come around to my apartments one of these days and should walk up to my room and, receiving no answer to your knock, should come in and find my lifeless body stretched out cold across the bed. Now, in a case like that, what would you do?"

"I'll tell you," answered Jones after thinking it over. "I'd institute an immediate search for the $5 you have owed me for two years."—Exchange.

The New Woman.

"The new woman is a commanding figure. Man buckles down to her.

"Man, the conqueror, when he would win a woman in the past, brought her to the dust. Today, on the contrary, he brings the dust to her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

FORD'S SELFISHNESS.

I want to make it possible for everybody to ride in an automobile. It will mean that much more pleasure for me. It's just a matter of selfishness on my part. Selfishness rules the world in every respect. Even acts which we deem great sacrifices actually are matters of selfishness. The man who performs them finds his pleasure in the sacrifice or in the public opinion which his sacrifice will arouse. One man will give up his fortune to satisfy his creditors. He doesn't want any man on earth to think he would defraud a fellow being. His pleasure is in the esteem of others. Another man might do just the reverse. His pleasure lies in his personal worldly profit. One man will give his life for another; his pleasure lies in heroic deeds. Another would evade the danger, his pleasure being in personal safety regardless of duty or public opinion. Whatever a man does of his own volition is for his own pleasure in some way or other.—Henry Ford.

THE K. OF C. TOURNAMENT

Ave Maria Wins from the Quincy Council

Ave Maria council beat Quincy council in the second and final leg of the Knights of Columbus tournament held in St. Mary's hall on Saturday evening, 7 to 5 and won the tournament by a score of 15 to 10. An entertainment followed the contests, and refreshments were served at the Ave Maria rooms where the visitors were welcomed by about 75 royal rooters.

The most exciting of all the contests was the bowling match in which Quincy took the first two points, lost the third, and fell short of the total by one lonesome pin. John J. King took the high single with a mark of 121. The points were:

WALNUTS WIN.

The Walnut A. C. of Atlantic won its third home game of the season by defeating the Wampatucks of West Quincy on Saturday afternoon, 11 to 8. Loose playing increased the score in nearly every innings. Each of the winning players secured one or more hits, Joe Chaisson getting four and O. Price making three, one of which was a homer, cleaning the bases. Egan who performed for the Wampatucks pitched sterling ball but was unsupported throughout the game. He got seven strikeouts, and Price the winning pitcher netted 10. Egan only passed one man however, while Price allowed five to lope to first. The score:

WIFE AT SIDE AS END COMES

Death of General Sickles, Who Was Always a Fighter

INDOMITABLE TO THE LAST

Gained Wide Fame as Soldier, Politician and Diplomat, and Was Last of Great Commanders at Gettysburg — Had Serious Domestic Troubles to Contend With

New York, May 4.—General Daniel E. Sickles died at his home here last night. His wife was at his bedside at the end.

Mrs. Sickles, who had been estranged from her husband for more than a quarter of a century, went to the general's house Saturday when she was informed he was dying and took charge of the arrangements for his care. She remained at his side through the night and watched by him until his death.

The final reconciliation was brought about largely through the efforts of their son, Stanton, it is understood, the general recently having made advances to his wife when assured by Stanton that they would be met half way.

Sickles was the last of the great commanders who fought the battle of Gettysburg. For a decade he was a fighter by profession—all his life he was a fighter by nature.

The gruff old warrior, with one leg shot away in battle, was a picturesque figure as he hobbled along on crutches during the last half century of his turbulent life.

His indomitable fighting spirit remained to the last. Born in New York city in 1825, Sickles, at the age of 22, fought the Whigs as a Democrat in the New York legislature. At 28 he displayed his fighting spirit as corporation attorney of New York. It was he who secured for his city its great Central park. At this time his military career began as major of the Twelfth regiment, national guard of New York.

Before he was 32 years old Sickles had served as secretary of legation at London under Minister Buchanan; he had won a state senatorship through a bitter campaign, and he was seated in the Thirty-fifth congress at Washington.

It was at this time that an event occurred which became the sensation of the day. Sickles had begun his second term as congressman in 1859 when the national capital was stirred by the news that he had shot and killed Philip B. Key, the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia. Sickles declared Key had misled Mrs. Sickles, who was Theresa Bagnoli, daughter of an Italian music teacher. The trial lasted twenty days, ending in the acquittal of Sickles on the ground of "unwritten law." He then took his erring wife back.

Mrs. Sickles died of a broken heart a few years later.

At the outbreak of the Civil war Sickles, then 36 years old, raised the famous Excelsior brigade in New York, taking command of one of its regiments as colonel. Lincoln in 1861 raised him to brigadier general. His fighting spirit early won him his spurs. At Chancellorsville he led a division. At Gettysburg he led the Third corps, lost a leg and became a national hero. At 37 years of age he had risen from a colenel to major general of volunteers.

After the war his fighting spirit led him into the regular army, and he became first brigadier and then major general. He continued active service until 1869, when he was appointed minister to Spain by President Grant.

At the court of Spain Sickles' vigorous personality made him a dominant figure. Four years of brilliant diplomacy brought him the epithet of "the Yankee King of Spain." Here he contracted his second marriage with Senorita Creagh. The romance was followed by estrangement.

In addition to this domestic trouble came his interference in the marriage plans of his daughter to a penniless Spanish nobleman. Father and daughter separated in bitterness, the latter to return to the United States to die without reconciliation.

Returning alone to New York, Sickles again entered politics. He served as sheriff of New York and at 67 he was re-elected to congress.

Sickles' life drew to a close with frequent romantic situations. He faced bankruptcy proceedings in his last years, though he had early in life received a large share of his father's $3,000,000 estate, but his estranged wife and son came to his aid on several occasions.

The cause of the separation of Sickles from his wife has not been clearly explained, but it is said that Miss Eleanor E. Wilmerding, his housekeeper, who died in February last, was in some way connected with their marital troubles. Mrs. Sickles refused to return to her husband unless he dismissed his housekeeper, but he steadily refused to do this.

Planning to Fill War Chest

Boston, May 4.—The joint board of the United Garment Workers unions of Boston voted an immediate fund of $1000 and $10,000 more to be raised by July 4 for "strike purposes."

HAVOC IN CEMETERY DUE TO VANDALISM

Four Shafts and Thirty-Four Tombstones Wrecked

Millbury, Mass., May 4.—Marble monuments and tombstones worth more than $10,000 were upset and ruthlessly smashed in the cemetery here. State police inspectors, investigating the affair, said it was the strangest act of vandalism that has ever come to their attention.

Four magnificent shafts, weighing tons, were pried loose from their bases and toppled onto the graves they were set to mark, crumbling smaller stones in their fall.

A veritable gang, armed with crowbars and other tools, must have been taken part in the work of destruction, according to the police. They say one or two men could never have managed the amount of devastation to the heavy monuments.

The tale of wreckage comprised four shafts and thirty-four gravestones. Simple vandalism was the apparent motive, for no attempt was made to harm the graves themselves.

STRIKERS ARE HELD TO BLAME

Responsible For Fighting Between Militia and Greeks

REPORT OF MILITARY BOARD

Says Colorado Youths Defending State Are Exposed to "Practices of Savagery"—Some Fires and Looting Also Charged to Strikers—Arms Being Given Up In Some Districts

Denver, May 4.—Responsibility for the deaths in the fighting between the militia and the Greeks of the strikers' colony at Ludlow is placed upon the strikers in a report made public on the investigation made by the militayr board. The work of the militia is highly praised. Of the death of Private Martin and the mutilation of his body the report says:

"It is shocking to think of our Colorado youths defending their state and exposed to practises of savagery unheard of save in the half-believed tales of the Sicilian Camorra."

Of the deaths of the two women and eleven children in the camp the report says that the militia officers had searched the camp and believed all the women and children taken out. The strikers themselves, it is declared, started some of the fires and engaged in looting.

Only in those sections now under the control of the federal troops is any disposition shown by either the miners or the guards to lay down their arms in compliance with the disarmament proclamation issued by President Wilson.

The proclamation sent by the secretary of war to Major Holbrook, in command at Trinidad, reads:

"Whereas, under existing circumstances the possession of arms and ammunition by persons not in the military service of the United States tends to provoke disorder and to incite domestic violence and hinders the restoration of normal conditions of peace and good order: I do, by the authority of the President of the United States, call upon and direct all persons not in the military service of the United States who have arms or ammunition in their possession or under their control to deliver them forthwith to the officer at the place herein designated. Receipts will be issued for all arms and ammunition so delivered. The above applies to individuals, firms, associations and corporations."

In the districts where the troops are stationed hundreds of the miners and many of the guards have surrendered their rifles and revolvers, but in most cases the miners have disarmed themselves, but took their rifles either home or to a hiding place. There is practically no danger of an outbreak where the federals are stationed.

AN EIGHT-FOOT GIANT

Doctors Say Breton Youth Will Grow Twelve Inches Taller

Paris, May 4.—The French newspapers have given liberal space to the appearance in Madrid at a circus before King Alfonso of the Breton giant, Eugene Arceau, who is already eight feet in height, weighs over 300 pounds at 19 years of age and is still growing.

A curious feature of Arceau's case is that his growth invariably occurs during his sleep, which is apparently natural, but is frequently prolonged to thirty-six hours. On awakening his stature is found to have increased.

Doctors prophesy that he may easily attain nine feet.

HAD GEMS WORTH $100,000

Negro Unaware of Value of Necklace Found In Sawdust

San Francisco, May 4.—The arrest of a negro roustabouts of a traveling circus in Berkeley for fighting led to the recovery of a rope of diamonds valued at $100,000 for which the police of the Pacific coast have been making a secret search the past week.

The diamonds are the property of Mrs. Frank G. Hogan of Pasadena, who lost them whfle attending the circus in her home city.

They had been picked up in the sawdust of the circus ring by the roustabout, and were found in his clothes when searched by the police. The negro said he had no idea of their value.

Dividend Cut to 2500 Percent

Berlin, May 4.—The Colonial Mining company will pay for 1913 a dividend of only 2500 percent, compared with 3800 percent for the previous year. The company is the original corporation formed to exploit the diamond discoveries in German Southwest Africa.

Maid Killed by Elevator

Boston, May 4.—Miss Mary Halloran, a maid at the Commonwealth, 366 Commonwealth avenue, was instantly killed when a cable on a freight elevator that she was trying to operate broke and the elevator dropped six flights.

Alleged Boy Firebug Held

Lynn, Mass., May 4.—rifteen-year-old Hyman Calum, arrested on the charge of setting twenty fires in Lynn, was held in $1000 for the juvenile court by Judge Lummus.

RED MEN WIN FROM GUN CLUB

The Redmen A. C., winners of the first leg in the amateur series for the championship of the city, beat the Quincy Rod and Gun Club at the Ward Three playground Saturday afternoon 7 to 3. It was their third straight victory over local teams.

The Rod and Gun Club had a few of the rival Orient players scattered throughout the lineup, and Markham, one of these braves, played the feature game of the day, accepting 11 chances without an error.

The game was slow on account of the pitching of Werme who lobbed the ball over the plate, depending on his infield for protection.

Moorehouse continued hitting, getting two out of three times up. Carlson, the winning twirler, did good work, allowing only three hits in six innings. Johnson, who finished the game was hit for only one. The summary:

Clementine's Silent Partner

A Plan That Worked Well

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Miss Alvira Pitt's thin nose was poked close to the grating of the post-office window when Clementine Dilley called for her mail that February morning.

"Letter for you, Clem," shrilled Alvira as she poked the missive through the bars. "Lawyer's letter. I guess your rich uncle in Australy has died and left you $1,000,000!"

"Never had a rich uncle, and he didn't live in Australia, anyway," was Clementine's tart retort as she took her letter and went away.

"Another lawyer collecting letter," she explained. "Clem Dilley's business is tottering to ruin."

"If village folks would only trade with Miss Dilley instead of going way over to Bayport she might make a living," she vouchsafed.

"Clem Dilley couldn't keep up a stock that would satisfy Long River folks," retorted Alvira. "Mark my words, Josie, there's going to be a change in Clem Dilley's affairs pretty soon. She's looking worried to death."

There was to be a remarkable change in Clementine Dilley's affairs if she read the lawyer's letter aright. It was a wonderful letter and one hardly to be believed, so unexpected was it. The letter read:

Dear Madam—I have a client who is anxious to invest some surplus funds in a small but lucrative business, and after investigation I am authorized to make you the following offer—viz: My client to put $5,000 into a partnership with you, you to manage the dry goods business and the partnership to be a silent one. My client believes there will be a good opening for a profitable business that has financial backing. If you will call upon me some day this week I will go into the details of the matter with you. Very respectfully yours, SIMON DAY.

Three days after Clementine Dilley's return from New York there was a sensation in Long River. Wagon after wagon stopped before the door of her little shop and unloaded great boxes of dry goods.

Clementine hired several girls to help her, and soon the shop was transformed from its former coziness into the well stocked appearance of a city store. Clementine had a new front put in the store and two large plate glass windows.

At last Clementine had an opening day. She brought all the flowering plants from her sunny windows, and the store looked very attractive.

From that day Clementine Dilley's business flourished mightily. Dozens of people who had always traded in Bayport, fifteen miles distant, drove up to Clementine's door and made their purchases there.

Clementine was very happy on that day when she went down to New York and presented her books for Mr. Day's inspection. The books proved that Clementine was doing a splendid business, and the lawyer said he was sure that his client would have no cause to regret his investment.

Clementine often wondered about the mysterious partner whose money enabled her to prop up a crumbling business. Why, at the end of five years she might be able to buy out her partner, and at the end of ten years she might retire from business altogether and enjoy the quiet domestic life for which she had always yearned.

But now she was glad of the business, for it kept her from being lonely. At home there was nothing save a parrot and two black cats, and at forty-five one yearns for human companionship.

Clementine's friends were delighted at her good fortune, although she was not able to impart the details to any one. When he heard that Clementine Dilley was making money "hand over fist" Deacon Marberry stumped thoughtfully home to his bachelor fireside and stared at the almanac all the evening—and never read a word.

The next day he dropped into Clementine's store and asked for collar buttons. It happened to be the noon hour and Clementine was all alone.

"Ten cents, Mr. Marberry," said Clementine briskly as she gave him the small parcel.

The deacon fished out a wash leather bag from his pocket, untied the string that confined it, counted out the money in coppers and then replaced the bag.

"Clem," he said hurriedly, "the Scripture says 'tain't good for man to be alone."

"I expect that's why dogs were created—and cats—and parrots," returned Clem tartly. "Dogs and cats are good company."

"Yes—yes—yes," returned the deacon impatiently, and then warily he added, "I don't reckon you can guess who your silent partner is, Clementine, can you?"

Clementine was startled for a moment. There could be no mistaking the deacon's meaning. He wanted her to believe that he was the silent partner whose name she did not know.

But she stiffened her neck coldly.

"I might guess, Deacon Marberry," she said.

"He ain't a thousand miles away from where I be standing this minute," went on the deacon craftily.

"I don't see him," said Clementine curtly. And she was glad when a customer came in and the deacon was compelled to take his departure.

Still the deacon's mysterious tone rankled in her mind. What if it were Deacon Marberry who had been backing her business? If it were Clementine vowed that she would close the doors the very next day. But on further thought where would Deacon Marberry get $5,000 that was not needed in his grain and hay business? The answer was forthcoming—Deacon Marberry's uncle, Jehoshaphat Bean, had died six months ago, and it was rumored that the deacon had come in for the money.

It was after 6 o'clock that same evening, when Clementine was about to lock the door after the last clerk, when there came heavy footsteps on the porch and the great form of Captain Tommy Lisk loomed into view.

"Howdy, Clem?" he said cheerily as he leaned against a pile of pasteboard boxes on the counter. "I ain't seen you in a dog's age, and I reckon we used to see each other pretty often—what say?"

Clementine remembered, with some amusement, that Tommy Lisk used to call upon her once a week in the long, long ago. That was just before David Marsh had come to town. After that Clementine had not had eyes for any one save the handsome David.

"How's business?" pursued the captain genially.

"Very good," replied Clementine. "What can I do for you, captain? It's after hours, you know, and I want to go to the lecture tonight."

"Ding it all, Clem, that's what I stopped in for!" cried Captain Lisk, slapping his huge hand on the counter. "I want to take you to the lecture tonight."

"I'm sorry, but I've arranged to go with some one else," returned Clementine, hiding her surprise at this belated attention on the part of Captain Lisk. "Thank you just the same."

"Well, better luck next time," murmured the captain. "What you say to moving pictures next Tuesday, Clementine?"

"I'll let you know later," said Clem hastily. And she breathed easier when he opened the door. At that moment he turned back again.

"I say, Clementine Dilley, I'll bet you can't guess who your silent partner is," he said jokingly.

"I might," said Clementine dryly.

"He ain't a thousand miles from where I'm standing," said the captain significantly, and, with a mysterious wink of his blue eye, he disappeared.

"The old sinners!" laughed Clementine as she put out the lights in the store. "They must have heard that I am doing a good business. Imagine my marrying Hen Marberry—or Tommy Lisk!"

She grew very thoughtful as she walked home under the winter stars. Her house was at the top of the hill under a group of tall locust trees. Since she had enlarged her business she had hired a capable housekeeper, and now she felt a glow of pleasure when she saw that the windows were lighted.

There was a sad thought back of it all—a brief romance of a few months, the hurried departure of David Marsh to assume his father's responsibilities in caring for a mother and several young children and then the gradual drifting of romance out of her life. David Marsh and romance were a dream to Clementine.

So when she opened the door and found David Marsh waiting for her in the cozy sitting room Clementine Dilley discovered in a splendid rush of joy that romance was not dead after all. David Marsh was a little changed, a little gray and worn, but still the fine, upstanding lover of her youth.

No one save Clementine heard all of his story, but we may know that after David had helped to educate his brothers and sisters he had met with great financial success and that in a roundabout way he had learned of Clementine Dilley's business troubles. So David, always true to the love of his youth, had become Clementine's unknown silent partner.

It was 9 o'clock, and the little group around the stove in Pinney's grocery still lingered, loath to go out into the cold.

Deacon Hen Marberry was winding a red muffler around his stringy neck and barking sharp retorts at Captain Tommy Lisk.

"What if I did stop in to buy some collar buttons of Clementine Dilley?" he cried angrily. "If you knew who Clem Dilley's silent partner was you'd say he had some right to buy there!"

Captain Lisk stared incredulously.

"If you knew who Clem Dilley's partner was you'd never speak up like that to me, Hen Marberry. I'll venture to say that Clem Dilley's going to marry her silent partner, and he's standing not a thousand miles from where I be this minute!"

"When I say he's standing not a thousand miles from where I be this minute I'm speaking the truth!" reiterated the captain.

"Right you are!" said a deep voice from the doorway, where a tall, dark man was observing the scene with visible amusement. "Miss Dilley's partner is standing right here, Captain Lisk, and when you say she's going to marry her partner you're right again. I ought to know, because I'm David Marsh, and I'm the man!"

Five minutes later the deacon and the captain went out into the bitter night, and their hurts were not salved by the muffled laughter that followed their departure.

SPRING GREENS.

THEY ARE BEST OF TONICS.

The Wise Cook Will Make Liberal Use of Them at This Season of the Year and Cut Down the Daily Allowance of Fresh Meat.

Early greens are in the market, and people who have the "spring medicine" habit may readily transfer their allegiance from the medicine bottle to dandelion greens, rhubarb, sorrel, etc.

One of the best of all spring tonics—that is to say, one of the best things for arousing a torpid liver—is the lemon. The juice may be taken in drinks with a little or no sweetening, or lemons may be baked and the pulp eaten. Orange and grape fruit juice are also excellent tonic foods, the latter being said to be invaluable for fever.

But of all the early season's foods the dandelion probably ranks first as a spring tonic. This is full of needed salts and bitters for the excitation of the torpid liver. It may be either boiled or steamed in the form of greens. It may be served with vinegar or with a white sauce, garnished with egg, or it may be served with a French dressing as a salad.

Next to the dandelion in tonic properties comes rhubarb. This contains an acid said to be an excellent "moderator." Rhubarb can be cooked in various ways.

Spinach is a green obtainable now throughout the year and preferred by many people to any other form of boiled greens. Early onions, watercress, romaine, chives and endive are also excellent things to partake generously of in the early months of spring. Radishes are not to be neglected, while lettuce and celery might well appear once a day on everybody's table.

The turnip and parsnip contain a peculiar oily principle which may account for their traditional value as an aperient and diuretic, while their juices are an old country remedy for coughs and hoarseness. The presence of starch and sugar would hardly account for these properties.

The potato, of course, possesses a decided nutritive value, but it also contains elements, among which is solanin, that are credited with diuretic properties.

The common cabbage is redolent with a sulphur compound which may possibly account for the value attached to it in scurvy and scrofula.

Spinach is a well known laxative—a property, however, which may be ascribed to the fine indigestible fiber which characterizes it. There is present also a peculiar principle as well as a quanity of iron in organic form.

The tomato exercies medicinal effects which are not completely explained by the presence of alkaline salts. There is a principle present which when taken in a concentrated state produces salivation and a free stimulation of the liver. On this account the tomato has been called vegetable mercury.

Carrots have a similar action and form a considerable part of the meals at certain health resorts in the belief that they materially assist in the treatment of derangements of the liver and of the biliary processes generally. The vegetable contains a definite principle, carrotin and a volatile oil, which may possess properties that have supplied the traditional curative qualities.

To prepare a spinach salad chop exceedingly fine enough cooked spinach to make a cupful and a quarter, add one-fourth of a teaspoonful each of salt and paprika, a tablespoonful of olive oil and half a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Soften one-fourth of a package of gelatin in one-fourth a cupful of chicken broth or water and dissolve in one-fourth a cupful of boiling broth. Stir the dissolved gelatin into the spinach. Have ready six or eight timbale molds, fitted with rounds of paper in the bottom. Set a slice of "hard cooked" egg in the bottom of each mold and figures cut from thin slices of white against the sides; then fill with spinach. When cold unmold on thin shreds of cold cooked tongue. Garnish with heart leaves of lettuce. Serve sauce tartare in a bowl.

To serve spinach in the Italian style cook half a peck of carefully washed spinach in the usual manner, drain and chop fine. Melt one tablespoonful of butter, add one tablespoonful of flour and half a teaspoonful or less of salt and stir until blended, add half a cupful of rich milk or thin cream and stir until boiling, add the spinach and from half to a full cupful of grated cheese and stir until the cheese is melted and the whole very hot. Turn on to a hot dish; garnish with slices of hard cooked eggs and lemon.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to LARGE BRUSH FIRE.

The apparatus of the Central fire station responded to a still alarm for a brush fire in Faxon Park, Sunday afternoon which was extinguished after a hard fight in which nearly all the permanent men and a crowd of volunteers participated. The fire line stretched from the rear of the ice houses of C. Patch & Son to the top of Penns hill a distance of over a mile. The fire was fanned by a southwest breeze and for a time threatened to burn over the entire territory. There was no real damage, although for a time the ice house and dwellings in the vicinity of Wendells quarry and Echo lake were threatened.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE PARADE.

Many from Quincy journeyed to Boston Saturday to see the parade of the nearly 12,000 women who are making an appeal for the use of the ballot, and among that number quite a little group of Quincy women were seen. They had a good place in the line and each wore their yollow flower. There were upwards of twenty-five Quincy omen in the line, and a larger part of these came from the section north of Butlers brook. They made a good appearance and came in for their share of the cheering, especailly hen they happened to pass a group of Quincy spectators.

MARRIAGE MOURNERS.

Rites of a German Club When One of Its Members Weds.

There are other places besides All Souls' college, Oxford, that penalize a member who marries. Many readers have doubtless heard of the Bachelors' club in London. When a member so far forgets the principles of the club as to marry he is promptly expelled. By payment of a fine of $125 he can, however, retain an honorary membership, but of course he cannot enjoy the privileges of this select band of nonmarrying men.

There is a similar organization in Germany—the Junggesellen club. Whenever there comes to the officials of this club any intimation that a member contemplates matrimony he is immediately summoned for trial in the club court, with the president as judge. The culprit is allowed to plead in extenuation of his offense, and upon his skill in presenting such plea depends the amount of his fine, which ranges from $100 to $1,000.

The humorous feature of the fine consists in the purpose to which the money is applied. The money is devoted to a dinner, whereat all members appear in mourning attire. At the conclusion of the repast the president solemnly reads the sentence of expulsion, and the delinquent is led from the room amid the groans and lamentations of his erstwhile clubfellows.—London Tit-Bits.

LUXURY IN ARGENTINA.

The Big Story They Tell of a Buenos Aires Hotel Charges.

The hotels of Buenos Aires are fairly good and very expensive. One of the cheapest rooms I saw in the Plaza hotel was $7 a day, European style. There are good Spanish hotels with rooms from $2 a day upward.

The Plaza is, perhaps, the most cosmopolitan of all the hostelries of the city. In its ballroom and its drawing room I was reminded of the Waldorf-Astoria. The meals are a little higher than in the big hotels of New York city. But there are numerous small restaurants where good refreshments may be had at reasonable prices.

As an example of the charges in the big hotels of Buenos Aires I may quote a story told me by an Argentine official. He said that some years ago a commission of European ambassadors was entertained by the Argentine government at the Bristol hotel on the Avenida de Mayo and that the bill for soap and perfumery was $15,000 a week. Nobody seemed to complain and apparently everybody was satisfied.

Luxuries seem to be necessities to the Argentines, for I was told that the tariff on champagne is only 2 per cent. while that on a plow is 50 per cent.—National Magazine.

The Shrewd Advertiser.

The thoughtful man thinks ahead. The prudent man profits by his ability to forecast the future as well as to scrutinize the present. One of the most prominent advertisers in the country says he makes it a rule to increase his advertising appropriation whenever business slackens and he doubles and trebles it in times of severe business depression. This is his logical conclusion: "The new customers that I get when times are hard I always keep when times become good. They come to me largely from those who lose them because they fail to continue their publicity campaigns. A business depression in this country never lasts long and it is always seed time for me. The harvest follows when prosperity returns." It is a wise man who knows his own business better than the other man does.—Leslie's.

What does a lion weigh? Those who know the look of the king of beasts best and how small his little body really is will probably come farthest from the truth. About 300 to 350 pounds is a usual estimate, but a full grown lion will tip the scales at no less than 500 pounds. Five hundred and forty pounds is the record for an African lion. His bone is solid and heavy as ivory. The tiger runs the lion very close. A Bengal tiger killed by an English officer scaled 520 pounds. A tiger this size has, however, considerably more muscular strength than the biggest lion.

A Change Of Program

A Story For Memorial Day

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL

General Hassett, commanding the —th division of the —th corps of the Army of the Cumberland, was a military man from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. He was a colonel in the regular service.

It was the general's personality that insured obedience to his orders. He was born to command. He was nearly twice the age of those to whom he gave orders, and this, with the double star on his shoulder strap, insured him great respect from them. If he had ordered a soldier to commit harakiri the man would not have consulted the army regulations to learn if the order was legitimate. But the strongest hold that the general had on his troops was a real kindness of heart that underlay his external sternness.

Captain Garland of General Hassett's staff was twenty-two years old and handsome as a picture. Moreover, he was a favorite with all who knew him. The country girls along the line over which he passed, who had never seen anything above those indigenous to the soil on which they lived, wilted before him like flowers under a hot sun. The captain had nothing to do with this except to smile, and he smiled on them all alike. Indeed, he was unconscious of the blights he was leaving behind him. One day the general said to him:

"Captain, we will march from here soon and proceed to M., thirty miles south. I desire that you proceed in advance and find a site for our headquarters camp. Take a couple of orderlies with you and set out at once."

Within half an hour the captain was riding along the turnpike headed southward, the two orderlies riding at the regulation forty paces to the rear.

Garland selected for his general's headquarters a vacant lot on the southern extremity of the town next to a residence. But before appropriating it he dismounted before the house to ask if it would be agreeable to the occupants to have a camp there. He was received by a middle aged lady, who heard his request—one made simply through politeness, for he could camp where he liked—and seemed uncertain what to say in reply.

"We are to have a wedding here before long," she said at last. "Do you suppose that a camp on the lot beside us will in any way interfere with it?"

"Not at all, madam. On the contrary, the presence of the general commanding the troops which are to occupy this point will be a protection to you."

"In that case you have my consent."

The young man rose, bowed and was about to leave when the lady asked him when the troops would arrive. He replied that they would come in a few days. When she asked where he would stay in the meantime and he replied that he would bivouac on the lot he had chosen she was moved with compassion and invited him and his men to stop at her house. Garland accepted the invitation, but his men preferred the lot. They had their rations in their haversacks and were soon engaged over a fire, while the captain supped in the house.

It was at supper that Garland met Miss Lucile Rutlidge, the bride expectant. She was one of those willowy southern girls with peach complexions to be found only in the southern states. Southern ladies during the war whenever they would come in contact with their enemies almost invariably treated them with politeness, often with consideration. Miss Rutlidge made a slight inclination to Garland, though it was her mother who caused him to feel at ease by conversation.

During the chat Garland asked if music had been provided for the wedding, whereupon Mrs. Rutlidge informed him that no music was to be obtained. There had been an amateur orchestra in the town before the opening of the war, but the players were now all in the Confederate armies.

"In that case," said Garland, "our general will, I have no doubt, be pleased to direct the band of one of his regiments to furnish music for the occasion. One of our bands, that of the —th regulars, is the best in the service, and if you prefer an orchestra one composed of the players can easily be made up by the bandmaster."

At this Miss Rutlidge looked at Garland to express her appreciation of the offer, and for the first time their eyes met. Whatever of antagonism for a Federal officer had been with the young lady went out like a candle and was replaced by something very different. It was impossible for antagonism to exist under the gaze of the captain's eyes, which expressed only kindliness and admiration.

Garland took his meals and slept in the house, waiting for the arrival of the command. Having nothing to do, he sat during the day on the veranda, entertained either by Mrs. Rutlidge or her daughter, usually by the daughter, for the mother took upon herself the preparations for the approaching wedding.

One day while Garland and Miss Rutlidge sat on the veranda a man rode up on horseback and handed the latter a letter. She tore it open and read it hastily. Then she arose and went into the house. Garland could hear her talking with her mother, but not what was said. Mrs. Rutlidge was evidently much excited, not to say angry. The young lady did not appear again on the veranda, but sent a note by a negro to the messenger who was waiting without.

Garland did not see either of the ladies again till supper time, and then only the mother. She sat with a stormy brow till the meal was ended, not speaking a word, then revealed the cause of her irritation. The wedding for which she had been waiting for weeks, months even in some respects, was indefinitely postponed. The bridegroom wrote that owing to the approach of the Federal army his affairs were in a deplorable condition and he must remain on his plantation to take care of them. "But this is not the real reason," added the lady—"at any rate, not the only one. We have heard recently that a widow has been setting her cap for my daughter's fiance, and we suspect that she has captured him."

Communications had been kept up between Captain Garland and the army to which he belonged. He had written a brother aid-de-camp of the approaching wedding, that he had offered music for the occasion and that he hoped the command would reach M. in ample time for him to redeem his promise. The matter had been talked over at the mess table in presence of the general, who evinced an interest in it, saying that Garland's offer must be made good and if the command did not march in time for the wedding half a dozen musicians should go anyway.

But one night an order came from the department commander to move the next morning at daylight. When the sun rose every regiment and battery was in the road ready to move, and the order "Forward!" was given.

It so happened that General Hassett reached M. on the day before the wedding was to have taken place. Garland was sitting on the veranda with Mrs. and Miss Rutlidge when he heard a clattering of horses' hoofs and the general with staff and escort came down before the captain could vacate. Seeing his aid, the general rode up to the house, dismounted and tramped to the jingling of spurs and rattling of side arms to where the three sat.

"Happy to meet you, ladies," he said, removing his forage cap and bowing low. "I presume this young lady is the bride to be. Captain, I was about to send the music when the order came to move."

All this, of course, was very embarrassing. Mrs. Rutlidge, thinking it better to have the changed conditions known and over with, spoke up:

"General, there is to be no wedding."

"No wedding. Why not?"

"There is no bridegroom."

"But there is a bride."

"Yes; there is a bride, but her fiance has deserted her for another."

The general looked sympathetically at Miss Rutlidge.

"There shall be a wedding," said the general decidedly. "I command here, and since the preparations are made and the music provided the wedding shall take place."

All looked astounded at this, and the general proceeded:

"Captain Garland, hold yourself in readiness to act as bridegroom on this occasion. When was the marriage to have taken place?"

"Very well. You will report here in person tomorrow at 12 o'clock for duty —I mean"—

"You're not going to force me on the bride, are you, general?" asked Garland.

"The bride! Oh, I forgot that. Of course not. All is subject to the will of the bride."

Now, if there were not cases in which love acts like lightning this story would have a very abrupt and unnatural ending. The little god had begun his work at the first meeting of Captain Garland and Miss Rutlidge and had been galloping on ever since. Garland looked at the young lady, and the young lady looked at Garland. And these looks were a mute proposal and acceptance.

The next day the wedding took place, the band playing both the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Dixie." And this is how one southern girl was brought north as a wife by a Federal army.

Only One Advocate at Public Hearing Before the City Council

Many Licenses Granted to Common Victuallers and Others

There was hardly a ripple of excitement at Monday night's meeting of the City Council. The meeting was lacking of debates, and what business there was went through quickly. The only absent member was Councilman Bass.

Among the spectators at the meeting was Hon. Charles M. Bryant, who in addition to serving the city as Mayor has served in the City Council for many years, several of which were as president. President Whiton noticing him in the audience sent the City Messenger to invite him to take a seat on the President's platform. After some hesitation Mr. Bryant accepted and for the larger part of the session sat at the President's right hand and watched how slick business went through. It reminded him of old times, and after the meeting several of the councilmen came forward to greet him.

CHILDREN ON STAGE.

The Mayor forwarded a petition of George W. Brown to have children appear on the stage at the Unitarian church vestry, Wollaston. Laid on the table until later, when Councilman Beeman offered an order granting the request, which was adopted.

A petition was received from the boys work director at the Quincy Y. M. C. A. to have children appear on the stage. Laid on the table until later, when Councilman Beeman offered an order granting the request, which was adopted.

OTHER PETITIONS.

The telephone Co. petitions for attachments on several streets which was granted.

A petition for a fire alarm box on Waterston avenue was referred to the Committee on Fire Department.

A large number of applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the Committee on Licenses.

On suspension of the rules the application of Edward Asnes for a license to collect junk was received and laid on the table until later, when Councilman Beeman offered an order granting the license which was adopted.

LICENSE REPORTS.

The Committee on Licenses reported upwards of fifty orders granting common victuallers, Sunday fruit, pool table, etc. licenses adopted.

A public hearing was held at 8 o'clock on the petition of A. McWilliams to keep gasoline. Mr. McWilliams appeared in favor and none against. Hearing closed and order recommitted to License Committee.

HOUGHS NECK WARD.

A public hearing was held at 8.10 on making Houghs Neck a separate ward. Henry W. French appeared in favor. He said that under the law unless the matter was acted upon favorably this year and next year the petition could not again come in until 1925. He claimed the present growth of the district warrants asking for a separate ward. There is no law that says a district shall have any certain number of voters before it can be made a ward. The only thing is that a poling place shall not be more than two miles away. Houghs Neck has increased 2000 per cent in voters in the past ten years. It now has as many voters as Ward Six when that section was made a ward. The object was that the section might have representation in the City Council. As it was now it had but little chance of being represented in the City Council. If made a separate ward it would be entitled to three members.

In reply to a question of Councilman Sodergren if it was a separate ward or separate precinct that was wanted. Mr. French said a separate ward. A precinct would not give them representation.

In reply to a question of Councilman Bailey, as to how many voters Houghs Neck now had Mr. French replied about 307 and he thought there were about 937 in the whole ward. No one else appeared in favor or against.

The hearing then closed and the or-

FATALITY AT SHIPYARD

Fred Vanner Falls While Working on the Nevada

Fred Vanner aged 25, living on Washington street, Quincy Point, was fatally injured Monday afternoon while at work on the battleship Nevada.He fell 60 feet and landed on metal casings. Workmen carried him to the Red Cross hospital in the yard. Dr. W .H. Blanchard found that Vanner had received fractures of the skull, numerous bones and the backbone. He died shortly after and his body was removed to the Hall undertaking rooms.

Fred Vanner was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Vanner of Water street, South Quincy, and was well known in that section. After his marriage to Margaret Grange on Sept. 14, 1912, he moved to Quincy Point where he has since resided.

He was employed at the shipyard as a rigger and was setting a plate on the bow of the Nevada when he was thrown from the staging.

His funeral will take place Wednesday afternoon and will be attended by a delegation from Granite lodge, Order of Sons of St. George with which he was affiliated.

CLEAN-UP HOUGHS NECK

Several Houghs Neck people appeared before the Board of Health on Monday evening in favor of abolishing the pond nuisance off Winthrop street at the foot of Weymouth street. Those to speak were E. P. Powers, John J. Powers, Charles Now, James E. Whall and William Cantwell. They favor lowering a pipe that the sea water may come in and purify the pond. Aside from the hearing of the pond nuisance there was an informal discussion on the general cleaning up of the section. According to what was said there are several places which a general cleaning up would not do any harm, and now that the clean-up paint-up week is in progress the citizens of this section were urged to co-operate with the Board of Health.

FLAG AT HALF MAST.

The funeral of Napoleon B. Furnald is being held this afternoon from the First church. In addition to a large number who were associated with him during his active career, delegations were present from the Police department and Fire department as well as from the various fraternal orders with which he was affiliated. Burial will be at Mount Wollaston near the entrance to the cemetery. Out of respect to Mr. Furnald who was a constable under the town and city form of government for so many years, the flag on City Hall is at half mast.

WARD THREE ASSOCIATION.

The unfinished debate on the feasibility of the city purchasing a tractor for its engine will be resumed at the next meeting of the Ward Three Improvement Association to be held in Clan MacGregor hall on Thursday evening. Councilman Charles A. Ross, chairman of the committee on fire and police, will be questioned on the investigations that have been made by his committee. The association will also receive the report of of its special tractor committee which consists of Amos L. Litchfield, former chief, George Gauthier and Edward Brault.

FORCING THE SEASON.

Two Houghs Neck youths, George N. Reed and Glover Howe, in imitation of the Brownies, took their first dip of the season Sunday in the salt water off Babcock street. They found the water almost icy cold however and one dip was enough to satisfy them. and they have now determined to wait until the weather becomes more seasonable.

MUST CLEANSE OUR COUNTRY

Rev. W. B. Ayers Preaches Sermon on Peace

The Sunday morning service at the Park and Downs church was a most beautiful and impressive one; being the celebration of the Lord's Supper and baptism. At the evening service the sermon was a continuation of last Sabbath evenings sermon on "War." The minister said that it would not be just in view of intervening events to let the sermon on war stand without following it with a sermon on "Peace." He said that if history was being made rapidly previous to last Sunday it has been made rapidly since. These great events ought to be discussed because they reveal the workings of religion. It is a mistake to consider religion as a thing apart from worlds circling events. For religion is life. And anything that deeply concerns the life of mankind is an interest of religion.

We talked last Sunday about intersocial amalgamation under one banner brought about by war. Today we are impressed by the spectacle of an inter-racial amalgamation on a vaster scale brought about by community of interests, created by the mediation of South American republics. Thus two Continents meet over stricken Mexico.

There are two messages which the Bible has for us today; "Acquaint thou thyself with him, and be at peace" and "Peace to them that are near and to them that are afar off." Thus we behold the duality of obligation. Most of the wars have been through misunderstanding. Mutual knowledge would have prevented them. We have a duty. That we should know our neighbors to the South, to the North, to the far East of us. The spread of friendship will insure peace. We have ignored South America too much. We have been insulting in our indifference.

Likewise "Peace to them that are near." While the envoys of Latin America bring to us a splendid lesson of brotherhood and brotherly interest and responsibility, we find that war exists in our own household. We have ignored conditions of our own until they have become a hissing and-a-by-word. We owe a reponsibility to Colorado no less great than to Mexico, or to our flag .

And when we have uncovered all the facts there, and have shaped laws rendering such scenes impossible of repetition, then there are a multitude of moral problems to which we must turn our attention and acquaint ourselves with if we are to have peace among them that are near.

Great international events of the past week have been but a reassertion on a vast scale of Jesus doctrine that no man stands alone responsible alone for his own acts. All stand related. The individual everywhere is responsible for the multitude and the multitude for the individual. What are you doing to help the man next to you out of his difficulties; his failures; his sin.

"Acquaint thou thyself with him"—and help him. If you are to be at peace with the man on the other side of the world, your first duty is toward the neighbor close by. If the nations on another continent are to accept seriously our declarations of disinterestedness and ability, we must cleanse our country of its great crying inequalities, and its seething moral evils first.

The lecture of Sunday evening excelled even previous ones. Mr. Ayers is a speaker possessed of unusual attraction of person and character whose strong personality and wonderful sympathy and helpfulness has won the affections of the people.

LANGELIER CHANGES VOTE

But Senate Votes for Larger Boston Council

Senator Langelier set himself right on the Boston charter bill on Monday when he changed his vote, and was recorded against a larger city council in Boston. The vote came on Monday after a reconsideration of the vote of Friday, on substitution for an adverse report on the bill to abolish the present Boston city council of nine and establish in its place one of 17.

After a short debate, the roll-call on substitution followed, Senator McCarthy of Marlboro, Democrat, who had voted against substitution on Friday, voted in favor but his loss was offset by the charter forces by the gain of Senator Langelier of Quincy, Republican, who voted for substitution on Friday. He voted against it. The vote stood 17 to 15 with three pairs, when Senator Bellamy arose and voted for substitution. He was paired against substitution on Friday, and had he voted similarly on Monday it would have been possible for President Coolidge of the Senate to have voted against substitution, created a tie, and defeated the measure, as he did on Friday.

ODD FELLOWS' ANNIVERSARY.

The 95th anniversary of Odd Fellowship will be celebrated jointly at Alpha hall next Monday evening by George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, Mt. Wollaston lodge, No. 80 and Manet encampment, No. 75. An entertainment will be followed by dancing. It is an invitation party.

DORCHESTER BOY KILLED

Ran in Front of Miller's Express Auto Truck

William T. Devin, the 5 year old son of William H. Devin of 73 Moseley street, Dorchester was struck by one of Bert Millers auto trucks just off Columbia road, Dorchester, Monday afternoon, and died shortly after. The auto truck was in charge of Alexander M. Rogers and was coming down the slight grade of the street. On the opposite side of the street, coming from the opposite direction was an ice wagon. The little boy ran from behind the ice wagon directly in front of the auto truck and before the driver could check his car the spring struck him knocking him down. When Rogers first saw the child he was about four feet away and he at first thought it to be a large dog, as a large animal usually runs out at this spot.

The driver did all in his power to stop the car, but before he could do so one of the springs struck the boy knocking him to one side so that the car did not pass over him. The boy however lived but a few minutes.

The auto truck was not going over ten miles an hour at the time, and came to a dead stop within twenty feet of where the accident happened.

Dr. Cookin, who happened to be passing at the time, rendered what aid was possible until the Medical Examiner arrived. Rogers surrendered himself to the police and was later released.

From all accounts the accident was entirely unavoidable and the car did not pass over the boy as reported in some of the Boston papers, as when the boy was struck he was thrown one side.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Another good show is on at Kincaide Theatre and an audience that filled all the seats and most of the standing room was on hand last night to enjoy it.

The 4 Regals gave a gymnastic exhibition that was truly wonderful. Their feats of skill and strength are amazing. Maisie Rowland proved a pleasing entertainer, singing, piano playing and story telling. Bovis & Dailey's debate on Woman Suffrage made uproars of laughter, and their singing and dancing delighted all. Kelsey Conby & Co. made a great hit with their pretty little protean sketch entitled "The Claim Agent." It is different from the usual playlet and abounds in laugh-provoking situations. The pictures were fine.

VOTERS BY WARDS.

At the hearing before the City Council, it was argued that as Houghs Neck has 300 voters it should have three councilmen. This would be one for every 100 voters. As Quincy has 6,691 registered voters this ratio would mean a City Council of 67 and increasing rapidly.

The gentleman who appeared before the City Council was recently a member of the Board of Registrars, but his memory reminds one of a court witness. Ward One has 1387 registered voters instead of 937, and it is very doubtful if Houghs Neck has 307.

But if the Houghs Neck ward is entitled to three councilmen the other part of Ward One is entitled to ten or eleven.

There are other wards too that must be considered. On the Houghs Neck basis Wollaston should have 12 or 13 councilmen, the South Quincy ward 11 or 12, the Atlantic ward 10 and the other wards nine.

Ward One	1387
Ward Two	909
Ward Three	1165
Ward Four	954
Ward Five	1276
Ward Six	1000
	6,691

If the city is to have seven wards, each ward should have about 1000 voters not 300.

THE STUDY OF SPANISH.

A few years ago studying Spanish was an educational fad. It was rightly felt that expanding commercial relations in Latin-America called for business men who could talk and write to possible customers.

But many pupils acquired only enough Spanish to read it blunderingly. They could ask their teachers in broken phrase book jargon, to lend them his penknife, could perhaps call a carriage or order a dinner. But in writing a clean business letter, or meeting a customer, they would have been helpless.

The last number of the Army and Navy Journal states that a part of the regular daily work of the cavalrymen now patrolling the Mexican border, is the study of Spanish. Thus the threat of intervention has made the language necessary in an unexpected quarter.

A business man was telling the writer a short time ago of the way it affected him. He had been negotiating for the purchase of a ranch in South America. He suspected that the selling agent, in their tour about the place, had taken him over some attractive ground that did not belong to the ranch at all. But in his ignorance of the language, he was not sure.

Later he took along a young American who could speak Spanish quite well, and did not notify the selling agent of his visit. A party of the foreman and others took him over the property. They talked freely among themselves, and the young American could understand about all they said. When it came to any critical point, he would get out a phrase book and ask a question in a blundering way. In that way he nailed them down on important points and found exactly what the property included.

What is needed to help on commercial relations is not a lot of men who can talk an awkward smattering of Spanish. It is a smaller number who have studied several years and can speak and write with facility. A fellow so equipped will find many opportunities.

—Arbor day was celebrated in Marlboro on a larger scale than usual this year. The senior class of the high school, decided to plant one acre with white pine, and a federation of local women's clubs one acre. About 1200 trees were set out on each acre. It is expected that this idea of celebrating Arbor Day by reforesting large areas will be generally adopted when the public schools begin to realize how easy of accomplishment it is.

—Somebody really ought to remonstrate with the young mother who has named her baby girl Cascara, because it is such a pretty name. Just think what a dose that will be for some young man to swallow a few days hence.

MEDIATORS TO LIMIT EFFORTS

May Only Adjust Question of Insult to the Flag

HUERTA APPOINTS HIS ENVOYS

Carranza Still Declines Suggestion of Truce, Showing Disinclination to Negotiate Beyond Settling Controversy Between United States and Huerta—Mexicans Have Improved Opportunity to Tighten Lines and Place American Troops at Serious Disadvantage — Occupy Strategic Position on Route to Capital—Funston Reports Threatening Situation

Washington, May 5.—A general understanding after a state department conference was that the mediators had decided to limit their activities at this time to a settlement of the Tampico incident solely and that the appointment of the Huerta delegates was made on that basis.

This would constitute the mediators an international court of honor to decide on whether the United States was entitled to reparation for the "insult to the flag" at Tampico and what form that reparation should take. After that point had been settled they would be confronted by the question of indemnity which probably would be claimed by the United States for its Vera Cruz expedition and the other expenses incident to the present difficulties.

In considering indemnity the question would again be raised as to whether the Huerta government, not recognized by this country, could properly be held responsible for indemnity.

Huerta Appoints Envoys

General Huerta has informed the mediators that D. E. Rabasa, a Mexican jurist, and Augustine G. Galindo, under secretary of justice, have been selected as two of the delegates to confer with the Latin American envoys. The American delegates have not yet been announced by the president.

General Carranza, declining the suggestion of a truce, asserted a suspension of hostilities "would only accrue to the benefit of Huerta in the civil war now going on in Mexico between the usurper Huerta and the constitutionalist army under my command."

Hope that Carranza's followers eventually might be brought into the proceedings was based on a prospect for appointment of delegates of all parties in the dispute to meet with the mediators.

It was learned that Carranza has sent a further telegram to the mediators, inquiring as to their request for the appointment of a Carranza delegate, the extent of his functions and whether this would be limited to the controversy between the United States and Huerta, beyond which Carranza has shown disinclination to negotiate.

Outlook Not Hopeful

In view of Carranza's direct statement refusing any truce with Huerta and saying in effect there will be peace in Mexico only by the triumph of the war which the constitutionalists are waging on the central government, there seems not to be a great deal of ground for the hope of any immediate permanent solution of the difficulty.

That Huerta is no patient "watchful waiter," in spite of the fact that he has agreed to listen to peace talk, is indicated by the reinforcing and tightening of his lines about Vera Cruz.

The opportunity of the United States to effect the capture of the City of Mexico with a minimum expenditure of life and treasure has gone by. Any westward movement now must be costly. Time has been given the Mexican army to concentrate, to fortify strategic points, arrange for the destruction of bridges and otherwise hamper an advancing American army.

Funston reports that the federals are in force at Soledad, Jalapa, Palma and Paso del Marcha. These command the first stages of the approaches to the capital. Soledad is twenty-six miles southwest of Vera Cruz on the Mexican railroad. Further west is Paso del Macho. Jalapa is on the Interoceanic road about a third of the distance to Mexico City.

Key to the Interior

Paso del Marcho (Mule Pass) is 1500 feet above Vera Cruz, and marks the rapid ascent of the mountains and is the beginning of the long stretch of bridges and tunnels. A few miles beyond this point is the San Alejo bridge, 318 feet long, and then the Chiquihuiti bridge, 220 feet long. The Atoyac river, spanned by the Atoyac bridge, must then be crossed. Beyond this point the railroad takes sharp grades, rising from 1500 feet to 2710 feet at Cordova in twenty miles.

Paso del Marcho thus furnishes a valuable key to the interior. A defending force would not only have the advantage of a narrow defile in which to check an enemy, but in retreat could destroy large bridges, which would require much time to repair.

Consul Canada has sent another warning to Americans remaining in Mexico City to leave without delay.

Arrangements were made for a special train to convey a large party of refugees to the east coast under protection of the Brazilian flag.

Mexicans Are Troublesome

The military aspect of the situation again became prominent when General Funston reported renewed demands by Mexican federal outposts for the surrender of the waterworks supplying Vera Cruz. No shots were fired, and the Mexicans fell back. But Funston voiced the prevailing spirit in military quarters in inquiring as to what steps the United States contemplated in view of the threatening situation.

Secretary Garrison said no further orders had been given for the movement of troops, and none is contemplated during the period of negotiations. The Fourth and Sixth brigades of the second division of the army, with headquarters at Texas City, are ready, however, and could quickly go aboard transports if more troops are needed.

It is held by some of the members of the president's official family that the attack made upon the waterworks on Saturday near Vera Cruz was a deliberate attempt made by Huerta to get the United States forces to conduct an invasion to Mexico City in the hope that on this point he could make a final appeal to all Mexicans to combine against this country .

EXECUTION THREATENED

United States Consul Is Held Prisoner by General Maas

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 5.—News reached here that John R. Silliman, acting American consul at San Luis Potosi, has been a prisoner in the hands of General Maas, the federal commander, for eleven days and has been threatened every night with execution.

The information about Silliman's predicament was brought here by two American newspaper correspondents, who had come to Mexico recently on the invitation of General Huerta.

They went to the north to watch the field operations of the federal army and after they had witnessed the defeat of the federal troops at San Pedro were taken back to San Luis Potosi and imprisoned, but later released.

ZAPATA'S PROCLAMATION

Rebel Leader Declares He Will Make Attack on Mexico City

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 5.—A proclamation signed by Zapata, published in the local Mexican papers, announces that the southern rebels will at once attack Mexico City. It also condemns General Huerta and General Blanquet to death.

Zapata's proclamation is regarded as disposing of reports that he and Huerta were acting together and that Zapata was moving on Vera Cruz with his followers.

TAKEN TO FORT WINGATE

Five Thousand Mexican Soldiers Depart From Fort Bliss

El Paso, Tex., May 5.—Under heavy military guard, 5000 Mexican federal soldiers, with their wives and children, began entraining for Fort Wingate, N. M., at Fort Bliss military reservation, where they have been interned since they fled to American soil from General Villa's victorious rebels at the battle of Ojinaga.

Through lines of infantrymen the first detachment of 800 prisoners marched from their barbed wire enclosure to trains run upon a siding at the fort. Elaborate preparations were made to block any attempt to escape.

Weeping women, burdened with pots and pans, and with little children clinging to their skirts, trudged slowly over the desert to the trains. They followed closely behind the sullen soldiers of General Huerta, protesting loudly against being removed farther away from the border.

With the first detachment went General Castro, one of the principal federal leaders. Special military escorts were assigned to General Mercado, chief federal field commander at Ojinaga; General Salazar and Maximo Castillo. Castillo is accused of having set fire to the Cumbre tunnel, near Pearson, resulting in the deaths of more than fifty persons.

REFUGEES LEAVE CAPITAL

Huerta Gives No Outward Impression of Being Worried

Mexico City, May 5.—Another special train, bearing more than 400 American refugees, left Mexico City for Puerto Mexico. There the refugees will be met by ships furnished by Rear Admiral Badger and taken from the country.

Arrangements for the train were made by the Brazilian legation, which now has charge of American interests with the Mexican authorities, but the details of the trip to Puerto Mexico were worked out by the American committee.

Published reports that General Huerta's health is breaking and that he is on the verge of a nervous collapse are untrue. Outwardly he gives the impression of being far from worried. There has been no hint here that he contemplated resigning.

MUTILATES A PORTRAIT

Outrage by Member of "Wild Women" Group of Suffragettes

London, May 5.—The portrait of Henry James, the novelist, by John S. Sargent, the American artist, hanging in one of the galleries of the Royal academy, was virtually ruined by a suffragette.

The woman who committed the outrage gave her name as Mrs. Wood. She belongs to the group of militants called "The Wild Women." Armed with a butcher's cleaver Mrs. Wood approached the painting in a casual manner. Opportunity offering, she suddenly dashed forward, produced the cleaver from under her cloak and was successful in slashing the picture a number of times before bystanders seized her.

Mrs. Wood was accompanied by a man, who attempted to impede those persons who restrained her. Spectators of the incident turned on him and beat him with their fists. When the police appeared on the scene Mrs. Wood was handed over to them.

UNKNOWN STEAMER IS BURNED AT SEA

Belief That Those Who Were on Board Are Saved

Halifax, May 5.—An unknown steamer, on fire from stem to stern and with no signs of life on board, was discovered 300 miles south of Cape Race by the steamer Seydlitz, from Bremen for New York.

The Seydlitz circled around the burning vessel, but the smoke hung so heavy about her that her name could not be distinguished.

As no small boats were discovered in the vicinity it is believed here that the unknown vessel caught fire and that all hands were rescued by some ship which had no wireless.

The weather on the Grand Banks was moderate, and it is thought that any transshipment could have been accomplished with no great amount of difficulty or danger.

SCHOOL OFFICIALS JAILED

Thirty-Day Sentences For Eight Chicago Committeemen

Chicago, May 5.—Eight members of the Chicago board of education, including its president, were sentenced to thirty days in the county jail for contempt of court for refusing to obey the order of Circuit Judge Foell reinstating four members of the board.

The situation hinges on the dispute over the retention of Mrs. Young as superintendent of schools. The four reinstated members voted against Mrs. Young and their resignations, signed before they took office, were accepted by Mayor Harrison. Foell held that the resignations were void.

THOUSAND MINERS RETURN

Nine Thousand Others Expected to Resume Work This Week

It is believed that 9000 others who struck last week will return by Thursday, pending the outcome of negotiations now in progress.

FIRST CLASS CONSTRUCTION

Street Committee Pleased With Work in Other Cities

The Committee on Streets of the City Council accompanied by the Mayor, the Commissioner and City Engineer, paid visits to Somerville, Everett and some other cities the other side of Boston Saturday, to view some streets which have recently been built under what is known as first class construction, of which it is proposed to build Hancock street, between Granite and School streets. The committee were very enthusiastic over the streets they saw that had been thus built, and if it is carried out on Hancock street, the city will have an exceptionally fine job.

This construction consists of a base of concrete upon which the paving blocks are laid. After this the space between the cracks of the paving blocks are filled with small gravel, and on top of this is placed another concrete-like preparation, so that when completed the street is level and flat.

AUTO FIRE ENGINE TESTED

The new auto fire engine, built at the Fore River shipyard, was given its first actual tryout Saturday at Everett. The test was a private one arranged Saturday morning, but nearly 500 people and 12 fire chiefs were on hand to see the exhibition.

H. L. Houghton, who designed the machine, directed the test, assisted by two men who have been assisting him make all adjustments. The machine proved to be very powerful, not only in the pressure reached but also in several hill climbing contests.

On most of the tests a 1 1-4 inch tip was used, and on a 400-foot line of hose, a pump pressure of 215 pounds was developed. With two lines of 200 feet each the pressure was 170 pounds, and with four lines of 100 feet each it was 105 pounds.

With a two-inch tip, four lines of 100 feet each was connected with a Siamese deck gun, and a pump pressure of 139 pounds was developed, reaching 95 pound nozzle pressure and throwing over 1200 gallons per minute. The tests were made up against a hydrant that carried 40 pound pressure when opened.

CHURCH AND CHOIR

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

At the Wollaston Congregational church the services of Sunday morning were in charge of the pastor, the Rev. Isaiah W. Sneath. Dr. Sneath's subject "Forgetting the past" was taken from Philippians 3.13. He said that all life is an example of the "Eternal flow." What has passed is gone forever. We have only the present and the future. In business and religious fields we note a growing tendency to wipe out the bitterness of the past between the North and South. We see nature now coming forth in beauty, leaving behind its dead past. So should we, by earnest Christian work forget the sins and wrongs of the past in a glorious present and future.

The annual meeting of the Auxiliary W. B. M. will be held in the Vestry this afternoon. Following the reports will be a talk, by Mrs. Howland, of Guadalahara, Mexico, which no one can afford to miss.

The Men's Club will hold the last meeting of the season on Wednesday evening. It will be observed as Ladies' Night. Members and their guests are assured of an interesting evening.

Dr. Sneath will lead the mid-week service on Thursday evening; topic—"Well pleasing unto God."

HALL PLACE M. E.

A very helpful sermon on the Christian's position and influence in the world was preached at the Hall Place M. E. Church, Sunday morning by Rev. P. S. Neldon. The text was taken from Matt. 5,14—"Ye are the light of the world." He said the individual today that isn't striving and using every energy to make the world brighter and happier and a better place to live in is not meeting his responsibility to man or his duty to God."

Sunday School was held at 11.45 with an increased attendance ever last Sunday. The winning class for the roll of honor was announced, Miss Francis class, No. 4 winning with the largest number of points.

Miss Florence Manhire led the Epworth League devotional service on the subject "Heart hunger for God and His house." A good number were present.

At the evening service Mr. Neldon preached on the text "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness even so must the Son of man be lifted up." John 3—14.

Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock the Sunday School board will meet in the vestry.

Thursday evening the Fowler chapter of the Methodist Brotherhood will hold an open night, at which time the brotherhood and the Ladies Aid Society will tender a reception to the pastor and his family.

Prayer meeting Friday evening at 7.30. Subject for discussion "Why I should take part in the Prayer meeting!" Choir rehearsal at 8.30.

HOUGHS NECK SCHOOL.

An addition to the Atherton High school at Houghs Neck is strongly recommended by members of the School Committee who have been investigating complaints relative to the overcrowding of the building which have been made by residents of that section.

Chairman John D. Mackay made a personal investigation on Monday and found that the teachers are handicapped because of the lack of accommodations and that additional rooms are needed. He found one room overcrowded because two grades were in session in it and that overflow classes are being taught in the corridors which are poorly lighted.

The Houghs Neck people are actively campaigning for an addition which they hope to see completed before the opening of the fall term next September.

FLUORINE A RABID GAS.

Nothing Can Resist the Power of This Chemical Fury.

The fury of the chemical world is the element fluorine, although, strangely enough, it exists peacefully in company with calcium in fluorspar and also in a few other compounds.

Although this element was known and named a good while ago, it long resisted the efforts of chemists to isolate it, for the instant the compound containing it was torn apart the free fluorine attacked and combined with whatever substance composed the vessel containing it. It was finally isolated by the great French chemist Moissan.

Fluorine is a rabid gas that nothing can resist. It combines with all metals, explosively with some, or if they are already combined with some other nonmetallic element it mercilessly tears them away from it and takes them to itself.

In uniting with sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium and aluminium the metals become heated, even to redness, by the fervor of its embrace. Iron filings slightly warm burst into brilliant scintillations when exposed to it. Manganese does the same. Even the noble metals, which at melting heat proudly resist the fascinations of oxygen, succumb to this chemical siren at moderate temperatures.

Glass is devoured at once and water ceases to be water by contact with this gas, which, combined with its hydrogen, at the same moment forms the acrid, glass dissolving hydrofluoric acid and liberates ozone.

BURNING WATER.

Coal Wet Gives a Much Larger Amount of Heat Than When Dry.

Dry coal does not produce as much heat as coal that is considerably damp. It is, of course, a fact that a greater heat makes the fuel more valuable, and it is essential to know how to secure the most from ordinary fuel.

Coal that is to be burned in a furnace, a stove or a grate for immediate heat will produce nearly one-fourth more heat when wet than when dry. Coal that is to be placed in a stove or furnace to be closed up so as to produce a long continued, moderate heat will produce a little more than one-third more heat if there is plenty of moisture than can be secured if the coal is real dry.

Large lumps of coal can be soaked in a pail of water for a half hour, and the heat will be increased nearly one-half. This is done in cases where the lumps are used in stoves tightly closed, such as those known as air tight furnaces.

Several pails of water thrown over a ton of coal will increase its value greatly to the consumer. Coal will burn briskly in wet and almost airless mines, and it is said the heat is intense. When there is a fire and the coal pile burns it is difficult to drown that portion of the fire with water. We might as well secure a little of the heat stored in burning water as to permit it all to go unused.—Philadelphia North American.

Allah and the Cotton Worm.

"Well, how is the cotton worm now?" said an English cotton worm inspector to an old Egyptian sheik. "Finished. There is none. How can there be cotton worms now? It is more than our life is worth. If we do not pick the cotton worms you fine us, you send us to prison, you take us as prisoners to another man's fields and make us pick his cotton worm. What can we do? And so there is no cotton worm." "And hasn't it saved your cotton this year?" "Assuredly, the praise to Allah." "Then won't you do all this picking next year without us coming to make you do it?" "No." "Why?" "Because that is the way Allah made us!"

The Annual Rainfall.

According to an estimate by Sir John Murray, the total annual rainfall upon all the land of the globe amounts to 29,347.4 cubic miles and of this quantity 6,524 cubic miles drains off through rivers to the sea. A cubic mile of river water weighs approximately 4,205,650,000 tons and carries in solution on the average about 420,000 tons of foreign matter. In all, about 2,735,000,000 tons of solid substances are thus carried annually to the ocean.—United States Geological Survey.

FOR SMALL LADS.

Their Garments Should Be Neat, Attractive and Durable.

SOME HINTS IN THE SHOPS.

Suggestions That May Be of Use In Replenishing Juvenile Wardrobes. For the Wee Chaps Many Simple Suits Can Be Made at Home.

It is easy enough for most mothers to dress their little girls, and the problem of attiring their small boys is not a difficult one until they reach the trousers stage. By very small boys knickerbockers or trousers may be worn. When making suits of all white with a touch of color it is wise for mothers to make an extra pair or two of trousers.

As the boy becomes older these knickerbockers can be made straight trousers, and proud will he be of them. The regulation sailor suit so long the standby of the growing boy is hard to replace.

One very clever mother had a suit made for her small son by a well known tailor for boys. She says she never regretted the initial price, for it served her as a model for his suits for many days. And this is how she managed. When the suit arrived from the tailor she carefully—very carefully—cut paper patterns for each section and marked each line of stitching, each arrow head and the exact place of each buttonhole. Then she made five other suits like it of various other color combinations. She also enlarged the pattern from year to year.

Old suits of this variety can be made to last for another season's wear for the morning at least. Cut off the cuff and the stitched tucks above and hem the sleeves, adding new cuffs at the elbow. The boy will like them best "rolled up." Then insert rubber webbing in the hem of the straight little sailor shirt, which has gradually become shorter and shorter, and you will have a very good looking blouse. The knickerbockers, too, can be transformed into straight little trousers, for these, too, have become shorter. Remove the rubber and take them in until they fit loosely. It is best to fit them from the inside seam.

BOY'S PAJAMAS.

When making a number of suits do all the cutting out at once, the basting, fitting and the stitching, saving the handwork for sunny days on the porch.

For the wee one the first "hat" is a stitched linen one, with scalloped edge. Then comes the regular sailor variety made of linen. This is easily made and fits much better when done at home, for the band that should fit snugly is fashioned of the linen with a piece of buckram or cardboard slipped in the band to give the required stiffness. As he grows older the problem of hats waxes worse and worse. There seems to be nothing between the cap with the visor and the round hat until he wears the regular mannish affairs.

Coats for the wee one are best made of white corduroy, which launders so beautifully. A white brilliantine or a heavy white voile would be attractive and practical. Then, too, these can be worn even in cold weather with the warm lining coat, which at this stage of his manhood is a separate garment. As he grows older the sweater outfits for colder weather are admirable. They not only are becoming and warm, but have the added advantage of being washable.

For the small boy's bedtime suit the fancy pajamas illustrated here should be popular with him. The nursery rime border printed upon the soft flannel or linen will appeal to his sense of humor. Pajamas of this kind are sold in the shops at moderate price.

The eighth annual tournament of the National Duck and Candlepin Bowling Congress closed its first week at Worcester Saturday and one of the two new records was made by Paul Poehler of this city. Poehler cracked the duckpins for 383, bettering the record of Nicholson made in Boston six years ago, by one pin. The Boston teams roll this week.

Reports of an encouraging nature are received about George Barry, son of Michael Barry of the Central fire station, who is with Jimmy Grays Lowell team, on the receiving end. According to the Lowell Courier, Barry is developing rapidly and is one of the most promising backstops seen in Lowell since Daly came into the league, (White Sox Daly.) In the game against Harvard Barry caught five innings going to the bat three times, making a hit, throwing two men out at second, blocking two at the plate and closing up four strikeouts. Since shooting over to that city Barry has had several offers other New England league teams but did not consider them.

Milton High school base ball team plays Newton High at Newton this afternoon. There have been some new recruits out for the team the last few days. J. Maguire '17 is out for right field and seems to have the makings of a good fielder. A good addition to the team is in James Parks '15, who is out for catcher. Jim was one of the star players on the fast Cubs team two years ago. He has a good chance to make the team and Coach Hazelton expects to make a good catcher out of him.

Again this year rain interferes with the opening of the Grammar school base ball league this afternoon.

QUINCY MAY NOT CHALLENGE

But There Are Seven Clubs That Want Quincy Cup

An unusual interest has arisen this reason over the Quincy Yacht club challenge cup, and up to the present time more challenges have been received for the trophy than ever before in the history of the cup during the sixteen years in which it has been open for challenge. Although no definite dates have been as yet settled upon for the cup races the coming season it is probable that the week beginning July 13, will be selected. The races for the cup as last year will be sailed off Marblehead.

Up to the present time the Boston yacht club the present holder of the trophy has received seven challenges, namely from the Corinthian, Eastern, Manchester, South Boston, Mosquito, Savin Hill and Cohasset clubs. Probably the Quincy club will not challenge for the cup this year.

The first races for the cup were sailed in 1898 at which time yachts were restricted to 21 feet on the water line. The result was that a freak type of boat was entered These boats were of no earthly use except as racing dishes for it was impossible to use them for pleasure craft At the end of the races of 1901 skippers found that these freak boats were rather expensive luxuries and for a period of five years the cup remained in the keeping of the Manchester club.

In 1906 the deed of trust was changed so as to allow boats of the sonder class to race for the trophy, and since that time there have been races every year The first year it was raced for under the new deed the Windom Kid of the Corinthian club captured it, and the following year the same club defended it with the Sally VIII. The next year Charlie Adams who had purchased the yacht Manchester succeeded in lifting the cup again and bringing it back to Quincy.

The following year, or in 1909, the Ellen of the Boston yacht club secured the trophy, and the following year Charlie Adams with the Harpoon again brought the cup back to Quincy . In 1911 the Harpoon again successfully defended the cup, but in the races of 1912 the second Ellen of C. P. Curtis of the Boston club proved too fast for the Harpoon and back to Boston went the cup. Last year the Boston yacht club with still another Ellen successfully defended the cup, and the same Ellen will defend the cup this year.

Ever since the deed of trust was changed the Quincy club has been represented by Charlie Adams, and the failure of the home club to challenge, is due to the fact that Mr. Adams interest this year in the American cup sloop Resolute will not enable him to race for the Quincy cup.

The unusual interest in the trophy this year is doubtless due to the formation of the Interbay yacht racing association. From this class of boats will be chosen the challengers of the South Boston, Mosquito, and Savan Hill yacht clubs.

MILTON ACADEMY WON.

Milton High and Milton Academy played their annual game Saturday afternoon and the latter won by the score of 4 to 3. It was a very fast game and the victory was not decided until the ninth inning, when "Red" Robertson knocked in the final run for Milton. The pitching of Reiser was excellent but the High school boys made several errors.

HORSE FELL, BROKE LEG.

The valuable bay horse, owned by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan slipped on Washington street on Monday afternoon and sustained a broken leg. The animal was shot by Dr. Francis Abele, Jr. The horse was attached to a covered buggy and when near Union street slipped on the tarred surface. In trying to get on his feet it slipped again and the fracture resulted.

TROOPS HAVE GOOD EFFECT

All Parties In Coloardo Expected to Surrender Arms

DISORDER COMES TO AN END

State Embargo on Arms and Ammunition Continued by Federal Officers —Governor Appears Before Special Session of Legislature and Pleads For Support In Calling Out Militia

Trinidad, Col., May 5.—Major Holbrook says Colonel Lockett, commanding the Eleventh United States cavalry, will reach Trinidad today to take supreme command of the federal forces in Colorado.

With the arrival of the reinforcements it is expected the negotiations for the surrender of arms by all parties will be pushed to a conclusion. Already the guards of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company at the Walsen and Rouse mines have turned over their guns to the soldiers who were stationed to guard the mines.

Representatives of both the Colorado Fuel and Iron company and the Victor-American Fuel company have expressed willingness to disarm their guards as rapidly as their mines come under the protection of the United States troops.

Holbrook inaugurated the policy of furnishing guards for the paymasters of both strikers and mine operators.

From the War Department

Washington, May 5.—The war department issued this statement summarizing the situation in Colorado:

"The tension has been greatly relieved. There has been no disorder where our troops actually are and no further reports of disorder in the other districts. The embargo on the introduction of arms and ammunition into the state, which had been inaugurated by the state authorities, has been continued by our officers, and the railroads and express companies have been notified thereof.

"The request to open the saloons at Trinidad has been refused for the present, and they will remain closed until further notice. The machinery for putting into operation the disarmament proclamation is being devised, and as soon as all preparations have been made will be put into effect. The officers are hopeful of good results."

Legislature In Session

Denver, May 5.—The Colorado legislature convened in extra session in response to a call from Governor Ammons to consider matters connected with Colorado's coal strike.

A suggestion was heard that the senate and house appoint a joint committee to investigate the strike and report to the Twentieth legislature, which will convene next January, and then adjourn sine die, leaving the present situation to be handled by the federal authorities.

Such a course would mean no provision for meeting the military indebtedness, roughly estimated at $1,000,000, and no attempt to carry out the legislative program contained in the governor's call.

The governor's address was a plea for support in calling out the militia. Labor leaders continue to express confidence that they will be able to carry through their avowed program for the governor's impeachment.

RESERVE BANK GOVERNOR

Richard Olney Named by President For Important Position

Washington, May 5.—President Wilson has selected the five men, who, together with Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Comptroller of the Currency Williams, are to compose the federal reserve board.

The men to whom the president has offered places are: Richard Olney of Boston, to be governor of the board; Paul M. Warburg of New York, Harry A. Wheeler of Chicago, W. P. G. Harding of Birmingham, Ala., and Adolph C. Miller of San Francisco.

The nominations will be sent to the senate in a few days. As yet Olney and Harding have not indicated whether they would accept.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

"Movies" to uplift Washington workhouse prisoners were tried out by Superintendent Zinkhan.

The New York health department will vaccinate 125,000 pupils in parochial schools in that city.

Three pickpockets got away with $565 in bills by jostling Theodore Pulverman, a messenger, while descending in an elevator at Boston.

ABSOLUTELY DEAD WOOD IN MILITIA

Bay State Governor Urged to Remove Unfit Officers

Boston, May 5.—"There are officers in the Massachusetts militia physically unable to take the field in case of hostilities. The militia service school costs the state too much for the results obtained from it."

These are statements made by Major Heavey, head of the regular army in this district, in a report to Governor Walsh on the condition of the Massachusetts militia.

Heavey declares that efforts should be made at once to remove the physically unfit officers from the militia. "They are absolutely dead wood," he says, "and are excluding desirable men from receiving the necessary training."

HER RETURN

She Found What She Did Not Expect

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

May Penrose when she was married had been somewhat spoiled by the number of her suitors, each one of whom was ready to promise that he would kotow to her through life if she would be his wife. For that reason none of her intimate friends could understand why she finally married a man twenty years her senior and who, so far as could be learned, promised nothing except what was included in the marriage service.

Some said that her mother made the match between May and Herbert Fenwick, realizing that her daughter was wayward and would need a cool head and a strong will to keep the connubial peace. But there is no doubt that May was perfectly satisfied to marry Mr. Fenwick, and it is quite probable that she had become a trifle tired of having her own way with the other suitors.

May's mother, having a quiet way with her and an abundance of common sense, had always exercised a healthy influence over her daughter. After the marriage this was kept up, not to the disadvantage of the young wife and her husband, but to prevent breaks that would have occurred had it not been for the mother-in-law's persuasive powers with her daughter. But when the couple had been married five years Mrs. Penrose died, and May was deprived of her mother's restraining influence. Then came the crisis of the wife's completing the passage from the partial guidance of a tactful mother to the sole influence of her husband. It proved a crisis indeed.

It would be impossible to state the exact rock on which the couple split, for a number of differences occurred, which culminated in the wife's announcement, with great dignity, that after the treatment she had received she could not maintain her self respect and remain in the same house with her husband. Mrs. Penrose's house had been closed after her death, and her daughter determined to remove there. When her husband went to his office one morning she packed what articles she needed, and when he came home in the evening he found the house deserted.

Mrs. Fenwick did not go away in a huff. She had been thinking the matter over for some time and decided that life was not worth living tied to a man with whom she did not get on. Doubtless there was a way for her to get on with him, but she had not found it.

For a week Mrs. Fenwick occupied herself in putting her abode to rights. After her mother's death she had intended to weed out the accumulation of articles whose value had passed away with those who had treasured them. Old schoolbooks, children's story books, packages of letters, even her own dolls, were got rid of. The work of selecting what should be destroyed brought before her a dead past and a corresponding loneliness. It was a work not calculated to re-enforce her resolution in separating herself from the only being who still belonged to her and whom, in spite of their disagreements, she loved. However, she kept at her work till it was nearly finished, when one day she needed an article that she had left at the residence from which she had departed.

She would have written her husband to send it to her, but could not direct him exactly where to find it. A search would be necessary, and she knew by experience that he was no hand for such a purpose. There seemed to be no way open to her but to go and get what she wanted. At least she convinced herself that there was no other way, but the truth is she desired to visit the home in which she had passed, despite connubial quarrels, many happy hours. Had not her resolution forbidden she would have liked to go when she would have a chance of finding her husband there.

She chose the middle of the afternoon for her visit. She had taken a latchkey with her when she left, though why she desired to let herself into a house she had resolved to leave forever does not appear. But when she put it into the keyhole she found that the door had been locked. She winced at being locked out of her home and unwillingly rang the bell. Expecting to see the maid she had left there, she was disappointed to see a stranger.

"I am Mrs. Fenwick," she said. "I am going upstairs." And she endeavored to brush past the servant, a strong girl, who placed herself in her way.

"Go into the parlor," said the domestic, "and I'll call the mistress."

The mistress! A pang shot through Mrs. Fenwick's heart. She was no longer mistress there, and, still worse, another was. Unwilling to make a scene, she went into the parlor and awaited the coming of the mistress. In a few minutes a young woman of between thirty and thirty-five, in appearance remarkably attractive, entered and indicated that she was ready to listen to the visitor's reasons for being there.

"Is it anything that I can bring you?"

"You must consider, madam," said the lady, "that I am responsible for what is in this house, and I have only your word that you are Mrs. Fenwick. Not only that, but, granting you are what you claim, I have no authority to permit you to take anything which has been placed under my care."

All this was said in the most conciliatory manner and with an engaging smile. Mrs. Fenwick did not know whether to be charmed with the speaker or inordinately jealous of her.

"Will you be good enough," she replied, controlling herself with difficulty, "to tell me what position you occupy in this house?"

"I am Mr. Fenwick's housekeeper."

"And you refuse me permission to go about the house which is—or has been—my home and take away any articles that belong to me?"

"It is not necessary for me to do that. If you will wait a moment I will call up Mr. Fenwick and get his instructions."

"I'll call him up myself." But there came an exceeding distaste to ask her husband to direct his housekeeper to permit her to go about in her own house. "No," she added; "I'll go away without what I came for. I have not been accustomed to ask permission of any one to go where I please on these premises, and I'm not going to begin now."

"But surely you don't blame me for doing what it is my duty to do?"

"Oh, no, I don't blame you!"

"Won't you have a cup of tea with me before going?" asked the lady, maintaining the same pleasant manner and tone.

"No, I thank you," replied Mrs. Fenwick disdainfully.

The housekeeper on Mrs. Fenwick's arrival had stood at the landing on the second floor and heard what had passed between the visitor and the maid. She had at once gone to a telephone booth, closed the door and called up Mr. Fenwick at his office, when the following brief dialogue occurred:

"Is that you, Herbert?"

"Yes. What is it, Maud?"

"May is downstairs."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes. Hadn't you better come? I'll do what I can to keep her till you arrive."

"All right. I'll take an auto and be there in ten minutes."

As Mrs. Fenwick declined the cup of tea offered her she swept out of the room, but stopped on the threshold. There was the sound of a latchkey in the lock, which this time worked, the door opened, and Mr. Fenwick entered. But before he could get a glimpse of his wife she had retreated into the room. What was her horror to hear a smack and "What brings you home so early?"

"Oh, I got through my work ahead of time today."

Mrs. Fenwick collapsed. She sank on a sofa half unconscious, where her husband and his housekeeper found her on entering the room. Fenwick stood looking down at his wife. Her appearance was so pitiable that he approached her and bent over her with an anxious look on his face.

"Go away!" she gasped.

"Sweetheart!"

"Sweetheart! I had hardly got out of the house when my place was supplied by"—

"But, my dear, I must have some one to run the house. I telegraphed Maud to come on."

"Maud!" starting up. "Is that Maud?"

"Yes," said the housekeeper, taking the wife in her arms, "I'm Maud, whom you have doubtless often heard my brother speak of. I came to help him out and as soon as you came called him from his office. I can't stay with him any longer, for my own husband and children need me. So you two must stop this nonsense and be good."

She placed her sister-in-law in the arms of her husband and left the room.

There was a happy dinner in the Fenwick home that evening, which was provided by the housekeeper. She announced her intention of departing the next morning, but Mrs. Fenwick vowed she would lock her in if she attempted it. She had heard Maud's praises sounded so long and so often without seeing her that now she had got her into her possession she would not let her go.

The Fenwick matrimonial crisis passed without any further complication, and the tranquillity of the household was never again disturbed.

ADMIRAL MAYO GETS WARNING

American Ships Must Not Enter River at Tampico

FIRE THREATENED BY REBELS

Will Empty Oil Reservoirs and Ignite Contents, Bringing Destruction to Seaport, Should Warships Advance—Funston Inspects Outposts Beyond Lines Encircling Vera Cruz

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 5.—The constitutionalists at Tampico have notified Rear Admiral Mayo, commander of the American warships stationed there, that if any of his vessels attempted to enter the Panuco river the oil reservoirs above the city would be emptied and the oil ignited, which would mean certain destruction to the town.

This situation was reported to the commander of the United States torpedo boat destroyer Jenkins, which arrived at Vera Cruz from Tampico.

Both the federals and the rebels are reported to have planted mines in Tampico harbor.

It is generally thought that Mayo will await the capture of the city by the rebels through the slow process of starving out the federals.

Reports of federal activities in the interior were received at Vera Cruz. General Maas, the Mexican commander, was said to have blown up the San Francisco bridge on the narrow gauge railroad.

This report, however, was not confirmed at the army headquarters of General Funston, though it was known there that the federals had mined the structure along the road. It also was reported that another section of tracks had been torn up.

The American consuls at Frontera, Progreso, Puerto Mexico and Carmen have been ordered to turn over their interests to the French consuls. Twelve Americans are said to remain at Jalapa, and about the same number between that town and the isthmus of Tehuantepec.

The prices of articles of food are beginning to rise in consequence of the small amount being brought into Vera Cruz from the country districts.

General Funston for the first time went beyond the American lines encircling Vera Cruz. He proceeded to the water works station at El Tejar, nine miles to the south, on a visit of inspection, making the trip on a short train of flat cars which bore an escort of a company of infantry.

As an army regulation had been drawn up by the general that no military honors were to be paid while the army was in the field, the brief expedition was not hampered by formalities.

At El Tejar Funston found all the men composing Major Russell's outpost in the best of spirits. The force had been strengthened since the alarm on Saturday by a battery of artillery and additional marines.

The village in which the men are quartered is typical of thousands in Mexico. The schoolhouse, which is the best building in the place, is occupied as headquarters.

For all supplies furnished to the troops the villagers are paid promptly, and their good will seemed to have been won by the fact that the American soldiery have been careful to ask permission before even beginning to dig a small hole.

LEAVES EIGHT WIVES

Assertion Concerning "Major" Fitzgerald, Who Killed Himself

London, May 5.—According to the manager of the club of which he was a member, Henry O. Fitzgerald, known also as "Major" Fitzgerald, who shot himself at the Charing Cross hotel and died shortly afterwards from his wound, had eight wives in America.

Among Fitzgerald's correspondence were appeals from eight different women, all of them signing themselves as Fitzgerald's wives and asking him to return and provide for their support.

Five Years For Bank Teller

Real Ability.

"What is the secret of success?" asked the fool.

"The ability to conceal your lack of ability," replied the sage.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The KITCHEN CABINET

To be equal, physically and mentally to our day's work depends upon the food we eat.

The palate is the janitor; unless he be reconciled the most nutritious food will find no welcome.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

When you are looking for a change in salad dressings try the following: Take two rounded tablespoonfuls of mashed potatoes which has been put through a ricer, add a half teaspoonful of mustard, a half teaspoonful of powdered sugar, a few dashes of cayenne and one egg without beating.

When well mixed add a cupful of olive oil very slowly. When all the oil is added season with salt and add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and one of lemon juice. Use on celery and cabbage or any combination of vegetables at hand.

Chicken Cutlets.—This is a dish which will be ideal for a company, and will not prove very expensive. Cook a four-pound fowl in six quarts of boiling water with a carrot sliced, two slices of turnips, salt, a small onion, and a stalk of celery, one bay leaf and three sprigs of thyme. Cook slowly until tender, then remove the fowl, and chop it, not too fine. Make a rich cream sauce, using a quarter of a cupful each of flour and butter, and a cupful of rich milk and a half teaspoonful of salt. The chicken broth may be used instead of the milk, if so desired. Moisten the chopped chicken with the sauce, add a beaten egg and set away to become cold. Then mold into cutlet shapes, roll in egg and crumbs, being sure they are well crumbled or they will break open when fried. Cook in deep fat and garnish with parsley. Serve with currant jelly or with a lemon jelly.

Banana Fritters.—Bake sufficient bananas until soft, remove them from their skins and roll in macaroon dust, and serve.

Jelly Sauce.—Melt half a cupful of currant jelly in two-thirds of a cupful of boiling water. Thicken with a tablespoonful of arrowroot, mixed with tablespoonful of cold water and add directly to the jelly. Just before serving add a tablespoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and one of powdered sugar to the sauce. This makes a most delicious dessert, and one which will be easy to prepare.

Nellie Maxwell.

BEING AWAKE!

Moral reform and improvement are the effort to throw off sleep. Why is it that men give so poor an account of their day if they have not been slumbering? If they had not been overcome with drowsiness they would have performed something. The millions are awake enough for physical labor, but only one in a million is awake enough for effective intellectual exertion, only one in a hundred million to a poetic or divine life. To be awake is to be alive. I have never yet met a man who was quite awake. How could I have looked him in the face?—Thoreau.

MEMORIAL DAY SPEAKER

Ex-Representative Leslie to be Orator at Worcester

The many friends of ex-Representatative William J. Leslie, who is now located in Worcester, will be interested to learn that he has been selected to deliver the address at the Memorial Day exercises at the Soldiers' and Sailors'' monument in that city.

WILLIAM J. LESLIE.

Ex-Representative Leslie is a veteran of the Spanish war and while serving in the legislature as a Representative from Quincy was one of the legislative committee who represented the state at the reunion held at Gettysburg. At that time he was one of the speakers at the dedication of the George H. Ward monument, which had recently been erected on the famous battlefield.

DANGEROUS FIRE HAZARD

Monday afternoon Chief Burrell unearthed a place on Water street where upwards of forty tons of old rags were stored in an old barn. Some of the rags had been bundled up while the others were scattered about the premises. This morning Chief Burrell with Chief Billings of the Fire Department and Inspector of Buildings Merrill, visited the premises, and all declared it to be a dangerous fire hazard.

Just what will be done in regard to the premises has not been fully decided, but one thing is certain that the premises will have to be cleaned up at short notice. Chief Burrell has been wondering for a long time what became of the great mass of old rags that was being collected by junk dealers but was never able to locate them until Monday.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Paul M. Carpenter of Milton died suddenly in Boston Monday night. With his wife he attended the theatre and later went to the United States hotel for the night. A CURIOUS WARNING.

It Was a Clever Ruse and Thoroughly Scared the Burglars.

For a time during the eighteenth century in England there was a lull in the robbery industry owing to an odd incident. Shortly after the execution of an English burglar named Elliston a curious communication purporting to have been written by him was put into circulation.

"Now, as I am a dying man," it ran, "I have done something which may be of good use to the public. I have left with an honest man—the only honest man I was ever acquainted with—the names of all my wicked brethren, the places of their abode, with a short account of the chief crimes they have committed, in many of which I have been the accomplice and heard the rest from their own mouths. I have likewise set down the names of those we call our setters, of the houses we frequent and all of those who receive and buy our stolen goods. I have solemnly charged this honest man and have received his promise upon oath that whenever he hears of any rogue to be tried for robbery or housebreaking he will look into his list and if he finds there the name of the thief concerned to send the whole paper to the government. Of this I here give my companions fair and public warning and hope they will take it."

It is said the hint was so effectual that for a long time pickpockets and burglars in that part of England went into panic stricken retirement. And, this being so, it is just as well they did not know that the letter was a clever forgery, the work of that prince of wits and humorists, Dean Swift.

HOAXED THE STATESMEN.

Paul Birault, a writer on the Paris Eclair, contended that too many statues were being erected all over France to obscure heroes, too many official speeches made to celebrate intellectual nonenities, and Radical politicians generally are the blindest leaders of the blind.

To prove his theory that this was due to the fact that the living were delighted by public posing, he invented a celebrity to glorify and called him Hegesippe Simon. No such man ever existed, but he described him in his letter as a most wonderful precursor of modern light and progress. To give his letter a certain importance he headed it with a motto to the following effect, "Darkness fades when the sun rises," representing it as the most remarkable dictum of the remarkable Hegesippe Simon.

Under this glorious motto he placed the title of his bogus committee, which he dubbed "public committee for the celebration of the centenary of Hegesippe Simon." He selected the names of 100 Radical deputies in alphabetical order and sent them each a letter, in which he said: "Thanks to the liberality of a generous donor, the disciples of Hegesippe Simon are now enabled to erect a statue in his honor. We desire to inscribe your name as an honorary member of the committee to celebrate the centenary of this great educator of democracy."

Bright Definitions.

Here are some schoolboy "howlers" sent us by a Welsh schoolmaster:

"The principal vegetable and mineral products in America are tinned meat and borking strictors."

"The feminine of he-goat is she went; of hero, shero."

Blind Obedience.

"I have often wondered," remarked Mrs. Rogers, "how a horse feels. A horse hasn't any idea what is going to happen to him when he is harnessed. He doesn't know how far he is going or what he is going for. To be driven hither and thither, blindly, seemingly without purpose, with no idea of what it's all about or when it will be over—how must the poor creature feel—what must he think about it all?"

"I suppose," said Mr. Rogers wearily, "that he must feel just as I do when you take me on a shopping expedition with you!"—London Mail.

What Did He Mean?

Dr. Stanley Coulter says the shortest and sweetest introduction he ever had to an audience was by a student at Cornell university. Said this young man concisely, "I do not have to speak many words to introduce Dr. Coulter, for he is too well known already."

"I never could make out just what that student meant," said Dr. Coulter.—Indianapolis News.

The Contrary.

"I dropped some money in the market today," announced Mr. Wyss at the dinner table.

"Again?" exclaimed Mrs. Wyss reproachfully.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

A small piece of flannel sewed around the arm of the machine and used as a pincushion will save many pins and needles that otherwise would have been lost.

Have a small brass curtain rod screwed on the wall above the machine. Slip the spools of cotton on it, and they are always in readiness for use.

HOUSECLEANING HINTS.

They May Serve to Make the Annual Overhauling Easier.

The following is an excellent way to remove rust and thoroughly clean a wire spring mattress: Take a hard brush, dip it into a fairly thick paste of whitening and water and brush the mattress with this until all the rust is removed. Then brush with dry whitening. When thoroughly dry brush well and give a coating of hard drying enamel (white for preference), as this prevents the wire from rusting again. If the wire is very rusty indeed first apply powdered bath brick and kerosene, brushing it well in with a stiff brush. Then brush with the dry whitening.

A very easy way of cleaning white paint is to dissolve one teaspoonful of salts of tartar in two quarts of hot water and wash the paint with this. It removes all dirty marks, and, if afterward rinsed with cold water and polished with a chamois leather, the paint looks as good as new.

A cheap and very satisfactory way of staining floors is the following: Buy a small quantity of burnt amber and mix into a paste with a little linseed oil. Rub this into the wood with a rag or paint brush, leave it to dry for a day and then apply a thin coating of plain varnish. It makes a good dark stain and one which does not wear off easily.

To clean leather chairs, first wash the leather with a clean new sponge dipped in a quart of slightly warm water to which has been added a teaspoonful of vinegar, then rub dry with a soft chamois leather. Next whisk together the whites of two eggs and mix with them two teaspoonfuls of turpentine. Dip a piece of clean flannel into this and rub well into the leather. Then dry with another clean rag. It is wonderful how it freshens up shabby leather.

FLARING FLOUNCES.

Flounces appear everywhere. They are put on gowns, suits and dresses in ones, twos and threes, while many gowns have small flounces shirred on cords which flare in the most approved manner.

Many are cut in the circular fashion and applied to a simple skirt some distance from the waist line, giving the flare at the right place in the silhouette, but still preserving the slim outline.

One of the predominating features of the newest suits, as being shown in advanced models, is the buttons. Buttons seem to be made out of every substance—some seem to be made out of pebbles, some out of agate and some out of amber. They are larger than ever and long bar shapes and balls seem to be most favored. Colors are decidedly vivid.

WHITE VOILE GOWN.

The pierrot model is a popular one this season. It is carried out in various styles, one of which is illustrated here. The gown is of white voile embroidered with large blue dots. A white straw hat trimmed with chiffon and white wings is worn with this gown. In harmony with it are the white silk stockings and white pumps.

RUNAWAY AT POINT BRIDGE

Frank McDonald and Frank Lane, both of West Quincy, were thrown from a wagon and injured in a runaway accident at Quincy Point on Monday afternoon. The men had delivered a load of lumber in Weymouth and were returning when the horse became frightened and bolted. Both were pitched headlong from the seats and the horse dashed across the Fore River bridge.

The draw had been opened to let a vessel through and the gates were up. The horse was seen coming by the tender of the bridge and through prompt action he closed the draw just as the horse broke through the gates. A second later and horse and wagon would have been in the river.

The horse ran to Quincy Point where it was captured by men that ran from the sidewalk.

McDonald was picked up unconscious. He was cut in several places on the head and face. He was taken to the Quincy City Hospital, suffering from a slight concussion of the brain. Late last night he recovered consciousness. Lane was cut some but not seriously enough to require medical treatment.

FIRE LOOKOUTS.

Quincy is included in the territory covered by the fire lookouts at their stations in the Blue Hills, and according to Chief Faxon Billings of the Fire Department this assistance will be of inestimable value in case of dangerous brush fires breaking out in the city. The department has been given two runs since Quincy has been added.

The stations have been established for several years and are conducted under the direction of the Fire Warden of Massachusetts. Upon notification by phone the local department immediately responds.

On Monday afternoon the lookout discovered smoke wreathing over the roofs of houses in Squantum and Chief Billings sent the Atlantic apparatus to that section. They found bonfire smoke blowing over the housetops and the roofs in danger from sparks. Although their assistance was hardly needed it demonstrated the value the "spyglass patrol."

One Makes Appeal to Mayor Because of His Children

Junk collectors, expressmen, pool room proprietors and others whose licenses have been passed by the City Council, but which have not as yet been approved by the Mayor, have been camping in the corridors of City Hall and in City Clerk's office for the past week anxiously waiting in hopes that the spirit may move the Mayor to affix his signature to their license. Some of these even have invaded the sacred quietness of the Mayor's office and personally urged him to sign their licenses.

The Mayor in telling of one of these visits this morning, said the party came and standing on the rug in the centre of the office floor made his bow to the Mayor, and in broken English said: "You are the father of the city. You are a father. You are the father of my six children. I want my expressman's license"

It was hard to resist this appeal, but the man did not get his permit, or rather he has not got it as yet. The best that the Mayor would promise was that he would again visit the premises and see if they had been cleaned up.

The time limit on the liquor transportation permits expires Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and the burning question is, will the Mayor sign any more of them?

Aside from the liquor permits there are quite a few orders granting permits to drive wagons for the collection of junk on the Mayor's desk, as yet unsigned, and the parties who have deposited their $10 are anxiously waiting for their license so that they may do business. The time on these licenses does not expire until Friday morning.

In addition to this bunch of licenses, the bunch of between eighty and ninety passed by the City Council last Monday night have also found their way to the Mayors desk, but as he has ten days on these there is not quite as much hurry. These licenses however were largely for Sunday fruit, common victualler, pool tables and a few junk collector's licenses.

HALF TIME FOR FIREMEN

New Bill Would Call for Day Men and Night Men

(Special from State House.)

The two-platoon bill for the fire department of every city of the Commonwealth having a population of 50,000 or more was passed to be engrossed Tuesday afternoon by the House of Representatives after a protracted debate that began in the morning and lasted well into the afternoon session. The final score was For the bill, 111; against, 104.

The members of the Quincy delegation were recorded in favor of the bill, and Quincy may come under the bill in 1920.

The bill came from the committee on cities with a favorable report, from which Senators Doyle and Bellamy and Representatives Cook, Kennard and Chamberlain dissented.

The bill was argued principally from the humanitarian viewpoint It was said to be an ancient and uncharitable policy to keep a citizen separated from his family 24 hours a day. If the policy is to continue, it was argued, the state should confine the police in the police stations. The principal contention against the bill was the increased cost of administration of the affairs of the local fire departments.

The bill provides that the officials of the fire departments shall divide the fire-fighting force into two platoons, which shall alternate every fourth day. The hours of duty for the first platoon would be from 8 A. M. to 6 P. M., and of the second platoon from 6 P. M. to 8 A. M.

In the event of a conflagration or a general alarm fire, the members of both platoons would be under call. The bill would not annul any of the vacations, sick or disability or salary privileges now enjoyed by the firemen.

In order to bring the bill before the people, at least twenty-five percent of the registered voters would be obliged to petition the election officers to place the question on the ballot The voters of the cities then would have an opportunity to express their approval or disapproval of the two-platoon system.

The principal cities that would be affected by the bill are Worcester, Fall River, New Bedford, Haverhill, Brockton Lynn and Lawrence.

The bill will now go to the Senate, where another bitter fight is expected. Many argue that the department would be less efficient, while much more expensive.

ODD FELLOWS SERVICE

At Funeral of Napoleon B. Furnald--Police Escort

The funeral of Napoleon B. Furnald, for many years prominently identified with the affairs of Quincy, both as a town and as a city, was held Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 from the First Parish church. The services were largely attended, for aside from near relatives and family friends there were large delegations from the fraternal orders with which he was affiliated. These included Mt. Wollaston lodge and Geo. L. Gill, Rebekah lodge of Odd Fellows, Maple lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, Nahanton tribe of Redmen, and a delegation from the police department of the city headed by Chief Burrell, Inspector Goodhue and Sergt. Larkin.

The services at the church were of a simple nature. The body was met at the entrance by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson who preceded it down the centre aisle, reading from the scriptures. Accompanying the casket were the honorary bearers who were: Past Grand Arthur W. Stetson, William A. Richards and Harry W. Tirrell representing Mt. Wollaston lodge: Amos L. Litchfield and Charles Williams, representing Nahanton tribe of Redmen; and Samuel Oxford representing Maple lodge, K. and L. of H.

The casket containing the body was placed in front of the altar which was banked with many beautiful floral tributes, sent by loving friends, and large set pieces sent by the fraternal orders with which Mr. Furnald was affiliated.

The regular burial service was conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, minister of the church ,and was simple, consisting of the reading from the scriptures, the reading of a poem, and prayer.

During the services the quartette choir, under the direction of William E. Weston, and composed of R. L. Harlow, Mrs. Minnette Dyer Long, Mrs. May Hastings Slade and T. R. Engle, sang "Lead Kindly Light" and chanted the Lord's Prayer.

Following the regular service, the burial service of the Odd Fellows was read by Noble Grand W. S. Esau and Chaplain Ethan A. Rich of Mt. Wollaston lodge, after which the sprays of evergreen were deposited. The service closed with "Crossing the Bar" by the quartette.

An opportunity was then offered for a last look at the deceased after which the body was taken to Mt. Wollaston cemetery for interment in the family lot the detail from the Police department acting as bearers.

The ushers at the church were Charles H. Johnson, Charles L. Hammond, Tobias H. Burke and Frank L. Carlton representing the Odd Fellows, while the arrangement of the flowers about the altar was by Miss Lane and Mrs. Perkins.

It was intended that the beautiful burial service of the Redmen should have been conducted at the grave but owing to the extreme stormy weather this was omitted. Tuesday evening, however, the tribe held a lodge of sorrow at its rooms in Weymouth which closed by the releasing of the white dove, an emblem of peace.

Among those in attendance at the services were several members of the Quincy Bar association, Associate Justice E. Granville Pratt and Court Officers W. M. Marden, and Arthur B. Hultman of the district court, ex-Representative Walter E. Piper, and Representative Edward J. Sandberg.

Included in the floral remembrances were: pillow, "husband and father," Mrs. N. B .Furnald and daughter; ivy wreath and sweet peas, Thomas E. Furnald and family; wreath of roses, lilies and pinks, Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Furnald; spray of pink hyacinths, "Grandpa," Mr. and Mrs. W. E. MAY PARTY OF CATHOLIC CLUB

Exhibition of Modern Dances at Intermission

The Quincy Catholic club held its annual May party in Music hall on Tuesday evening. Although the attendance did not equal the number of subscriptions, on account of the heavy rain, the affair was a most successful one.

The foundation of the decorative scheme was roses and peach blossoms nearly a thousand pink-tinted tissue buds were twined about the hall and the refreshment booth. Large American flags draped the platform and a bower of plants, palms and domestic cedar trees hid Burke's seven piece orchestra which furnished the music for the evening.

Miss Marion Frances Bill of Quincy and Joseph Paul Gardner of Boston, the "premier danseuse" in the recent Tech show, gave an exhibition of modern dances during intermission. Their first, the Brazillian Maxixe which since its introduction to this country several months ago met with instant popularity, was danced with grace and feeling, and the Hesitation waltz, the encore number, received round after round of applause. While the guests were arriving a concert program was given by the orchestra which included cornet solos by Nilo Burke and quartette selections by the four brass instruments.

The order of dances were distributed by Miss Anna S. Brogan and Miss Alice Brogan. The committee in charge was headed by President Miss Mary Lyons.

NOON LUNCHEON AT BETHANY

New Dinner Dishes Christened by Union

Many school teachers, City Hall clerks and store clerks took advantage of the noon luncheon served this noon at Bethany church by Bethany Women's Union, while many regretted that they were unable to secure tickets, the number being limited to 170. Mrs. Frank F. Prescott was chairman of the committee and served a very good menu which required considerable preparation. It included grape fruit, hot chicken served on cream of tartar biscuits, olives, pineapple salad Lorna Doone crackers, ice cream and cake and coffee.

Each of the tables accommodated ten persons, and the ladies were proud of their new outfit of dishes which were christened on this occasion. On each table also were two new candle sticks with crepe shades, the gift of Mrs. H. Everett Crane, the president of the union, and a potted plant from the greenhouses of Walter M. Packard.

Mrs. Prescott was assisted by Mrs. Albert Sargent, Mrs. E. E. Miller, Mrs. Herbert Pratt, Mrs. Arthur Innis, Mrs. Charles Barron, Mrs. John Roberts, Mrs. Frank Carlton, Mrs. Laing, Mrs. Annie Pratt, Miss Addie Park, Miss W. C. Hart, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. England, Mrs. G. B. Bates and Mrs. Andrew Stewart.

It was the annual meeting of Bethany Union and officers will be elected this afternoon. This evening at 7 o'clock Bethany Brotherhood will observe ladies' night with a banquet.

VAUDEVILLE BY OUTLOOK CLUB

A Jolly One Act Farce Entitled "The Kleptomaniac" Presented

Several Skits Close with the Fire Fly Chorus

A novel vaudeville program was presented Tuesday evening in the Park and Downs vestry by the Outlook club, a girls' organization of that church.

The evening opened with an overture and selections of popular songs by the Outlook Imperial orchestra

The various instruments had the appearance of kitchen utensils and the director, Ethel Axberg used a long handled dipper to beat time with. Dorothy Lavery was the accompanist of the evening.

"The Kleptomaniac" a jolly one act farce with all the parts well taken was the next offering.

The scene shows Mrs. Burton's boudoir. She has just returned from a musicale in company with friends and discovers the loss of her purse with jewels and a large sum of money.

Blame is immediately laid to a well dressed woman who sat next to Mrs. Burton. The police are set on the trail and other publicity given.

The lady in question turns out to be Mrs. Otis Howard, the wife of a wealthy client of Jack Burton and the purse turns up in Mrs. Burtons coat pocket.

The curtain falls amid the announcement that Mrs. Howard has come to call and the frantic preparations to greet her.

The cast consisted of:

Mrs. Jack Burton — Freda Klingenhagen
Mrs. Valerie Chase Armsby, a friend — L. Merle Daniels
Miss Freda Dixon, another friend — Ethel Axberg
Mrs. Dover, "Charlie's wife" — Miriam Breen
Miss Evans, a reporter — Florence Nelson
Mrs. Preston Ashby, a gossip — Marie Brown
Celeste, the maid — Dorothy Brown

Candy was sold by the ushers during intermission and part two opened with readings by Anna Bjorkman in appropriate juvenile costume. The readings were "The hero," and "My dolly."

A chorus in appropriate costumes and evolutions rendered "Sit down you're rocking the boat," and the "charming weather" song from the "Arcadians." Ethel Axberg and Stella Hendrie were the principals and added much to the action of the number.

"The backward child" was a laughable skit by Lillian Sutherberg and Mildred Burke resutling in many comical situations and utterances.

"Tango Tokio" was sung by the chorus in the appropriate and dainty costume of the Japanese. "Sunnybrook Farm" was given as an encore and the audience were surprised by having the chorus pass down the aisles during this song.

"Seein' things at night" and "the minister to tea" were given by Miss Bjorkman.

For the finale the "Fire Fly" chorus was given on a darkened stage with Marie Brown as soloist.

Flashlights in the hands of the chorus gave a pretty firefly effect and the number had to be repeated several times.

An ensemble of the club girls closed the evening and a parody entitled "We're the girls" was sung.

Composing the chorus were:

There can be no doubt that the Suffrage parade held last Saturday in Boston has stimulated interest in the cause which it was intended to serve, and women will be given the ballot in this State before very long. Will it make for better government? Will the better class of women exercise their privilege or will they, like their husbands, prove too indifferent after the novelty has worn off to go to the polls and vote? These are questions that time alone can answer. If votes for women will mean general participation of women in elections, then speed the day of its coming. If on the other hand, the good women will neglect their civic duty, then the last state of our government shall be worse than the first, for the other kind of women may be depended upon to cast their ballots every time

THE NEW DANCES.

The polite and starched world of the ballroom has been in confusion. The old term "dancing master" seems inappropriate now. The pupils have driven that potentate from his throne of authority while they have ruled the school, dancing anything and everything as seemed good to them.

Meanwhile the baffled teachers have striven to refine and prune the tangos and maxixes to meet the protests raised on aesthetic or moral grounds. But where the pupils of different schools or different cities have met, the scene has been one of anarchy.

It has been particularly noticeable at the winter resorts. It will be more so when the summer hotel ballrooms begin to whirl. While one fellow is "castle walking" his girl 16 steps backward in a wild swoop the length of the floor, he runs ker-plunk into another who is "universal schottisching" his girl forward and back in a lazy rocking motion.

Convinced that these steps mark a new dance era, the teachers have now set to work to standardize them before next winter, so that typical forms shall be taught the same in different places. The International Academy of Dancing Teachers has met at Paris the past week and is working to reduce the tango to a universal figure. This very likely will be accepted by American teachers.

There are over 50 different ways of dancing the one-step. Manifestly a hall where 50 different figures are being performed to the music of one orchestra will be very much of a bear garden.

The craze thus has its grotesque features. But it has served to limber up many middle aged people who had supposed that their dancing days were over.

CHILDHOOD'S PRAYER.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows flutter go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom
And softly from a farther room
Comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there.
And as I hear the child's amen.
My mother's faith comes back to me—
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place!
Oh, for the peace of that dear time!
Oh, for that childish trust sublime!
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep
I do not seem to be alone—
Magic of that treble tone—
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

—Eugene Field.

THE ATTITUDE OF CARRANZA

Spoils Plans Laid Out by Latin-American Diplomats

ALL DIFFICULTIES IN MEXICO

Considered to Bear on Pending Conflict Between That Country and United States, Declare Envoys In Note to Constitutionalist Chief—Military Obstructions Piled Up by Mexicans While Funston Is Eager to Advance Uuon Capital—Plots Against Huerta Reported to Be Rapidly Increasing—Envoys Will Talk Peace at Niagara Falls

Washington, May 6.—In their note to Carranza eliminating him from the mediation negotiations, the Latin-American envoys disclosed for the first time the extent of the task to which they had set themselves.

Secretary Bryan announced that the mediators would meet at Niagara Falls, Can., May 18, to receive representatives of the parties to the controversy.

The text of the note from the mediating envoys sent to Carranza withdrawing the invitation for a constitutional representative to come to Washington to participate in the mediation was as follows:

"We have received your telegram in which you are kind enough to tell us that you deem it inconvenient for the constitutionalist cause to suspend hostilities against General Huerta on the ground that such suspension would only accrue to the benefit of Huerta, and in which you declare that the international conflict between Mexico and the United States, for whose solution you accepted our good offices, is independent of the internal strife in that country.

"We consider this unexpected statement as inconsistent with the idea which caused us to offer our good offices. We think, indeed, that all the difficulties in Mexico bear either directly or indirectly on the solution of the pending conflict between Mexico and the United States. Consequently, we think that these difficulties should be made the subject of consideration in the negotiations for whose successful conduct we have deemed it indispensable to suspend hostilities.

"Should you not deem it so, we would be compelled in that case to withdraw as inopportune our invitation for the appointment of representatives of the constitutionalists in such negotiations.

"We beg to assure you of our highest consideration."

Want Huerta Eliminated

Representatives here of Carranza declined to comment on the last communication from the mediators to the constitutionalist chief beyond saying they do not intend by their action to prejudice in any way the settlement of the difficulties which brought about hostilities between Huerta and the United States, their hope being that in its respect mediation would be successful and avert war.

The constitutionalists are reported as taking the position that as they are continually threatening overthrow of the Huerta government, they should not stop in the middle of the stream.

The language of the note from the mediators leaves it open for Carranza to send a representative here to confer with the three South American evoys at any time in the future that he is willing to suspend hostilities.

Persons here in the confidence of Carranza say the only first step toward peace he would accept would be an announcement from Huerta of his intention to resign.

Mining Railroads to Capital

Information came from Vera Cruz to the war department that the Mexican federal troops have mined the railroad tracks from Vera Cruz to Mexico City in preparation for the destruction of the road in the event that the American forces attempt a march on the capital.

The mines are reported to be located a half mile apart and Mexican soldiers have been detailed to touch off the fuses should hostilities eventuate.

These preparations and the throwing up of defenses which are daily making the position of the Mexican federal troops stronger are known to be a source of worry to General Funston, and it is understood he would welcome orders to start for the Mexican capital at once.

Admiral Mayo at Tampico has informed the navy department he would have no trouble in taking Tampico with his present forces, and it was learned that he has more than once hinted in his dispatches it would be advisable to take such action. He has now under his command, in addition to his flagship, the Des Moines, two cruisers and a torpedo boat fleet of nine.

The Position of Huerta

Washington hears a lot of pessimistic stories about Huerta. His position is declared increasingly precarious. Zapata, the southern rebel, threatens to attack the federal capital. Velasco, one of Huerta's chiefs in operations around Torreon, is said to have declared he never would direct another battle against the constitutionalists, being dissatisfied with the support Huerta accorded him in former battles. Plots in the army against Huerta are growing, it is asserted.

Whether justified or not, the Wilson policy and actions in the Mexican affair have earned the emphatic disapproval of many of the refugees. Perhaps the most frank expression of this sentiment occurred at New Orleans, where hundreds of refugees signed resolutions calling for immediate action. This was followed by cheering the British flag, to which the refugees claimed they owed their lives.

Discussed In Congress

Congress, after a considerable period of silence on Mexico, again came into the situation. In the senate Mr. Lippitt of Rhode Island introduced a resolution calling on President Wilson for information as to published reports that it was the administration's purpose to aid Villa to secure the presidency.

During a brief but spirited discussion Senator Lodge read from a London paper a scathing denunciation of Villa. The Lippitt resolution went over under the senate rules.

The session of the mediators continued, with the three Huerta delegates now named and understood to be on the way, the United States delegates selected but not named by Bryan, and Carranza definitely eliminated from mediation so long as he persists in his present attitude.

PREPARING TO EMBARK

Troops at Galveston Ready to Respond to Call to Break Camp

Galveston, May 6.—The Galveston waterfront is humming with preparations to embark more troops for Mexico. Instructions have been given to the quartermaster's department to have the transports loaded with supplies and ready for sailing by Friday.

General Davis, in command of the Second division of the army at Texas City, has two brigades ready at the bugle call to break camp and sail for Vera Cruz. Secretary Garrison has not designated which of these infantry organizations will be sent to reinforce General Funston.

The transports Meade, Sumner, McClellan and Kilpatrick scarcely had swung alongside their piers after their trip from Vera Cruz when scores of cleaners were put to work putting them in condition to take on more troops.

Rolls of mosquito netting also will be taken to Vera Cruz to be used in keeping off the fever breeding mosquitoes after nightfall.

The army aeroplanes have been boxed and will be sent to Vera Cruz when the transports sail.

BULLET THROUGH WING

Mexican Sniper Hits Aeroplane, but Nothing Serious Results

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 6.—A Mexican sniper succeeded in putting a bullet through the wing of the United States aeroplane Old Warhorse, piloted by Lieutenant Ballinger.

When Ballinger returned from his usual circling over the federal forces in the vicinity of Vera Cruz he found a bullet hole in one wing of his craft. He heard no shot, he said, and felt nothing.

He circled above the sand hills beyond the pumping station and went out to the railway gap, and to where the battleships inside the reef guard the northern approach to Vera Cruz. He saw many federals.

WILL BE NO TRUCE

Rebels Predict Final Attack on Capital Within Five Weeks

El Paso, Tex., May 6.—That the constitutionalist forces will be in possession of Saltillo and Tampico and prepare for the final attack on Mexico City within five weeks was the prediction made at constitutionalist headquarters in Juarez.

Official dispatches tend to confirm, in part, the report that the Mexican federals have evacuated Saltillo in advance of General Villa's attack.

Several trainloads of uniforms, shoes and cavalry equipment, held up at El Paso when the embargo against importation of munitions of war was renewed, were rushed to Villa. Customs officials had received advices from Washington that the embargo referred only to arms and ammunition.

To counteract the effect of a report that federals and rebels are arranging a truce at Tampico with a view of combining against the American forces, General Carranza sent from Chihuahua an order advising General Cabellero, constitutionalist commander at Tampico, not to enter into a truce under any circumstances.

WON'T UNITE WITH HUERTA

Villa and Other Rebel Generals Refuse to Join His Forces

Torreon, Mex., via El Paso, Tex., May 6.—General Villa's reply to a request from General Maas, in command of the Saltillo garrison, that Villa join the federals in avenging the American occupation of Vera Cruz, was a refusal to ally himself or his men with the federals, and declared that the Huertistas had provoked foreign intervention for their own ends.

Maas' letter to Villa announced that in addition to occupying Vera Cruz, the port of Salina Cruz had been seized by the United States forces on April 23.

General Obregon, commander of the division of the northwest of the rebel army; General Gonzales, commander of the northeast division; General Natora, commanding the central division; General Caballero, commanding the besieging forces at Tampico, and others, have refused proposals that they unite with the federals to repel an American invasion.

ENVOY'S BAGGAGE STOLEN

O'Shaughnessy Loses Property Put on Board Special Train

New Orleans, May 6.—Mexicans did not even except Nelson O'Shaughnessy, former American charge at Mexico City, in their preying upon American property after the fall of Vera Cruz.

Practically all of the baggage of O'Shaughnessy and his wife was stolen from the special train Huerta provided for the charge and his party to transport them to Vera Cruz after he had been handed his passports. The former charge arrived at New Orleans on the gunboat Yankton, and shortly afterward left for Washington.

"I don't expect to be sent back to Mexico City," O'Shaughnessy said. "They usually send back a new man."

Asked his opinion of Huerta, he said his dealings with him were largely of a business nature and he would not express an opinion.

"The situation was acute when I left," he added. "Huerta had held up my mail and telegrams for two days."

GARAGE RULES HIT QUINCY

New Regulations Apply to the Whole State

The new regulations just issued by Chief J. H. Whitney of the State Police, relative to garages, are of interest to many Quincy people. Not only to those who own small garages of their own, but to those who own public garages, of which there are at present several, where repairing is done. Part of the new regulations will go into effect on May 15, while the remainder will be in effect on May 15, while the remainder will be in effect on Oct. 1.

The penalty for the violation of the regulations is a fine of not more than $100, or one months imprisonment, both for the violation of the laws and regulations and furthermore the permit for a garage may be revoked for cause.

Anyone seeking a permit must advertise the fact and send special delivery notices to owners of abutting property. There must be a public hearing and the applicant must pay all of the expenses.

The new regulations provide that no garage may be maintained that is within 50 feet of the nearest wall of a hotel of more than two stories, a hospital, school, theatre or other public place of amusement. Where such garages have been maintained. the regulations do not apply unless the conditions, in the opinion of Chief Whitney, are hazardous.

Garages are divided into five classes. Those of the first class may be erected within the fire limits of any city or town, but all the other four classes must be outside the fire limits.

Third-class structures must be not less than 20 feet away from any building three stories or less, and at least 50 feet from any building taller than three stories, and the capacity is limited to four motor cars.

The fourth-class garages have the same limitations of distance and are limited to one car.

The fifth-class must not be less than 100 feet from any other building not owned or controlled by the garage owner, and the capacity is limited to two cars.

There is a limit of 10,000 square feet for the area of one floor, unless a special permit is granted by Chief Whitney.

Garages now in operation that are not up to the requirements will have to be changed before Oct. 1. next.

All such places must have the first floor covered with cement concrete at least three inches thick. First story ceilings of garages more than one story in height, if of combustible material. shall be covered with metal lath and hard plaster, not less than three-quarters of an inch thick.

All stairways and elevator wells must be made fireproof. Doorways in partitions must be fitted with iron frames and automatic closing fire doors.

All windows which expose dwelling houses, hotels, mills factories or places of public assembly must be fitted with wireglass and metal sashes and frames.

There are also rules for the operation and maintenance of garages and the handling of fluids.

To Save Closet Space.

Metal towel racks, that have flat places at each curved end to screw to a wall, will almost double the capacity of your closet if screwed to the bottom of the lower shelf. A dozen garment hangers may be suspended from each one.

SQUANTUM WOMEN'S CLUB.

A special meeting of the Squantum Women's club was called last week Friday evening at the home of Mrs. William Reed to hear the final report of the building committee. Mrs. Hiram Morse, chairman, said she had gone as far as she could with her work of getting plans and figures for a clubhouse and that all she needed before ground was broken was a vote from the members approving her work and permission to proceed.

The plans have been changed somewhat from the original and the clubhouse will set on 50 brick piers and will be the same type of building as the Wessagusset clubhouse. It will be 40 by 60 with verandas on three sides and elevated enough so at any future date a basement may be added Long French windows will open onto broad verandas so that dancing may be enjoyed in the open as well as in the main hall. It will really be a summer structure that can easily be added to and made a year round place at any time. The plans present a very attractive building.

It was unanimously voted that work begin at once and report will be made at regular meeting Wednesday when the president, Mrs. William Reed will break the first sod. The specifications call for first class material and the building is estimated to cost $3000 Mr. Goodwin of Atlantic has been awarded the contract and agrees to have the house completed the last of June.

It looks as if the ladies of the board who are also members of the building committee would at last realize their hopes for they surely have worked hard to reach the position where they could actually break ground for their building. They met with many obstacles but with a worthy leader like their chairman Mrs. Hiram Morse, reached their goal. These ladies complete the committee; Mrs. William Reed, Mrs. William Donovan, Mrs. James Foster, Mrs S. H. Adams, Mrs. George Hersey, Mrs. Charles Ramsdell, Mrs. Helen McGowan, Mrs. Gustav Wunderlich and Mrs. John Holmes.

ADAMS CHAPTER, D. R.

The meeting of Adams Chapter Daughters of Revolution Monday afternoon at the old Adams house was one of the most pleasant held for a long time. The hostesses of the afternoon were Mrs. George T. Magee and Mrs. E Granville Pratt. After a short business session, during which the subject of obtaining a new flag pole was discussed and steps taken to raise money for the same Miss Susan B. Willard of Hingham, a grand niece of Solomon Willard, architect of Bunker Hill monument was introduced and gave an interesting talk on Solomon Willard and his work.

Miss Willard brought out many incidents of his eventful life of which many of her hearers were not previously aware. She said that great pressure was brought to bear on Mr. Willard to have Rockport granite used for the monument and that he was promised a large commission if he designated that granite. This however he refused to do.

After travelling fully three hundred miles visiting different granite quarries throughout the state, he finally selected Quincy granite. For his services in designing the Bunker Hill monument he refused to take any renumeration.

He was a very philanthropic man and gave freely of his means so that when he died at the home of James Hall on Adams street, his estate consisted of but $12 which he had in his clothing. As is well known he was buried from the residence of James Hall and his remains placed in the Hall tomb in the Hall cemetery, West Quincy, near by which is the Solomon Willard monument erected some years later.

During the meeting Misses Ruth and Dorothy Packard sang delightfully and light refreshments were served by the hostesses.

JUNIOR FRIDAY CLUB.

Junior Friday club brought its season to a close Monday at the home of Mrs. Walter E. Burke, Adams street, Mrs. Burke entertaining the club at luncheon at one o'clock, preceding the regular meeting. As usual with this hostess there was a surprise for the guests, this time it being a pick-up lunch. But not what is usually known as a pick-up lunch such as the busy housekeeper serves during the house cleaning period, but one where there were no knives, forks or spoons. However, fingers proved adequate in disposing of the various dainties provided by the hostess and also added to the jollity.

Beside the club there were guests among them Miss Grace M. Isaac, of West Newton. Mrs. Ernest D. Gourd of Needham who has recently returned from California, Mrs. Harry E. Russell of Boston, all former members of the club and Mrs. Walter B. Holden, Paris.

At the business meeting the following officers were elected for next seated: president—Miss Etta M. Prescott vice president—Miss Clara L. Baxter; secretary—Miss Abigail B. Wood; executive board the above and Miss Georgianna C. Lane and Mrs. Alfred P. Thompson

COMMUNITY CLUB WORK.

An article in the Christian Science Monitor telling of an undertaking in which the Women's Club of Rutland, Vt., is engaged, that of providing a club home, a gymnasium and meeting place for the young people of the city, must have interest for the great number of communities in all sections of the country where similar institutions are a crying necessity. The Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association have done and are doing their share toward meeting this want, but there are various reasons why these organizations cannot establish themselves everywhere; there are numerous places which must be dependent for institutions of this character upon home effort.

It would not be difficult to find within twenty-five miles of any populous center communities that are absolutely devoid of anything bordering upon well-sustained local attractions for their young people. If this is true with regard to the districts that are well settled, it is truer still of small towns and cities in the more isolated regions. When cities as far advanced as Rutland still feel the need of some place of gathering for the youth of both sexes, it must be apparent that the need is widespread.

Women's clubs have taken up and carried through to success many worthy movements. They could hardly engage in one worthier than that of making the home town more attractive for its youth. It would cost little either in effort or money to relieve the home-town dulness, to bring about conditions that would result in the incalculable blessing of making the young folks contented and happy at home. At a time when so much is being said in condemnation of the trend toward the big cities, the smaller communities could hardly do better than to make themselves more interesting. The Women's Club of Rutland, we think, is moving along the right line; its success seems desirable not only for the sake of Rutland, but in the interest of many other places that are backward in the important particular of providing for the proper entertainment and amusement of their younger sons and daughters.

BIENNIAL NOTES.

At the time of the Biennial Convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in Chicago, June 9-19, there will be a conference upon the Relation of the Club to the Community, at which a resolution will be presented concerning the subject of Dress.

Mrs. Mary I. Wood, of Portsmouth, N. H., head of the Bureau of Information, has written the following letter to all presidents of clubs affiliated with the General Federation:

"Over and over again, especially during the past twelve months, the subject of women's dress has been brought to my attention. Women have written to me, both personally and as Manager of the Bureau of Information of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, complaining that they were unable any longer to buy skirts which did not hinder locomotion; men have stopped me on the street to call my attention to some particularly noticeable costume (one of those which covered everything and concealed nothing) and have asked if there was not something that could be done about it; social workers have discussed in my presence the effect which dress has upon morals; advocates of the dance, have urged that proper dressing would go far toward overcoming the evils of improper dancing; these and many others have brought the matter to my attention and each and all with the request that the clubwomen take some action in the matter Influenced by these things and moved by my own observation, I am led to ask myself and the clubwomen at large if the matter is not one in which we are vitally concerned. We are recognized as the vital thinking force among the American women; is it not time that we should cease to adopt and countenance styles set for us by Parisian houses, regardless of the influence of such styles upon our comfort, taste or sense of decency?"

The proposed resolution is:

Whereas: The General Federation of Women's Clubs, in convention assembled, view with disapproval the present extreme tendency among American women to follow designs in dress, regardless of beauty, comfort or modesty; and,

Whereas: These objectionable designs in women's clothes emanate largely, if not entirely from foreign houses; and,

Whereas: This constant patronage of foreign designs and foreign materials hinders a normal development of American art and manufacture, Be it, therefore,

Resolved; That this convention, in full recognition of the rights and privileges of the individual, places itself on record as heartily in favor of the movement for simpler, more becoming, and more modest designs in women's clothes, and urges the co-operation of all clubs and clubwomen of the Federation in a concrete effort to adopt styles in dress adapted to American needs, and to encourage American designers and manufacturers.

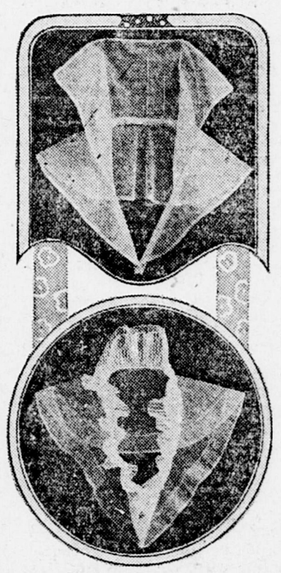
LINGERIE COLLARS.

The Season's Charming Styles Favor Long Necked Women.

A new collar, which covers much of the front of the figure from the neck to belt, will prove a genuine boon to the office girl, who goes straight from her downtown dinner to the theater. Its foundation is a four inch band of lace or embroidery fitted with darts to lie smoothly across the back and the shoulders and terminating in rounded scallops six inches above the waist line.

Bordering this band is a frill of plaited net or swiss, so broad at the shoulders that it extends well beyond them, but tapering to a mere thread at its ends. A second strip of plaited material, twice as deep as that on the shoulders, starts under the points and forms a wide jabot that covers the top of the girdle.



NEW NET COLLARS.

Some women—those whose necks are long and abnormally thin—add a high medici collar in the plaited material that ends in points just behind the ears. They attach this collar to a band of black velvet narrow ribbon, tied in front in a tiny bow. If the medici collar is not becoming and one prefers to veil the throat a stock and guimpe in white malines may be added.

The high collars of net illustrated here are wired to keep them in shape. They are mounted on net yokes which may be slipped inside the blouse.

One of the interesting developments of the spring styles is the blouse of chiffon or crepe de chine which shows a little tucked vest of organdie or linen, with a folding or flaring organdie or linen collar.

The linen collar and cuffs are features of many of the street suits of taffeta, gabardine, serge and other heavy fabrics. The collar is made in many fashions, so that one becoming to every type of face can be found.

Black lace collars are seen on some of the evening frocks of white or light colored silk and satin. They have much dignity, perhaps not quite in keeping with some of the present styles, but good nevertheless.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

FIRE PROOF BUILDING

Stringent measures have been taken by the proper authorities to make the premises on Water street where the police discovered forty or more tons of old rags safe from fire. The proprietor will be compelled immediately to erect a fire proof bhilding in which to keep these old rags, and extra precautions will be required to prevent a fire starting.

BULLETIN SUSPENDS.

Charles E. Decker, managing editor and advertising solicitor of the Quincy Bulletin, stated this morning that after three eventful years his paper has suspended publication, the last edition having gone to press last Thursday.

The Merchants Bulletin was started three years ago by Mr. Decker, and a short time after its introduction W. G. Shaw of this city became associated with it. After a period of many months Mr. Shaw withdrew but resumed his connections during the past summer.

The suspension of the Bulletin marks the passing of one of the most original publications the city ever had Editorially it was frank and outspoken and was continually stirring things up.

POTATO AND OLIVE SALAD.

Cut into dice four good sized boiled potatoes and add fifteen stoned olives cut into good sized pieces and two hard boiled eggs also cut up. Sprinkle with salt, olive oil and vinegar and fold together, set on ice for an hour, add half a cupful of stiff mayonnaise, cover with what is left and put a few rings of olives on top. This can be made very attractive nicely arranged on a bed of lettuce leaves.

COOKING LETTUCE.

A Useful Vegetable That May Be Prepared In Many Ways.

The succulent lettuce is a vegetable of much adaptability. Of course as the basis of a salad it always has been and always will be invaluable. As a garnish for cold meats it will always stand first among vegetable decorations, but it also has many other possibilities.

Take several heads of heavy lettuce and boil them in gently simmering water. When done place in lengths on hot plates, pour over a brown sauce to which has been added tomato, and the result is a most delicate vegetable.

Another way is to cut out a little of the heart of the lettuce, placing in the hollow thus made a tomato. Cook until tender and then serve with a brown gravy.

A very pretty way to serve lettuce is to take a perfect head and curl back the leaves. Place under the lower leaves cucumbers cut in slices, under the next leaves slices of tomato and nearer the top a few nuts finely ground. Serve with salad dressing.

Cleaning Velvet Ribbon.

To clean velvet ribbon, first brush thoroughly with fine velvet brush. Dampen the right side lightly with clear water. Tack or pin the ribbon over space from table to chair with wrong side up. Iron with medium hot iron on wrong side until dry. The wrinkles will disappear, the crumpled edges straighten out and the pile freshen and stand up like new.

SPORT NEWS

The arrival of the opening date of the grammar school base ball league indicates that Dr. J. Gardiner Smith, director of physical culture in the schools, will again experience rainy weather throughout this season. Last year rain was so frequent that for a time it looked as though the final games might be played on the morning of graduation day. The teams scheduled to cross bats Tuesday will not meet until after the regular schedule is closed and today's game may not be played because of wet grounds, necessitating more post season contests.

Quincy and Campello, two of the strongest teams in the recently organized Trolley league did not open the season on Merrymount Park on Tuesday because of the heavy rain. The local nine was disappointed inasmuch as there is considerable enthusiasm between the men and the royal rooters. Many are anxious to see Malnati and Ross, the Italian battery, work out. The former, for many years enjoys the distinction of pitching the fastest ball of any of the local twirlers.

POLICE TEAM PLAY TODAY

The championship team of the Massachusetts police league, to be decided in a post season series between the winning teams of both divisions, will represent this state in Philadelphia in the games for the national title, and the Quincy team, according to advices received here from other cities has been picked as the one most likely to win that honor.

The men are more enthusiastic than ever over the season prospects and are elated because of the available material among the younger men in the department.

A practice game is scheduled for this afternoon between the bluecoats and the clerks of the Adams Market, and the opening game of their schedule is booked for Tuesday at Newton. Practice is being held regularly under the direction of Coachmanger Jeremiah Dineen and the members will meet this week to choose a captain.

Manager Dineen is pleased with the strong infield which will include many of last year's men. John Duane is practically secure in the catchers berth, and Walter Ferguson and George Fallon will alternate as pitchers and first base men. Daniel Doran although undecided is expected to cover second base with Alex Black, and Frank Canavan will be at short stop. David Farrell is the most promising third sacker on hand.

There is an overflow of candidates for the outfield consisting of Henry Thorne, Henry Riley, William Hebert, Edward Martell, Bartholomew Flaherty and Walter Ogle. The last two men have taken the examinations and anticipating a favorable report they are counted upon since two men are allowed this year from the special police.

HIGH SCHOOL TENNIS LEAGUE

The tennis team of Quincy High school has organized with Frederick Atwood as captain and Willard Crocker as manager. The opening game which was to have been played on the courts of the Quincy Tennis Club on Tuesday afternoon, with Brookline as the opponent, was postponed on account of inclement weather conditions.

Six games have been booked and the team expects to enter the Harvard interscholastic tournament. A movement is on foot at the High school to make the game one of the major sports, and award some recognition to the players who have participated throughout the entire season.

With the exception of Richard Crane the make-up of the team is same as last season and consists of Page E. Horton, Fred Rollin, Leon White, Arthur Favreau, Lincoln Crosscup, Thomas Barstowe, Fred Rassmussen, Captain Atwood and Manager Crocker. The men will play singles and doubles.

Games are pending with Milton Academy, Wellesley and Lexington High schools, and the schedule to date is:

May 8—Melrose at Melrose.
May 16—St. Marks at Southboro.
May 19—Melrose at Quincy.
June 5—Newton at Newton.
June 16—Newton at Quincy.

To remove iron rust cover spot with cream of tartar, pour boiling water on until it disappears. Lemon juice and cream of tartar will also remove iron rust if placed in the sun.

To remove ink stains cover the spot with lemon juice and salt and place in the sun.

Lard will remove axle grease from washable fabrics if rubbed on before washing.

To kill worms in plants saturate the earth with limewater.

Molasses will take out grass stains.

Chloroform will remove stains from the most delicate silk without injury.

To remove mildew cover with soft soap and salt and place in the sun. Repeat if necessary.

In washing windows use real hot water and no soap, then rub dry with flannel. You will find your windows will be much brighter than when soap is used.

HOUSEHOLD MATCHES.

Only Harmless Substances Will Be Used Now In Their Manufacture.

Both the manufacture and sale of matches containing white phosphorus will be brought to an end in this country on July 1, 1915, when the law recently passed by congress, imposing a prohibitive tax on matches in which this substance is used, will go into full effect, says Popular Mechanics. This law was passed after years of agitation and after a long educational campaign that made the public aware of the terrible effects produced on the operatives in match factories through working with white phosphorus and brought out the fact that there were other forms of phosphorus not of a poisonous nature.

Phosphorus is obtained from bones, which consist mainly of phosphorus and lime chemically combined with each other and with organic matter. The two forms most commonly seen are white phosphorus and red phosphorus. The white phosphorus is poisonous, while the red phosphorus is practically harmless.

Under the new law only two kinds of matches will be in use—the so called "safety" match, which ignites when scratched on a specially prepared surface on the side of the box, and the double tip match, which can be ignited on any dry surface after the manner of the white phosphorus match. The main ingredient of the "safety" match is chlorate of potash, while the surface on which it is to be lighted is painted with red phosphorus. The substance used for the double tip match is sesquisulphide of phosphorus, a compound of a comparatively harmless nature. In making these matches the first dip coats the end of the match with an inert substance which keeps the match burning after it is lighted, while the second dip places on the end of this substance the sesquisulphide tip. A temperature of over 300 degrees F. is required for igniting these matches. They cannot be ignited through being stepped on, they do not spark or fly and are not explosive.

COLLAR AND CUFFS.

A Handsome Set That Resembles Venetian Lace.

A very unusual collar and cuff set, which has the effect of the beautiful venetian lace, may be made with embroidery. Select embroidery patterns or draw forms which look like the motifs in venetian lace. Transfer to a lightweight muslin and embroider in straight satin stitch over a thin padding. Around each figure work a narrow buttonhole stitch.

Cut out these forms and baste them to a stiff paper or muslin pattern of any preferred collar and cuff shape. Then connect the various motifs with bridges or ties, which are made by carrying the threads across from one figure to another and then buttonholing over these threads.

The motifs should be arranged so that the solid large forms outline the edge of the collar with the smaller solid motifs inside.

If the work is well done the effect is really very lovely and forms a unique piece of needlework.

Style Pointers.

Handkerchief linen is employed to make many of the lingerie blouses. Often the only trimming used is simple tucks. The Gladstone collar is a feature of these waists.

Some of the new frocks conceal the waist line entirely. One such costume from Paris shows embroideries of crystal beads threaded on silk where the waist line would be.

It is an excellent plan to match in color the odd slippers worn with the home costume with a sash or flower from the corsage. This admits of wearing out partially worn slippers and maintaining a smart effect.

One fascinating leghorn hat of the floppy kind is edged with tiny frills of white lace, and black velvet ribbon trimming is held in place by clusters of roses. The ribbon ends in a single streamer, which falls almost to the knees.

SECOND BECKER TRIAL

Case of Ex-Police Lieutenant Comes Up Again at New York

New York, May 6.—More arrests and the exploding of another police scandal are expected to result from the second trial of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, charged with the murder of Herman Rosenthal, which was begun in the superior court today.

Several men suspected of being implicated in the plot to free the four gunmen are under surveillance of men from District Attorney Whitman's office.

This is the result of evidence furnished by Karl Dressner, the confessed perjurer, who names Police Lieutenant John Becker, brother of the defendant, as the "master mind" in the conspiracy. The charges are contained in an affidavit filed with Whitman.

Dressner's reward, according to his affidavit and statements, was to have come directly from Charles Becker, indicted for the murder of Rosenthal.

SUDDEN INSANITY OVERTOOK DURYEA

What Police Think of Man Who Shot Father to Death

New York, May 6.—Chester B. Duryea, who murdered his aged father, General Hiram Duryea, millionaire starch manufacturer, in their Bay Ridge home in Brooklyn, was removed in a straight-jacket from King's county jail to a city hospital last night after he had shown what his keepers regarded as signs of insanity.

General Duryea was of distinguished family and won fame as a soldier. He organized the Fifth New York volunteers. His regiment in the union army was known as "Duryea's Zouaves."

Seven shots were fired into his body, some from an automatic revolver and others from a high-powered rifle. Any one of the wounds inflicted would have caused death.

The police have been unable to learn any motive for the shooting, and are inclined to believe that young Duryea may have become suddenly insane.

General Duryea was 81 years old. His son is 43.

Men Who Practice "Oxypathia" Ordered to Leave the City

Boston, May 6.—R. Naten and A. Marchello, who professed to be able to "cure love and matrimony" and any disease except tuberculosis and heart disorders, and did a heavy business, were ordered to leave Boston after a hearing before Judge Creed in the municipal court.

They were charged with doing a medical business without being registered. Their cases were continued a week with the understanding that they leave Boston. Defaults were recorded against them so that they may be arrested and sentenced if they remain in Boston.

Their practice included massage and hypnotism and they called it "Oxypathia."

Four two-horse trucks were four hours in transferring the liquor to the courthouse. The lot comprised 2502 gallons of whisky, gin, rum, brandy and cocktails, and fifty-four barrels of ale and beer, the whole valued at $5653.

ARE ACTING AS PEACEMAKERS

Union Leaders Urge Strikers to Surrender Their Arms

GUNS NOT UNION PROPERTY

Question of Complying With Orders of President and Secretary of War Is Therefore Put Up to Men Directly Involved—No Assurance That Arms Will Be Returned

Trinidad, Col., May 6.—The question of delivering the arms of striking coal miners to the United States army will be put up to the men themselves, according to announcement made by union officials here.

The announcement came at the end of a conference between William Diamond and Robert G. Bolton, strike leaders, and Colonel Lockett and Major Holbrook.

Diamond said the union leaders would urge the strikers to comply with the proclamations of the president and secretary of war, and turn their guns over to the army officers.

"It must, however, be understood that the guns do not belong to the union, but belong to the men themselves," he added. "If we should order the strikers to bring their guns to headquarters and turn them over to us we would not get 10 percent of them."

The union leaders announced that two mass meetings would be held today. These meetings will be attended by union officers and by officers of the army. The demand of the secretary of war for the surrender of arms will be explained to the strikers in their various languages, Diamond announced, and they will be urged to deliver up their guns. Diamond said he thought a formal vote would not be taken, but that each man would be left to make his own decision.

Colonel Lockett declined to say what measures he would take if the men failed to turn in the guns. Holbrook announced that Lockett would proceed with the work of disarmament "as rapidly as conditions justify."

It is understood that Lockett will assign officers to have charge of the receiving arms at various central points in the strike district. Each man will get a receipt for his gun. Union leaders say they have received no assurance that the arms ever will be returned. Many of the arms of the mine guards already are in the possession of United States troops and it is reported guns at various mines are ready to be turned over.

Preliminary distribution of troops in the southern districts was announced last night by Lockett. The First squadron, Eleventh cavalry, was encamped at Ludlow under command of Major Rowell.

OLNEY DECLINES OFFER

Formal Refusal to Become Governor of Reserve Board

Washington, May 6.—Richard Olney has addressed a letter to President Wilson formally declining the appointment as governor of the federal reserve board of the new banking system.

While officials here declined to discuss the declination by Olney, they are in search of another New England man to complete the board. It is reported as likely that W. P. G. Harding, president of the First National bank of Birmingham, Ala., who has been appointed member of the board from the south, will be named as governor.

UPRISING OF NATIVES

Antwerp, May 6.—Confirmation of a reported native revolt in the Portuguese Congo and the killing of twenty white men, including some missionaries, has been received here. Many other missionaries are said to have fled from the district.

The governor of Angola attacked the natives, but was forced to retreat, and the natives continued their march toward the left bank of the Congo, burning all the stations on their way and causing the small garrisons to flee before them.

The Lilibridge Scandal

A Mistake In the Name

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Miss Tabitha Way scuttled across the street and entered the gate of her nearest neighbor, Fenella Mason.

"Fenny, what do you think?" she gasped as she sank into a chair.

Fenny Mason lifted her little brown eyes from the molasses cookies she was rolling out and spoke calmly:

"My, Tab, but you're all het up!" she said.

"What if I be?" snapped Tabitha, mopping her face with a corner of her white apron in lieu of a pocket handkerchief.

"Makes you look so uncomfortable," remarked Fenny casually as she knelt before the stove to put a pan of cookies in the oven.

For a moment Tabitha glared at her friend, and then her eagerness to impart her news to Fenny Mason overcame her indignation, and she said:

"I asked you if you'd heard the news?"

"You never asked me any such thing," retorted Fenny over her thin shoulder. "You asked me what I thought, and I told you I thought you looked all het up, so there!"

"I declare, Fenny Mason, you air the greatest critter," Tabitha said. "You won't listen till you get good and ready, so I'm jest going to set right here until you say you're ready to hear about the scandal."

"Scandal?" shrieked Fenny, sitting up straight in her chair, with open mouth. "Why didn't you say so before? I thought you'd come to tell me about the new twins down at Black Hannah's, and I heard all about that from the milkman."

"Well, I never!" gasped Tabby, for this was news to her. "Boys or girls?"

"Girls."

"I wonder what Hannah's going to name 'em?"

"They're all named—Magnolia and Pergolia."

"The idea! Now, for the news. I'll bet you haven't heard about Deacon Quigg's son."

"Not Alfred?"

"Yes, ma'am! He's robbed a bank!"

"No!" shrieked Fenny, for she was second cousin to the Quiggs and felt any disgrace that might come upon the family.

"REMEMBER ME, COUSIN FENELLA?"

"Yes, ma'am. It's all out in this morning's New York paper. I had it from the groceman, and he had it from the postmaster. So I guess it's straight enough."

Fenny Mason looked bewildered.

"I didn't know Alfred was in New York," she faltered. "I thought he was in Australia or Patagonia or somewhere."

"The newspaper said that Alfred Quigg, a clerk in the Kinticum National bank of New York city, had absconded with $10,000 of the bank's funds. It said that detectives were close on his trail and that they expected to apprehend him within a day or so. It said that he was the scapegrace son of Deacon Quigg of Lilibridge. There!" said Tabitha Way.

"Anything's possible nowadays, with folks running around in automobiles and airyplanes as cool as you please," remarked Tabby, nibbling pensively at a ginger cooky.

Fenella turned and faced her friend. There was a look of obstinacy in her brown eyes.

"No matter what was told me about Alfred Quigg, I wouldn't believe it—not if it was real bad!" she declared loyally.

The women turned with one accord and stared at the sunbrowned, curly haired young man who leaned his arms on the window sill and grinned at them, showing perfect rows of white teeth.

"Remember me, Cousin Fenella?" he asked with easy nonchalance.

"Alfred Quigg!" gasped Fenella, sinking into a chair and quite pale with alarm.

"And I guess Miss Tabby remembers me by this time," smiled Alfred, agreeably nodding at Miss Way. "Last recollection I have of Miss Tabby, is that she chased me around the mill pond and told me I'd end on the gallows, all because I teased her old turkey gobbler!"

"Come inside, Alfred," whispered Fenella. "I've got something important to tell you."

"Thanks," said Alfred, going round to the screen door and letting himself inside.

As he stood there hat in hand, smiling good naturedly around at the familiar old fashioned room, he was startled at the actions of the two good spinsters whose earnest gossip he had interrupted.

Fenella flew to the door through which he had just entered and slammed it tight shut and locked it. Tabby pulled down the window sash, locked it and pulled the shade to the sill. Then from window to window of the little house flew the two women, pulling down shades and drawing curtains until from without the place looked deserted.

"What's up?" demanded Alfred Quigg when they rushed breathlessly back to the kitchen and caught him by either arm.

"They're coming, Alfred, and you must hide," warned Fenella. "Remember, Tabby and I don't believe a word of it, but you don't want to be caught. Remember your poor parents. You just hide until the worst blows over, and then we'll know what to do. I'm so thankful you came to my house first. You will be safe here. No one would dream of looking for you in Fenella Mason's house. Come!"

So, half explaining, they dragged the bewildered young man up the narrow back stairway to the little closet in the loft room over the kitchen. Here they locked him in, confident that he could not suffocate, for the tiny diamond shaped ventilator would let in sufficient air.

"They're a pair of crazy loons, and I may as well let them have their own way until dark," decided Alfred when his indignation had cooled. "Then I can push out of this place and go home."

* * * * * * *

It was drawing toward sunset, and Fenella Mason and Tabby Way still sat in Fenella's kitchen discussing the fugitive concealed in the loft room closet.

They had been up there once and handed Alfred a well laden tray of food, for which he had given them scanty thanks.

"I'm glad he came here first," Fenella was saying for the hundredth time that afternoon when there came a thundering knock at the kitchen door.

"It's them!" hissed Tabby.

Fenella went to the door and peeped through an opening in the shade.

"'Tain't no one but Alfred's pa, the deacon," she whispered. "Guess I better let him in."

She cautiously opened the door and permitted the amazed old man to enter the darkened room.

"What in tarnation pumpkins is the matter with you, Fenny?" he asked testily. "Locked up here tight as a drum! You old maids air the confoundedest critters! You act as if a hull regiment of marriageable men was lurking around the yard waiting to break into the house and elope with you! Have you seen Alfred?"

"Alfred?" gasped Fenella.

"Alfred?" echoed Tabitha.

"Yes, Alfred!" barked the deacon, flinging his cap down on the table. "We had a telegram from him saying he'd just got back from Patagonia. You know he went as first mate on a freight steamer. Station master has just told me Alfred arrived on the 11 o'clock train this morning and somebody said they saw him coming into your gate. Ma and I are worn out waiting for him. Where is Alfred?"

"Up in the loft room closet," said Fenella faintly.

"Why?" thundered the deacon.

It was Tabitha who told him the news of the bank robbery and how Alfred Quigg, scapegrace son of Deacon Quigg of Lilibridge, had become an absconder and that the detectives were close on his trail.

"Bosh!" snorted the deacon when Tabby had concluded her tale. "I read that rubbish in the paper myself. Name was Twigg, not Quigg, and 'twasn't this Lilibridge he was from; it was Lillibridge in Connecticut. Where's my Alfred—the best sailor boy in the whole world?"

He stamped upstairs, and the two chagrined women heard him arguing with Alfred. They talked for a long time, and at last they heard the sound of muffled laughter.

When father and son came down stairs their eyes were twinkling. "Come over to the house tonight girls," said the deacon pleasantly. "We're going to have a little house warming for Alfred, and he's got some little presents from furrin' parts for each of you. I declare, from what Alfred tells me, he ain't forgot one of his old friends."

"I told you it couldn't have been our Alfred," she said proudly.

"You was in a mighty hurry to hide him just the same," retorted Tabitha. "Still," she added hopefully, "if there hadn't been a mistake in the name it might have been him after all!"

BUT THIRTEEN KNOWN SAVED

Fate of Rest of Columbian's Crew Is In Doubt

STEAMER DESTROYED AT SEA

Calls Announcing That She Was on Fire Cease Abruptly—Explosion Destroys Wireless as Calls For Aid Were Being Sent Out—Survivors In Exhausted Condition

Boston, May 6.—Thirteen members of the crew of the Leyland line freight steamship Columbian, which has been burned at sea, were picked up from a small boat in mid-ocean by the Franconia yesterday, and are now steaming toward Boston in the Cunarder.

A second boat, with nineteen men aboard, is still adrift in the waste of waters to the southward of Sable island, and there may be a third boat missing, in charge of Captain McDonald. The Franconia, after picking up the first boat, spent a good part of the day searching for the drifting survivors, but gave up the search toward nightfall and resumed her course for Boston lightship.

The North German Lloyd steamship Seydlitz, which sighted the burning steamship Monday and reported the disaster by wireless, stood by the blazing wreck all day Tuesday and searched for survivors, but none were found.

The Seydlitz had not been able to identify the burning ship and her identity was a mystery until the Franconia reported by wireless that she had picked up one of the Columbian's boats with thirteen survivors alive and the dead body of Chief Steward Matthews.

The International Mercantile Marine company, lessees of the Leyland line, say that a normal crew for the Columbian is between sixty and seventy men. The Phoenix line, which had the Columbian under charter, estimates the crew at between forty-five and fifty. Fourteen were aboard the boat picked up by the Franconia and nineteen are said by the survivors to be in a second boat, with the chief and second officers. This leaves at least twelve men unaccounted for. Captain McDonald is not positively known to be in the second boat, and this gives rise to the belief that there may be a third boat adrift, under charge of the Columbian's commander.

All the east and west-bound steamships were notified of the disaster and urged to be on the lookout for boats with survivors. The static conditions were bad and the wireless worked poorly.

The latest word from the burning steamer came from the Seydlitz, which had stood by for twenty-four hours after discovering the wreck. This message stated that the vessel was aflame throughout and that the funnel and foremast had gone by the board.

There is little doubt that the Columbian, central figure in several dramatic incidents at sea, will be burned beyond salvage and will probably go to the bottom of the ocean.

The last direct message from the burning ship had been received Monday. It was a faint message, picked up by the Sable island radio station, and said: "We are on fire, hurry up." The code letters of the ship were blurred and could not be distinguished. The calls ceased abruptly and nothing more was known of the fate of the ship until the Seydlitz reported finding the blazing and abandoned hulk.

The Franconia's message does not state the exact position where she picked up the boat with the thirteen survivors and the body of the chief steward, stating it as about 600 miles east of Boston lightship.

The survivors had been in the small boat at the mercy of the cold and sea for forty hours and had suffered terribly from the exposure. Their exhaustion was so great that it was impossible to obtain a coherent story from them several hours after their rescue.

The Columbian caught fire Sunday night, when about 300 miles south of Cape Race. A series of violent explosions followed almost immediately. Captain McDonald gave orders to the wireless operator, James Drohan, to send out calls for assistance, with the information that the ship was afire.

Drohan was flashing out one of these cries for aid, when an explosion destroyed the wireless apparatus and the Columbian was cut off from communication with nearby ocean liners which might have lent succor.

THE DORCAS DRAMATICS

"Teddy or the Runaw ys" Presented

Those who braved the severe storm Tuesday night and attended the drama given under the auspices of the Dorcas society in the Universalist church vestry were well repaid for their efforts. The drama presented was Teddy or the Runaways with the following cast.

Jean MacLean, little Miss Fixit,
Minnie G. Thayer
Mrs. Juniper, a young wife
Lillian B. Fisher
Victoria, the girl in the taxi
Doris L. Torrey
Texana, the girl of the golden west,
Ruth A. Thayer
Max Juniper, the perplexed husbzand,
Russell A. Stiles
Alonzo Willing, the fortune hunter,
Theodore Hoffsess
Ted Keegan, the man on the box,
Edgar W. Stiles
Sheriff Jim Larabee,
Benjamin E. Litchfield
Also two deputy sheriffs.

These young people gave the drama in North Weymouth last week most successfully and won hearty applause at their second performance last night. All entered into the characters which they were to portray with understanding and action. The Tan Cross ranch between San Antonio and Houston, Texas is the scene of action and the time the present. The plot of the play hinged on the great diamond robbery and the complications and misunderstandings which arose made fun for the audience. Miss Ruth A. Thayer as Texana had a difficult part to portray but arose to the occasion every time Mrs. C. H. Greene presided at the piano and gave a pleasing solo.

Ice cream was served by Mrs George E. Sprague while Mrs. John Smith sold candy. The entertainment was in charge of Mrs. George F. Spooner and Miss Florence Holton.

SUIT AGAINST CITY.

James Flaherty of West Quincy has entered suit against the City of Quincy for damages for injuries to his 6-year old daughter Mary Flaherty, who was injured Nov. 2, 1913, by falling into a sewer trench. The place where the accident happened was on Hall Place, West Quincy. The sewer department were building a sewer through the street and it is alleged that the little girl was playing about the edge of the trench when she fell in striking on the edge of a bank which inflicted injuries which confined her to the City Hospital for many weeks.

CO-OPERATIVE BANK HEARING

Atlantic People Well Represented at State House

A well attended hearing was held this morning at room 441 at the State House before the board of Bank Commissioners, relative to the petition of the Sagamore Co-operative bank of Atlantic for a charter. There were about 35 present and those to speak in favor were Harry W. Reed, Charles A. Hall, John A. Duggan, William Y. Kenyon, H. F. Mosses, and Mr. Barnham. All pointed out the fact that there was no banking institution in that section of the city, the nearest being at Wollaston which was a mile or two away and that it would be a great benefit to the residents of the section.

Mr. Pinkham of the Wollaston co-operative bank said that he though that the Wollaston Co-operative bank was able to take care of Atlantic, yet if it would be of any benefit to that section and to the city he would be glad to welcome the new institution.

Joseph A. Sedgwick of the Quincy co-operative bank also spoke along the same lines There was no decided opposition to the proposition, and it is thought that the charter desired will be granted.

After the hearing the matter was taken under advisement and it is expected that definite answer to the petition will be received this week.

Reports showed that over 60 Quincy suffragists marched in the parade on Saturday, although all did not join in the Quincy section of which Dr. Malcolm Miller was the head.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Aubrey Hilliard, treasurer of the R. S Brine Transportation Co., of Boston, and a well known resident of Braintree, died at his winter home at Wellesley this morning. Mr. Hilliard was suddenly stricken Tuesday night with acute indigestion and never recovered.

Mr. Hilliard was a popular resident and prominent in the social and political life of the town. He is a former representative from the Braintree district but never held town office.

He was a charter member and for many years vice president of the Cochato club and at the time of his death was a member of the finance committee of All Souls church.

Mr. Hilliard was 53 years of age and is survived by his wife, and two children, Mrs. Carrie Gertrude Dow and Curtis M. Hilliard

Mr. Hilliard's first wife was Miss Gertrude Morrison who died a few years ago. Several months ago Mr. Hilliard and Maria Howlett, a professor at Wellesley college, were married and they were spending a few weeks in Wellesley while their home on Middle street, Braintree, was undergoing repairs.

SOUTH SHORE AND COUNTY.

The United Garment Workers of America have been denied the use of the New Downer Landing for a picnic on July 4 by the selectmen of Weymouth. The vote against the petition was unanimous.

The selectmen of Weymouth have granted a pony express license to George E. Fogg of Braintree, and issued instructions to Chief of Police Patrick Butler to report weekly in writing as to how all expressmen having licenses conduct their business.

Alonzo B. Cook of Sharon who was defeated for the registrar of probate by J. R. McCoole of Dedham has filed a petition in bankruptcy. His liabilities are $7965 and no assets.

HAD GOOD TIME KICKING

Express Delivery Horse Makes It Decidedly Interesting

A crowd of people lined Hancock street this noon expecting to see the driver of an Electric express delivery wagon seriously injured by a heavy roan horse which opened up a kicking attack on the wagon near Granite street. Although he exerted every ounce of strength to stop the horse he was powerless until the merchants came to his assistance.

The horse left the trolley freight depot for the afternoon delivery apparently in good fettle, but on Hancock street he suffered an attack of Mexican fever. Kicking and plunging with his off hind leg outside the shafts he carried the wagon along as far as the Durgin and Merrill block where merchants brought the horse to a stop.

While being unhitched he continued the bombardment but no one was injured. While being hitched again he was tendered an apple but refused it. He responded willingly to the "gidap" however and set out on his travels at good speed.

TWO SHIPS ARE FAVORED

National House Votes Down One Battleship Plan

The Quincy shipyard will probably have an opportunity to bid for another battleship. On Tuesday the administration's two-battleships program for next year in the naval appropriations bill, was sustained in the House, when the one-battleship proposal was voted down, 148 to 91, and a motion to strike the two-battleship provision was rejected by a vote of 152 to 41.

During the debate Representative Madden of Illinois said that "if there should be war between this country and Mexico every citizen of the United States will stand by President Wilson."

Repreesntative Witherspoon of Mississippi characterized the expenditure of $7,800,000 for two battleships as "damnable graft."

DEMAND FOR COTTAGES

Houghs Neck Anticipates a Busy Season

Houghs Neck is brushing up, getting ready for the annual rush of summer residents. The local real estate dealers at Houghs Neck report an unusual demand this year for cottages and that many have already been rented for the season. The backward weather however has interfered somewhat with the boom, for many are apparently waiting for the warm spring like weather.

The most of the booths and other places along Sea street where tonics, fruit, etc., are sold, as well as the pool rooms and dance halls are already open, but little business is being done, as the daily visitors are few and far between.

Local real estate men are figuring it out that if there is any seasonable weather this year that it will be one of the busiest seasons that the beach has ever known

CLEAN-UP WORK PROGRESSING

Many Say They Did Not Know Collection Dates

The citizens of Quincy in general are taking kindly to the request of the Board of Health to co-operate in the clean-up week and the teams of the Board of Health are daily carting away loads of old rubbish cleaned from cellars, attics and from back yards. This old material accumulates in many places largely for the reason that families have no way of disposing of it readily, as the Board of Health teams do not take this old rubbish as a rule on their ash teams. However, one thing is certain that once a year at least they have an opportunity to get rid of it. As no official announcement was made by the Board of Health of the dates, many were unable to take advantage of the city collection. Many others would like to have the collection extended another week, as they had more than they could get into their barrels.

First Presbyterian Church Gives Reception to Rev. and Mrs. James A. Matheson

Fifth Anniversary of Their Coming to Quincy Church

A box of gold double eagles, the gift of the members of the First Presbyterian church, was presented to Rev. and Mrs. James A. Matheson, at the monster, warm hearted and enthusiastic reception tendered them in the lecture room on Wednesday evening in observance of the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Matheson. The presentation was made by Alexander Clark and was followed by cheers and applause.

Mrs. Matheson was also presented with a rug, hand made, the gift of Mrs. Samuel Curtis, one of the oldest members of the congregation.

In accepting the gift Rev. Mr. Matheson spoke of the fine spirit existing among the members, and congratulated all on the good work being done in the parish. Mrs. Matheson made a short speech of acceptance in which she spoke of the warm friendship between the women of the church and herself.

During the early part of the evening Rev. and Mrs. Matheson received the members and assisting them were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Bishop and Mr. and Mrs. William T. Cumming. The ushers were the Misses Jessie Shirley, Margaret Michael, Bessie Miller, Ruth Kemp, Edith Elrick and Lillian McLeod.

Rev. Mr. Matheson assumed the pastorate of the church five years ago today, and in that time has won the love and close friendship of the entire congregation. Next week he leaves for Chicago, Ill., where he will attend the General Assembly.

An entertainment was given during the evening consisting of reading by Miss Phyllis Smith of Atlantic piano solos by Frank Gilbert, vocal solos by Mrs Robert Grant and Miss Lillian McKay, accompanied by Mrs. E. Sears.

The room was decorated in colors of blue and gold, yard upon yard of tissue trimmings being hung from the chandeliers, while around the pulpit was a bank of orange and blue tissue paper, flanked with palms, jonquils, daffodils, bachelor buttons and yellow daisies.

MAYOR MILLER VETOES THREE

No Liquor Permits for Lilja Connelly or Maloney

Mayor Miller has approved three more liquor permits making ten which he has signed. One of these three was signed late Wednesday afternoon and the other two this morning. The three new ones are Peter Gacicia, Thomas H. Farrell and Andrew S. Issacson known as Andrew's express.

The remaining three Carl Lilja, Connelly's express and Maloney's express he has vetoed, the veto message being filed this morning.

The veto is sure to result in a lively debate when they come before the City Council for action. Just what action the Council will take cannot be foretold, but it will take sixteen votes to pass them over the veto. Just what the standing of the permits would be if passed over the veto is an open question. The law requires that the Mayor's signature shall be attached to every permit, and should the orders pass over the veto, and the Mayor still refuse to sign the licenses, the question is would they become operative, or can the Mayor be compelled to sign although he objects. As there is another matter that demands the immediate attention of the City Council it is more than probable that the Mayor may call a special meeting for next Monday evening, and he will probably include in the call his veto.

BENEFIT DANCE.

Many Weymouth residents attended the benefit dance in Electa hall on Wednesday evening for Simon Veno of New Downers Landing, one of the best known carpenters in this esction. Mr. Veno is now ill at his home. Dancing was enjoyed until midnight and the affair was conducted under the direction of John Bennett of Weymouth.

$12,000 PARISH HOUSE

Will Be Built by Wollaston Unitarian Church

At a special meeting held in the vestry, Wednesday evening, the Wollaston Unitarian society voted to build a $12,000 parish house on the lot adjoining the present church edifice on Beale street.

A special meeting of the parish has been called for Monday evening, May 18, at which, it is expected, the above vote will be officially ratified and the project definitely formulated. It is planned to raise half the money by subscription and half by mortgage.

The tentative plans displayed at the meeting call for a two story structure along the architectural lines of the present church.

The plans conform most harmoniously with the present building and the completed whole would be an improvement even to the present attractive church on the corner.

Construction will be of a stone first story, with second story of wood. The roof will be slated.

On a level with the street and the present church auditorium will be a large parish hall and stage.

Entrance will be made by a vestibule 12 by 18 which will harmonize with the present church entrance on the corner, and present a well balanced front on Beale street.

The parish hall will have a seating capacity of over 275 and a stage 19 feet deep with a 20 foot proscenium.

The hall will be connected with the main church by a door well toward the front of the auditorium. With this one exception the interior of the present auditorium will not be changed.

From the vestibule stairs will go down to the present church vestry. The present kitchen will be transformed into two comodious cloak rooms.

On the vestry level under the parish hall will be a large supper room. Sliding doors will connect with the vestry and the whole can be thrown into one immense room when occasion demands.

In the rear underneath the stage there will be a large kitchen 17 by 23 and a class or committee room.

In the rear this floor will be on a level with Farrington street, and provision is made for an entrance. Stairs will also lead up to the stage above. Other rooms and conveniences are provided and the whole will make a very efficient and beautiful church plant.

Frederick H. Bishop opened the meeting with a report of the parish house committee appointed by the church. He stated that the committee had gone into the project at length for a building not only for the present society but with the idea of looking many years ahead.

The plans were for a building on the land already owned by the society and would be a practical continuation of the present church structure. The time was ripe, overripe for definite, positive action for quarters to carry on the society. It was a duty we owed our young people and the children coming on.

The plans and elevation of the proposed structure were thrown on the screen and explained by Charles T. Baker, a member of the committee. Plans were by Edwin C. Lewis of Boston, the architect of the original church building.

If the project is successful it is hoped to complete the parish house by November, 1914, in time for the winter church activities.

THE MAN WITH TWINKLE IN EYE

Address at Ladies Night of Bethany Brotherhood

Bethany Brotherhood, the Men's club of Bethany Congregational church, observed ladies' night on Wednesday evening with a largely attended banquet at 7 o'clock in the dining room of the church.

Frank W. Crane, the president, welcomed the guests, and for an hour all enjoyed the menu served by Burleigh & Martin.

The speakers of the evening were President Crane, Rev. Clarence L. Vincent, D. D., of Washington, D. C. and Rev. Benjamin A Willmott, pastor of the church The addresses were interspersed with skillfully executed violin solos by Roscoe R. Ricker, who was accompanied by Dr. W. P. Pratt; delightful bass solos by James S. Whyte each calling for two or three encores.

Dr. Vincet's subject was "The man with a twinkle in his eye." He complimented the ladies at the outset, saying that none looked older than a year ago, while the men looked sweeter. A man with a twinkle in his eye is an optimist. There are three classes of persons in the world, he said: those brought up in a flower garden; those brought up in a mine, and those in the medium who have had the double vision. The man who believes in a future has thought deeply and wisely and that man will show it. The mother's influence and the teachers' influence are great. Everyone has his struggles in life, in business and elsewhere, but he needs optimism. It is needed in the church. The man who sees far and wisely is an optimist. Such organizations as the W. C. T. U. are far sighted optimists.

The man with a twinkle in his eye is often a woman. There is something about a real woman, the element of womanhood which is so much needed now because young women are so thoughtless of the future. We should not only train our children but the mass of children in the community.

Faith is absolutely necessary to keep the twinkle in a man's eye. We must have confidence in human nature. Profit by history, by literature by great poetry. In your own life be an optimist. You can find in the Master supreme comfort and hope.

Upon motion of Rev. Mr. Willmott a vote of thanks was extended to Rev. Dr. Vincent.

"The Rivals" Presented With Great Success By Well Known Ladies

Mrs. Arthur Whittam Takes Part of Sir Anthony Absolute

"Any thing that's worth doing, is worth doing well," seems to be the motto of the Wollaston Woman's club. Wednesday's demonstration of what they can do in the way of theatricals was not a surprise to club members and their friends, because they have learned to expect big things from these ladies, but it certainly was a great pleasure to the audience, who were enthusiastic in their praise of the production and generous in their applause.

The performance of "The Rivals," Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy in five acts, which is the old favorite for all theater goers, was the play chosen by the ladies of this club for their first venture, and the noted English dramatist himself, if he were alive, would have been delighted at the manner in which his lines were rendered. The spirit of 1775, with the exact costumes for that date, showed that the players had studied their history as well as their lines.

The cast of characters was as follows:—

Sir Anthony Absolute	Mrs. Arthur Whittam
Capt. Jack Absolute	Mrs. George Fleming
Faulkland	Mrs. Jesse I. Litchfield
Bob Acres	Miss Theodora A. Luard
Sir Lucius O'Trigger	Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney
Fag	Mrs. Oscar A. Blaisdell
David	Mrs. Frank A. Emery
Mrs. Malaprop	Mrs. Charles T. Baker
Lydia Languish	Mrs. Charles E. Sweet
Lucy	Mrs. Ralph W. Oldham

Mrs. Arthur Whittam, who took the part of Sir Anthony Absolute, had a true conception of her part and put into it all the shades and lights of a domineering, unreasonable, whimsical, yet loving father. There was no end of vim in her acting and it called forth frequent applause.

Mrs. George Fleming, as Capt. Jack Absolute, made a captivating, dignified soldier. She carried herself throughout the piece with military exactness and made an especial hit in the duel scene.

Mrs. Jesse I. Litchfield, as Faulkland, gave a true interpretation of the jealous lover and made a dashing handsome squire.

Miss Theodora A. Luard was indeed pleasing in the part of "Bob Acres," the rollicking, happy youth, who later in the play tries to defend his honor when the necessity for such action is suggested to him. The part was a hard one and Miss Luard made a great deal of it.

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, as Sir Lucius O'Trigger, with a gentle Irish brogue, was capital. Miss Luard, and she had many scenes together and each one was the complement to the other. They added an element of real merriment to the play.

Mrs. Oscar Blaisdell, as Fag, Capt. Jack's servant, carried herself with ease and grace and added little touches of brightness to the play.

Mrs. Frank A. Emery, as David, the faithful servant of Bob Acres, did clever acting Her make-up was funny. She succeeded in her character portrayal and put a great deal of dramatic intensity into her part.

Mrs. Charles T. Baker, as Mrs. Malaprop, looked and acted the part exceedingly well. She gave her lines clearly so that Mrs. Malaprop's twisted expressions were not lost upon the audience, and while she was truly funny, her work was never overdrawn.

Mrs. Charles E. Sweet, as Lydia Languish was spirited and yet sufficiently adorable to please her audience. Capt. Jack and she had some well-acted scenes together.

Mrs. Ralph Oldham, made a win-

In the death of N. B. Furnald, Quincy loses another useful and esteemed member of the good old Yankee race which appears to be rapidly thinning out hereabouts. It is undeniable that the sturdy stock whose forbears established this Nation are not holding their own in the matter of numbers, much though is to be deplored. But there is some consolation in the fact that those who are coming in to take their places are on the average good and desirable people. Quincy has nothing to complain of so far as the immigration problem is concerned when it is considered what other communities have to contend with.

If reports be true, a certain publisher has grown tired of literary work and will henceforth devote all his time and energy to selling goods. But there will be no dearth of journalism in Quincy. The newspaper which has borne the heat and burden of nearly three decades will continue to report all the legitimate news and incidentally furnish a medium of satisfactory publicity for all who have wares or other things to bring to the attention of the public. It is to be hoped that from now on the merchants of Quincy, including the gentleman referred to will see the justice and wisdom of patronizing the paper which stands by Quincy, her people, her industries and all her interests.

To properly enforce the ordinances relating to the collection and storage of junk requires considerable of what is called the judicial temperament. The men who constitute the Board of Health must be vigilant and fearless just so far as the exercise of those qualities is needed to safeguard the health of the community, and no further. They must be careful not to unduly handicap the pedlers who are engaged in the praiseworthy task of supporting their families. In other words they are expected to possess and exercise good judgment and enforce the law not vindictively but in the spirit of fairness. The junk dealers should understand that the authorities are not their enemies but that no chances can be taken when the health of the community is involved.

ADVERTISING FRAUDS.

"Printers' Ink" gives a list of nineteen states that already have laws against advertising frauds. In the early stages of this movement the newspapers were rather skeptical about its practicability. It seemed as if the big producers could escape through the astuteness of their lawyears, while small dealers might suffer where there was no wilful intent to deceive.

Most publishers would like to print a clean sheet of business announcements. But they can't run to earth every fraud that seeks publicity in their columns. Their business is the collecting and printing of news. If they spent their time on detective work, the public would not care for their newspapers.

Publishers, however, would be glad could some responsible agency assume the responsibility of weeding out fraudulent advertising. The newspaper gains nothing by such advertising in the long run. Every dollar that is paid to fakes and frauds is a dollar drawn from the channels of legitimate trade. If it went into the hands of those who supply the necessaries of life, the publishers would get their share.

The worst offenders in the matter of advertising frauds are a certain class of daily newspapers in the large cities. Quack healers who claim to cure everything from blindness to cancer, Wall street tipsters who could make millions themselves if their little gambling guesses proved true, all these get all the space wanted and no questions asked, if they can show up the price.

Retail advertising is the cleanest and whitest in existence. Retail merchants know that a false advertisement is a boomerang. It hurts not merely the one who inserts is, but the whole business community. The man who should persist in such statements would soon find himself an outlaw in retail trade.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Fore River Dredging Project Is Endorsed

In the absence of President Hamilton, Vice President Sedgwick presided at the meeting of the Board of Trade on Wednesday evening.

The first business of the evening was the election of new members and the following were elected to membership: William L. Buckley, Francis Morrison, Adelbert L. Hudson, Dr. Eugene D. Whitehouse, Peter L. Litchfield and Edward P. Powers.

STATE DELEGATE.

President John L. Hamilton was elected as delegate to the State Board of Trade for three years.

TELEPHONE SERVICE.

A request was received from the Associated Boards of Trade of Norfolk county to send two delegates to a meeting to consider the matter of the abolishment of four and six party lines by the Telephone Co.

William H. Teasdale stated that some time ago numerous meetings on this same matter were held and that the matter of abolishing this class of service was duly considered, and it was understood that nothing further was to be done by the Telephone Co. about the matter. He was in favor of continuing this class of service although he had been urged by the company to change over to a two party limited service which would cost more than he was now paying.

After some little further discussion Walter E. Piper and John O. Hall were appointed as delegates.

FORE RIVER DREDGING.

Dock Commissioner Crane spoke of what he had been trying to accomplish in the way of dredging the Weymouth Fore river on the upper side of the Point bridge. He had succeeded in having a survey for an eighteen foot channel ordered but what was wanted was a 24 foot channel to accommodate the large vessels going to the shipyard. This would cost $309,000 and the support of the Board of Trade was needed to help along the project.

The following motion was then adopted:

"The Quincy Board of Trade through its waterway committee have thoroughly investigated the matter of the improvement of the Weymouth Fore river to a depth of 24 feet, and feel that this improvement is a matter of vital importance to our city, and means much to our merchants. We hereby express our desire that the matter be given consideration, and re-examination and the secretary is instructed to forward copies of this motion to Col. Traighill the United States Disrict officer at Boston and to the Water Front Commissioner of the City of Quincy."

POST OFFICE CIVIL SERVICE.

The question of the Board endorsing the so called Hamill civil service bill for the pensioning of post office employees came up. The board of directors reported that after examining the bill they were of the opinion that section 5, was too broad and should not be endorsed.

Postmaster Hammond spoke at length on the matter. He said that while the first draft of the bill as was usual in such cases was broad there would doubtless be many amendments before it was finally passed. The matter of pensions was one that was being generally agitated. As it is now when a man gets too old to work and provide for himself he is helped by the city, and we call it charity He was not pleading for himself but for those that would come after him. If he had been assessed five percent of his earnings since he started in to work he would never live long enough to take up what he paid in. Today when a man reaches the age of fifty or fifty-five years he is not wanted and finds it difficult to find employment of any kind. Yet do we ever consider what he has been worth to the nation? Can its value be placed? We must look at this matter in a broad way. We must care for these old men who have been faithful and have done their best. What difference does it make if you give him a pension or if you give him charity? The question of pensions is one that is now coming to the front and is bound to come.

Ex-Mayor Stone believed the plan of pensioning a good one. He did not believe any man would give up his job for the sake of receiving a small pension.

Andrew Milne said that the directors were opposed to the broadness of the bill, especially section 5. We have have got to draw the line somewhere. These men are well paid. No corporation pays for anything so broad as this proposes.

William Kenyon thought that the matter should not be endorsed without some consideration, and he suggested a committee to go into the matter and report at a later meeting. As he understood it, the Board of Directors only heard one side of the question, and Mr. Hammond should be allowed to explain to them.

The question was then referred to the committee on public service, for consideration.

BOY SCOUTS.

W. F. Hodgkinson, Jr., was then introduced and spoke for half an hour on the work of the Boy Scouts. The Boy Scout movement he said had passed the experimental stage. He gave a brief history of the movement which started at the time Gen. Baden Powell returned from the Boer war. At that time Ernest Thompson Seaton had organized what was called the Seasto Indians. He traced the movement from that time until the movement was finally launched in this country. We want to get all good men interested in this movement. The object of the Boy Scouts first of all is character building. To try and make the boys neat and obedient.

He spoke of the National headquarters in New York city and the State headquarters in Boston. The Greater Boston division was divided into nine councils, and Quincy was in the ninth district. What was needed in Quincy was a group of men to act as a local committee, to pass on matters that came up.

He told what a boy must do to become a Scout, and the oath which he must memorize, the principle of which was, on his honor, to do his duty to God and to himself. He must be truthful, loyal and helpful. He must do one good turn to someone every day. A friend to all and a brother to every Scout. Conscientious, kind, obedient, cheerful and thrifty. What we are trying to do is to make the movement self supporting.

He outlined the twelve points of law governing the Scouts. Speaking of the Quincy Scouts he said there was no better equipped troop in the state than in Quincy. We have tents to accommodate 40, and two scout wagons. He also cited incidents that had come under his own personal observation where boys that were habitual truants had been brought under the influence of the Scouts and what it had done for them.

County Commissioner Merrill spoke of the truancy school at Walpole and said that those committed to the school from Quincy had been falling off and he liked to think that it was the work of the Scouts. It was so all over the country for where the number of boys in the school had been from 70 to 75 it was now 45 to 48. It was a grand good thing if it would reduce the number of boys in the truancy school.

Mr. Hodgkinson spoke of his work in breaking up what was known as the Keating corner gang which was one of the toughest gang of boys in the city. They were now members of the Scouts and were doing well. The movement is growing very fast, and the time is coming soon when we will have buildings of our own and it will not be long before we will overtake the Y. M. C. A. It was not financial support which he was asking for the Scouts but moral support.

It was then voted that the President be empowered to appoint a committee of three members as a Scout Committee for the Boy Scouts of Quincy.

MOSQUITO PEST.

William N. Kenyon asked what was being done in regard to the mosquito pest. He believed that the Board of Trade or the city should make an appropriation toward this end. If the citizens are willing to supply the material for spraying ponds and breeding places the city should furnish the labor to do the spraying. For $20 last year Squantum was practically ridded of the mosquito, and this year the Squantum association intended to appropriate $50 for the work. He also spoke about circulars on the House fly and mosquito that were being distributed by some cities and thought some such circular should be sent out in Quincy.

Mr. Hodgkinson offered the use of Boy Scouts in distributing the circulars.

The matter was referred to the Committee on Civic Improvement for investigation, with power to act.

The meeting then adjourned.

—There never was a time of greater need in the Department of State of the United States of America of a clear head, experienced in international relations, knowing the fine shades of distinction between executive acts on foreign soil authorized by law and executive acts that may be usurpations of power and consequently border on the impeachable.—New York Sun.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

Two recent books on Mexico have lately been added to the Library for those who wish to study the history of that country during the last twenty years.

The first "A busy time in Mexico" by H. B. C. Pollard, is an unconventional account of the author's adventures in various parts of Mexico. His first experience is a trip to the ranch of a gang of outlaws, who owed money to the company in which he was employed. He got the money, to the surprise of his chief, whose three preceding messengers had been murdered by the outlaws. Later Mr. Pollard joins an exploring expedition, and spends some time in the jungle, where his accounts of the life and customs of the natives makes very interesting reading. Life in Mexico city, among the Indians and peons, the strange foods and beverages a visit to the Aztec ruins, a fox chase, and an exciting adventure with a bull fighter in a typical Mexican restaurant are among the strange and amusing incidents of his stay in the country.

The latter half of the book is given over to Mexican history from the dawn of the revolution against Diaz to the seizing of the presidency by Huerta. One very interesting paragraph discusses the possible results of a war between Mexico and the United States. How good a prophet this Englishman will prove seems about to be tested.

The second book is not written in the popular vein of Mr. Pollard. "Mexico the land of Unrest," by Henry Baerlein deals largely with President Diaz's administration. It is an exhaustive study of local conditions and lack of political honesty that will show Americans the reason that Mexico the "land of unrest" all the time.

CIVIC LEAGUE.

At the last meeting of the School Committee, the North American Civic league for Immigrants was granted the use of the office of the old Adams school for the purpose of maintaining evening office hours for its work among the immigrant population. This league whose organization is non-sectarian and yet composed of all creeds and denominations will do work of a helpful nature among all nationalities, and will be supplementary to the work which the city evening school system is already doing. It will have the assistance of workers who speak the tongues prominently represented in Quincy, and these workers will be of great help in bringing their fellow countrymen toward citizenship. Any who are interested in this phase of social work should obtain the recent report of the Commission on Immigration just forwarded to the Legislature.

HIGH SCHOOL PROGRAMME.

Next week the superintendent of schools will begin a series of meeting in the various schools of the city for the purpose of explaining the High school course of study, and assisting the graduates and their parents make a proper choice. The graduating class of the present year will be of about the same size as last year, and will send about 400 pupils o nto higher schools. As the new Industrial School will take 36 of these graduates, the High school in all probability will be no larger than it is the present year.

MASS. FIELDS SCHOOL.

The annual meeting of the Parent Teachers' Association will be held on Thursday evening, May 14, at eight o'clock. Election of officers, refreshments and a grand good time.

Penny packages of seeds, flowers and vegetables were purchased b ythe children last week, to the number of 1150, which should result in a large number of home gardens.

WOLLASTON SCHOOL.

The May meeting of the Parent-Teachers' Association will be held on Monday evening, May 11, at eight o'clock. Addresses by Rev. George M. Bailey on "A plus B equals X" and Rev. Isaiah Sneath on "Our muutal relations." These speakers are worthy of a large attendance. Plan on being present to hear them. Election of officers. Candy for sale to help the treasurer balance the books for the year.

Already over $300 have been pledged for the supervised playground.

During the past week 1380 penny packages of flower and vegetable seeds have been purchased by the pupils for home gardens. In addition to the regular prizes offered by the Quincy Womans' club, the Wollaston Woman's Club is to give some special prizes to Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools.

WASHINGTON SCHOOL.

Councilman Elijah P. Barrows, president of the Parent-Teachers Association of the Washington school, lectured on Florida at the final meeting of the year in the school corridor Wednesday evening. Mr. Barrows formerly resided there and discussed in an interesting way the soil, climate, crops and land grants. Music was by the pupils of the eighth grade. The proposed addition to the school was informally discussed. There was a fair attendance.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

The average daily attendance at the public schools of the city for the month of April was 5,654, an increase from 5,267 in April 1913. The Lincoln led in percentage, the Cranch had the least number of tardinesses, only one; and the Lincoln the fewest dismissals. The report follows:

FAME.

What's fame? A fancied life in others' breath,
A thing beyond us, e'en before our death.
Just what you hear, you have; and what's unknown
The same (my lord) if Tully's or your own.
All that we feel of it begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside, as much an empty shade
A Eugene living as a Caesar dead;
Alike or when or where they shone or shine,
Or on the Rubicon or on the Rhine.
A wit's a feather and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God.
Fame but from death a villain's name can save
As justice tears his body from the grave;
When what to oblivion better were resigned
Is hung on high, to poison half mankind.
All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart;
One self approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid starers and of loud huzzas;
And more true joy Marcellus exiled feels
Than Caesar with a senate at his heels.

—Alexander Pope.

CAN YOU DOUBT IT?

When the Proof Can Be So Easily Investigated.

When so many grateful citizens of Quincy testify to benefit derived from Doan's Kidney Pills, can you doubt the evidence? The proof is not far away—it is almost at your door. Read what a resident of Quincy says about Doan's Kidney Pills. Can you demand more convincing testimony?

William Farquharson, Jr., 25 Bennington St., Quincy, Mass., says: "I had severe pains in my back and my kidneys were weak. I didn't know what to take until someone recommended Doan's Kidney Pills. I used only part of a box and they completely relieved the pains."

The above statement must carry conviction to the mind of every reader. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Farquharson had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

There was a harmony of color on the stage, each costume blended with the other and thus added to the picturesqueness of the tableaux.

There were present about 235 guests besides club members.

The program committee had charge of the theatricals, and that committee is composed of Mrs. C. R. Safford, chairman; Mrs. Edward Badger, Mrs. W. Dean Sanford, Miss Theodora A. Luard, Miss Hattie Turner, Miss Fannie Johnson and Mrs. Eugene H. Sprague.

The play was under the direction of Miss Luard, who worked hard, and is to be congratulated upon the results. Mrs Herbert J. Gurney was the coach, and had the satisfaction of seeing a finished production.

The ladies of the industrial and social committee sold candy during the performance, the proceeds from their sales are to go for charitable purposes. This committee has done good work during the year in the way of relieving distress in needy families in Wollaston.

Cars were waiting at the door after the play, to take the club women and their guests to their homes.

This club which, has not yet rounded out its first year under the leadership of Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, has proved that it is a body of determined women with great ability to do and dare. They edited and got an edition of a club newspaper which was a credit to their business ability as well as their intellectual qualities. We hear of splendid work in the line of helpful, quiet charity which they are accomplishing in their end of the city, and the success of Wednesday's theatricals show that we may look forward with pleasure to next year's theatricals by the Wollaston Woman's club.

THE PROBLEM OF IMMIGRATION IN MASSACHUSETTS

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON IMMIGRATION

The welfare of State and Immigrant are inseparably linked. The State must safeguard its own interests by promoting the welfare of the immigrant population. This in brief is the note struck by the report of the Commission on Immigration which has just been presented to the Legislature.

The Report is a comprehensive pamphlet of some 200 pages. Here are some of the findings and recommendations:

Employment Agencies.

The immigrant when he first tries to get work, is entirely dependent on the private employment agent, whose interests often conflict with those both of the immigrant and of the community.

The Massachusetts law regulating licensed employment agencies is woefully inadequate; moreover, the immigrant frequently deals with agents who are unlicensed and, therefore, entirely irresponsible. He is sent to do jobs which do not exist or are not the kind they are represented to be; he is often overcharged when work is furnished him. Furthermore, the foreman in a mill or factory frequently charges the newly arrived immigrant $10.00-$25.00 for a job, and then under threat of discharge collects from him again and again. (p. 40.) A single illustrative example from among the many quoted must suffice.

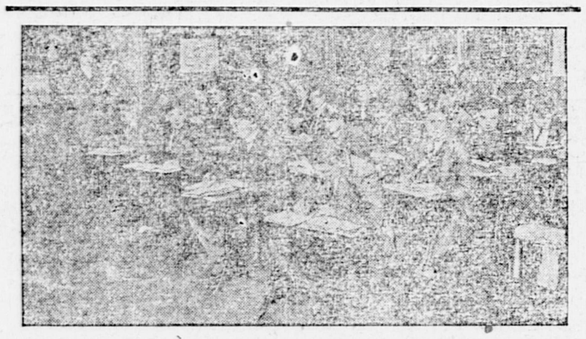
Example of Imposition.

Last June several Russians were offered by an employment agency, work in the woods as sawyers. They were given an address in Kineo, Maine; taken to the station and sent to Calumet, Michigan, where they were expected to work in the copper mines. It was only with difficulty that they effected their escape. These were but a few out of more than two hundred Russians and Poles sent to Calumet last summer by two Boston agencies. How many knew their destination cannot be said. (pp. 43-44.)

Massachusetts Needs the Farm.

Of the immigrants who came to Massachusetts in the year 1911-12, more than 1-4 — in the case of Poles and Lithuanians, at least ½—had been farm laborers. Many of these men, though they must begin by a job in the city or town, look forward to a return to the land and begin at once to save up for that purpose. For example a Ruthenian farmer and his wife are now working in a Massachusetts cotton factory, buoyed up by the hope that they will be able to go back to Galicia and live on a farm. He could buy land much more cheaply in this country but he knows nothing of farm opportunities in Massachusetts. Yet immigrant farmers in this state are often successful and progressive; their labor makes the community more prosperous and the neighboring farms more valuable. They become permanent settlers, owners of property and contributors to the development of agriculture in their section.

In view of such abuses, the Commission recommends that the Private Employment Agency law in Massachusetts should be brought up to the standard of the laws of other states; that the supervision of these offices be given to the Board of Labor and Industries, and that the state free employment agencies be provided with interpreters and otherwise equipped to handle immigrant labor. (p. 446.)



CLASS OF ILLITERATES, 16 TO 24 YEARS OF AGE—"ONLY BY EDUCATION CAN IMMIGRANTS BE PREPARED FOR THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF CITIZENSHIP.—TO SPEAK ENGLISH AND UNDERSTAND IT IS THE VITAL NEED OF THE IMMIGRANT—WITHOUT IT ASSIMILATION IS IMPOSSIBLE."—From Report of Commission on Immigrants.

SAFEGUARDING IMMIGRANT SAVINGS—IT SEEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE REGULATION OF IMMIGRANT BANKS AND BANKERS IN MASSACHUSETTS IS SUFFICIENT IN THEORY AND WELL ENFORCED IN PRACTICE—Immigration Comsion's Report.

A MONA LISA OF THE IMMIGRANTS—"THE ARRIVAL OF FROM 70,000 TO 100,000 NEWCOMERS IN MASSACHUSETTS EACH YEAR, MOST OF WHOM ARE UNABLE TO SPEAK ENGLISH, AND CONSEQUENTLY IF NEGLECTED OR IGNORED, ARE SUBJECT TO THE ABUSES, THE MISDIRECTION, THE PREJUDICES OF EXPLOITERS AND IRRESPONSIBLE AGITATORS, CANNOT BUT STRAIN THE SOCIAL FABRIC TO THE BREAKING POINT."—From Report of Commission on Immigration.

The Immigrant on the Land.

Because a slow movement from the town to the land is going on, many people believe the problem is solving itself. But for everyone who succeeds there are many more who might do so if a little help were given. And the agricultural development of Massachusetts requires their labor. Much of the uncultivated land in the eastern part of the State could produce grapes under the painstaking cultivation of the Italian as profitably as lands in the western part have produced tobacco and onions, when owned by Polish farmers. But it is practically impossible for the immigrant to obtain reliable information concerning farm lands in Massachusetts.

As a first step, the Commonwealth should undertake a scientific "exploration" of the farm lands of the State. This information should be passed on, in his own language, to the immigrant who needs it, by some one in whom he has confidence

The Commission believes that this could be done with very little expense and with great value to the State by a specially qualified person under the direction of the State Board of Immigration described below.

Immigrant Banks.

The only protection given those who use immigrant banks to deposit or transmit money is the bond approved in character and amount by the Bank Commissioner. This in some cases is as low as $500.00. No capital or reserve is required. There is no regulation of investments or loans; yet these banks, during the year 1912, sent abroad over $7,000,000.00 (p. 178.)

The frequent results of such lack of control may be illustrated by a typical instance. Last June an Italian disappeared from Lawrence, leaving claims estimated at about $8000. His assets were worth perhaps $150; in addition he had given a personal bond for $2500, whose value was uncertain at the time of the investigation. (p. 184.)

Beside efficient control of immigrant bankers, the Commission recommends especially that schools and other public agencies aid in spreading information about postal savings banks. In several towns the deposits made by immigrants in these banks in 1912 were estimated by the postmasters to be over 90% of the entire amounts received; in Lowell, on the other hand, only 6% of the total deposits were credited to foreigners, indicating that in this as in many other places, postal savings banks are little understood by them.

The Immigrant in the Courts.

It is frequently stated that with increase of immigrants comes increase of crime. The Massachusetts Commission finds no ground for this belief. On the contrary, it finds that the conclusion of the Federal Commission on Immigration holds in general for Massachusetts. "Such statistics as it has been possible to obtain indicate that immigrants are less prone to crime than are native Americans." (p. 100.) It further shows that of foreigners committed the proportion from English-speaking countries is more than three times as great as from non-English-speaking countries. (p. 101). Moreover, the non-English speaking criminal is not always sure to get justice in court proceedings because of the incompetence and frequent corruptness of the interpreters. (p. 108.) The employment of official interpreters and of public defenders is advised in order to teach respect for the law. "The results of the immigrants's first direct contact with the law will do much to influence his future in America."

The Immigrant Parent.

Attention is called to the unfortunate relation often existing between immigrant parents and their children. When no effort is made by the schools to reach the parents directly, they are forced to depend upon their children's interpretation of what is right or wrong, necessary or unnecessary in America. Intelligent persons are realizing the danger in this situation and finding in it an explanation of the fact that crime and delinquency are commoner among the "second generation" than among their parents. This reversal of the relationships of parent and child means an inevitable breaking down of parental control.

"For this reason we need very carefully worked out plans for teaching respect for the virtues that these immigrant parents possess. Proper emphasis should also be given to the contributions that Russia, Italy, Austria and other countries have made to the literature, art or political history of the United States:—while we educate the children along American lines, we must not destroy the traditions around which their whole family life is built."

Recognizing that methods of adult education have been little studied, the commission advises that normal schools should make a special study of the subject. It also recommends that lectures in the various foreign languages shall be given so as to inform the immigrant about labor laws, sanitary regulations, and other things that he needs to know as soon as he reaches the country. English classes for mothers, as well as for older men, are included among the important educational recommendations.

Naturalization.

The United States statutes give the right of naturalization to any United States District Court or to any State court of record. The Massachusetts legislature, however, has limited the rights of inferior courts so that the number of naturalization courts in that State is smaller than in most This involves much expense and inconvenience. One man had to pay his two witnesses each $5.00 a day for two days in addition to the carfare to Boston and the loss of two days' work for himself—a total of over $20.00. (p. 155.) It is not surprising that few of his countrymen can afford to be naturalized.

To meet these difficulties the commission recommends that naturalization courts should sit on certain evenings and on Saturday afternoons, so that working men may attend with the loss of little or no working time.

Permanent Immigration Board.

The complexity of the situation can be only dimly pictured by the ordinary citizen. In one little town of but 7000 inhabitants are twenty-one different nationalities with as many different languages, backgrounds, standards, ideals. A condition similiar though less extreme exists in many towns and cities. The problems which come with this complex population have never been paralleled in the world's history; they can not be properly solved without profound, continuous and practical study of the needs of the new comers. Such study and service can be given only by a Board whose first interest is in this matter—a Board which is not overburdened, as are all our existing Boards, with other duties. Such a Board giving continuous attention to this subject, would be able to offer from time to time the expert advice of which the State, local communities, and social agencies are so much in need. It would gather information that would be available to such newspapers and public-spirited citizens as would use it. It would form the treasury from which could be drawn resources for this great intellectual struggle.

Such a Board would also provide for certain definite needs of the immigrant. Many of these, such as education, employment, and so on, can be met by existing agencies when suitably extended and modified. But there is no agency which attends to the complex and difficult problems that arise at the docks and while the immigrant is in transit through the State; there is no authority which can investigate complaints; there is none which can make connection between the needs of the immigrant and the rich civic, social and philanthropic resources of the community. There is no provision for aiding both State and immigrant by giving needed information to those desiring to settle upon the land. Above all there is no provision for giving to the bewildered immigrant that intelligent, sympathetic, disinterested advice of which he often stands so much in need and which would come from the State with an impressive authority.

The Commission accordingly recommends the creation of a State Board of Immigration, which shall perform these duties.

Immediate Action.

This report makes obvious the necessity of immediate action to safeguard alike the State and the immigrant. Scarcely had it been presented to the legislature when a meeting of public spirited citizens was called in Boston to consider how the legislative action recommended by the commission could be furthered.

A committee was formed under the chairmanship of Henry S. Dennison, which is to be completed by representative citizens from all parts of the State and from all walks of life.

The first hearing was on the proposal to create a permanent Immigration Board; it was held on April 3d at the State House, before the Legislative Committee on Social Welfare. There was no opposition, but numerous speakers in favor of the bill.

But it must not be overlooked that the passage of such an important measure will be secured only by a state-wide demand. Every patriotic citizen, therefore, has a duty to perform and should interest himself to the end that wise legislation may be obtained upon this vital matter.

SPORT NEWS

The police team, at the last minute changed its mind and didn't trot across to Old Colony playground Wednesday afternoon to cross bats with the Adams Market clerks because of the poor condition of the field. Another game will be arranged. The latter is desirous of meeting any team in the city.

The Adams and Massachusetts Fields schools did not play their opening game in the National league schedule on Wednesday afternoon at the Ward Three playground on account of the wet grounds.

Quincy High will entertain Milton High at Merrymount Park on Saturday afternoon and the following Wednesday will take on the Hingham High at Merrymount.

The Campello team of the Trolley league dissapointed the Quincy team by not appearing this morning to play the game postponed last Tuesday because of rain. Their failure to be on hand was probably due to a misunderstanding. The game has been called off until June 9 when Quincy goes to Brockton. Two five inning contests on that day will be played and counted as full games.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL LEAGUE

Opening Games at Merrymount and South Quincy

Two games opened the season of the Grammar school league on Wednesday won by the Washingtons and the Gridley Bryants.

AT MERRYMOUNT.

The Quincy school and Washington school met at Merrymount park accompanied by many pupils from both schools and the principals Charles Sampson and T. B Pollard. The Quincys opened with two runs in the first inning and it looked for a while as though they would be winners, but in the fourth the score was tied, and in the fifth Washington batted Spinney almost out of the box for a total of five runs. The score by innings:

Washingtons	1 0 1 0 5 0—7
Quincys	2 0 0 1 0 0—3

GRIDLEY'S WIN.

The Gridley Bryants beat the Coddington in the opening game of the National grammar school league on the Old Colony grounds Water street, Wednesday afternoon, 14 to 3. The first four innings both teams played good baseball, but in the fifth the Coddingtons blew up and the Gridleys got seven runs.

Puddles of water dotted the field and the outer garden was soft and soggy. A deep pool which formed in front of the grand stand resulted in wet feet for many of the large numbers of children that attended the game.

O'Connell, the winning pitcher, had the Coddingtons at his mercy, and Corella, his catcher, caught a good game and did good work with the stick. "Cream" Geddes, the losing pitcher, as not in midseason form and the loose playing of his team mates at times was discouraging. "Reef" Fostello was on the receiving end. The score:

Gridley	1 0 1 2 7 3—14

Batteries—O'Connell and Corella; Geddes and Fostello.

TO MOVE HIS ARMY INLAND

HAS FREE HAND AT VERA CRUZ

Relied Upon to Take All Necessary Measures to Protect Water Supply —Mexicans Anticipate Possible American Advance Upon Capital—Administration Believes Plan of Action Providing For New Regime In Mexico Will Be Submitted to Rebels After Huerta Is Conquered—Wilson Not Hurrying In Choice of Delegates to Peace Parley

Washington, May 7.—Orders were sent by the war department giving General Funston authority to extend his lines from Vera Cruz as far as he considers necessary. This gives Funston a free hand in dealing with the situation in Vera Cruz. It is said the army lines will be pushed inland and fortifications thrown up at once. Funston has about 7500 men, and the federals have about 10,000 outside Vera Cruz.

That Mexican troops in the vicinity of Vera Cruz are anticipating a possible American advance on Mexico City was indicated by Funston's dispatches. He declared the Mexicans are making concentration at various points along the railroad, "to guard the road in case we advance." His dispatch, however, did not indicate any belief that these soldiers would make an aggressive move on Vera Cruz. Funston confirmed reports that Mexicans were tearing up the tracks of the Interoceanic railroad.

Funston reported a scarcity of food supplies from the west, although he said food was reaching the city both from the north and from Tejar on the south.

Although Secretary Garrison declined to tell what orders he has issued to Funston, he clearly indicated that he has given Funston discretionary authority, and that he relies on Funston to take all necessary measures—even to extending his lines—to insure safety of the Tejar water supply.

Relying Upon Rebels

The United States is relying upon the constitutionalists to save the Mexican situation. Both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan believe that long before any acceptable plan of mediation can be arrived at the rebels will have driven Huerta from power and will hold Mexico City.

Then, they believe, the A. B. C. mediators can submit to the conquerers a plan of action which will provide for a new regime in Mexico, a legally elected president and congress, and strong support from without in crushing any rebellion, until the new government is firmly established.

Because of this fact the administration was pleased with the announcement that the formal sessions of the mediators will not commence until May 18, in Niagara Falls. Villa has assured George D. Carothers, representative of the state department with the constitutionalists, that he will have possession of Saltillo, Tampico and San Luis Potosi within the next ten days.

Occupation of these cities would absolutely clinch the hold of the rebels in the north. It would open to them two direct routes to Mexico City, so that a speedy conquest of the capital would be possible.

Rebels May Quarrel

The one obstacle to this, however, may be a break in the ranks of the constitutionalists themselves. Villa continues to assert his friendliness for the United States. He has convinced the administration that under no circumstances will he or the men he can control join any movement against the Americans.

Notwithstanding this the constitutionalist junta here and high officials of the diplomatic corps have been hearing of serious quarrels between Villa and the other leaders of the revolution.

If a break does come in the rebel camp, those in touch with the situation here believe it will mean another revolution in the north and in all probability a juncture of one faction with Huerta.

Looking For Diplomats

Meanwhile the president is seeking three experienced diplomats to represent this country at the Niagara Falls conference. While it is admitted, with Carranza and the constitutionalists not participating, only meagre results can be hoped for by mediation, the administration is confident that by the time the envoys get down to business the constitutionalists will control so much territory that Huerta will be willing to eliminate himself. Then, if their hopes are justified, the administration heads would be in position to urge through their representatives that the federals can be influenced to make peace and end the revolution at once.

Administration officials have a single definite plan founded on hopes and promises made, and will not change it unless forced. This hope was greatly enhanced by the defiant letter sent General Maas by General Villa when the former asked help to attack Funston. Villa insisted that Huerta wanted a foreign war to save himself, and declared the constitutionalists will continue to fight until they have driven Huerta from power.

To Proceed Without Carranza

The mediators will leave here May 14 to arrange preliminaries for their opening sessions on the following Monday. The party, including secretaries, stenographers and other officials, will number about fifteen, not including the United States and Huerta delegates, and those of Carranza, should he finally come into the deliberations.

It was authoritatively stated that reports that the mediators were trying to get Carranza to reconsider his attitude and come into the conference are not correct. Their position ence are not correct.

Changes In Mexico

While interest in diplomatic developments overshadowed all other features of the international situation, changes in Mexico were not overlooked. Numerous reports stated that the federals were mining railway tracks between Mexico City and the east coast. Huerta was said to recognize the menace of Villa's army in the north and the chance of a Zapatista attack from the south.

Bombs for use against both these leaders are being turned out in the federal arsenals. While Zapata's reported threat to attack Mexico City did not materialize, it served to renew interest in the possibility that Zapata may emerge as a figure to be reckoned with in future happenings. The reported agrarian policies of the Zapatistas are said to be scarcely consonant with Carranza's political program.

Renewal of inconclusive fighting for possession of Tampico was reported by Rear Admiral Mayo. The investing rebels were said to have received additional artillery, and reports persisted that Villa would take personal charge of the attack.

ON FOREIGN CRUISER

Rooms For Some "High Mexican Official" Have Been Reserved

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 7.—It is reported that quarters have been held for several days on board a foreign cruiser in the harbor here for some "high Mexican official" coming down from the Mexican capital.

There is a persistent but unconfirmed report that preparations have been made to afford a refuge for General Huerta or General Blanquet, or both.

It is said that Huerta's efforts to facilitate the exit of Americans from Mexico City have been in part, at least, inspired by his anxiety to keep the road open for himself, should he decide to "jump."

DEFEAT IS DECISIVE

Blease Has No Show of Winning Senate Seate From Smith

Columbia, S. C., May 7.—Practically complete reports from the convention held in the forty-four counties of South Carolina indicate that the supporters of United States Senator Smith will have a large majority in the Democratic state convention here on May 20.

Unofficial reports place the number of delegates who are avowedly supporting Governor Blease in his contest for the Democratic nomination for United States senator against Smith at between forty and sixty, while between 250 and 275 delegates are said to be for Smith.

BECOMES WHITE HOUSE BRIDE

Miss Wilson United In Marriage to Secretary McAdoo

CEREMONY IN BLUE ROOM

President Gives Daughter Away at Comparatively Quiet Ceremony—Honeymoon Trip of Executive's Daughter and Cabinet Officer to Be pected to Be of Less Than Week's of Less Than Weeks' Duration

Washington, May 7.—Another White House wedding, the second during the present Wilson administration, occurred today when Eleanor R. Wilson, youngest daughter of the president, was united in marriage to William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury in the Wilson cabinet.

Miss Wilson is the fourteenth bride of the White House, and the first daughter of a president to be united to a cabinet officer.

Compared with some of the brilliant wedding functions of the past, this was comparatively quiet, participated in mainly by the immediate family and relatives and the president's official family, made up of the vice president and members of the cabinet, with their wives.

This was in accordance with the tastes and wishes of the parties and the White House circle, and also to some extent due to the absorbing attention which the president and his cabinet have been giving of late to the Mexican and other public matters.

The ceremony was held in the Blue room, with its handsome furnishings and the profusion of flowers which the White House conservatory yields. President Wilson gave away the bride. Rev. Sylvester W. Beach, pastor of the Princeton Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony.

Miss Margaret Wilson, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Dr. Grayson, naval and medical attache to the president, was best man, and the two flower girls were Sallie McAdoo, the 12-year-old daughter of the bridegroom, and Nancy Lee, daughter of the secretary of the interior.

The wedding gifts were numerous and of expensive character.

Mrs. McAdoo is the brunette of the Wilson daughters, 23 years old, with such an expressive face that most people call her handsome. She is tall and slender, her head is well shaped, her eyes are blue, and when she smiles—or better still when she laughs, which is often—she shows her fine teeth. Her hair is a shade darker than her mother's and she wears it in a coil around her head. She follows the modes in dress without exaggeration.

McAdoo, who is 50 years old, was one of the "original Wilson men," and as vice chairman of the Democratic national committee and as acting chairman during much of the 1912 campaign, the acquaintance between the two, fated to be bound together later by family ties, has had no breaks from its inception.

McAdoo's first wife died two years ago. Of his six children, three sons and three daughters, the two oldest are married.

Mrs. McAdoo told her confidantes that her honeymoon will be a short one and that she will be back in Washington in less than a week. She wouldn't tell, however, where the honeymoon is to be spent.

When Mr. and Mrs. McAdoo return to Washington they will make their home at the residence now occupied by the secretary of the treasury at 1709 Massachusetts avenue. Mrs. McAdoo will then replace her stepdaughter, Miss Nona McAdoo, in presiding over the household and will take her place as a member of the cabinet set.

FIVE JURORS DRAWN

Court Denies Motions For Delay In the Becker Trial

New York, May 7.—At the opening of the trial of ex-Police Lieutenant Becker his attorneys made a bitter attack upon District Attorney Whitman in an effort to have him adjudged guilty of contempt of court.

This motion was denied, as were others requesting a change of venue and the dismissal of the special panel of talesmen because they had heard the district attorney defend himself from the accusations of Becker's counsel.

The entire panel had been exhausted last night and there were five jurors in the box.

When the morning session ended with two jurors in the box, Bourke Cockran, of counsel for Becker, who so bitterly attacked Whitman, left the courtroom and said he would not return.

SIGNED TWO CHECKS GIVING $3,000,000

"Dummy" Treasurer Didn't Know What They Were For

Washington, May 7.—Some of the inside details of the organization of the Metropolitan Steamship company of New Jersey were revealed when the interstate commerce commission resumed its inquiry into the affairs of the New Haven railroad and its subsidiaries.

Grover C. Richards of Portland, Me., told how he acted as "dummy" treasurer for the company when it was formed. He testified to going to New York on March 5, 1910, at the request of Warren D. Chase of Hartford and there signing two checks totaling $3,000,000 without knowing what they were for and without asking.

Richards said he remained in New York about two weeks, receiving $5 a day and his expenses and signing various papers, about which he had no clear remembrance.

What the Clock Said

A Medieval Romance

By F. A. MITCHEL

In the year 1370 a holiday was proclaimed in the town of Strassburg. The occasion for rejoicing was the setting up of a clock in a tower built for the purpose, where all citizens could see it and note the time of day. This was the second clock of which we have any account, the first having been placed six years before in a tower in the palace of Charles V. of France. There were no pendulums to these primitive clocks, the regulators being flywheels. But since the flywheel was resisted by the air it acted imperfectly, as any one may see by watching a windmill which turns as fast or as slowly as the current that moves it.

Nevertheless the good people of Strassburg, who had been always obliged to regulate their movements by the sun, which rose very early in summer and late in winter, were delighted at now having something that would divide the day for them, telling them what time to go to work in the morning, when to have meals and when to go to bed. The day the clock was put into the tower they feasted from morning till night, and when the hands pointed to the hour of 9, though it was the month of June and still daylight, all said their prayers and went to bed for the first time in their lives knowing that they had turned in at a proper hour.

From this time forward everything was regulated by the clock. Before it was set up the mayor of the town had been the ruler, but now his authority was superseded by the clock. With its flywheel influenced by the currents of air that whistled through the tower it reeled along like a drunken man trying to get home, sometimes getting the people up an hour or more ahead of time in the morning or putting them to bed in the middle of the afternoon.

But, though knowledge often creeps, still it moves. The people of Strassburg, having made a beginning by setting up a timepiece, soon found a way to make it serviceable in other respects than by dividing the day. The mayor ordered that the clock be the calendar by which all public matters be regulated. If Franz Gotlieb promised to pay Carl Stengel a sum of money in thirty days it meant that when the hour hand of the clock had made the circle of its face thirty times the money would be due. If Hans Bunker drank too much beer and was sentenced for making an unnecessary noise to ten days' imprisonment it meant that the short hand on the clock must rotate ten times before Hans would be free again.

There lived in Strassburg at this time a maiden named Gretchen Borchert, who, everybody loved for her amiable disposition, her beauty and her piety. Gretchen loved Josef Breit, a young carpenter, roofer, mason, well digger—in short, one who did anything required in, on or about the homes of the people of the town. Unfortunately for Gretchen, another girl, Anna Huber, also loved Josef, and, finding that Gretchen was the winner in the matter of Josef's affections, she resorted to a devilish means of putting her rival out of the way. Anna went before the judge of the court and swore that Gretchen was a witch. The accuser named several persons whom Gretchen had bewitched. She swore that she had herself seen Gretchen standing over a well swallowing crooked pins and carrying water in a sieve.

Gretchen was brought before the court for trial. Every one of the persons named by Anna as having been bewitched by Gretchen was found to be a dangerous lunatic. Several witnesses testified that they had seen Gretchen riding over their houses on a broomstick, and a little girl of seven declared that she had seen the culprit sweeping cobwebs from the sky. All this testimony was admitted except that of the last witness, whom the judge considered too young to testify. However, there was quite enough without this to warrant the condemning of Gretchen as a witch, and the judge sentenced her to be burned at the stake. In order that she might have time to cast out the devil that was in her before going to her long home, the day of her execution was fixed at two weeks from her sentence.

Josef, strange to say, was not in the least influenced by all this overwhelming evidence to believe that his sweetheart was a witch. Indeed, he was sure that she was the same lovely girl she had always been. And he knew, Anna having tried her best to make him love her, that she had accused her rival of witchcraft, hoping that with Gretchen removed Josef could be won.

Those were superstitious times, as may be inferred from the trial and condemnation of this innocent girl. Josef turned to something more powerful than himself to save his sweetheart. As has been said, the clock had superseded the mayor and all others in authority in Strassburg, so the clock being the most powerful thing Josef had any knowledge of one night when every one was in bed he knelt at the base of the tower that supported it and prayed to it to tell him how to prevent Gretchen from being burned at the stake.

Whether or not it was the clock that put the idea into Josef's head—Josef did not doubt it was the clock—he certainly conceived it while he was on his knees before it asking for help. Rising, he went at once to the tower and, being an expert at climbing, made his way up to the clock. Once there he set the hands ahead a couple of hours.

The next morning all the people of Strassburg woke up to find that they had overslept themselves and some of them hurried to their daily work without taking time to eat their breakfasts. But not one of them thought of accusing the clock of being wrong. From that time forward for two weeks they found themselves at times getting out of bed too late, at times too early, but it was usually too late. Some of them believed that Gretchen had bewitched the town and they would not return to regular habits until she had been executed.

These persons sent one of their number to the mayor asking him to burn the witch at once without waiting for the appointed date of execution. The mayor told them that the law could not be interfered with. The culprit had been sentenced to be burned on a certain day and if she were not burned on that day the curse of heaven would fall upon the town.

Meanwhile the citizens of Strassburg were starting their day at all sorts of hours. But they were no worse off in this respect than before the clock was set up—that is, in cloudy weather, when the sundial cast no shadow—and when they once got started in the morning the clock pursued a steady course for the rest of the time they were out of bed.

The day before the execution came round a stake was embedded in the ground and fagots arranged about it in such fashion that they would make a hot fire. Most of the people were plunged in sorrow, for they loved Gretchen, and even if she were a witch she might have been bewitched by another, which would not have been her own fault. But all agreed she must not be permitted to bewitch others, and the only way to prevent that was to put her out of the way.

On the morning of the execution the people awoke, according to the clock, at the proper hour, and it was generally presumed that the witch, in view of the early relinquishment of all power to harm human beings, had withdrawn from troubling them. Gretchen was to be burned at noon, and there was to be a holiday to witness the burning. The mayor of Strassburg went to his office early to give his final orders concerning the execution. He found waiting for him Josef Breit, who said to him:

"Most worthy mayor, I have a confession to make. On the night following the sentence of Gretchen Borchert I, believing her to be innocent, knelt at the base of the clock tower and prayed to the clock that if she had been wrongly accused to tell me how to save her, whereupon the clock asked me how many days would elapse before the execution. When I replied that fourteen days must pass, the clock told me to set its hands ahead twenty-four hours during the interval, so that a day would be lost. I did so, and know, O worthy mayor, that yesterday was the day fixed by law for the execution of the witch."

The mayor looked at Josef dumfounded, not speaking for some time; then he said:

"What right had you to tamper with the clock which regulates all our actions?"

"The authority of the clock itself. I have told you I prayed to it that if the girl were innocent it should tell me how to avert her execution. The clock then told me how, by moving its hands, I might lose the day fixed by law from the calendar."

The mayor at once sent for the chief citizens of the town and told them what had happened. Some of them believed Gretchen innocent and some believed her guilty. The former argued that by setting the clock ahead the day fixed for the execution had passed, the latter argued that it had simply changed the day from the one appointed to the one after, but no one contended that the moving of the hands had no effect on the calendar.

So it was that these two factions argued with each other, at first peaceably, each endeavoring to convince the other; then excitedly and with loud voices till at last they came to blows. They fought each other the rest of the morning. Finally Josef went out and, looking at the clock, told them it was long past noon, the hour for the execution. Then the mayor, who had waited to make the contest between the factions a trial of force, which was still in vogue in those days, to decide Gretchen's fate called them to order and said:

"There is every reason to assume that the girl is innocent. In the first place, Josef prayed that he might be instructed only if she were innocent; secondly, I am convinced that if I had permitted the fight to go on those who contended for her innocence would have won; thirdly, we have no wise man with us to tell us what effect the clock has had on the day of execution, whether the day was yesterday, is today or will be tomorrow. I therefore order that the culprit be set free."

Josef rushed to the jail to impart the good news to Gretchen, who, on receiving it, fell into his arms in a swoon. As soon as the order of the mayor arrived Josef led his sweetheart out into the light of day. Citizens who had heard of the turn the affair had taken stood at the door and lined the street to congratulate their favorite on her escape. They insisted that Josef's and Gretchen's progress be made a wedding procession, and the couple went straight to the church and were married.

As for Gretchen's accuser, she took to flight, fearing the vengeance of her rival's friends.

SHELLING RANGE OF FIVE MILES

Funston Places Powerful Field Artillery In Position

OUTCLASS THE HUERTA GUNS

Mexicans Lose Opportunity to Destroy Waterworks, Which Are Now Practically Invulnerable — American Lines to Be Greatly Extended, but There Will Be No Actual Aggression

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 7.—Twenty-four powerful pieces of field artillery, capable of searching out and smothering any fire that may be opened upon the defenses of this city by the federal troops, have been set in position at the waterworks and at other positions at the front of the American lines by General Funston, in pursuance with instructions from Washington giving him practically a free hand in dealing with the situation here.

These guns, which have a shelling range of five or six miles, outclass anything that the Huerta government can put in the field against them. Whether events will be precipitated by the new disposition of the American forces is the absorbing question in Vera Cruz.

The federal stronghold is Jalapa, from which, before the American artillery was put in place, they might easily have destroyed the city waterworks. Jalapa is now, however, dominated by the American army's guns.

Federal forces under General Navarette and General Maas, it is understood, are being concentrated between Jalapa and Soledad, and an attack is believed to be not at all unlikely within the next few days. They have lost their golden opportunity, however, for the El Tejar waterworks are now practically invulnerable.

It is the opinion of Funston that the Mexican troops will not risk an attack on the American lines, but will remain upon the defensive. He plans to extend the American front to some distance along the two railroads leading from Vera Cruz, it is understood, but will adhere strictly to the instructions from Washington that nothing in the way of actual aggression will be included in his movements.

Until the present time he has been greatly hampered in making plans for the defense of the city. In all probability the greater part of his command will be disposed at strategic points to the west of the city, leaving the policing duty in Vera Cruz to the marines and the town itself to the protection of the guns from the warships.

Two bridges at some distance from the city have been destroyed by Mexicans, one of them being the San Francisco bridge. The abutments were dynamited in each instance. The Soledad bridge, it is expected, will be mined in the same way.

While Huerta's troops near Vera Cruz are being massed between Soledad and Jalapa, and rumors are afloat regarding a possible attack on Funston's troops, the constitutionalist forces are closing in upon Mexico City from three sides.

Definite reports have been received of sweeping victories by the rebels near San Luis Potosi and other points south of Saltillo. Three forces are converging upon the capital, one of which, under General Obregon, is besieging Mazatlan.

The constitutionalists are now within 300 miles of Mexico City and they predict that a general advance will be made on that city within a few weeks.

Advices from Tampico indicate that the constitutionalists plan to capture and burn that city. Rear Admiral Howard reported severe fighting between federals and rebels at Mazatlan.

CHILD LABOR LAW STANDS

Children of Fourteen Cannot Work In Massachusetts Mills

Boston, May 7.—A crushing defeat was administered in the house to those opposed to the present child labor law, when, by a vote of 162 to 43, the amendment to allow children of 14 to work in mills and factories was killed.

Under the law a child must be 16 years old before being allowed to work in a factory or mill, but the amendment provided that children of 14 might work if they had physicians' certificates that they were physically fit.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

Mayor Miller Receives Visit From Shipyard Officials

Joseph W. Powell, the new president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, made a social call upon the Mayor this morning. He was accompanied by Vice President H. S. Snyder and Treasurer Joseph A. Sedgwick.

Mr. Sedgwick did the honors of the occasion and after a short social call the distinguished visitors took their departure.

President Powell is a young man. He was born in Oswego, N. Y., in 1876, and graduated from the Naval academy in 1897, after which he went to the Glasgow University where he was graduated two years later. He became associated with the Cramps in 1902. He was superintendent of the yard until 1906 when he was appointed assistant to the president.

JAMES R. WILD PASSES AWAY

Word has been received of the death at Canton on Wednesday of James R. Wild, a former well known Quincy resident and business man, in his 65th year. Mr. Wild was a son of the late John Q. Wild, and was born and educated in Quincy.

He was for many years engaged in in carriage manufacturing business, which was located on Hancock street on the site upon which the new Kincaide block is being erected, and which business is now conducted by Henry E. Emerson, who for a number of years was employed as a bookkeeper by Mr. Wild.

Mr. Wild was always a great horse fancier, and during his residence in Quincy owned many fast horses. Fifteen years ago he gave up his residence in Quincy to go to Canton where he assumed charge of a large stock farm owned by J. B. Crocker of that town.

A few years before leaving Quincy Mr. Wild built the handsome estate on Washington street, near what is known as the Graham turnout nearly opposite Mill street, now known as the Tracey estate.

Mr. Wild had not been in good health for some time and has been confined to his bed since last December, the nature of his ilness being diabetes. He leaves a widow, three daughters and a son.

Funeral services will be held from his late home 808 Washington street, Canton, Saturday at 2.30.

Use for Aniline Colors.

That aniline colors have a marked action upon various kinds of microbes appears to be established. It is discovered that aniline compounds in general act to destroy microbes, even in greater degree than does phenic acid. Of the different bacteria examined the typhus bacillus is the most readily affected.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Rev. George P. Gilman, for years a pastor of the East Congregational church, recently died at his late home in Wolfboro, N. H. Mr. Gilman was 69 years old and was very well known in Milton.

Mrs Lewis J. Johnson of Cambridge spoke on "Equal Suffrage" Tuesday evening at the First Baptist church under the auspices of the Agenda club. In spite of the stormy weather more than 50 people came to hear Mrs. Johnson. Her talk was very instructive and she showed that the women were really in earnest. During her talk Mrs. Johnson mentioned the suffrage parade of last Saturday which she said advertised the suffrage cause more than anything else possible. She said that the arguments for equal suffrage do not need to be given any more, the thing that needs to be done now is to educate the women how to use the vote when they get it, which she predicted would be granted them at the end of 18 months. A few "antis" were noticed among the audience.

The regular monthly social of the Woodsum class of the First Baptist church was held Wednesday evening in the church parlor. Entertainment was furnished by professional talent.

The body of Mrs. Abbie E. Higgins of Somerville was brought to this city Wednesday for burial in Mt. Wollaston cemetery. She was a member of the Somerville Daughters of Maine club and the Prospect Hill Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution.

ROBERTS—WILLCUTT.

Miss Mildred Willcutt and Lieut. Frank H. Roberts of the torpedo boat destroyer Duncan were married at Newton on Wednesday evening with a naval ceremony.

The trouble in Mexico nearly caused a postponement, but when it became known that Lieut. Roberts would sail for the seat of war as soon as repairs on his vessel are completed at the Fore River shipyard it was decided to have the marriage take place without delay.

Rev. Ernest Meredith of the Third Unitarian church of Dorchester officiated and the wedding cake was cut by the bride who wielded the groom's dress sword.

Among those present from this city were officers of the Duncan, Mrs. Lydia Hultman and son Arthur, relatives of the bride.

SACHEM CLUB VOTE TO BUY

Building Committee of Five Is Authorized

At an adjourned meeting of the Sachem club directors held Wednesday evening President Bryant was authorised to sign an agreement to buy land for the clubhouse site.

This land includes four lots on the southerly side of Beale street between Hancock street and the railroad track. It contains over 22,000 square feet, and is a portion of the Faxon estate of which H. T. Whitman is agent.

The definite construction of the clubhouse had been held up for the sanction of the city to construct under the exemption of the fire zone clause With this secured from the Council meeting of Monday evening, there is nothing to hinder the construction of the building

President Bryant was empowered to appoint a board of three trustees to handle the mortgage bond issue of the club. These shall not be chosen from the present board of directors and shall have full powers.

The president was also instructed to appoint a building committee of five of which the president shall be one.

Architect William Chapman was officially sanctioned to complete the plans and specifications in duplicate to be given to contractors for bids.

The board of trustees and the building committee will report to a meeting of the board of directors to be called by the president.

At this meeting final arrangements will be made, plans submitted for bids, the bonds floated and the project will be on.

With a sufficient sum raised by subscription and every chance for securing the necessary mortgage, the prospects for the club look very rosy and future developments will be more of action.

SPECIAL MEETING OF CITY COUNCIL

To Act on Veto of the Mayor on Three Pony Express Licenses

Will Also Receive Report of the Street Committee

Mayor Miller is to issue a call today for a special meeting of the City Council for next Monday evening. As far as known there will be but two matters in the call. To receive and act on a communication from the Mayor returning without his approval applications for permits to transport liquor, and secondly, to receive and act on a report from the Committee on Streets.

The matter of the veto of the express liquor permits is one that is exciting considerable interest, from the fact that there has been considerable speculation as to what standing these permits would have if passed over the Mayor's veto.

Tre so-called Pony Express law provides in Section 3, that "all permits issued pursuant to this act shall be signed by the licensing board." In the City of Quincy the licensing board consists of the City Council and Mayor.

It has been construed by this section that the Mayor as well as majority of the City Council must sign the license, and that if the Mayor shall refuse the license would be void.

This morning, however, some of those interested in the matter have dug out of the Revised Laws a section which may put a different aspect on the situation.

The section referred to is section 5 of Chapter 8 of the Revised Laws. This section deals with terms used in the public statutes, that is the meaning of the various terms. Among these appears the following: "The words "mayor and aldermen" shall mean the board of aldermen, except as applies to appointments."

A broad view of this section would seem to mean that a majority of the City Council, in this respect is the same as a board of aldermen, In that case if the City Council should again pass the orders granting the permits notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor, the contention of those who have given the matter some study, is that the license would be in force.

Here is a legal nut for the City Solicitor to crack, and if he should rule that the license, or permit so issued is not legal, it is more than probable that the case would be tried out in court.

To save all this trouble however, it would be well for the City Council to concur with the Mayor.

DEPUTY IN ATTENDANCE.

A majority of the members of Lodge Skandia, Vasa Orden, gathered in Electa and Protection halls Thursday night and quietly observed the ninth anniversary of the lodge. At its meeting four were initiated to membership, and five applications received. Among those present was Mrs. Eva Holmberg of Anibet lodge of Brockton, district deputy of lodge Skandia. Arrangements were made for a dancing party later in the month. Dancing was enjoyed in Electa hall until midnight and refreshments were served.

BILL SUBSTITUTED FOR ADVERSE REPORT

Calls for the Depression of Railroad Tracks When Grade Crossings Are Abolished

(Special from State House.)

When the adverse report on the Quincy bill for the abolition of grade crossings was reached this morning in the Legislature, Representative Michael T. Sullivan scored a signal victory.

The original bill introduced by Representative Michael T. Sullivan, provided that the grade crossings of the Old Colony Railroad, New York New Haven & Hartford railroad, Lessees, in Quincy, be abolished according to the plan adopted by the city of Quincy and known as the City plan of depression.

After one hearing the committee reported adversely and the report has been in the calendar several weeks being "passed" each time it came up.

This morning Representative Sullivan moved that his bill be substituted for the adverse report and after a lengthy debate the House so voted.

Representative Sullivan said, in moving for substitution of the bill that the matter has been agitated for six years, and in all that time it has been a political issue.

He said he was not only interested in the outcome because it materially affected the district he represented, but because he believes its outcome will affect every good-sized city in the Commonwealth, and that the time will come when all cities will be called upon for depression of tracks. For that reason it is of vital importance throughout the state.

There is a bit of interesting history connected with the bill, and the events that have preceded it during the past six years have been of moment to the people. It has formed a favorite subject for sidewalk debate and has been thoroughly considered by the City Government and by organizations formed for the welfare of the city. The mayors holding office have repeatedly manifested their approval of the depressed location of tracks. City governments have gone on record as in favor of depression, and various officers have been elected because of the stand they took in favor of depression. The people of Quincy who seem to have favored track elevation are a distinctive minority.

He said the present mayor of Quincy was elected on an non partisan ticket, and it was generally understood he favored depression. I was called into his office on Jan. 17 and he presented me with a petition with the request that I file it with the legislature. It was for depression. The petition was not correctly drawn and the then City Solicitor drew a new petition for depression and the Mayor appended his signature to it and I filed it with the legislaure.

This is the bill which is under consideration today. Subsequently the Mayor seems to have come to a sudden turn of mind. The court appointed a decree board which drew up plans favoring an elevated structure, and these plans were submitted during the regular course of procedure to the Public Service Commission. Shortly after the present City Solicitor was chosen, he and the Mayor of Quincy went to the office of the Public Service Commission in Boston and after a brief discussion the Mayor signed his approval of the elevated structure.

I have nothing to say, he said derogatory to the Mayor, but I do say that I believe before signing his agreement to the elevated plan he should have at least gone back to Quincy and thought over the proposition for 24 hours. Subsequently the Mayor appeared before the Committee on Railroads in favor of the withdrawal of his bill, and that action evidently met with the approval of the new City Solicitor.

I have also been informed that the City Solicitor came to the office of the Attorney General and signed the elevated agreement, representing that he appeared in behalf of the citizens of Quincy. Acting on the advise of the City Solicitor the Attorney General also signed the agreement in behalf of the Commonwealth. I am confident that if the Attorney General knew the conditions as they actually exist he never would have signed that agreement.

I have been advised by the Attorney General that the only procedure which can be taken for annulment of that agreement is through the legislature, the highest court in the state. If this bill is passed I will move an amendment which will submit the bill to the people of Quincy. The members of this body who would most strenuously opose the bill, certainly cannot object to allowing the people of Quincy to decide the matter for themselves.

PRINCIPAL OPPONENT.

The principal opponent of the bill was George Ellis of Newton, a member of the Committee on Railroads. His argument was that the elevation of tracks had been entered into an

RECEPTION AT WEST QUINCY

Rev. and Mrs. Perry S. Neldon Heartily Greeted

An informal reception was tendered Rev. and Mrs. Perry S. Neldon of the Hall Place M. E. church, Thursday evening, by the Ladies' Aid Society and the Fowler chapter of the Methodist Brotherhood.

It being the regular meeting of the brotherhood the evening was formally opened by the President D. H. McNeil and the devotional service followed. The meeting was then adjourned and the evening's program was placed in the hands of the Ladies' Aid Society.

A. D. Stewart, superintendent of the Sunday School, welcomed the pastor and his family in behalf of the church and parish. Mr. Stewart spoke of the fine condition of the church at the present time; the good work of the Epworth League; the Brotherhood, one of the youngest organizations in the church, but from which good results are expected; the Ladies' Aid Society, which cannot be beaten; and the Sunday School with its crowd of interesting young people ready and willing to work.

In replying, Rev. Mr. Neldon spoke of the surprise which came to him when he found he was to be sent to West Quincy, as he had understood he was to be sent back to Ballardvale Mass., his former charge. He spoke of the work here and of his rather unsuccessful attempts to locate some of the streets and said that hereafter he will try to find the homes and not the streets and numbers.

Miss Hilda Francis, first vice president of the Epworth League, in a few well chosen words, presented Mrs. Neldon with a bouquet of carnations in behalf of the Ladies' Aid.

The program included piano solos by Mr. Leslie McCormick and selections by the male quartette composed of Edward Newcomb, George Stewart, Camille Fuller and J. Lawrence Martin.

In the receiving line were Rev. and Mrs. Perry S. Neldon and two of their children, Virgil and Nellie, A. D. Stewart, Supt. of the Sunday School, Mrs. William A. McCormick, president of the Ladies' Aid, Miss Hilda Francis, first vice president of the Epworth League and D. H. McNeil, president of the Brotherhood.

Mrs. Fred L. Badger, Mrs. Charles Wentzel and Mrs. D. H. McNeil acted as ushers.

Perry S. Neldon, Jr., was present, but slept throughout the entire evening.

The young men of the brotherhood served ices and cake, after which a pleasant social hour was enjoyed.

PLAYS AT HIGH SCHOOL.

The Thalia club, one of the new clubs organized this year at Quincy High school, composed of fifteen girls from the Junior and fifteen from the Senior classes, and the post graduates are to give two plays this evening, some of the proceeds of which will go to the athletic fund, as well as the club treasury. The girls are being assisted by some of the boys of the school. The plays to be preesnted are "A Bachelor's Banquet" and "Ici On Parle Francais." Music will be furnished by the High School orchestra under the direction of Miss Amsden.

THE SABBATH.

The subject announced for Rev. A. L. Hudson's sermon at the First parish church Sunday morning will no doubt interest a great many people; as it is one on which opinions differ so widely, while at the same time it is so important to secure uniformity of action: namely "The Sabbath and the 20th century."

It looks as though Wollaston was about to experience quite a business boom, as far as public buildings are concerned, for there are several public buildings contemplated for the near future, the aggregate value of which is $140,000. These include the new Sachem clubhouse, two new parish houses and new Masonic Temple. Unless all signs fail the coming summer will see all of these buildings in the process of construction.

LITTERING THE STREETS.

No matter how active street cleaning departments may be, the thoroughfares of a town never look decently unless some spirit of neatness exists in the minds of citizens.

The tendency to litter up streets with paper bags, hand-bills, scraps of newspaper, etc., seems to grow worse and worse. Many who keep potatoes in the bath tub at home, regard the street as the natural receptacle for refuse. But the natives cannot lay off all this abuse on aliens. Our own boys and girls acquire every year a little more lawlessness in such ways.

They have lordly manners about throwing waste around. They seem to think that some street cleaner should be in servile attendance every minute, to pick up their leavings. When they get old enough to pay taxes, they may realize what this would cost.

Disorderly and littered streets give the impression that a place has no community spirit, and is too poor for street cleaning. This affects the minds of all who pass through, and makes a place look unattractive to people who might settle here.

The automobile traffic places every town on dress parade. A stream of strangers goes through daily in machines. They pass judgment on the place. If it is disorderly, they circulate the story that the town is slack and slovenly.

The summer is a time when peculiar care is necessary. Refreshment stands, and candy and fruit stores are running full blast, and many people cast the debris into the gutters. A citizen should be as ashamed to cast refuse into his street as to spit on his parlor rug at home.

ODD FELLOWS RECEPTION

Quincy Encampment and Ladies Guests at Brockton

Sam Wood, Jr., past grand patriarch and past grand representative, and also one of the prominent members of Manet encampment of Quincy, was tendered a reception Thursday evening by Canton Nemasket and Nemasket encampment of Brockton to which Manet encampment of Quincy, Sagamore encampment of Plymouth and Rockland encampment of Rockland were especially invited. The occasion was given in honor of Past Grand Patriarch Wood's appointment as district deputy grand patriarch over Nemasket encampment.

Ladies were included in the invitation which proved to be most enjoyable. The members of Manet encampment with their ladies to the number of about seventy-five made the trip to Brockton by a special car which left City Square at 6.50, and it was near midnight before home was again reached.

The reception was held in Canton hall, Brockton, and fully four hundred were in attendance. During the first part of the evening there was an informal reception during which those present had an opportunity to meet the new deputy, after which he was formerly welcomed by the officers of Nemasket encampment as their deputy. The Chief Patriarch expressed the pleasure it gave him and the encampment to welcome him.

Mr. Wood responded, also expressing his pleasure at being selected as deputy of such a live organization. He then spoke of the encampment branch of Odd Fellowship, and the rapid strides it was making.

Other speakers followed, after which an adjournment was made to the banquet hall where a banquet was served. An orchestra furnished enlivening music during the entire evening, and after the banquet there was a short entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, the evening closing with general dancing.

The occasion was one long to be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to partake of the hospitality of Nemasket encampment.

HAS FAITH IN WEST QUINCY

It is perhaps not generally known that there is in West Quincy a corporation known as the Hancock Realty Co. which has been incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with a capital stock of $50,000.

The corporation was incorporated nearly a year ago and there are thirteen members. The officers are: President, Charles J. McGilvary; secretary George Berry; and treasurer William Corcoran; building committee, W. H. Teasdale, G. E. Berry and Dr. J. T. Reynolds.

The object of the corporation is first of all to purchase and develop real estate, primarily in West Quincy, although the scope of its work extends to all sections of the city.

What West Quincy has long lacked is some kind of a concerted movement to develop realty, for this section has been rather backward in this line for many years. This corporation however believe that there is a good field for development in West Quincy. There is considerable desirable vacant land for home building and development, and this it what the corporation proposes to do.

The first active move toward development by the corporation has just been started in the way of a dwelling house which it is erecting on Rogers street. This dwelling will be a modern home in every way, and a sample of many more which will doubtless be erected in this section of the city. It is pointed out that one of the most desirable residental sections is along the Furnace Brook parkway and it only needs the work of some such organization as this to make it a thriving residental section.

HARVARD OUTING.

The picnic of the senior class of Harvard, the expenses of which are borne by contributions by members of the freshmen class, will be held on Peddock's island in about two weeks. It will be the last outing before graduation.

SAW ATTACK AT VERA CRUZ

Mr. and Mrs. Marcom of Mexico Reach Braintree

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred J. Morcom arrived in Braintree late Wednesday night from the City of Mexico where they have been living since their marriage in June, 1911. Mrs. Morcum will be remembered as Miss Fannie Qualey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James R. Qualey of Washington street, Braintree, and Mr. Morcom is the son of Walter Morcom, president and general manager of the Mexican railway, an English corporation operating between Mexico City and Vera Cruz. Realizing the situation of affairs in Mexico long before hostilities began, Mr. and Mrs. Morcom made preparations to leave before the trouble started, and reached Vera Cruz the day that Admiral Fletcher's marines captured the custom house there. They witnessed the attack on the city by the American forces from the decks of the Border Line Steamship "Mexico."

Leaving the Mexico at New Orleans, La., they were kept in quarantine for four days. On their release they started at once for Braintree bringing with them then a two year old son, Walter James Morcom, who was born in Braintree.

Mr. Morcom expects to remain in Braintree about eight months. Mr. Morcom thinks that the present occupation of Mexico by the American troops is but the beginning of a long struggle. He regards President Huerta as the man of the hour in Mexico, but is placed at a disadvantage by the efforts made to prevent his securing ammunition. He says that Mexicans and Americans in Mexico are united in criticizing the policy of the administration at Washington with regard to affairs in that country. Mr. Morcom said he could add but little to the details published in the newspapers concerning the stories of sufferings and hardships encountered by refugees of Mexico.

SUDDEN DEATH LEDGER EMPLOYEE

George Laing Tytler, one of the employees in the mechanical department of the Daily Ledger office, died suddenly early this morning at his home 17 Trafford street. He was employed as usual on Thursday and that evening was out until about 10 o'clock, when he returned home and retired. About 1.30 A. M. the family was awakened by hearing groaning sounds and hastening to the bedside they found him almost gone. He seemed to recognize his brother however for he looked up at him and smiled, and almost immediately passed away, death being due to heart trouble. The young man had an attack of rheumatism some five years ago but as far as known has had no further illness, although it is possible that this may have had something to do with his weak heart.

He was a son of John and Susan Tytler. He was a pressman by trade and had been employed at the Daily Ledger Office for a few months. He attended Bethany church and was a member of the Makaria Fraternity and also a prominent member of the Red Men athletic association and much interested in athletics.

His sudden death is a severe blow to his family, particularly so as his father has been seriously ill since last July. He was 21 years of age and besides his father and mother, he leaves one brother and two sisters.

MUST WEAR CAPS.

Instructions have been issued by the officials of the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. requiring station agents to appear in uniform caps while on duty. The orders have been received at Quincy and Quincy Adams and a marked improvement in the appearance of the men is noted. The instructions were issued because the general tendency of employees when meeting trains at stations has been more or less undignified.

DISTRICT COURT.

Custadio Lemos and Minnie M. Finney were arraigned for lewdness at Quincy. Cases continued until Saturday, May 16.

The continued case of Teresuia Pescatore for violation of the liquor law at Braintree was heard, and he was found not guilty and discharged.

The continued case of Pius J. Bulkites for violation of the automobile law was called and again continued until May 16.

SHOW AT KINCAIDE THEATRE

Thursday evening's performance was one of exceptionally fine character, every part being of interest from every point and beyond criticism from the most exacting attendant of the performance. The show will continue the rest of this week.

Th military sketch of the Pauline Fielding Players entitled "The Rose of Virginia" was of a very touching nature, and the singing of Captain Gray, a young Union officer and that of the Rose of Virginia, Miss Fielding was magnificent and the quaint Southern Colonel as well as the old colored mammy, brought unstinted applause.

The pictures were beautiful for their scenic effect. The illustrated song pictures were an innovation and the soloist was the recipient of marked applause. O. C. Falls in his travesty juggling act kept the audience in roars during his performance. Miss Mabel Woodworth in her singing, dancing and quick costume changes captivated the audience.

It is some time since the writer has had the pleasure of a visit to the Kincaide Theatre of an evening but was not in the least surprised upon entering to find the usual large assemblage. And there seems to be many marked improvements in the acts and pictures, if they can be called improvements, as it is well known that for a house of first class entertainment, no better can be found anywhere in the State than Kincaide's Theatre.

Manager Wardwell has his eyes open for the best that can be had in vaudeville and pictures, and is right on the job to land them for his theatre and patrons before they are exhibited elsewhere.

THE POPS.

From the schedule of the second week of the Pops, one night Tuesday, May 12th, will be elided for on that night Boston University has taken the whole house for its own private celebration. Monday night, May 11th, will bring the first Wagner Night of the season. With a skilled and experienced conductor like Mr. Urack who has done so much work throughout the opera houses of Germany, a Wagner night is particularly interesting and brings out a large crowd. Among the Wagner selections will be the "Tanhauser" Overture, the song "Traume" transposed for violin, the final scene of "Tristan and Isolde," the exquisite song of the Rhine Daughters from "Gotterdammerung" and the "Lohengrin" Overture Fine programmes have been arranged for the other nights.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

A play that is brimful of smiles and laughter, "The Ghost Breaker" will be given by John Craig at the Castle Square next week. It is a romantic melodrama-farce, and it recounts the highly amusing adventures of Werran Jarvis, a young eKntuckian in New York and elsewhere. Because New York does not approve of him, he shakes the dust of the metropolis off his feet, and finds himself in the midst of the most exciting and amusing episodes in a castle in Spain. It all ends with his marrying a fair princess and his bringing her back to her native land of America.

The leading role of the hero of "The Ghost Breaker" will be played by John Craig, with Miss Doris Olsson as the heroine, and Walter Walker, Frederick Ormonde, Mabel Colcord and Florence Shirley in the other leading roles.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

Not in a generation has a musical comedy scored a more decisive and walloping hit in Boston than has William Harris, Jr.'s "The Misleading Lady" at the Colonial Theatre. With Lewis S. Stone in the principal role and the entire New York cast and production on view for the first time since the close of a remarkable seven months engagement at the Fulton Theatre, New York, this was to be expected.

Besides Mr. Stone, one of the really fine young actors on our stage at present, emphatic applause greeted the work of Frank Sylvester, as the harmless lunatic who thinks he is Napoleon, and Miss Inez Buck, who plays the girl who gets into trouble by encouraging sex appeal through the unwarranted display of her ankles neck and arms and by suggesting unduly every line of her nether extremities by means of a diaphanous gown.

The rest of the company is excellent and the play, written by Mr. Charles Goddard and Mr. Paul Dickey, is the funniest that has come to Boston since "Charley's Aunt."

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's melodrama of modern conditions in New York life, now the current attraction at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, treats interestingly of the minimum wage in that it tells the story of a shopgirl who is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison for three years. In the first act, she has a terrific scene with her employer, the owner of a department store, known as the "Emporium," in which she tells him in plain language of the temptations which he places in the paths of his girl employees through starvation wages and the consequent privations they are forced to undergo. The rest of the play is devoted to the absorbing story of "Mary Turner's" revenge. In association with a gang of "crooks" Mary preys upon society, but manages to keep within the pale of the law always

The play makes a very strong appeal to the emotions and compels sympathy for those who are driven to commit crime by certain existing commercial and social conditions. Monday next the play enters into its fourth month in this city.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

Monday night E. H. Sothern begins a fortnight's engagement at the Shubert Theatre, with the following arrangement of plays: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Saturday matinee, "If I Were King;" Thursday and Friday nights and at the Wednesday matinee, "Lord Dundreary;" Saturday night, "Hamlet." "Charlemagne," the novelty of the engagement will be given during the second week.

"If I Were King" will be recalled as Justin Huntly McCarthy's romantic play, done originally by Mr. Sothern a dozen years ago with remarkable success. It is a work of unusually fine literary and dramatic qualities, and its revival has renewed all its former popularity. The character of Francois Villon, the roystering poet of the Paris slums, and the central figure in the piece, affords Mr. Sothern an opportunity for splendid and finished acting in the romantic field. Lord Dundreary displays another side of his art, a whimsically eccentric comedy portrayal, splendidly originated by his distinguished father nearly half a century ago, and still prolific of vast entertainment in the hands of the son. Mr. Sothern's Hamlet is the most notable, because of the wider scope it affords for acting, and undoubtedly the most popular of his Shakespearean characterizations, and it has placed him in the front rank of classic actors.

Elizabeth Valentine, a young actress of whom much has been written in praise, will have the leading feminine roles The curtain during Mr. Sothern's engagement will rise at 8.00 o'clock evenings and at 2.00 o'clock at the matinees.

CORT THEATRE.

Mrs. J. Cunningham Gray will return to the stage at the Cort Theatre Monday, to sing the prima donna role in the new musical comedy "Phyllis," the book of which was written by her husband, known familiarly to society and club men as Jimmie Gray; with music by Harold Vicars. To theatregoers Mrs. Gray is better known as Grace Freeman. As Miss Freeman, she grew up in Malden, where her father, a retired naval officer lived, and under her maiden name she made her first appearance on the stage. She was married to Mr. Gray after her success in the original production of "The Country Girl," at the old Boston Museum. After her marriage she retired from the stage only to return to take part in a revival of "The Country Girl" at the Tremont, and a year ago at the Boston Theatre in "The Courtin' of Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Mrs Gray admits that it was in her very childhood that the dramatic instinct was noticeable. She sang little seafaring ditties in a quaint little voice when she was so young and so small that she was generally lifted to the top of the piano in order that she might be seen. As she grew older, the love of entertaining increased, with resultant longing for the stage as she reached maturity.

BOSTON THEATRE.

The farewell week of Denman Thompson's great American masterpiece "The Old Homestead" will be inaugurated, May 11, when for the last times will be given the opportunity to theatregoers in general to view this grand old play, that has had a triumphal career of 28 seasons. Starting as it did with a one act sketch, the author built it up to its present entertaining proportions, by dint of careful study, not of what would please theatre goers most, but what in human nature, would most appeal to the best instincts in them, and giving them a story untheatric, a sentiment that rang true, and a comedy that was as naturally humorous, as it was appealingly funny. Thus it is that "The Old Homstead" has pursued the even tenor of its way, recognizing no opposition, and playing to millions of people the whole country over.

The company this season includes many of the original cast. E. L. Snader portrays the character made famous by Denman Thompson, and in such a masterly manner, that comparison would seem to be invidious. Charles Clark is still Seth Perkins, one of the corner stones of the performance, Gus Kammerlee plays Henry Hopkins; Annie Thompson is still the Mrs. Hopkins; Fred Clare "Happy Jack"; Marie Kimball as Aunt Matilda, and Harry S. Robinson in Cy Prime leave nothing to be desired, as they are a pair of the real old school, who learnt their profession when it was best learnt, when an actor played many parts, and when types and specialty acting, was a thing unheard of.

WILBUR THEATRE.

Edward Sheldon is becoming well known among American dramatists. He is represented in Boston today at the Wilbur Theatre by his newest play and most sensational hit "Romance," in which Charles Dillingham presents Doris Keane, America's newest star and one the most brilliant. It was "Romance" that gave Doris Keane her opportunity and it was her success in "Romance" that caused Mr. Dillingham to promote her to the dignity of stardom. Exceptionally long runs of this now famous play were had in New York City, Chicago and Philadelphia and wherever Miss Keane has appeared she has succeeded in securing unreserved endorsement.

The prologue of "Romance" takes place on New Year's Eve. 1912, and the three acts that follow are in the months of November and December, 1870, while the epilogue goes back to the same period as the prologue. The play itself is supposed to be the story that Bishop Armstrong, aged 80, is telling his grandson in the prologue and illustrates the great adventure that occured to him when he was a young rector of 28, when he fell in love with an exotic creature, an Italian prima donna known as La Cavallini. The purpose of the old bishop is to warn his grandson against his intended marriage with an actress, but the youth entirely misunderstands his grandfather's object and the recounting of his story instead of acting as a deterrant serves as an incentive to him to go and get married the next day.

TO CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY.

Quincy Council, Knights of Columbus, voted on Thursday evening to celebrate its 20th anniversary, and appointed a committee to make the arrangements. The observance will be on or about June 6, the anniversary date, and the committee includes Peter M. Sullivan, Michael T. Walsh, Richard A. Cole, Dennis S. Sweeney and George S. Costello. The meeting was held in Colonial hall and a class of 12 candidates were given their first degree under the direction of Grand Knight William A. Carey. The second degree will be conferred on May 21, and on May 22 there will be a third degree in St. Joseph's hall.

HOD CARRIERS ON STRIKE

Ask Increase in Wages and Extra on Saturdays

Building operations in all parts of the city were partially paralyzed this morning with the suspension of work by the Hod Carriers and Building Laborers' Union of the city who struck because the master masons have not signed their new bill of prices.

The new bill asks for 44 cents an hour, an increase of six cents and for time and a half for Saturday afternoons, at present paid at the straight rate. The new scale puts the working week at 44 hours and calls for double time for Sunday work.

Two of the masons, Theodore Townsend and Antone Pastocci, have signed the bill but according to some of the other thirteen there will be some delay before all the signatures are obtained.

The union is affiliated with the Building Trades Council of this city and its suspension and new bill has the endorsement of the council and unless a settlement is effected without delay a general strike may be ordered.

W. Field received a wonderful applause from the audience. Mr. Forbes spoke of the work in the Philippines and his lecture proved most interesting and instructive. After the lecture everyone went over to the High school house where a reception was given. In the receiving line were: Mr. and Mrs. Forbes, Mrs. Wallace Tucker and W. W. Field. After the reception refreshments were served. The success of the affair is due greatly to the efficient work and planning of the Women's club and the Educational Society. The ushers were: P. B. DEBATE FIRE DEPARTMENT

Ward Three Association Favors A Tractor

Mayor John L. Miller favored motorizing the fire apparatus, promised to buy a tractor, and answered his critics by saying he has so far reduced the city debt $90,000, at the Ward Three Improvement Association meeting in Clan MacGregor hall on Thursday evening and the association adopted a resolution favoring the purchase of a $4,000 tractor for the steamer.

Their action followed one of the warmest meetings ever held in the city and developed when the members of a special committee on tractors brought in separate reports.

Councilman Ross, chairman of the committee on fire and police, in discussing the reports said his committee had thoroughly investigated conditions in Quincy, and that the omission of an annual appropriation of $1,000 the past three years for horses resulted in the department having seven horses unfit for service, that because of this the purchase of a tractor would be advisable. Turning to former Chief Litchfield he asked if a $4,000 tractor and five chassis at $1,300 to motorize the apparatus was not better than expending $10,000 for a triple pump and received an affirmative answer.

Mr. Ross said the steamer responded to alarms and was sent back if not needed, thus blocking the services of two men, and he corrected the figures of Mr. Litchfield as given at the last meeting. He said last year the steamer made 58 runs and pumped at seven fires and the up-keep was $1,000 for horses and $250 for the engine, while the auto engine of Lynn had answered 100 fires in the past six months and the cost of operating was only $50.

Councilman Ross favored the motorizing of the apparatus and recommended the purchase of chassis. He said Quincy Point answered 52 alarms and the cost of keeping horses was $650 and that wagons expenses were $150, while Houghs Neck answered but three alarms and the upkeep was the same.

No sooner had Councilman Ross finished than Mayor Miller rose and said that men were not sent back to the Central station this year when they could be used to advantage at a fire and that was not the way business is being done this year. He said we are willing to place this year's record against any of them.

We should motorize the department continued Mayor Miller and it will be run at less than one half the cost, and I have given the committee my hearty co-operation, and we shall this year buy a tractor.

Councilman Ross then took the floor to deny, he said the rumors that the committee had contracted excessive expenses in making their investigations and said the expenses had been borne personally by its members.

Councilman Gelotte said he was opposed to a triple pump because he believed they were not perfected to the point of efficiency, and Councilman Robert Craig said it was not good business to keep three horses at Houghs Neck.

Andrew Milne, Sr., offered a resolution that the association endorse the committee report favoring a tractor. Edward Brault was the only one recorded against the resolution.

Mayor Miller then discussed rumors that he was attending banquets as the guest of corporation officials, and said he was doing his duty as he saw it and shall so continue. He said he believed in co-operation between city and corporation officials, and that at a conference all had agreed to work for the mutual benefit of all.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB.

Mrs. C. L. Coe entertained the Shakespeare club Wednesday afternoon at her home 137 Billings street, Atlantic. In other words it was a kind of thimble party of the club. While some of the members busied themselves reading Shakespeare, others were busy with the thimble, and it proved to be a delightful afternoon. In addition to these two diversions there was dancing. At the close of the afternoon a dainty lunch was served.

MONOGRAM CLUB DANCE.

The first grand dance of the Monogram Social Club of South Braintree in Alpha hall on Thursday night was well attended by the younger people of that place and Quincy. Modern dances were the program for the entire evening. Music was furnished by Cuff's orchestra, and refreshments were served in Union hall.

The officers of the club are Joseph LaBreck, president; Weston E. Stone, vice president; Clarence E. Niles, secretary; and John Connell, treasurer. The floor was in charge of Clarence Noah and the assistant floor director was W. E. Southwick.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

Secretary Bromley attended a General Secretaries conference in Taunton on Thursday.

The Women's Auxiliary hold their annual meeting this afternoon. The election of officers will take place and the annual reports will be read. The Rummage sale under the auspices of the Auxiliary starts today on Water street ,South Quincy. There have been many generous contributions of clothing, pictures, music, hats, bric-a-brac and household utensils.

The high singles for the week in bowling thus far are 116 by Blanchard and 106 by Hunt.

Indoor shinny is proving to be a very popular game among the members. The game looks very easy to the spectator, but those participating in it find much more strenuous than it looks. The game is played in a heavily constructed box with a partition in the middle. In the partition are two holes about two feet apart, large enough for the hard rubber ball used in the game to go through. At the ends of the box are holes of equal size. By plying hockey sticks in the usual way, the players attempt to put the ball through the goal at the end of the box. Starting with the ball on the top of the partition, the opponents rap off with their hockeys three times and then go to it. To give an idea of the strenuousness of the game, it may be said that after a fellow has played for five minutes he is winded and after ten minutes of play most of the contestants want to get under the shower bath.

New fire escapes have been installed at the rear of the dormitories, with entrances from the attic and both the upper dormitory floors.

The minstrel show rehearsals are going on regularly. There is to be one this evening for the whole cast and announcement will be made regarding the schedule for the balance of the time. The coach is working up some novel features for this production and the participants are taking hold of his ideas very readily. The specialities, tableaux, solos quartet selections, tambourine stunts, monologue, and other parts of the program are being whipped into shape and by the time of the show, May 20, will be smoothed out very nicely. The costumes which are to be introduced will be unusual and the scenes will be sure to please, especially the moonlight and cotton field.

The two-men bowling tournament is in progress and competition for the prizes promised to be keen. Brooks and Sprague look like winners so far, with a 93 average for three strings. Blanchard and A. McFarlane have finished the five strings with an average of 82.3 Other teams are LaRose and Ward, England and R. McFarlane, Sargent and Robertson, Smith and Wesels, Hunt and Kidder, Sullivan and Prescott, Hallowell and Littlefield, Lindberg and Jones.

In the Junior Gym contest the Giants are still well in the lead. The Red Sox who have been trailing in the lead made a good showing this week and are in the running again.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

THE CITY OF GRANITE QUARRYING AND OF SHIPBUILDING

TALK UP QUINCY

BACKED UP BY FACTS

Some Strong Points That Will Stand Repetition

AS A RESIDENTIAL CITY

Rev. A. L. Hudson says—"Of all the cities of the country, Boston stands easily the FIRST in the beauty and variety of its many suburbs; and among them all NONE has so many attractions to offer to the home seeker as OUR OWN QUINCY. Its diversified area, sloping from wooded hill tops with their ocean view over rolling parks and level downs to sweeping shore line of the bay, gives ample scope for each man, according to his taste, to possess the one most desirable building site in ALL THE WORLD."

A WEALTHY CITY

In 1870 Quincy had an assessed valuation of $4,449,500, representing a per capita valuation of $597.89. In 1880 the per capita had increased to $712.21; in 1890 to $817.73; in 1900 to $844.54; in 1910 to $994.33. In 1913 the assessed valuation was $36,716,260, a per capita valuation of OVER $1,000.00. Note the BIG increase in valuation, and the fact that the per capita valuation is nearly TWICE as large. Quincy is 20th in valuation in Massachusetts as well as 20th in population.

RESERVATIONS AND PLAYGROUNDS

Quincy has within its borders MORE in Reservations, Parks and Playgrounds than any other city of Massachusetts. Over 2,600 acres in Metropolitan reservations are in this city, also Merrymount park of 91 acres with a shore front, Faxon park of 27 acres and several ward playgrounds. Dr. Eliot says, "Cities with the most exempt property are the best to live in."

AN EDUCATIONAL CITY

Quincy one of the first to employ a Superintendent of Schools. Under Col. Francis W. Parker our schools obtained a National renown. In 1900 celebrated the 25th anniversary of Col. Parker's election. In 1914 all public school buildings are of brick. Quincy is 8th among the 33 cities in number of grammar school graduates, and 14th in High school graduates when Woodward Institute is included. May honestly be compared with other cities in the Metropolitan district.

QUINCY AN HONORED NAME

It was Rev. Daniel Munro Wilson, a former pastor of the First Parish church, who said:—"Quincy seems the one name congenial to the spirit and history of this locality. Deeprooted in chivalrous Norman life, transplanted here with the first settlers, associated with so much that is fine and high in many who here bore it, and in utterance full and dignified, it tastes of the soil, it seems almost the natural product of environment, and not a title fixed by formal vote. Honored at home, abroad revered, it is a distinction to be called OF QUINCY."

NAMED FOR COL. JOHN QUINCY

"The more the name of Col. John Quincy is scrutinized the more he is exalted. For 21 successive years, that is from 1719 to 1740, he was returned to the House of Representatives with unfailing regularity. His personality, his character and judgment, and his sturdy provincial patriotism so impressed his fellow representatives that they elected him Speaker of the House from 1727 to 1741, a period of 14 years. A tribute from town and Province that stamps him as no common man."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

AS AN INDUSTRIAL CITY

The last census showed Quincy to have more industries per capita than Boston. Quincy has 151—one for every 202 people, while Boston has 2,747, one for every 244 people. The industries of Quincy are large industries and employ 5,371—one out of every six of population —while the industries of Boston employ one out of eleven. The value of Quincy products is unusually high,—$8,082,446 annually, or $273.92 per capita; while the Boston value is $274.89 per capita.

SHIPYARD OF WORLD-WIDE FAME

Builders of battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Dakota and Nevada for the United States government; battleship Rivadavia for the Argentine Republic; submarines for the United States and Japanese navies; also other warships, passenger steamers and freight steamers. Employs about 4000. Has entertained many notables of the United States and foreign countries.

QUARRIES OF QUINCY GRANITE

The standard for excellence among Granites—Increased demand—Quality improving—Inexhaustible rock ribbed mountains—Takes the best polish. Extensively used for memorials both large and small, to be found in all the large cemeteries of the country, the battlefield at Gettysburg, and other battlefields of the Civil War. Bunker Hill Monument is built of Quincy granite; also the First Parish church, Quincy City Hall, and other public buildings.

A POPULAR SEASIDE RESORT

Quincy with its 23 miles of sea-coast has several attractive summer resorts, many now occupied by all-the-year residents. Houghs Neck and Squantum are both parts of Quincy, and all along the shore of Quincy bay between these two peninsulars are resorts of different names—Atlantic beach, Wollaston beach, Quincy Shore reservation, Merrymount, Adams Shore, Post Island, Manet Beach and Great Hill,—also Rock Island, Bethel Beach, Germantown and Quincy Point, all popular for yachting, bathing and cool breezes. The fact that Quincy has four large yacht clubs shows the interest taken in yachting; all these clubs have clubhouses and many yachts enrolled.

MODERN CONVENIENCES

Reference might also be made to our public conveniences:—abundance of Metropolitan water, Metropolitan sewer system, auto fire department, permanent police department, electric lights and gas in all parts of the city, nine electric car routes, good train service, excellent banking facilities, daily and weekly newspapers, city hospital, public library, etc. etc.

A PATRIOTIC CITY

With Adams and Hancock as Revolutionary statesmen Quincy early became distinguished. She sent to the Civil war one of the FIRST companies of MINUTE MEN. The first call of Lincoln was issued unexpectedly April 15, and the next day Co. H, Fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, reported in Boston and left for Fortress Munroe, and was mustered into service April 22. FIRST soldier killed in engagement was from Quincy. Sent 954 men to Civil war although population of town was then only 6,800. Erected a Soldiers Monument as early as 1868. In the war with Spain, a majority of the members of Co. K, Fifth regiment M. V. M., were from Quincy. Flag today honored and revered.

BECAUSE OF ITS REMARKABLE GROWTH

In 1875 Quincy was a small town with a population of less than 10,000. We have not only made rapid gains but we have PASSED SEVERAL OTHER TOWNS AND CITIES in the race. A good index of progress. In 1880 Quincy was 29th in population in Massachusetts; in 1885 we had moved up to 27th place; in 1890 we had jumped to 23d; in 1895 to 22d; in 1905 to 21st; and the last census in 1910 showed us No. 20, with a population of 32,642, which has since been increased to nearly 40,000. A rapidly growing city is always a good place for business.

WOMEN'S CLUBS FLOURISH

Prominent in the civic work and social life of Quincy are its Women's Clubs of earnest, able, self sacrificing women, who esteem it a pleasure to work for the uplift of the city and its people. These include the Quincy Women's Club, Wollaston Women's Club, Squantum Women's Club, Riverside Women's Club, Lady Associates of Houghs Neck, Young Women's Club, King's Daughters, Women's Relief Corp, Quincy Catholic Club, Hospital Aid Association, Day Nursery Association, and many others.

A CITY OF CHURCHES

The number of churches in the city is a surprise to everyone, but with two or three exceptions all are flourishing and doing the work of the Master. There are seven Congregational, including one Swedish and one Finnish; four Catholic; four Methodist, including one Swedish; three Baptists including one Swedish; three Episcopal, including a Swedish Lutheran; two Unitarian, two Presbyterian, two Hebrew, one Universalist, one Christian Science, and other mission churches. Many of these churches are free from debt and constantly making improvements.

MANY GENEROUS BENEFACTORS

Few cities have been so favored as Quincy in endowments which are almost without limit, and meet many requirements: an institute for the education of girls, a City Hospital, including the Rice pavilion and a Nurses' home, two large public parks, a beautiful Public Library building, and funds for schools, charity, etc.

JUST A FEW WORDS HISTORICALLY

While Quincy has so much to talk up without delving in history, she has much in history to make her proud, being the birthplace, home and burial place of two Presidents of the United States; the birthplace of the FIRST Vice President; the birthplace of John Hancock, the bold signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was the FIRST Governor of Massachusetts under the Constitution; the site of the FIRST incorporated Railroad in the United States. The birthplaces of the Presidents are preserved today as show houses, also the Quincy mansion owned by the Colonial Dames, and the Church of the Presidents now known as the First Parish church.

ITS MEN AND WOMEN

High average in personal character of those who make up the population—industrious, ambitious, generous, loyal, patriotic and God fearing.

Carranza Reports Great Successes of His Troops While He Parleyed With Envoys Over Details of Proposals—Hopes to Continue Campaign Until Mexico City Is Taken—O'Shaughnessy Thinks Compromise President and Cabinet Possible—Lives of Ten Americans Threatened—Foster May Be United States Mediator

Washington, May 8.—General Carranza's attitude toward mediation, which temporarily, at least, has eliminated the constitutionalist chief from negotiations aimed at settlement of Mexico's ills, was declared to have been revealed by his official report of a vigorous military campaign marked by significant victories.

His declination to submit his country's internal troubles to preliminaries of mediation was based in part at least on rebel successes in a sweeping southward movement, constitutionalist reprsentatives said.

While Carranza parleyed with the South American envoys over details of their proposals, three powerful forces were hurled against federal strongholds. Reports of the results of the movement Carranza then transmitted to Rafael Zubaran, interior minister in the constitutionalist cabinet, now in Washington.

Many Rebel Successes

Summarized they were: Defeat of 3000 federals at Penazcos, near San Luis Potosi, with the capture of 1800 prisoners and quantities or arms and ammunition.

Capture of Acaponeta, Tepic, 1700 men surrendering. One million rounds of ammunition and quantities of arms taken.

Capture of field guns, artillery and ammunition from fleeing column that evacuated Montery.

The Carranza report did not outline to what extent his forces were opposed, and no casualties on either side were mentioned.

After receipt of his chief's report, Zubaran was emphatic in a forecast that within the next month the rebel armies would be investing Huerta's capital. Villa, with his victorious Torreon veterans, it was believed, would strike next at Saltillo, and in the event of a victory there would hurl his forces at Tampico. Capture of that city would give the constitutionalists a port of entry unaffected by any limited embargo on importation of arms now enforced along the Rio Grande.

Large Rebel Army

Zubaran estimated that more than 40,000 rebel troops were now in the field. He asserted that Zapata's rebels were co-operating with the constitutionalists south of Mexico City.

General belief was expressed that Carranza hoped to continue the campaign until the three powerful forces converged to hammer simultaneously at the gates of Mexico City. To what extent Huerta would be able to combat the proposed advance, and what possible effect it might have on mediation proceedings between the United States and the Mexican federals, were widely discussed.

Events at Tampico

An interesting sidelight on events at Tampico was shown in the report of the American consul there transmitted to the navy department by Rear Admiral Mayo.

"On May 1 the Mexican government announced through General Zaragosa that an armistice had been agreed to by the federal government and the United States and also by the constitutionalists," the report stated.

"The reason for the armistice was given out as on account of mediation. This news was received joyfully and even hopefully by the general public, which appears to be in favor of peace if secured with honor and dignity to the Mexican government. The Americans and their money are sadly missed, and responsible persons would greatly favor a peace arrangement which would permit the wheels of business to run again."

From that report was supposed to have originated rumors that the federals and rebels had arranged a suspension of hostilities about Tampico. Navy department advices state that heavy firing heard near Tampico Tuesday had quieted.

Return of O'Shaughnessy

Former Charge O'Shaughnessy reached Washington and went to the state department for a conference with Secretary of State Bryan.

O'Shaughnessy declined to discuss Mexican affairs pending his report to the secretary of state. He will see President Wilson today.

Asked if he thought it possible for a compromise cabinet and compromise president to be established in Mexico pending settlement of the difficulties there, O'Shaughnessy replied in the affirmative.

Ten Americans In Peril

Ten members of the Smith family in jail at Tonala, Chiapas, are in danger of their lives because of Mexican resentment of their part in the recent killing of three Mexicans at San Pedro, according to a report from Minister Leavell in Guatemala.

The Mexicans were members of a rural guard and invaded the Smith home at San Pedro to disarm the occupants. In the fight which ensued the Mexicans were worsted, but the Americans were later arrested.

The whereabouts of Consul Silliman of Saltillo remains a mystery. The department had no answer to its "tracers" sent out three days ago, but it will continue in its efforts to find him.

Secretary of War Garrison denied that Funston is under any orders to send soldiers to the relief of Consul Silliman at San Luis Potosi.

"The Silliman matter has been taken up in no way with this department, and such an expedition would not come under Funston's discretionary powers," he said.

Consul Schmutz, jailed recently at Aguas Calientes, reported from Houston, Tex. Consular Agent Montague reopened the agency at Cananea. The mines there are resuming and some Americans are returning.

Foreign Nations Thanked

The United States warmly thanked Great Britain, France and Germany for the assistance rendered by their naval officers in getting American refugees out of Mexico. On their own initiative they went into places where it was easy to start trouble and brought our citizens to safety.

Foster May Be Mediator

It as reported in diplomatic circles that John W. Foster, former secretary of state, is being considered among others to represent this country in the Mexican mediation proceedings.

Foster, who is 78 years old, is the father-in-law of Robert Lansing, counsellor of the state department. He was long connected with the diplomatic service, representing this country in Mexico, Spain and Russia and in various treaty negotiations. He is widely known as an authority on international law and was secretary of state during President Harrison's administration. He is a native of Indiana, but has made Washington his home for years.

NEWS OF IMPORTANCE

Garrison Will Not Reveal Contents of Cablegram From Funston

Washington, May 8.—Upon receiving a long cipher cablegram from General Funston at Vera Cruz late last night, Secretary Garrison called into conference at the war department Major General Wotherspoon, chief of staff, and the entire general staff of the army. No intimation as to the nature of the dispatch was made public.

The conference lasted until nearly midnight and when Garrison finally left his office he would make no announcement. He and the army officers wore grave faces and it was no secret that news of importance had been received.

SLAUGHTER IS FEARED

Possibility of Rebel Excesses Causes Mexican Refugees to Worry

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 8.—Hundreds of Mexicans, convinced that their lives would be forfeited if they remained in the capital until the arrival there of Francisco Villa and Emiliano Zapata, are reaching Vera Cruz daily.

Unless they greatly exaggerate the fright that has been occasioned by the approach of the rebels to the capital the problem of caring for a congested native population within the American lines will soon be added to the work of Funston and his officers.

Among the Mexicans arriving at Vera Cruz numbers have already been forced to abandon their homes in towns which have fallen into the hands of the rebels. They declare they have witnessed scenes after the rebel victories which determined them not to go through anything more of a similar nature.

It is declared by some of the refugees that Villa probably will have with him not only Zapata but also thousands of the lower-class element in Mexico City. Villa, they point out, has made no secret of the fact that he has prepared a long list of those selected for death in case he should reach the capital, while Zapata for a long time has boasted that not only Huerta and his official family but hundreds of others would have to die when he came to the capital.

Zapata once sent word to the capital that he would set up a guillotine in the square in front of the national palace and accumulate there a pile of the most aristocratic heads in the city. It is said Zapata's vengeance appears to be directed largely against the wealthier classes.

ORDER TO RUSH SUPPLIES

Permanent Field Equipment and Rations For Funston's Forces

Galveston, Tex., May 8.—Rush orders from Washington were received through second division headquarters at Texas City to send a large quantity of permanent field equipment to Vera Cruz. Work of loading the converted transport Satilla was begun immediately.

The Satilla also will carry a month's supply of rations for General Funston's troops, and will sail at once.

COULD DO NOTHING ELSE

Commander of Federal Forces at Mazatlan Surrenders to Rebels

Los Angeles, Cal., May 8.—Mazatlan, the Mexican west coast city, surrendered to the constitutionalists, according to a dispatch received by Adolfo Carillo, Carranza's representative in this city.

There was still fighting, the dispatch added, General Guerera driving a part of the federal garrison toward the waterfront.

General Tellez, the federal commander, sent word to the constitutionalists that he could do nothing but surrender.

POLICE SAVE GIRLS FROM SUFFOCATION

Rescue by Dashing Through Flames and Smoke

Lynn, Mass., May 8.—Two patrolmen rescued Miss Julia Anderson, 20, and Miss Judith Arderson, 19, this morning, when the young women were trapped in their rooms by a $45,000 fire in the Dine building at 9 Monroe street.

Dashing through stairways filled with flames and smoke, the patrolmen, John Burnett and Fred Hanson, went to the aid of the girls as soon as they learned of their danger, and brought them back through the perilous passages to the street.

Both young women were overcome by smoke, but their condition is not serious. The patrolmen escaped serious injury.

The Dine building is a four-story wooden structure. On the second floor are several rooms occupied by the Swedish Christian association. Two of the rooms were occupied by the Misses Anderson and Arderson, who were the only persons in the society's rooms when the fire broke out.

The fire started on the top floor and worked down through the building, destroying the contents.

YIELD TO EMPLOYES

Boston and Maine Officials Will Not Change Working Hours

Boston, May 8.—The controversy that has extended over several weeks between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen and the Boston and Maine railroad came to a close when Boston and Maine officials gave in almost unconditionally to the demands of the workers that the engineers and firemen shall not work more than ten hours a day.

Several weeks ago the railroad requested the engineers and firemen to change their working schedules so that they could work a few hours more a week than the schedule calls for. This the engineers and firemen refused to do, saying that, as it is, they are overworked.

SPORT NEWS

Brockton may play Fore River in Quincy on May 16 in a Williamson cup game. Definite announcement has not been made.

The Quincy A. A. will put a base ball team on the diamond this season but because of the assignment of park dates it is probable that most of their games will be out of town. Monkey Woods and Con Duggan are available as pitchers and Ray McDonald as a catcher. Bull Moose Brown who is at present playing with the Orients of South Quincy may be secured for the outer garden and Ted Galvin who was obliged to withdraw from Fred Lake's. Fitchburg lineup because of injuries to his feet has also agreed to play. Others are Ed Hoyt, Mil Chapman, Fred Erickson and Mathew Cummings. The opening game may be at Wakefield on May 16.

The soccer devotees of this city are arranging a game between the Fore River team and the boys representing the Bethlehem Steel Co., of Bethlehem, Pa. The negotiations have reached the stage where it can be said that the game will be played in this city. The Bethlehem team is affiliated with the American Football Association and played in the recent American cup series. Last summer their management made several overtures to local men to join their squad but only two accepted. The date of the game will be decided upon this week.

Patsy Duggan, who was with Memphis, Ten., in the Southern league has signed with the Haverhill team of the New England league and is covering first sack.

John Byron, considered one of the fastest short stops south of Boston, and a terror with the willow, is playing with the New England Trust Co. team. Chris Barry, brother of George Barry of the Lowell team, is in the outfield.

Brittinham who did the box work for the Makarias for several seasons is pitching for the Baraca class of Winthrop.

Frank Hoyt has gone to Taunton in the New Colonial league.

Quincy men claim the Campello team forfeited their game in Trolley league schedule when they failed to appear at Merrymount Park on Thursday. They say the previous arrangements did not hold because of arrangements made last Wednesday.

Cranch, 7; Montclair, 1.
Hancock, 4; Wollaston, 4.

MAY PARTY AT WOLLASTON

The annual May party of the American Benefit society was held with great success in Odd Fellows hall, Wollaston, on Thursday evening.

The evening opened with an address by Supreme President William Towle, who welcomed those present and gave an extended description of the workings of the order.

After a brief speech, Deputy Mrs. M. Morey Pearson, on behalf of the order, presented a beautiful bouquet of carnations to Mrs. L. W. Taylor.

As the day marked the thirty-second wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, and a certain birthday of Mrs. Taylor, the society took this means of calling attention to the event.

A large number of pretty May baskets containing enough lunch for two were auctioned off by Samuel Hanson. The various baskets found heavy bidders among the young men, and after the auction was over the couples sat down to enjoy the good things.

Refreshments of coffee and ice cream augmented the repast, and tables of whist completed the evening. Prizes were won by the following: Mrs. E. J. Thompson received the first prize, a fern dish; Howard B. Abbott second prize, a thermos bottle; Mrs. L. W. Taylor third prize, a berry set and Miss Beulah W. Collett fourth rize, a chocolate set.

In charge of the evening was an entertainment commitee consisting of Welcome G. Young, H. W. Hatfield, Mrs. Fred Bent, Mrs. W. G. Young and Mrs. Harry A. Collett.

BILL SUBTITUTED

agreement signed by the Massachusetts Railroad Commission, the railroad and the city officials of Quincy, and the decree recommended the elevation of tracks as the best method to relieve Quincy of its difficulties. The track would not be elevated at Quincy station more than one foot and he believed when elevation was completed the people would be satisfied.

CHARLESTOWN AN EXAMPLE

Representative Peter Tague of Charlestown, a member of the Committee on Railroads, and Democratic floor leader of the house, said the Mayor of Quincy favored a depression of tracks until one eventful day, when he suddenly came to a change of mind. The reasons for his acceptance of the elevation plans are unknown to me, but I stand, and I believe the people of Quincy stand, for the depression of tracks. The people of Charlestown had an elevated structure thrust upon them, and from the very day it was completed they began to experience financial losses. Real estate has flunked in value, there is no market for it where an elevated structure is reared in the streets and the trains go rumbling past. Not only on the proposition of Quincy but on all propositions, I am against the elevation of tracks.

Representative Ellis asked him if it was not true that at Quincy the tracks would be raised one foot and Representative Tague answered, I do not know the accurate measurement, but I do know that there will be elevation from one end of the city to the other. Representative Tague said, it has been said that the people whose property is damaged will be paid sufficiently by the railroad. That is not a true statement of fact. The damage does not come until long after the railroad has been built.

I have been informed that a man who was appointed chief assessor of Quincy by the Mayor of Quincy, who said he appointed him chief assessor because he was the most competent man in the city, was discharged by the Mayor on the very night that the assessor appeared before the committee on railroads and dared to express his opinion in favor of depression of tracks.

I am also informed that this subject has been an issue in Quincy for years and that when petitions were circulated through the city approximately 1000 people registered their approval of depression and less than 250 favored elevation.

Rep. Victor Jewett of Lowell of the Committee on Railroads said he hoped the committee report would be accepted. He said the people of Quincy evidently did not know what they wanted, and are divided on the proposition, and that the city government and the legislature members were divided on the proposition.

Rep. Tague arose and said, I understand that shortly after the Mayor of Quincy first manifested his approval of the elevation scheme that the City Council passed a voted of censure.

The bill of Representative Sullivan was then substituted for the adverse report. If passed by the Legislature it will be referred to the voters of Quincy.

Overseer of the Poor Perry Green has charge of the landscape gardening that is being done at the Fore River shipyard, and a good job he is doing.

RHODE ISLAND WOMAN TELLS OF HEALTH MIRACLE THAT SAVED HER

Mrs. Clare Shaw of Norwood Used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

Mrs. Clare Shaw of 21 Majestic Avenue, Norwood, R. I., was a sufferer from stomach and liver troubles for many years. She was treated both in the United States and abroad. She underwent an operation. Still she suffered.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and found swift relief. In a letter telling of her case she said:

"I received your sample treatment the day before Christmas and it saved my life, for I was almost gone. I had an inflammation that got right up in my throat and seemed to choke me. My neighbors say it is a miracle, as they know how I suffered. I am better now than I have been for 20 years."

This remarkable health story is like those told in thousands of other letters from users of this wonderful remedy in all parts of the country. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

AUTO ACCIDENT.

A Ford auto, owned and operated by Francis Morrison of 98 Goddard street was badly damaged when it struck a pole on Brooks avenue on Thursday night. The accident occurred while the machine was rounding the corner of Trafford street. Mr. Morrison was thrown forward and sustained a slight shaking up. The front axle of the auto snapped, and the front of the machine was smashed. It was taken to the Wollaston Centre Garage for repairs.

BILL MUST PASS OTHER STAGES

Hopes of Quincy People Revived on the Grade Crossing Issue

Mayor Miller Considered the Question Settled

The principal topic of conversation throughout the city Friday evening and this morning was the substitution of a bill for depression of the railroad in the abolition of grade crossings in Quincy.

Mayor Miller when asked last night what he thought of the grade crossing bill, which he had endeavored to withdraw, said that he had not as yet read what had taken place. He, however, said, t at if the original bi l should become a law, it would probably result in the question being sent back to the special commission, and a delay of some years before the much needed improvement was accomplished.

However, said the Mayor, the bill has not as yet passed the Senate and he doubted very much if that body would pass the bill, in view of what had already taken place.' The Mayor promised to read th report of doings at the State House, as printed in the Daily Ledger, and said he might have something to say on the matter later.

Mayor Miller this morning said he considered the question as having been settled when he signed the decree plan, and that he felt no more uneasiness about the matter than at the beginning.

The bill will have to pass through two more readings successfully, the third one will probably be reached next Monday or Tuesday.

Representative Michael T. Sullivan who secured the substitution said this morning that if the decree plan is wrong now, nothing but the legislature can remedy it as that body is the last resort. As a representative of the citizens of Quincy I want them to have a referendum vote as I believe they have the right to say what they want.

Gustave B. Bates, who has been the leader for depression said he believed that the motion for substitution never would have been passed if it had not been for the gallant and uphill fight of Michael T. Sullivan who with all interests against the bill secured substitution. There is nothing too laudable he says to be said of Representative Sullivan.

THE HOODOOS AT DINNER

Entertained by Councilman and Mrs. Ross

The people who recently produced "The Hoodoo" for the Loyal Ladies of Clan MacGregor at Music hall were entertained last evening at the home of Councilman and Mrs. Charles Ross, 98 Independence avenue.

The bad luck which followed the possessor of "The Hoodoo" was not in evidence last night. All present appeared to think that they were in great good luck, and acted accordingly and a splendid time was the result.

Mrs. Ross, who is president of the Loyal Ladies, thanked the cast for their efforts in making "The Hoodoo" the great success it was on April 20, assuring them that her organization greatly appreciated what they had done.

A collation was served, then dancing, singing and story telling was in order. J. Hilton Marr and William Prevost alternated in officiating at the piano.

Songs were given by Everett Clark, J. Ernest Collins and Mrs. Florence Robbie.

Those present were Misses Georgie Michael, Ethel M. Schools, M. Dorothy Giles, Margaret E. McIntosh, Annie E. Rose Mary S. Summers. Mrs. Elizabeth E. Russell, Mrs. Jennie M. Campbell, Mrs. Jennie M. Steinbrenner, Mrs. Mary A. Smith, and Mrs. Florence L. Robbie. Messrs Everett M. Clark, Thomas A, McLay, Charles E. Bishop, C. George McDonald, Wm. H. Walker and J. Ernest Collins.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross were assisted in entertaining their guests by Miss Gurdy, Miss Leighton, Miss Joss, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McLennan and Mrs. Julia Dawson.

The party did not break up until an early hour in the morning, all having had an excellent time.

The funeral of George L. Tytler will be held Sunday afternoon at 2.30 from his late residence at 17 Trafford street. Relatives and friends are invited.

ENTERTAINMENT AND DANCE

Young Women's Club Present the Blossom Family

The Quincy Young Women's Club observed gentlemen's night with an entertainment and dancing party in Alpha hall on Friday evening, and although the rain fell heavily early in the evening there was an audience present that comfortably filled the hall.

In the entertainment given the first part of the evening, the young women presented the members of the Blossom family, discussing ways and means to secure money to pay off the mortgage on their home and their success after taking up the stage.

The family included Miss Hannah Sandberg, Miss Lora Churchill, Miss Rose Swartz, Miss Etta Grossman, Miss Lydia Djerf, Miss Sadie Berman, Miss Mildred Martin, Miss May Knapp, Miss Mary Shea, Miss Sadie Abrams and Miss Ruth Farmer. All were handsomely costumed.

Their life on the stage, taken by different young ladies was depicted as folows: Romeo and Juliet—Miss Blanche Hayden as Romeo and Miss Edith Mullin as Juliet; Miss Ruth Dahl as the moon, and Miss Yvonne Bouchard as song, Miss Sadie Abrams as a monologist, Miss Lora Churchill as a vocal soloist, Miss Lydia Djerf in a short talk entitled "Advice to Women," Miss Blanche Hayden and Miss Mary Shea as LaSauterell, Miss Ruth Farmer and Miss Ruth Dahl in the minuet, and Miss Yvonne Bouchard as a vocal soloist.

The program was given under the direction of Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney who was presented with a magnificent bouquet. Miss Sadie Abrams was presented with three bouquests of roses, jonquils and other flowers.

The matrons of the evening were Mrs. George S. Pfaffmann, Mrs. Herbert Lawton and Mrs. Herbert Emery. After the entertainment they held a short reception and dancing was enjoyed until midnight.

DISTRICT COURT.

Joseph Jordan came into court and paid his fine of $50 for violation of the liquor law at Braintree.

The continued case of Harry Bond for larceny at Weymouth was called and again continued until July 1.

Clayton D. Harvey was fined $10 costs for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

Quincy lodge of Elks is planning to celebrate Flag day in June with a flag raising. The committee having the affair in charge are arranging an elaborate program.

CIVIL SERVICE A FARCE

State Commission May Take a Hand in Quincy

It is understood that the time for which Thomas Cahill was appointed as Acting Assistant Commissioner of Public Works expires today, and there is considerable speculation as to the outcome.

At the civil service examination held some weeks ago, three were successful in passing, and if the civil service laws are enforced one of these three will have to be appointed. It was reported some days ago that one of the three who had passed the examination had declined to accept the position, but this is now denied and all three are looking for the job. The three successful men were John J. O'Brien, Michael T. Shea and Martin Heaney.

It was reported this morning that the Mayor had sent a petition to the Civil Service Commission setting forth that Mr. Cahill was a competent man, and asking for a hearing that cause might be shown why he should not be retained in the position. No answer however has as yet been received to this request.

On the other hand it is reported that parties have been to the Civil Service Commission in relation to the men who passed the examination, and have stated that Civil service in Quincy at the present time is a farce, and have asked for an investigation of the reason that certain officials have been removed, for apparently political reasons.

Another report says that the Civil Service Commissioners are considerably aroused over affairs in Quincy, and that the matter is to be brought to a head by the commission, and the rules lived up to or court proceedings may ensue. It seems as though there might be something doing soon.

Charles J. Edwards, son of Stephen and the late Ellen Edwards of Newhall street, Atlantic, died Thursday. His funeral will be held from his home at one o'clock Sunday.

MR. LOCAL MERCHANT IS IT A SQUARE DEAL?

It is not surprising that Quincy merchants complain of hard times. On every hand there is prosperity in the city—new comers every week, new houses, new enterprises and activity, but Quincy merchants generally are short-sighted and allow Quincy people to do much of their trading in Boston and with mail order houses. They are jealous of each other, and resort to cheap methods, often misrepresentations. They criticise each other, and do not help to build up local enterprises and industries.

If the Daily Ledger depended on local merchants for success it would have folded its tent and vacated the field long ago, but merchants come and go, while the Quincy Daily Ledger has prospered for over 25 years. Many merchants of a few years ago are not in business here today. They have gone into bankruptcy or closed out their business. People knew but little about them as they seldom advertised in the local newspapers. Some of them threw away lots of money on flyers and other schemes, failing to recognize the fact that newspaper advertising has the greatest value and costs less.

Possibly it may seem egotistical, but nevertheless the Quincy Daily Ledger presents the best medium of publicity in the city. It has the circulation and the readers in all parts of the city. It continually surprises the people by presenting so many columns daily of local happenings of interest. It is up-to-minute, as shown by the report yesterday of the State House debate on the grade crossing bill. Its columns are clean, and it is working always for the best interests of the city; for home trade and better business conditions.

When merchants can secure advertising in the Daily Ledger at fifteen cents per inch and less they should not find it necessary to resort to unfair methods. Western towns are always anxious to have newspapers established, and often give them financial encouragement, but in Quincy they are not disposed to give a newspaper a fair show.

The Daily Ledger has been taken to task by publishers in other Massachusetts cities for quoting as low a rate as fifteen cents, and Editor Decker called it "cut-rate advertising," saying his prices would continue at 50 cents, 35 cents and 25 cents.

Five dollars a week will secure a large "Ad" every day in the Ledger, and $5 for Daily Ledger advertising is worth $10 expended in any flyer or other scheme. The so-called Merchants' Association is sailing under false colors when it pretends to be a part of the Board of Trade. The Board of Trade also is open to criticism when it allows solicitors of advertising to say that they represent the Board of Trade. At a recent meeting of merchants, a majority of those present were not members of the Board of Trade.

A FEW QUESTIONS

Mr. Local Merchant, we would like to ask you a few questions, in all sincerity:

Do you expect to do ALL your business in one day each week? It would seem so.

Do you desire to have the news of the city published weekly or daily? Perhaps you desire to go back to the good old town government.

Do you realize that Quincy is growing remarkably fast, and that many new-comers do not know the location of your store.

Can you blame Quincy people if they accept the invitation of Boston merchants, and trade with them. Have you invited people to trade with you? Have you convinced them that you can give as good bargains as they can get in Boston?

Are you taking advantage of your opportunities and giving your Daily Newspaper a Square Deal? The Daily Ledger is read each day by over 12,000 people, and not usually the same 12,000. Probably 20,000 different people read the Ledger each week. Certainly this is an excellent medium of publicity.

Do you realize that housekeepers take little stock in flyers that litter the streets and lawns, and are seldom read if they get into the houses?

Do you realize that a newspaper "Ad" has a much better standing in a community than a flyer?

IN CLOSING

Yet, but, however, nevertheless, notwithstanding, the fact remains that every day is "bargain day" at the stores that advertise in the Daily Ledger. Reason: the proprietors know that they are addressing intelligent and discriminating people when they advertise their goods through the Ledger. Those who want good goods at fair prices read our advertisements and only those who sell good goods at fair prices avail themselves of the publicity afforded by our extensive and admittedly desirable circulation. It is a matter of plain logic, which any one can comprehend. Those who use our advertising columns say by their actions to those who don't, "Come in; the water is fine."

President Powell of the Fore River Company is entitled to the co-operation of the people of Quincy as he undertakes the task of putting his big plant on a paying basis. Prosperity in the shipyard means increased prosperity for many of our citizens. That fact should be borne in mind by the City Council, the Board of Trade, the press and all who are in a position to hinder or help this great industry. There is no reason why, if given a fair chance, the new president can't get lots of business, pay adequate wages, and earn fair dividends for the stockholders. Let us all do whatever we properly can to enable him to accomplish these things.

If the Boy Scout movement tends to break up street corner gangs and turn them into industrious, self-respecting and law-abiding citizens, as undoubtedly it does, it is entitled to the moral and financial support of the people of Quincy and will receive such support just as fast and as largely as it proves deserving of it. A similar movement for the reclamation of the young girls who are walking our streets at late hours of the night would fill a long felt want. Any agency or influence that helps save our young people from lives of idleness and vice should receive and will receive a proper degree of encouragement and support.

We have no desire to discourage initiative or enterprise on the part of men of small capital, but the frequency with which home builders find the contractor obliged to abandon the job leaving the house uncompleted and with a string of attachments and mechanics liens attached suggests advising that contracts for house building be let only to builders who are possessed of means or enjoy good credit. The Board of Trade might well prepare and keep on file a list of approved contractors for the information and guidance of people who intend to build. Builders who have no money or credit would do better to work by the day. It would be better for the owners and workmen if they did so, and it would eventually prove better for themselves.

YESTERDAY AND TODAY.

I met you yesterday, and for an hour
Faith, hope and joy seemed sure;
So sure they seemed their memory holds power
For every heartache's cure.

Just now we came again the selfsame way
To find the joy all fled
And the good promise of the earlier day
Irrevocably dead.

Two strangers, alien eyed, we strive in vain
With words we cannot say;
For leagues and centuries have rent in twain
Yesterday and today.
—Alice Felicita Corey in Century.

SOLITUDE.

Little do men perceive what solitude is and how far it extendeth, for a crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures and talk but a tinking cymbal, where there is no love.—Bacon.

There is no such thing as solitude nor anything that can be said to be alone and by itself but God, who is his own circle and can subsist by himself.—Sir Thomas Browne.

Solitude is the nurse of enthusiasm, and enthusiasm is the true parent of genius. In all ages solitude has been called for—has been flown to.—Isaac Disraeli.

There is always a part of our being into which those who are dearer to us far more than our own lives are yet unable to enter.—Froude.

Nature has presented us with a large faculty of entertaining ourselves alone and often calls us to it, to teach us that we owe ourselves in part to society, but chiefly and mostly to ourselves. —Montaigne.

EXPEDITION TO TO MEXICO CITY

Funston to Have 65,000 Men Should It Become Necessary

VIOLATION OF THE ARMISTICE

Charged by Huerta, Who Protests Against Our Operations at Vera Cruz—Our Forces Have Right, However, to Meet Military Movements of Mexicans—Rebel Victory Reported 300 Miles South of Torreon—Mediators Said to Be Hopeful of Settlement—Daniels Replies to Complaints Against Our Policy

Washington, May 9.—General Funston, the man on the spot at Vera Cruz, has urgently requested more men for the proper protection of Vera Cruz and for the eventuality that a quick march on Mexico City becomes necessary.

The question of placing a large force of Americans in Vera Cruz that would be strong enough to defend that port against any attack, or to undertake a possible campaign against Mexico City, was laid before the president and his cabinet by Secretary of War Garrison.

While details of the dispatch from Funston which stirred the general staff of the army into a conference after a hurry call have not yet been given out, Garrison said it contained reports to Funston by refugees from Mexico City. Garrison said no aggressive movement of any kind by the American forces has been ordered, yet it was known that high officials of the war department are anxious to station at Vera Cruz, or on ships within striking distance of that port, a force powerful enough to make a swift descent on Mexico City, if that should become necessary.

Army officers feared the situation at Vera Cruz might become desperate in the event of an anarchistic outbreak in Mexico City, or should the federal forces hovering beyond Funston's outposts launch an attack, irrespective of Huerta's declaration of a truce with the United States.

Bluejackets could be landed to reinforce the 7000 troops and marines under Funston, if there should be a federal attack. They could easily hold the city proper, it is believed, but to protect positions outside the town, up to the site of the waterworks, more infantry is believed to be required.

Request Is Granted

Late last night Garrison announced that transports were being made ready at Galveston to carry reinforcements immediately to Funston. This is the first definite admission by the secretary of war that conditions at Vera Criz are serious and that there is a possibility of the United States being forced to conduct an expedition to Mexico City. It is expected that both artillery and cavalry will go on the first transports.

The plans of the war college provide for a force of 65,000 men for the invasion of Mexico City. More than 11,000 members of the coast artillery are to go as infantry. The feeling that Huerta is getting ready to drop mediation and the massing of the federal forces under General Maas, coupled with the open hostility of the dictator's supporters, is responsible for the sending of additional troops.

General Funston now has about 7000 troops in Vera Cruz, while it is reported that Maas can marshal close to 10,000 troops at Soledad, Palma and Jalapa. All reports of conditions at Vera Cruz have either been suppressed or censored by Garrison.

The United States will in all probability be forced to seize and occupy Puerto Mexico in order to prevent the landing at that point by German ships of a large cargo of arms and ammunition intended for the federal army.

The news that there is a big consignment of arms headed for that port and consigned to Huerta at Mexico City came to Secretary of the Navy Daniels. Admiral Badger at Vera Cruz was instructed to investigate and report immediately.

A Protest From Huerta

On top of the request of Funston comes a protest from General Huerta, who characterizes our military measures at Vera Cruz as a violation of the armistice agreed to pending mediation.

Huerta's contention that our operations at Vera Cruz, conducted for the purpose of insuring the protection of the city and its water supply, are a violation of the armistice, falls to the ground technically when it is understood that there is no formal signed agreement to cease hostilities and actually when it is comprehended that even under a signed agreement one party has a perfect right to take measures to counteract any movements made by the other side.

There seems to be no question that the Mexicans have been gradually reinforcing their troops before Vera Cruz and pushing them in closer about the city. Twice since the alleged armistice the Mexicans have even demanded the surrender of the waterworks by the Americans.

Report of Rebel Victory

Secretary Bryan hears that the rebels have taken San Luis Potosi, more than 300 miles south of Torreon. It seems incredible that Villa's troops have had time to get into fighting position before the city. There have been rebel forces near Zacatecas, 100 miles northwest of the place, and there are rebels before Tampico, 200 miles away.

If San Luis Potosi has fallen it must have been evacuated by the federals without much of a fight and to a comparatively small force.

Mediators Still Hopeful

In spite of everything, however, the mediators are reported hopeful of a settlement not only of the Tampico incident but of all of the difficulties disturbing Mexico.

The mediators proceeded steadily with the program for their conference with representatives of the Huerta government and the United States at Niagara Falls, Can., May 18. It is said thatdespite thes elf-elimination of Carranza from mediation preliminaries, the rebel side of the situation will be taken up in plans for Mexico's pacification.

Daniels Answers Complaints

Essentials of the American policy in Mexico, up to the present time, were reiterated in a statement by Secretary Daniels replying to complaints against the withdrawal of United States warships from the river at Tampico, and to criticism of the department's refusal to take some refugees back to Tampico after they had been removed from the danger zone. The statement declared that the department had considered as its pre-eminent duty the prevention of loss of life and the rescue of foreigners and Americans in peril.

The protection of property beyond range of the navy's guns was next to impossible, the statements declared, "but as far as has been possible the navy has endeavored to cool the enthusiasm of an excited populace by the sight of the visible power for reprisal that is displayed by the guns of our warships lying as they are today in practically every port on the east and west coasts."

Mexican People Our Friends

"The United States and Mexico have friendly and peaceful relations which not only the constitutionalists but the vast majority of the people of Mexico propose to firmly maintain. Such relations should not be affected by the acts of Huerta, since they do not voice the real sentiment of the nation."

This is the substance of a statement by Rafael Zubaran, constitutionalist representative here, made public by the state department.

The Memphis and Macon are the first boats plying to Boston to be taken by the government for war service, and so peremptory were the orders that a critical situation is indicated.

High tension marked the Mexican situation in Washington on Friday, both on the diplomatic and military sides, the War department being the chief center of activity. WOODWARD GIRLS.

While in Washington recently Horace W. RRce of the Woodward Institute and the editor of an Ohio paper became god friends. Here are some editorial comments from the Wyandot Union-Democrat of interest to Quincy:

"In one or two of my Washington chats I told of the custom of New England teachers and pupils making pilgrimages to Washington during the month of April. It is becoming a great and interesting fad and is destined to spread all over the country. The number that came to Washington this year broke all records and the hotels were filled to the brim the entire month.

"During my stay at the Winston there were numerous New England parties, but the one that made the most favorable impression was that from the Woodward Institute, Quincy Mass., in charge of their principal, Prof. Horace W. Rice, and Mrs. Rice. There were twenty-two in the party, all charming young ladies and each and every one born in Quincy.

"I had several interesting conversations with Mr. Rice and found him a very entertaining gentleman. A better looking, more becomingly attired or more decorous party than that from the Woodward Institute would be hard to imagine and Quincy and Mr. Rice are to be congratulated."

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC.

Because of numerous requests the owners of "The Prescott Apartments" at 35 Spear street have decided to open the house for inspection Sunday afternoon from 2 until 4 o'clock. Their old neighbors and friends on Spear street or any others wishing to go over the house, will be welcome to do so at that time, unless the day be stormy. These steam heated kitchenette apartments are proving attractive and are renting so rapidly that Sunday will probably be the only time the house can be open for public inspection.

FIREMENS BILL KILLED.

In the Senate Friday the so called two-platoon bill for the firemen was killed by a vote of 16 to 5. The bill provided that the fire department of cities should be divided into two platoons, one for day duty and one for night duty. The bill was passed by the house and sent to the senate. Had the bill become a law it would have obliged every city to about double its present fire department, and would have entailed considerable additional expense.

HELD IN $15,000 EACH

Lawyer and Wife Are Charged With Mail Fraud Conspiracy

Boston, May 9.—On a complaint of being fugitives from justice from New York, Francis H. Griffin, an attorney, and his wife, Clara H., were held by United States Commissioner Hayes in $15,000 each for the United States court in New York.

Both are under indictment in the federal court at New York on the charge of conspiracy to defraud by use of the mails. It is set forth that they secured large amounts of money from various persons on the representation that it would be invested by Mrs. Griffin in carrying out contracts for stenographic work with the United States government in relation to trust suits.

By numerous letters, of which copies are made a part of the indictments, both defendants claimed that large profits would accrue to the lenders, and as a matter of fact very little was returned to parties making the loan.

The husband has an office in New York. Both appear to be prosperous. They were arrested at the Groton Inn at Ayer, Mass., and brought to Boston.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE.

The regular monthly meeting of the new directors of the Massachusetts Retail Grocers' and Provision Dealers' Association was held at the Copley Plaza hotel, Boston, Thursday afternoon. The meeting was followed by a dinner in the evening at which the wives of the members were guests. Henry W. Mansfield of Central street was re-elected secretary and treasurer of the association. This will be the fourth year of his service in the same capacity. Mrs. C. A. Sullivan of this town presided at the piano after the banquet was served and charmed the guests by her musical selections. A pleasant social time with vocal and instrumental music rounded out a pleasant evening. There were thirty present.

By special request the 700 foot moving picture reel which portrays the tenth annual convention of the association which was held in Quincy, April 15th, will be given in Kincaide's theatre, Quincy, next Thursday afternoon. The films show many of our local grocers and should prove interesting. Grocers from different parts of the state are making arrangements to be present.

Next Friday, Henry W. Mansfield secretary and treasurer, F. W. Mendum, of Roxbury, president of the Mass. Association, together with Mr. Ames of Rockland, president of the Old Colony Association will leave for Louisville, Kentucky, to attend the National convention.

COURT IN ERROR IN NINE POINTS

Claim of New York State In the Case of Thaw

FORMALLY FILES ITS APPEAL

Decision Sustaining Prisoner's Petition For Writ of Habeas Corpus Transferred to United States Supreme Court—Matter of Bail May Be Soon Taken Up With High Court

Concord, N. H., May 9.—The state of New York filed its appeal from the decision of Judge Aldrich of the United States district court for the district of New Hampshire, sustaining the petition of Harry K. Thaw for a writ of habeas corpus, and the case was immediately transferred to the United States supreme court.

The petition for an appeal was presented by Bernard Jacobs, the New Hampshire representative of William T. Jerome in the proceeding, and Thaw was represented by several of his counsel.

There was little of formality in the proceedings. Aldrich signed the order for the release of Thaw from custody under his decision.

Jacobs then presented the petition of New York for an appeal to the United States supreme court, and this was granted by Aldrich.

The appeal contends that the court erred in nine points, namely:

In holding that Thaw was not substantially charged with crime under art. IV., sec. 2, par. 2 of the United States constitution.

In holding that the process under which Thaw was held was not due process of law.

In holding that the extradition warrant issued by Governor Felker was illegal, invalid and unwarranted.

In holdig that upon the whole record the case does not come within the provisions of the constitution relating to extradition.

In not holding that Thaw was legally in custody under the extradition warrant.

In not dismissing the writ of habeas corpus and in not remanding Thaw to the proper custody for extradition to New York, and Because upon the whole record the habeas corpus writ should have been dismissed, the extradition warrant sustained and Thaw remanded to the proper custody for extradition to New York.

The petition for a writ of habeas corpus was granted by Aldrich April 14, but the issuance of the order was withheld to allow an appeal to be taken to the United States supreme court.

With the appeal filed and allowed it is probable that Thaw's counsel will soon take up the matter of bail with Judge Holmes of the supreme court. While Aldrich, in his opinion, declared he had a right to admit the fugitive to bail, he failed to do so on the ground that Thaw was to pass out from under his jurisdiction and it was only right that that matter should be determined by the court to which custody he was transferred.

Pending the disposition of the appeal, or until such time as bail may be allowed, Thaw will remain in his present custody at the Eagle hotel.

CONSIDERED TOP HEAVY

War Department's Estimate of the Bay State Militia

Boston, May 9.—Bay State troops may be entirely eliminated by the war department unless drastic measures are adopted immediately to put the two brigades on a footing that will come up to the requirements of congress.

This notice is contained in a communication sent to Governor Walsh by Assistant Secretary of War Breckenbridge, who declares the Massachusetts militia is top heavy because of the state's failure to bring its military arm up to the war department's requirements. He asks the governor to co-operate in an effort satisfactorily to adjust "existing discrepancies." The letter declares that every state except Massachusetts has complied or announced that it would comply with the department's requirements.

RESPONSIBLE FOR ROSENTHAL'S DEATH

Charge of Whitman Against Becker In Address to Jury

New York, May 9.—The jury which will determine whether Charles Becker, the former police lieutenant and head of the "strong arm squad," conceived the plot that resulted in the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, was completed last evening.

This morning District Attorney Whitman addressed the jury, charging that Becker actually was the "brains" of the conspiracy.

No mention was made of the reported move to have W. B. Cockran, of counsel for Becker, adjudged guilty of contempt of court for a remark attributed to him. He had been quoted in the newspapers as saying "this is not a trial; it is an assassination."

THE BILLARD COMPANY

Witness Testifies That Its Directors Were Composed of Dummies

Washington, May 9.—That John L. Billard was himself the Billard company which took over the New Haven railroad's holding of Boston and Maine stock, and that the directors of the company were only dummies, was shown at the interstate commerce commission's investigation of the New Haven road.

This was brought out in the testimony of Charles F. Linsley of Meriden, that he became director out of friendship for Billard, and that the latter put four shares of the company's stocks in his name.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts

Norfolk, ss. Land Court

J. FREDERICK TRUNDY, Petitioner.

Respectfully represents your petitioner, J. Frederick Trundy, of Boston in our County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that he is the owner in fee of a certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated in Randolph, in our County of Norfolk bounded as follows:—

Westerly on High Street; Northerly on land formerly of the late George L. Binney; Easterly on land formerly of the heirs of Joshua Mann; and Southerly on land formerly of the heirs of Thomas Reed. Containing about one acre of land and being all and the same premises described in deed to me from Thomas Kiley dated August 6, 1913 recorded with Norfolk Deeds, Book 1266, Page 137.

Your petitioner further says that said premises were formerly owned by one Ellen Simpson, now Ellen Howard, then of said Randolph but now of Canton in our said County of Norfolk; that on the 8th day of March, 1870 she, together with her then husband, William H. Simpson, conveyed said property by mortgage deed to one Loring Binney, of said Randolph, which mortgage was duly recorded with Norfolk Deeds Book 390, Page 226 and given to secure the payment of the principal sum of fifty (50) dollars one year from the date thereof with interest at the rate of eight per cent. The property was subsequently conveyed by said Ellen Howard to said Thomas Kilev by deed dated August 30, 1883, recorded as aforesaid Book 549, Page 561.

Your petitioner further says that he and his predecessors in title have been in uninterrupted possession of said premises for more than twenty years after the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the full performance of the condition thereof; and that said mortgage has never been discharged of record and is a cloud on the title.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that this Honorable Court shall adjudge, order and decree that said mortgage is not a valid incumbrance upon the title of said premises and that the same be discharged, and for such other and further relief as to this Honorable Court shall seem proper.

JOHN FREDERICK TRUNDY

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Norfolk, ss. April 28, 1914.

Then personally appeared the above-named J. Frederick Trundy and made oath that the foregoing statements by him subscribed are true.

The Enameled Bracelet

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"It is a charm, madame," smiled Count Sorio as he bent above Mrs. Raymond's pretty hand. "To wear it will avert the evil eye and a host of other ills." He smiled charmingly down at her.

"You are very kind, count," protested Mrs. Raymond, withdrawing her hand and picking up a silk covered jewel box, "but, really, I cannot accept this bracelet."

"Not as a souvenir of those delightful days in Florence?" reproached the handsome Italian. "I am sure your husband will join me in the wish that you may accept it as a token of my warm friendship for my good friends, the Raymonds!" He laid his shapely hand on Dick Raymond's broad shoulder and smiled the smile of good fellowship into the young American's honest eyes.

Dick Raymond smiled rather doubtfully, for when he had last met Count Enrico Sorio it had been a most unpleasant occasion; he had detected the impoverished nobleman cheating at cards, and, although Dick had allowed the matter to pass until the game was concluded, he had privately informed Sorio of what he had seen and warned him. There had been one moment when things hung in the balance. The Italian had looked at Dick with murderous hate in his black eyes, but he had not offered to avenge the insult in blood; he had merely turned on his heel and walked away, and the Raymonds had not seen or heard of him for many weeks until this sunny afternoon, when the repentant nobleman had called upon them, apologized handsomely to Dick and tendered an exquisite enameled bracelet as a peace offering to Mrs. Raymond.

"You will not permit the acceptance?" flared the count. "You perhaps have suspicions that I come by it not honestly? Alas, what a sad reputation I have gained through one small slip!" He turned away to hide his emotion.

Ethel Raymond, touched by the grief of the temperamental Italian, smiled and nodded at her husband. Dick flashed a smile back, and his big hand went out to grasp the long, yellow fingers of the nobleman.

"Very well, count. We will consider the matter closed. As for the bracelet, I am sure Mrs. Raymond will be charmed to add it to her collection of Florentine enamels. Come, my friend," he smiled as the count turned a transformed countenance toward him—"come, let us walk on the terrace and smoke a cigarette before lunch. You will, of course, stay?"

"With pleasure," beamed Sorio. And, with a deep bow to Mrs. Raymond and a significant smile as he watched her fingering the enameled bracelet, he followed his host on to the terrace, where there was a delightful view of the lovely Arno flowing toward the distant sea and the hills that encircle the city of Florence.

To the men walking on the terrace the view was a familiar one, but never tiresome. Sorio had been born in Tuscany, and he loved it. Dick Raymond was a landscape painter, and he loved it because of its unchanging beauty.

As they passed the drawing room windows it was Sorio's dark eyes that flashed an inquiring glance through the open casement. Always he smiled furtively as he noticed that Ethel Raymond was holding the bracelet in her fingers and admiring its beauty.

He did not love Ethel. He hated her with deep intensity born of her husband's deadly insult to him many weeks ago. Her husband was devoted to her. Through the wife Sorio might be revenged upon the husband. Revenge was sweet, and it was very near just now.

"Come down and look at our roses," urged Dick. And, quite confident that he could leave the enameled bracelet to do its duty, Enrico Sorio followed his friend down the steps, and they disappeared in the garden.

The door opened, and Carlo announced a visitor.

"Mme. Testino!"

A tall, graceful woman, clad in white, came forward, and Ethel laid aside the bracelet and went to meet her with outstretched hands.

"Ah, Lisetta, I am so glad to see you," she cried warmly. "Sit here. Margot shall carry away your wraps. You must remain for luncheon. Count Sorio is here."

"They are walking in the garden," explained Ethel demurely, for she knew that the fair Italian lady and the count were deeply in love with each other. She suspected a romance here, and she was prepared to watch it with interest, for, like most women, she thoroughly enjoyed a love affair.

"I am surprised," hesitated the beautiful widow as she gave her hat and parasol to the waiting servant. "I thought that Sorio and your husband were—not friends—that they had a difference of opinion."

"It was so, and I was sorry," confessed Ethel, "but they have made it up, and as a peace offering the count has brought us this lovely bracelet to add to our collection of enamels. Is it not exquisite?"

"Beautiful!" breathed Lisetta, a jealous light gleaming in her dark eyes. "Ah, madame," she added playfully, "if I had glimpsed this wonderful bracelet first Sorio would never have brought it as a peace offering to you!" She laughed with sudden merriment, all her ill humor gone in a second. "Am I not a bear to look so cross about your bracelet?"

"I am sure Count Sorio would rather place it on your arm than on mine," laughed the American.

"If it did not seem ungrateful to Count Sorio, I would like to have you wear it away as your own," added Ethel. "Ah, Cesare, we will come at once," as the servant announced luncheon. "The gentlemen are coming now."

When Count Sorio saw Lisette Testino standing in the library toying with the enameled bracelet his face went suddenly pale and his greeting to her was shortened to utter a whispered word of protest.

"Such gaudy trinkets do not become your pale dignity, my queen," he whispered hurriedly. "Put it aside, Lisetta. It is ill luck. It attracts the evil eye. It is accursed." He shuddered as he caught himself up sharply.

Ethel's clear voice was speaking as they moved toward the dining room.

"Count Sorio says that the bracelet is a charm, that it will avert the evil eye and that it will bring me good luck!"

Dick Raymond laughed genially, but the dark eyes of Lisetta met the black glance of Sorio. There was a puzzled questioning in her glance and a mingling of fear and annoyance in his.

Lisetta went back to the drawing room after her handkerchief and when she returned there was a look of amusement in her cool glance as it crossed that of her lover.

The meal progressed slowly. The Raymonds had a good cook in the person of Margharita, the grandmother of Cesare, and the wine of the country was excellent.

Lisetta was sparkling with gayety, and the count's dark eyes often sought hers across the low arrangement of flowers on the table, and the Raymonds realized that very soon would the fiery Italian declare his love for the widow.

Suddenly Lisetta lifted one white hand to adjust the rose Ethel had tucked in her jet black hair. As she did so her three companions saw for the first time that she was wearing the enameled bracelet.

"See, carissima, I am wearing your bauble while I may!"

Sorio's face was ghastly pale. Twice his lips parted as if to give utterance to some protest, but they closed, as if secrecy demanded silence at any price. At last he could contain himself no longer.

"Madonna!" he gasped, rising and reaching across the table at Lisetta's arm. "Take it off, cara mia. It—means—death!" He half whispered the last words and sank back in his seat as Dick Raymond jumped up and held a glass of wine to Lisetta's pale lips.

Mme. Testino had uttered a sudden cry of anguish and her head drooped slowly down until it rested on one shoulder.

"The pain, the pain!" she muttered before she lost consciousness.

Dick Raymond dashed around the table and caught the shrinking Sorio by the shoulder. "What has happened, you coward?" he demanded. "What is there about that bracelet that causes Mme. Testino to swoon, and the very sight of her wearing it upon her arm causes you alarm? Eh? Tell me, or, by thunder, I'll shake you into eternity!"

Cesare had darted in and out of the room like lightning flashes. He had dispatched a page for a physician, and while Dick was still trying to get an explanation from Sorio the doctor arrived and went into the salon where Lisetta was lying on a sofa, pale and lifeless.

That was an eventful night in the Villa Rosario. The doctor remained until morning and administered antidotes for the deadly poison which had been injected into Lisetta's veins through the medium of the poisoned bracelet. A tiny needle had darted into her flesh as she clasped the bracelet about her shapely wrist, but the prick had been so slight that she had scarcely noticed it.

By morning the danger was over. The poison, which had remained in the bracelet for perhaps a hundred years, so ancient was its history, had lost its potency, and the quick action of the physician, combined with Lisetta's splendid physique, resulted in complete recovery for Mme. Testino. As for Enrico Sorio, who had intended the poisoned bracelet for Ethel Raymond, the wife of the man upon whom he wished to be revenged, Dick permitted him to disappear from Florence.

It was perhaps punishment enough for his murderous heart that he forever lost the regard of Lisetta Testino, and, as for the Raymonds, they left Florence at once and went back to America, and before they went they disposed of their interesting collection of enamels.

"I never want to see a Florentine enamel again," shuddered Ethel.

But the enameled bracelet remained in the possession of Lisetta Testino. She had it cleansed of its poisonous properties, and it remains on her dressing table in a crystal box.

"To remember, carissima," she explained to Ethel Raymond one day, "lest I forget the treachery of one I loved!" she added sadly.

REBELS PRESS ON TO CAPITAL

Government Officials Suppress Reports of Successes

AMERICANS ARE WELL TREATED

Permitted by Huerta to Pass the Lines—Extension of Military Lines at Vera Cruz Desirable—Huerta "Will See Mexico City In Ashes Before He Leaves"

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 9.—Reports of rebel victories continue to reach Vera Cruz, both through refugees and in unofficial advices, the only sources of information through which the city learns what is going on elsewhere in Mexico.

It was reported that Emiliano Zapata had taken Cuernavaca, capital of the state of Morales, which is within forty miles of Mexico City.

Close observers of the situation say, however, that Zapata could have taken it at any time, as it always has been garrisoned by a weak force and only a slight attempt has been made to defend it. The reports of rebel successes are still being suppressed in the capital and few persons there know of Villa's steady approach from the north.

Americans traveling between the capital and Vera Cruz are impressed most by the solicitude of Huerta's officers for the safety of all foreigners, especially Americans. Americans in Mexico City are permitted to pass the lines, but others are refused permission to pass on the ground that they will merely add to the burdens of the Huerta government in protecting them.

Travelers who arrived here from the capital report that normal conditions exist there.

The military situation in Vera Cruz is unchanged. There were various reports of large bodies of federal troops near the city. These reports were characterized by army officers as exaggerated.

The military officers are agreed that some extension of the American lines is desirable for the protection of the food and water supply of Vera Cruz. They desire the extension to embrace the district all about the city.

If Washington approves, the troops here will be increased for an extension of the lines, thus leaving the advance base marine regiments free for any calls from coast towns.

Reports received from Mexico City say that refugees are moving freely from the capital toward Puerta Mexico. The shortage in the oil fuel supply probably will reduce the facilities of the railroad within the next few days, and the federals are expediting the movement of foreigners towards the coast.

Mexicans arriving here from Mexico City say that Huerta shows no indication of having any intention to abandon the presidency of Mexico. Huerta, they assert, popularly is credited with having made the statement that he would see the capital in ashes before he left it.

CHRIST CHURCH GUILD.

Thursday afternoon's meeting of the Woman's Guild of Christ church is to be an important one and the president Mrs. Chase urges a large attendance. The holding of a fair in the fall will be discussed and several other matters. Tea will be served.

The Guild has done good work this year. During Lent 20 garments were made and distributed within the parish, besides two new dresses being bought; 15 garments were made for the Quincy Hospital; a dozen towels were sent to the Tuberculosis Camp; and the Guild collected and repaired many articles of clothing which were given away. They are now preparing to send a barrel to one of our southern missions, having made pillow cases, petticoats, and large and small aprons, besides putting in perfect order a number of clothes which have been sent in. The barrel will be packed Thursday at the Guild meeting. A second barrel of old shoes will also be packed to send to a southern school where boys are taught to make them over. Old shoes for this barrel may be left at the Rectory.

MAY SEIZE AND SELL FURNITURE

(Special from State House.)

An extremely drastic measure calculated to punish and prevent the maintenance of houses of ill repute has been reported by the legislative committee on public service. The bill goes so far as to permit the authorities to sell the property and all the furniture in which the nuisance is carried on.

The bill deems such dwelling houses used for such purposes to be a nuisance. It also provides that whoever maintains such a nuisance shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000, and by imprisonment of not less than three months or more than three years.

James M. Gibbs, one of the most popular men in the city, who recently severed his connection with the Fore River shipyard after being superintendent of hull construction for 15 years, was given a reception in Wilson hall on Friday evening by the men of that department. Nearly 150 attended.

A silver tea and coffee service, a wealth of beauty and design, which partially signified the respect and esteem in which he is held, was presented by Fred M. Bauries, who said it was the intention of the men to convey their respect and esteem in a substantial way. Mr. Gibbs made a short speech of acceptance, and said that he wished for nothing better than a continuation of their friendship.

During the evening songs were given by Adams Portes, Duncan McKimmock, John Hamilton, James Szenk, Robert Auld, James Mitchell, Frank Hodge, Harry Lambert, and cornet solos were given by Daniel Sharp. John Fall presided at the piano. Dancing was enjoyed and refreshments served. The committee in charge included: William Roberts, Robert Menzie, J. Burnet, Bert Parrell, H. Anderson, D. NEW VESTRY AND KITCHEN

Swedish Lutheran Church to Build Addition

A permit was issued this week and work has been commenced building a $7,000 addition to the Swedish Lutheran church on Granite street. The addition is to be built on the easterly side of the present structure and will be of granite, the same as the main church.

The first floor is to be used as a vestry and kitchen while in the loft or upper part of the addition will be a large committee room and a ladies parlor.

The main church was erected some years ago, largely through the energy of the members of the church. Many of the parish are stone cutters and they gave freely of their time in its erection, some contributing the granite while others finished it nights after having performed their daily occupation. The members of the parish also did the excavating for the foundation.

There will be a cellar under the new addition in which the heating apparatus will be located.

The work which as noted above, was commenced this week will be rushed through to completion and the early fall will see it ready for dedication.

LOANS NOT PERMITTED

Tax Levy Must Provide for Current Expenses

It looks as though it would be necessary for the Mayor to send a supplementary budget to the City Council at an early date. There are two matters at least that will have to be provided for. One of these is the three additional firemen, who have not as yet been appointed, but may be any day, and the second is the matter of the tractor truck.

No funds were provided in the budget for the salary of these three men and under the new law of 1913 the city can not issue a loan to purchase a tractor.

That is under the law of 1913 addition to present equipment must be provided for in the budget, and it will be impossible for the Council to pass a loan for the amount.

Should the order for $4,000 for a tractor now before the City Council pass, as seems likely, the money will have to be provided for in a supplementary budget.

STRIKE WAS VERY BRIEF

Master Masons Promptly Sign New Bill of Prices

The settlement of the strike of the Hod Carriers and Building Laborers union of this city Friday afternoon which commenced in the morning, because the master masons of the city had not signed the new bill of prices, was one of the quickest in the history of labor troubles in Quincy.

None of the men reported for work Friday morning, but before noon many of the contractors had signed the bill and work on their contracts was resumed immediately. Before evening fourteen of the sixteen master masons of the city had signed the agreement, and it is expected that the other two will append their signature before the day is out.

The men met in the Johnson building Friday, and as they received word from their representative, Fred H. Lord, that signatures had been secured, they left for their work without delay. By noon very few men were at headquarters.

The store owned and operated by Leon Cohan on Dorchester street for the past six years has been purchased by Joseph Allen who will continue to run it. Mr. Allen is to have a restaurat with candy and soda water counter and expects to be open for business in about a week.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

The City Council Committee on Streets met Friday evening and cleaned up about everything that has been referred to them this year including the matters that came over from last year. Under the rules of the Council the committee is supposed to report upon all street matters on or before May 15. As the regular meeting falls on May 18, the nearest date to the 15th, they will be reported that evening.

Special meeting of the City Council Monday evening . There are but two matters in the call, namely the veto of the express liquor permits and to receive and act on a report from the Committee on Streets. An interesting debate is predicted on the veto message.

MERRYMOUNT IN PILGRIM TIME

How Thomas Morton Became Leader and Changed the Name from Mount Wollaston

Quincy Once Had Metropolitan Name of London

The Daily Ledger is receiving many inquiries relative to "Merrymount," which are not confined to Quincy people. This morning there was a telephone inquiry from Boston about Thomas Morton. Here is a bit of Merrymount history from Pattee's History of Quincy:

Captain John Smith, of Pocahontas notoriety, on his second voyage to America, his first being to the Virginia Colony sailed from the Downs, in England, on March 3d, 1614, and, as he relates, he landed at Monhegan, an island lying twenty miles southwest from the mouth of the Penobscot. Not meeting with success in his search for whales, Smith, with eight men in a small boat, left the ships and the rest of the party to be employed in fishing, while he ranged the neighboring coast to the southwest in quest of furs. He says, "he availed himself of the opportunity to draw a map from point to point, isle to isle, and harbor to harbor, with the soundings, sands, rocks, and landmarks." On this map, which is annexed to his history, Quincy is given the metropolitan name of London, and the "signs of a castle and cathedral are annexed as indicative of its future prosperity and grandeur."

In 1625, Captain Wollaston, with about thirty other adventurers, came from England, and, in September of the same year, began a plantation near where the house of John Quincy Adams, Esq., now stands. Things not being equal to Wollaston's expectations, he left the Colony in the following year, and went to Virginia, leaving the plantation in the hands of Lieutenant Filcher.

MORTON CHOSEN LEADER.

Among those who remained at Mount Wollaston was a certain Thomas Morton, a lawyer of Clifford's Inn, London, through whose instigation the settlers at the Mount rebelled against Lieutenant Filcher, compelling him to leave the Colony, and Morton was chosen the leader at the Funeral of George Tytler Very Largely Attended

Seldom is such a mark of respect shown a young man as was indicated by the large attendance Sunday afternoon at the funeral services for George L. Tytler, at his late residence on Trafford street. Nearly 100 were unable to get into the house, including fellow employees of the Daily Ledger, members of the Makaria Fraternity, the Red Men A. C., neighbors and friends.

Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of Bethany Congregational church read the Scriptures and spoke of the life of the young man, closing with prayer. Albert L. Hayden, of Bethany choir, sang two selections, "In thine arms" and "Asleep in Jesus." The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful and included:

ACCIDENT TO OFFICER.

Patrolman James McNamara is at his home in Wollaston recovering from slight injuries received in falling from a moving car in Wollaston on Saturday night. The officer was called on the car to quiet a disturbance, and in stepping off fell heavily on his face in the street, driving his upper teeth through his lip. Two teeth were knocked out and two others were loosened. He was taken to the police headquarters in the police ambulance and treated by City Physician Fred A. Bartlett.

ORIENTS WIN.

The Orient A. A. defeated the Cunningham gym team at Milton Saturday by the score of 5 to 3. The game was fast and exciting, many good plays being made.

The removing of Peterson, who was replaced by Nelson in the seventh inning was the undoing of the Milton team, the Orients getting three runs off his delivering. Lemon a new man did good work for the Orients getting two hits and pitching a fine game.

DANGEROUS STREET CORNER

Auto Truck Automobile and Motor Cycle in Mix-Up

A motor cycle, automobile and auto truck were in a mix-up Saturday evening at the corner of Washington street and Revere road as a result of which Percy O. Miller of Standish avenue, North Weymouth, who was riding the motor cycle, was thrown off and received numerous abrasions which were dressed at the office of Dr. Hardwick. His motor cycle was smashed.

The accident was peculiar one. The auto truck of the Clearing House Parcel Delivery Co. of Dorchester, operated by Herbert L. Hines, suddenly appeared from Canal street. At the same time the motor cycle was coming down the hill from City Square, and an automobile driven by Gustave Wilbas was coming down the hill from the Universalist church. The driver of the motor cycle and the driver of the automobile were both forced to the west side of Washington street and turned into Revere road. The result was that they came together head-on with a crash, and Miller was thrown heavily to the ground.

As the two came together the automobile of Mr. Wilbas swung to one side and crashed over a high curbing through a fence, smashing the front part of the machine some, but the driver escaped uninjured. There were people on the sidewalk at the time and when they saw that an accident was unavoidable there was a rush to get out of the way, and none of the people on the sidewalks were injured. The truck of the Parcel Delivery Co. escaped without injury of any kind.

With Mr. Wilbas were his two daughters and also a young lady friend Miss Caroline Dixon, all of whom escaped unhurt. In the express truck were also two assistants of Mr. Hines.

It is particularly dangerous corner at the foot of two hills, and fatal accidents have resulted. All day Sunday an officer was on duty that people and carriages might cross Washington street at this point in safety. Thousands of automobiles were passing in both directions.

CARD PLAYERS FINED.

Inspector Goodhue, with Officers Malone and Canavan, paid an unannounced visit to the premises of Salvatore Niguelli, at 56 Phipps street, about 1.45 Sunday morning, and arrested the proprietor, and two men who gave their names as Salvatore Fauard and Luigi Latuer for gaming on the Lord's day.

It was about 12.30 when Inspector Goodhue first visited the premises and looking in the window saw half a dozen men seated about a table drinking beer and playing cards. Going back to the police station he returned at 1.30 with Officer Malone, but at that time no game was in progress. Fifteen minutes later however the game was again on and the wagon was summoned. On entering Inspector Goodhue found three men and a boy in the kitchen where the cards were, and a third man asleep on the floor badly intoxicated. In an adjoining room he found seven men asleep in three beds all so drunk that he could not awaken them.

The officers seized one full barrel and another barrel half full of beer, and arrested the three men named above for gaming on the Lord's day. A complaint was also issued against Niguelli for keeping a house for illegal gaming. The men were arraigned in court this morning.

The defence claimed that the men had met at the house to plan for a reception to the wife of one of the parties who was due to arrive from Italy on the steamship today. They denied playing cards and said the boy had some cards in his hands amusing himself. The court however found them guilty and imposed a fine of $15 each.

Miss Marion Bill and Earl Bill of Upland road, and Miss Florence Barker of Presidents hill, danced in the 26th annual May festival in the Mechanics building Saturday night.

MOTHERS DAY IN QUINCY

Generally Observed in the Churches and by Individuals

Mothers Day in Quincy was generally observed on Sunday as was evinced by the large number of both men and women, who were seen wearing white carnations. In some cases where it was impossible to obtain carnations, flowers of another color were worn. It did not matter so much what the flower was, so long as some kind was displayed.

Among the peope going to church Sunday morning the display of white carnations was most general, the men wearing them in the coat lapel while the ladies wore a single blossom on the corsage front.

In several of the churches there were special sermons in honor of Mothers day. In some cases also, in accordance with the suggestion of the President, flags were displayed, and everybodys thoughts turned to Mother, everyone saying that his or her particular mother was the best mother in the world. And many a mother looked on and smiled sweetly, for her heart was light and full of happiness.

Many whose daily occupation keeps them from the old home, made it a point Sunday to take a few hours and visit with mother. It is a pretty custom and one that is growing more and more general every year.

Sunday was a beautiful spring day. The air was mild and balmy, and coming after a few stormy days was most welcome. Thousands improved the opportunity to walk in the parks and along the sea shore, while those more fortunate, who owned automobiles, improved the opportunity for a trip through the country. Taking it all in all the day was one to be remembered.

In falling from a moving trolley car on Hancock street, near the Neponset bridge Saturday night, Fred O. Webster of 47 Appleton street suffered a fracture of the right thigh. He was taken to the Quincy City Hospital in the police ambulance.

It will be observed that there is a pretty race on between Quincy, Chelsea, Taunton, Pittsfield, Everett and Brookline. The Census bureau thinks Brookline has passed Waltham; that Quincy, Pittsfield and Everett have passed Taunton; and that Pittsfield has also passed Quincy.

But if the people at Washington were familiar with Quincy they might revise their figures. Quincy is not yet willing to admit that Pittsfield or any other city has passed us in population since 1910, although Pittsfield was once larger.

The census of 1915 will probably show a population of 40,000 in Quincy, which means that Pittsfield and Everett must go some to keep ahead.

SPECIAL OF CITY COUNCIL

Liquor Permits And Streets May Cause Debate

The general impression seems to be that the three orders granting liquor permits which have been returned to the City Council by the Mayor without his approval will be again passed by the City Council. As far as the Councilmen who have investigated can learn, there is no good reason why the three should have been selected and turned down and the others granted. Perhaps the Mayor's veto will throw some light on the subject.

While Quincy is a no-license city, the general impression seems to be that if one legitimate expressman is to have a permit, all should, and that if the number is cut down too small, it creates a monopoly. It is urged that about so much beer will be brought into Quincy anyway, and that if the number of permits is cut down to one or two it means that they will have to put on more teams to take care of the orders, and those less fortunate will be prevented from getting a living. The experience of one of the men vetoed by the Mayor tells the story.

Saturday he received a call from a large wholesale store in Boston. When he called for the goods he found a dozen packages for Quincy, two of which contained liquor. He could not take the packages containing liquor as he had no permit. As he could not take all, the dealer refused to give him any packages to deliver. This meant a loss of something like $2 or more.

Street orders may also cause debate.

OLD SCHOOLMATES.

Commissioner Brown and ex-Councilman William H. Flynn met by accident this morning in front of City Hall. The Commissioner looked at Billy steadily for a minute and then Billy looked at Moses for a full minute. Both then smiled and shook hands. Some years ago both were students at the Burdett & Williams college. After school they separated and had not happened to meet each other again until this morning. They talked over old times for a few minutes and again separated promising to meet each other oftener in the future.

Having joined in the singing of the Star Spangled Banner in a theatre, most people feel that some one else should do the fighting.

The dancing teachers did not decide that the tango is too complicated for the ballroom until after they had collected their fees for the winter's lessons.

The Suffragette parades are giving the women excellent practice in walking, but after they get the ballot they may demand like the men, to be carried to the polls.

Our army boys propose to substitute baseball for bull fighting at Vera Cruz. No doubt there will be much sympathy for the sufferings of the umpire.

Sleeping out of doors will again be a popular fad this summer. The more difficulty people have in sleeping well out in the yard, the more beneficial they will think it is to their health.

THE BACK YARD.

At a time, some years ago, when a craze for angular houses was spreading over the land, some writer remarked that all the stylish houses had Queen Anne fronts and Mary Ann back yards. The craze referred to has passed, but the majority of people still keep back yards full of disorder.

Most people's back yards are more visible and exposed than they think. Even in places where houses stand closely together, all the neighbors can see the slouchy display of ashes and other household refuse.

It does not take much effort to keep a back yard looking ship-shape. It would only take a minute longer to put litter in some receptacle in the shed or cellar where it belongs. Ash-heaps in a back yard are a needless eye-sore. People that keep poultry will find that the chicken-house would wear longer if a little time were spent once in a few years in painting.

All this care costs little, and it adds to the appearance of a whole neighborhood. If you want to sell property, you will have to discount hundreds of dollars for the bad impression given by disorder.

ABSENTEE OWNERSHIP.

In the old times, the owner of a manufacturing plant usually lived in the town where the mill was located. He attended the same church or lodge as many of his employes, he sat on the grand stand and watched them play ball Saturday afternoon. If they "had a kick coming" they knew he would hear them talk it out face to face in the office.

The Colorado labor war, in its relation to the Rockefellers, is an illustration of the kind of thing that happens when large stockholders live hundreds of miles away, and visit their property at too infrequent intervals. The Rockefellers no doubt believe they have done their full duty by providing a fine equipment of hospitals, clubs, and bath rooms. The workmen, however, value personal touch more than the finest social outfit that money can buy. It often seems as if they valued it quite as much as wages.

In these days of widespread ownership in corporations, the idyllic conditions once prevailing can not return. Still, much more could be done by large stockholding interests to maintain some kind of a personal tie with their employes. It needs to be repeated over and over again that no business enterprise can permanently prosper as long as there exists hatred or ill feeling between employer and employe. There can not be efficient operation on a basis of war.

Many employers of labor might, with very slight inconvenience to themselves, live in the community where their plants are located. Their help in paying taxes, and in promoting local causes would frequently win good will where estrangement now exists.

Even if they can not live in the places where their mills are located, it would seem good business policy to visit these places very frequently and make themselves accessible. Half of the labor friction could be obviated by personal contact.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Six Members of the Buffaloes Have Passed Away

Memorial services for departed members of the Benevolent Order of Buffaloes were held in Faxon hall Sunday afternoon under the auspices of Quincy herd, No. 1, and its auxiliary, Quincy band, No 1, Companions of the Prairie. There was a good attendance.

The address was delivered by Hon. Rudolph W. Currier, representative to the legislature from Lynn, and supreme trustee of the order. He gave an eloquent address in memory of the departed.

The Buffalo supplication was read by Hiram Thayer, the chaplain of the order, and the "Isle of Somewhere" was rendered by a trio composed of Mrs. Josie Daw, Mrs. Hannah Imlay, Mrs. Jennie Steinbrenner, accompanied by Mrs. Alex Russell.

Mr. and Mrs. Olsen were presented with a buffet, the formal speech being made by Oscar J. Sandberg, former tax collector, who with Theodore Hermanson, are the only remaining eligibles of the original organization.

Dancing was enjoyed during the evening, music being furnished by Provosts orchestra. The modern dances were indulged in by old and young alike.

Refreshments were served during the evening and just before midnight dancing was discontinued and a luncheon was served in Protection hall. Many of those present made short congratulatory speeches.

HUERTA REGIME IN THE BALANCE

Fight Now Raging at Tampico May Decide Its Fate

DELEGATES TO PEACE PARLEY

Supreme Court Justice Lamar and Former Solicitor General Lehmann Chosen by President Wilson—No Obstacles to Negotiations Because of Recent Developments—American War Correspondents Who Entered Federal Lines Without Permits Arrested but Later Released—Army and Navy Heads Busy—May Recruit Retired Enlisted Men

Washington, May 11.—A dispatch from Vera Cruz says that the constitutionalist army has begun its long delayed general attack on Tampico.

Considerable reinforcements, consisting of both cavalry and field artillery, arrived during Saturday night and early Sunday morning. All foreigners were notified either to seek safety within the rebel lines or aboard some of the warships lying in the harbor.

Details of the figthing are searce, but the bombardment of the city was kept up all day Sunday and the rebels seem to be making progress. The United States and foreign warships are lying far out in the harbor and have taken on board several hundred Americans, English and Germans.

Both Villa and Carranza have stated that this time they will take Tampico, which, next to Vera Cruz, is the most important seaport in Mexico. Its capture will give the constitutionalists a port of entry and besides the cause will receive the immense revenue for the lease of the rich oil wells owned and operated by foreigners.

The federals at Tampico have withstood a long siege and it is known they are short of ammunition, so that even with the help of the gunboats it is thought they cannot hold out very long against the reinforced rebel forces.

Mediators Named

Associate Justice Joseph P. Lamar of the United States supreme court and Frederick W. Lehmann of St. Louis, former solicitor general, will be the representatives of the United States to confer with the A. B. C. mediators, who are seeking to compose the Mexican troubles. This became known from an authoritative source.

President Wilson received at the White House Brazilian Ambassador Da Gama, ranking member of the South American mediators. Neither the White House nor the ambassador would discuss the visit, but there was reason to believe that the call, following a conference of the three mediators at the Argentine legation, dealt with the general question of Mexico and the outlook for mediation.

The call of two of the mediators on the secretary of state, followed by their assembling for a meeting Sunday, led to the belief that late developments involved something more than mere discussion of preliminaries for the coming conference at Niagara Falls. It was made plain, however, that nothing had occurred which would act as an obstacle to the continued progress of the negotiations.

Newspaper Men Released

A development that served to relieve anxiety was news of the release of the four newspaper correspondents arrested at Mexico City—Walter Whiffen of The Associated Press, Harding Davis of the New York Tribune, Medill McCormick of the London Times and A. J. Sutton of the Washington Post.

Word of the release reached the state department through Brazilian Minister Oliveira at Mexico City, and dispatches came also to the British, Spanish and Brazilian ambassadors, each of whom had acted promptly and energetically in behalf of the American newspapermen.

It was said the correspondents had asked for permits to enter the Mexican federal lines, but without waiting to receive the permits had taken the chance of going to Mexico City. The dispatch to the state department added: "Nothing extraordinary in the American colony."

The mediators were much gratified that the American correspondents had been promptly freed, being anxious to prevent any untoward incident from hindering their mediation plans.

War Department Active

The army and navy departments showed more than their usual Sunday activity, but no important orders were issued from either branch. Secretary Garrison and Major General Watherspoon, chief of staff, were at their desks for several hours conferring over the precautionary military movements now being matured.

Arrangements to secure transports continue. The steamer Chippewa of the Clyde line, at New York, was substituted for the Dorchester of the Merchants and Miners' line, which was found unsuitable.

Retired Enlisted Men Wanted

The adjutant general's office of the war department has sent out an order to all retired men, which includes non-commissioned officers, to report their availability "in case of emergency," and many seasoned soldiers may thus be added to the active list. The order calls upon its recipients to report at once the duties previously performed, with the grades held during active service. The order concludes:

"This information is desired with reference to your possible use on recruiting or other duty in case of emergency."

Fears For Foreigners

Much apprehension is felt in diplomatic quarters as to the fate of foreigners in Mexico City in case a sudden revolt should overthrow Huerta and permit the entry of the lawless hordes of Zapata and other undisciplined rebel bands. These foreigners are said to number 6000, not counting the Americans, most of whom have left.

SCHMUTZ AT WASHINGTON

Mexican Consul Says No Violence Was Offered to Americans

Washington, May 11.—American Consul Schmutz, whose post is at Aguas Calientes, Mex., reached Washington and plans to submit today a report of conditions in his district to Secretary Bryan.

The consul arranged for the departure from Aguas Calientes of more than 100 American refugees, whose train was later held up by an infuriated mob at Encarnacion. He said that although many threats were made against the refugees, no violence was done.

Later he left with a small party on a train which suffered no inconvenience en route to Vera Cruz.

Schmutz explained that his party was not arrested and imprisoned in a smelter, as reported, but was segregated in the smelter for protection while preparations were being made for the trip to the coast.

At the time of his own departure some twenty-five Americans were left behind, but he thinks half of that number since has started for the coast. Those who remain in the Aguas Calientes district, he said, had married into Mexican families or have other strong ties which in their opinion will safeguard them.

ARRIVE AT VERA CRUZ

Huerta's Peace Delegates Shake Hands With General Funston

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 11.—President Huerta's three peace commissioners, Emilio Rabasa, Augustin Rodriguez and Luis Elguero, arrived here on their way to Niagara Falls, Can.

The commissioners politely, but firmly, declined the offers of hospitality made by General Funston, as well as Rear Admiral Badger's offer to give them passage on the Morro Castle, and boarded the steamship Kron Prinzessin Cecilie, which will sail at once for the United States.

The scene at the terminal station when the mediators arrived was colorful. By a prearrangement, there was little evidence of the American troops. Funston, in fatigue uniform; Lieutenant Hall, Funston's aide, and Lieutenant Cohen, Badger's aide, were the only officers present in an official capacity. The station and railroad yards were crowded with Mexicans and Americans.

The commission came in a special train, there being about fifteen in the party.

Elguero, who is attorney for the National Bank of Mexico, a short, stocky man, was first to descend. He was followed by Rabasa, tall and slim, wearing blackrim eyeglasses. He has often been spoken of as probable ambassador at Washington. Then came Rodriguez, aged and feeble, who had to be helped down the car steps.

The three men stood in a little circle while Thomas J. Ryder, vice president of the Aguila Oil company, presented them to Funston, each of the commissioners shaking Funston by the hand.

Lieutenant Cohen then stepped forward. "Accept the compliments of the commander-in-chief," said he, saluting. All three commissioners bowed gravely and smiled their acknowledgement.

Lieutenant Ball then saluted and they acknowledged this in the same way.

General Funston acquiesced in whatever plan the commissioners had in mind and the party moved out of the station surrounded by a great crowd which at times threatened to separate the American officials and the Mexicans. But still there was virtually no show of force, even to keep the crowd back. Funston turned on the Mexicans when they crowded too closely and kept them off with a wave of his hand and a shout.

When the party reached the exits of the terminal, army automobiles were lined up to take the Mexican commissioners to the steamer and the invitation to accept their use was renewed. The commissioners finally yielded and drove in the cars to the wharf, but no escort was sent along and no army men except the chauffeurs accompanied them.

No Munitions Landed

Washington, May 11.—No war munitions were landed at Puerto Mexico by the German steamship Kron Prinzessin Cecilie. Rear Admiral Badger cabled the navy department that the vessel, now at Vera Cruz, still had on board the shipment of arms and ammunition consigned to the Huerta government.

LILLIAN NORDICA DIES OF PNEUMONIA

Disease Brought on by Exposure During Shipwreck

She was taken ill with pneumonia shortly after the grounding of the steamship Tasmania in the Gulf of Papua, Australia, last January. The exposure she underwent at that time brought on the disease.

For more than a month her illness has been critical. Late last month she rallied somewhat, but on May 1 her condition again changed for the worse.

George Young of New York is the husband of Nordica. She was born May 12, 1857, in Maine.

WANTS CHANGE OF VENUE

If Refused, Becker Will Ask For Discharge of Present Jurors

New York, May 11.—Charles A. Becker, on trial for the second time for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, will again demand a change of venue on the ground that it will be impossible for him to get a fair and impartial trial in New York county.

If the first motion is denied another plea will be made to discharge the ten jurors already obtained and discontinue the trial.

The basis for the two motions will be the premature publication by a New York newspaper of the outline of the state's case as contained in District Attorney Whitman's opening address, not yet delivered.

Three of the twelve jurors selected were excused. Only one of the vacated seats was filled before the last of the special panel of talesmen had been exhausted, making an adjournment necessary.

THREE PERISH IN FIRE

Bath Couple and Their Son Are Suffocated by Smoke

Bath, Me., May 11.—Mr. and Mrs. John King and their 10-year-old son Orrin lost their lives by suffocation, when fire damaged their tenement.

King was proprietor of a second-hand store and lived on the second floor of the building. The fire started in the store from spontaneous combustion, apparently, and the smoke filled the rooms of the sleeping tenants. None of the bodies was badly burned.

MILLIONAIRE A SUICIDE

"Cereal King" Post Believed to Have Been Temporarily Deranged

Santa Barbara, Cal., May 11.—C. W. Post, multi-millionaire "Cereal King" of Battle Creek, Mich., committed suicide at his residence here by shooting.

Post was 60 years old. His wealth was estimated at over $10,000,000. For many years he had suffered from neurasthenia, but he was pronounced by his doctors to be in good condition. It is thought he was temporarily deranged when he fired the fatal shot.

CLAIMS SELF DEFENSE

Woman Charged With Husband's Death Admits Hitting Him

Bennington, Vt., May 11.—Charged with the death of her husband, Mrs. Alta Blowers was brought here from her remote mountain home in Rupert by Sheriff Godfrey and State Attorney Meagher.

According to the officers, Mrs. Blowers said her husband, Albert, had been drinking and that when he attacked her with a pair of scissors she hit him over the head with a stick of stove wood.

LETTER FROM JAPAN

For several days the news as to the Empress Dowager's health had been far from reassuring. It was known that she had Bright's disease and that her age was about 63, neither of which facts led the public to feel any great confidence in her recovery. Moreover the papers, the English ones at any rate, were publishing pictures of Buddhist nuns praying for her outside the palace walls—and that is not done unless great fears are entertained. So it was not with any great suprise that we heard of extras issued on the afternoon of the 9th of April saying that her condition was critical (or perhaps the word should be rendered almost hopeless.) The telegram also said that she would be removed to Tokyo Now, it is the custom for members of the imperial family to die at Tokyo. The Empress Dowager was at one of the winter palaces at Numazu, 100 miles away on the seashore. So when it was known that the telegram said that she was to be removed to Tokyo it was understood to mean that she was actually dead and that the formal announcement to that effect would be made as soon as the body reached Tokyo.

So for a day or two we said to each other, "The Empress Dowager is dead, it is said." It would not do to really say so for sure until the formal announcement was made. Of course we did not say simply the common word for "dead;" we said, "She has condescended to be concealed." But after the formal announcement had been made of the death the flags were put out at all the houses with a black streamer. (Of course every house has a flag; equally of course every house flies that flag on every holiday of the national variety, and on other days decreed by the powers that be. If it did not the owner of the house would soon hear from the police. When our servants have at times neglected to fly the flag at the front gate, the police have gently suggested to us the propriety of putting it out.)

On the afternoon of the 11th a newspaper extra told us that the funeral would be at Kyoto on May 12, and that for three days beginning with April 12 there would be an especial period of mourning. Now we await the official announcement as to just how we are to regulate our conduct during those days. Twenty years or less ago when the then Empress Dowager died there was announcement made to the effect that theatres need not shut down for the three days. I believe that was at the express wish of the deceased. But such things are regulated by the particular bureau that cares for such things in the "Home Department," I believe. They can never tell just what to expect before the official announcement comes. A guest at our table the other day remarked on the fact that it is hard lines for the exhibiters at the "Taisho Exhibition," for now no one would care to go! And he is the president of our town electric light company, too.

Yesterday's extra said that the funeral ceremony is to be held at that temple in Kyoto which is the most intimately connected of all the Buddhist temples with dead emperors, Senyuji Temple, if I remember correctly. The interment is to be at the Momoyama Tomb, made so famous recently by the interment of the former emperor.

As I write, the news comes that the mourning sleeve-band for those wearing foreign clothes, and the bow-knot of black for those wearing kimono, are to be worn for 50 days. The burial, as before said, occurs after a month. In the case of her lord, who passed away two years ago, the funeral was about 44 days after the death, and the period of mourning was a year, though only officials were required to wear the mourning-band for more than 100 days.

This, of course, makes it impossible for them to have the cornation next fall, as planned. This, it is said, will involve some Kyoto merchants in disaster, for they have made extensive preparations for the great event.

This postponement, however, is no more than a good many of the emperors of the old days used to have to put up with. In the times when the government was in the hands of the Shogun or the Regent away off at Yedo or at Kamakura, the little item of providing the emperor with proper support was at times pushed into the background by the more important matters, such as securing the succession for a favorite son; consequently at times the imperial treasury was too depleted to afford the luxury of a coronation. And it was postponed for years or even not done at all for this reason. Times have now changed, as the laboring classes understand very well; for they have the privilege of being taxed to supply the one million dollars or so that the coronation will cost.

Since the passing of the former emperor misfortunes seem to have piled up mountain high on these people. They lose their finest specimen of citizen, Nogi; they pass through two political crises, (this comes right in the very middle of one;) they have various scandals in which to the exceeding shame of the upright, widespread corruption in all branches of the government is revealed; there is a famine in the north which is decimating the population of certain districts, besides causing untold suffering; and then, Sakurajima, seeming to symbolize the smoldering unrest of the people under their unequal taxation, and political rights, bursts forth into awesome and destructive activity.

To those who can read the signs of the times, there are even now, and there will be in ever increasing volume, signs of an upheaval to come social and political, as great and as unmistakable as were the geological signs at Sakurajima to the trained seismelogist. The Japanese are patient in some ways; but they will not stand bureaucratic usurpations for ever. The study of politics in Japan is as fraught with interest as it is in U. S. A. just at present. But that is another story."

Among Our Churches

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

The Sunday services at Bethany church were largely attended and many wore white carnations in honor of Mother's day. In the morning the pastors message was "The Brotherhood." and in the evening the subject was "Our Mothers, God bless them."

The Philathea class meet this evening, the Junior Christian Endeavor on Thursday, and the Knights of King Arthur on Friday.

The topic for the weekly prayer meeting Thursday evening will be "Springs by the way."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

There were large congregations at both services in the United Presbyterian church Sunday. In the morning the pastor preached a sermon appropriated for Mother's day. In the evening Rev. Osborne Crowe gave an inspiring address on missionary work in India. The singing was excellent. The morale of the congregation is splendid. All the meetings are well attended, especially the prayer-meeting. Emphasis is laid on the spiritual upbuilding of the individual.

HALL PLACE M. E.

"The ever-presence of mother's love" was the subject of a practical, helpful sermon by Rev. P. S. Neldon at the Sunday morning service at the Hall Place M. E. church, a sermon which showed the depth of mother love, the sacrifices of the loving mother, and mother's needs, as well as the duties owed to mother, the need of proving our love for mother by our actions. "There is no one who does more or is needed more, yet is so often neglected and taken advantage of than mother." Mr. Neldon gave two incidents, which tell their own story; first that of the college chum who regularly received every Monday a letter from his mother, yet who in the six months he had been at college had only answered one of those many letters; the second; the man getting up in years, having a home of his own, yet who every night at nine o'clock went over to his mother's home to say "good night to mother." The text for the sermon was taken from St John 2-1: "And the mother of Jesus was there."

Sunday School met at 11.45. Camille B. Fuller was appointed chorister for the quarter.

The Epworth League devotional serdce at 6.15 was led by Mr. A. D. Stewart on the subject "Framing God's compassion into law."

Next Sunday will be observed as the "Silver Anniversary of the Epworth League." The devotional service will be omitted. At 7 o'clock the Epworth League will present a special program in recognition of the day.

Prayer meeting Friday evening at 7.30. Subject: "Is religion practical?"

Junior League at 4 P M. Friday

ST. CHRYSOSTOM'S.

The services at St. Chrysostom's on Sunday began with holy communion at 8 o'clock. Morning prayer and sermon by the rector Rev. Frederick H. Steenstra at 10.30. It was a Mothers' Sunday sermon, the text being taken from the 19th chapter of St. John, "Then saith he to his disciples Behold thy mother," bringing out the qualities inherent in true motherhood faith, hope and love for her child, is the spirit of Christ and partakes of the Divine.

At 5 o'clock the Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, preached and administered the rite of confirmation. The rector Rev. Mr. Steenstra presented eighteen persons to the bishop for Confirmation. The Bishop took his text from St. Mark, "And He said unto them, he that hath ears to hear let him hear" What was the use of saying that? We don't begin to hear and we hear what we select to hear, Voices" Silences of the country distance, note of a bird, cry of a child. The engineer notes the distance; the nature lover hears the bird; the mother the child. They hear what they are accustomed to hear. Insects and animals hear what human beings cannot, their lives depends on it. Degrading sounds, bad stories, blasphemous words, gossip, shut our ears to them if not the habit to listen grows. Take heed what ye hear. Only pure things in the presence of God. Uplifting notes all through history. While shepherds watched over their flocks by night the angel of the Lord came upon them. They heard the good tidings of great joy. So we hear the finer and higher if we listen.

Some people go through life and are deaf to sorrow and illness, others respond. We can hear, I can hear, from the tenement children in the streets bad conditions; parents saying how can we keep them pure? Voices multitudinous. Can we not recall how we wished when young others would be more considerate of us; teach us the finer. In a father or mother they have been confirmed. They give food, dress, do a great deal for children. Do they give the finer, the chivalrous? Is home infused with love, purity high understanding of Christ, hoped for in all the saints? Then the voice from another world, "Are you living as I told you," take heed what ye hear, he that hath ears to hear let him hear. Mark well what ye hear.

The Bishop addressed the candidates on the meaning of the step taken, reminding them that it was only the initial step in a life-long process toward the higher life. Just a beginning when you reach the point and stand for Christ. The hands of the Bishop are laid upon your head, the blessing given and prayer offered. Christian life is life that can not stand still. Set your face, day by day in daily life grow—as the years go—in the likeness of our Master.

Those confirmed were: Verna May Bent, Edith Hooley, George Joseph Hadfield, Eva Claudia Kelley, Alden Drew, Kelley, Howard Malbon Kelley, Annie White Lowe, Annie Margaret Louise Lowe, Florence Isabella Martin, Marion Edna Orr, Ruth Parker, Irene Beatrice Ray, Paul Akers Richmond, Emil A. Retzel, Mary Beatrice Stewart, Walter Royal Sadlier, Elsie Adel Thompson and Emmanuel Charles Thompson.

The vested choir with Herbert Y. Follett and Miss Louisa Allison Ross organist, rendered the musical program. The anthem, "How lovely are the messengers that bring us the Gospel of Peace" was sung during the offertory.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

"Mothers' Day" was observed in the Sunday morning service and also the Sunday School. Flowers decorated the altar, and a white carnation was presented to each lady at the door.

Rev. George M. Bailey preached a helpful sermon from the text found in Solomon 3:11. "Behold King Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him. While the address was especially directed to mothers, there was much food for thought in it for all who were present. Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook rendered a pleasing and appropriate solo, and the choir sang, "I'm a pilgrim and I'm a stranger."

During the Sunday School hour an impromptu program was given in which many of the members took part in readings or songs suggestive of the occasion. Mr. Frank Dunham sang "Heaven is my home," and the primary department gave scripture quotations beginning with the letters of the alphabet.

The Women's Missionary Society met in the parlor of the church this afternoon at half past two. The lesson study was taken from "The New America," an immigration study.

The prayer meeting on Thursday evening will be entirely under the direction of the Ladies' Aid Society. The Sunday School and Epworth League will have charge of the service on the following two Thursday nights.

There will be a union service in the Methodist church next Sunday night, of the Congregational, Baptist, Unitarian and Methodist churches. There will be a union chorus and the speaker of the evening will be Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, D. D., secretary of the Massachusetts Sabbath Protective League.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The fine weather, the good congregation, the beautiful flowers, the exquisite rendering of a solo by Mrs. Frank A. Page, the devotional, spirit that pervaded the sanctuary—all helped to make the Sunday morning service most helpful. Rev. Carl G. Horst preached from the text: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to work for his good pleasure."—Philippians 2:12-13.

He said: "Salvation means deliverance from sin and growth in goodness. The Lord's prayer teaches us to pray "Deliver us from evil" here and now, not from any future hell. Salvation is not the work of magic. it is a slow process and implies the development of the whole man. We must work out our own salvation. We cannot rely on others to do it for us. We must do it ourselves. God will do nothing for us which we can and ought to do for ourselves. Salvation is not a finished fact, but a continuous process. In this process we have the help of God. There is no better field to work out our salvation than this present age. God's method of serving men by the discipline of daily life is far better than any method we could devise. Man's religion must work every day of his life. To do one's daily task 'as unto the Lord' is religion. As Hiram Golf said "there is such a thing as being a shoemaker by the grace of God." Salvation is a joint affair of God and man."

Rev. Carl G. Horst attended today the last meeting of the Boston Ministers' Monday Club for the season. The Rev. George W. Cutter, M. D. of Neponset, gave the address of the day on "Race improvement."

A memorial service in memory of two of the most prominent Unitarian divines, the Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D. D., and the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D. D., was held at Forest Hills Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The Rev. Prof. Henry Wilder Foote spoke of Dr. Clarke and the Rev. Edward Cummings of Dr. Hale.

A meeting of the members of the Wollaston Unitarian society will be held in the vestry next Monday evening, May 18, in the interest of the parish house.

All the members and friends of the Wollaston Unitarian church will be solicited this week for contributions for the Parish House, which is so much needed to carry on the religious educational and social work of the church. All the friends of our cause are invited to help this enterprise and send contributions, small and large, and the larger the better, to the collector, Charles E. Barker, 294 Fayette street, Wollaston.

An out-door service will be held at Pulpit Roc, Brook Farm, West Roxbury, Sunday afternoon, May 17 at 4.15 o'clock, under the auspices of the Boston Federation of Y. P. R. U's. The Federation will meet at the First Parish church, West Roxbury at 3.45 and walk to Pulpit Rock. Speakers Rev. Harold G. Arnold and Hon. Sanford Bates. Train leaves the South Station for Highland Station at 3.09.

The six-dozen pinks, which lent their fragrance to our worship of Almighty God Sunday morning were the gift of Mrs. Frederic H. Bishop, in memory of her mother. Mrs. Francis A. Dalrymple, who united with our church in January 1895 and entered the higher life May 10, 1912. Such memorial flowers are always welcome gifts. They serve the double purpose of lending grace and beauty to the chancel and of carrying a message of cheer to the sick in the parish after the service of worship. Twelve such were remembered by the Flower Committee yesterday.

Those who purchased dahlia bulbs at the Wollaston County Fair last fall can obtain them by applying to the sexton, Samuel Holmes, 34 Brook street.

The delegates from our church to the annual meeting of the American Unitarian Association, May 26, are Rev. Carl G. Horst, Mrs. Frank A. Page and Hon. Eugene Sprague.

PARK AND DOWNS.

A glad surprise was given those attending this church Sunday morning, in listening to Dr. Asher Anderson, the staunch and loyal friend of the church as well as the pastor, Rev. William B. Ayers, who in presenting him said, it gave him great pleasure to do so, inasmuch as he enjoyed sharing the good things of life with his friends and that no one had proven themselves more so than Dr. Anderson both to himself and the church and not only here but the same could be said of him at many other churches throughout the United States."

Dr. Anderson said in response "that he came particularly this morning to listen to a sermon by Mr. Ayers, but had been over persuaded to change places with him."

Dr. Anderson took for his text St. John XII—24—"Verily, Verily, I say unto you except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. The speaker gave many interesting illustrations as to the meaning of Christs words to show that there is no satisfaction to a man in living to himself alone. Christs words unfolded a principle in life to us. Many of his illustrations were very appealing and more particularly that part of his discourse when he dwelt most touchingly upon "Mothers Day".

He said "There is no life so completely lonely as the selfish life. Except a man break through the shell of selfishness, and let Gods light into his soul, and gives his life in service to his kind he is going to be unhappy. He referred to the stoker down in the hold of the great ships that ply the seas, and the motives that governs their activity. They work not alone for pay, but are satisfied if they land their passengers safely at their destination.

The school teacher carries a burden of 50 children through the school year and it is no easy task. She is not inspired by the mere pittance of her wage, but she is happy, if at the end of the year she sends them out with a firm grip upon the things that make for character, success, and happiness.

The mother goes through dark places of mystery and pain, not for any wage or rewards—but happy, if into the hearts of her children she can pour the divine nature. All that a mother asks of her children is that they shall grow to worthy characters and useful achievements. She is the grain of corn that dies but in her death, yields the abundance upon which the beauty and strength of the world is founded."

And here the speaker gave a most beautiful and loving tribute to motherhood, his touching words affected everyone present, and brought tears to the eyes of many—Closing words—"God Bless Our Mothers."

At the evening services the pastor Rev. William B. Ayers took for his subject "Some temperamental differences of men and women" and held his hearers enthralled to the very last word. Space will not permit us to give its outlines.

The mid week evening services are proving to be of the greatest possible help to those who attend, who feel they can ill afford to miss the interesting, and helpful talks by the pastor. One cannot but grow better, nobler, greater because of them.

SACRED HEART CHURCH.

The mission for women, given last week in the parish of the Sacred Heart by the Oblate Fathers closed Sunday afternoon with impressive ceremonies. The visiting clergy, Rev. Fr. Patrick J. Phelan O. M. I. and Rev. Fr. Edward J. Fox O. M I. officiated The papal blessing was extended and there was a renewal of the baptismal vows, and in the morning hundreds received holy communion. The services closed with a solemn high Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Sunday evening the mission for the men of the parish opened, and will continue throughout the week, closing Sunday afternoon. Assisting the missionaries are Rev. Fr. J. P. Cuffe, pastor, and Rev. Fr. James P. McNiff.

Doesn't Forget His Glasses Now.

The London Lancet publishes the following letter:

"I happened to go into a restaurant in Holborn in the evening for a meal and sat at table about three-quarters of an hour eating dinner and afterwards smoking while thinking out a little problem, during which my eyes probably became, unknown to me, fixed in more or less of a stare. That evening I did not happen to wear my spectacles and could not distinguish details of anything a few feet away. Just before I rose to go out of the restaurant a man crossed the floor and boxed my ears, much to my astonishment, and said, 'Take that, you impudent young bounder, for glaring at me like that.' I was too astonished to say anything for a moment, thinking the man had taken leave of his senses, but before I could jump up to expostulate he had run out, so the irate diner never knew the truth that I had not seen him at all. I have always been careful since to wear my spectacles in like circumstances for fear of innocently giving offense."

Taking Time by the Forelock.

A peculiar phenomenon was observed in east end society circles recently. A certain college youth barely twenty years of age has been making himself very agreeable and popular with a crowd of little girls. Now, twenty is the age when boys usually shun the society of children and spruce themselves up for "fussing" with their own contemporaries. But this youth flirts not, neither does he dance. The debutantes sigh after him, but in vain. He buys candy for maidens nine and ten years old, but none for their elder and presumably more attractive sisters.

"You like little girls, don't you, Paul?" asked somebody, kidding him.

"Oh, not particularly," he sighed. "You see," he went on seriously, "it will be at least ten years before I shall be able to marry. By that time this -year-olds will be twenty ht. Don't you think it is an to begin early to make s in his own set?"—Cleve- ealer

Moslems of the World.

It is a striking fact that there are 5,000,000 more Moslems than Christians in the British empire. One-seventh of the whole human race is Moslem. The really significant fact is that the proportion is not at a standstill; it is increasing yearly. There are 60,000,000 Mohammedans in India, and the number is steadily growing. During the last decade the Moslem population of India increased by 9 per cent, while the total population of India increased by only 2 per cent. Many more natives are becoming Mohammedans every year than are turning to Christianity. There are 24,000,000 Mohammedans in Java. Mohammedanism is absolutely dominant in Persia. Today nearly all the sacred places named in the Bible are under Mohammedan rule. These are but a few instances out of many showing the onsweep of Islam.—Christian Herald.

Physiognomy.

Lavater was not the first to write upon the science of physiognomy. Great and lasting as were Lavater's contributions to the "science," he was by no means the first in the field. The first systematic treatise on physiognomy is that attributed to the wonderful old Greek, Aristotle. Aristotle seemed to have thought of pretty nearly everything, and among the rest of things he thought of was physiognomy, the art of reading the character from the face. His six chapters on the subject are still very interesting reading.—New York American.

TO STOP SUNDAY TENNIS.

Tennis playing on the Presidents Hill courts was in progress Sunday afternoon, but as complaints have been made to the police, Chief Burrell says that it will have to stop. It is understood that acting under the advice of the Mayor, playing was allowed if there was no objection. But now that objection has been made the playing on Sundays will be stopped.

Maline Worn With Mourning Apparel

NECK ruffs of maline in place of feathers and furs create little warmth, but provide a graceful finish for the spring outdoor costume. They are liked with all sorts of street costumes and all sorts of hats. But it seems they are at their best when made of fine maline in very full short ruches to be worn with mourning apparel.

A glimpse of a handsome mourning toilette is given here, in which the hat and the ruff finish off a modish suit of black broadcloth in the best manner. The hat is unusual and very chic. The suit is cut in the new mode, with three-tiered skirt and jacket short in front extended at the back some distance below the waist line and curved at the bottom.

The bodice has the V-shaped neck, finished with a fold of white crape.

The Kinnard hat develops unusually well in mourning designs. The black of the fabric is pure and deep, with very little luster and very rich effect. Its trimming is an odd decoration made of the same material as the hat and designed for it. It is mounted with a little moire ribbon near the front. The narrow ruching of fine lace laid in knife plaiting and falling about the underbrim is a feature that every wearer of mourning millinery should note. It is a wonderful touch of becoming softness and relieves the somberness of all black.

There is a short veil of fine Brussels net finished with two narrow folds of black crape.

Just the needed touch to finish this suit of black is furnished by the neck ruff of airy maline. It is made of one of the waterproofed kinds in a very fine grade and keeps its crispness in wet weather.

Besides these ruffs there are long scarfs of maline in white or black, to be worn instead of the ruff. The white scarf is appropriate for mourning and to be worn with either an all-white or all-black hat. But the white scarf of maline, and others in colors, are the prettiest of accessories for evening wear. Nothing quite equals white for this purpose.

The scarf is made about one and a half yards long, with the ends gathered up and finished with a tassel of silk. Maline ruffs are finished with bows or rosettes of ribbon with eighteen-inch ends for tying. Moire is used with those intended for mourning.

MILTON 9 QUINCY 3

Quincy High Shows Improvement But Unable to Win

Quincy High lost its fifth straight game to Milton High at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon 9 to 3. The score was tied until the eighth inning when Milton bunched their hits and pulled out an easy victory. Two hits in the eighth inning gave them the lead, and in the ninth a triple by Paolucci and a homer by Robertson scored two men that reached first on errors.

Hamlin also made a homer in the second inning, scoring Creedon who reached first on an error. The drive floated over the right fielder's head, over the gateway and struck on the opposite side of Hancock street. It was the longest ever made in the field.

O'Connor fanned 13 men but was hit for 19 safeties, while Poole struck out 15 and allowed but four hits.

In the last inning Reardon received a pass and reached third on a passed ball. Bates fanned and Stedman, batting for Martin hit. Jenkins was passed, filling the bases and Creedon was hit by a pitched ball, forcing Reardon. Stedman was nailed at home on Hamlin's short tap and Larkin, like Casey at the bat, fanned with the bases full.

TRIBUTE TO THE VERA CRUZ DEAD

Montana, With Seventeen Slain, Arrives at New York

SERVICES IN THE NAVY YARD

President Wilson and High Administration and State Officials at Brief and Simple Ceremony, Following Impressive Parade and Short Services at City Hall

New York, May 11.—Escorted by the battleship Wyoming and the presidential yacht Mayflower, with Secretary of the Navy Daniels on board, the battleship Montana passed by Sandy Hook with half masted colors, and anchored in the harbor, with the bodies of seventeen marines and bluejackets who were killed in the two days' fighting at Vera Cruz.

There was no din of whistles to greet the coming of the warship with her burden of heroic dead, but as she passed into the harbor there was dipping of of flags by all craft she passed. Then the flags shot up again, where they were made fast at half mast in honor of the dead.

As the Montana and the Wyoming anchored in the harbor, the Mayflower proceeded on to the Brooklyn navy yard, where she remained until she took Secretary Daniels and the other administration officials with him to the Battery as the bodies were carried ashore and placed on the flag draped caissons of the First field artillery of the national guard.

It was originally intended to bring the bodies ashore Sunday afternoon and place them on the caissons which had been placed in position on Pier A, North river, but the program was changed and they were not brought ashore until this morning, when the coffins were brought to the pier after the escort had been drawn up to do them honor. Another change in the program was that President Wilson, instead of being present at the Battery, went at once to the navy yard, where he went to the stand as the caissons were drawn through the navy yard gates.

When the cortege reached city hall and halted for the brief exercises held there, Mayor Mitchel placed on one of the coffins a wreath of flowers as a token of the city's tribute to those who were first to give up their lives.

Among those who were at the navy yard to honor the dead was Captain Takeschi, naval attache at the Japanese embassy, who had been ordered by the embassy to represent his country officially there.

The escort comprised a battalion from the Wyoming, a battalion from the Texas and a battalion of New York naval militia, which preceded the caissons. Secretary Daniels and the other distinguished federal and state officials followed the caissons in carriages, and many civic organizations were also in line.

The coffins containing the bodies of the men were landed at the pier at 8 o'clock and were placed immediately on caissons drawn up on the south side of the plaza between Battery park and Pier A.

The secretary of the navy, the secretary of agriculture, the committee from the United States senate and from the house of representatives, senators and assemblymen from the New York state legislature, officials of the army, navy and affiliated branches of the service, and distinguished guests entered carriages parked on the south side of Battery place, and followed immediately after the caissons.

The route of the parade was through Battery place to Broadway, to city hall and across the city hall plaza, where a halt was made. The troops were drawn up in line, the caissons taken across the north side of the plaza, with the carriages between, and school children of the city of New York sang a hymn.

The parade was resumed up Centre street, through Canal street, across the Manhattan bridge, down Nassau street, Brooklyn, through Flushing avenue to the marine gate. A stand had been erected in front of the marine barracks on the parade ground, where President Wilson and other officials, together with the members of the clergy, were assembled.

The ceremonies were extremely brief and simple, consisting of a hymn by the combined bands, a prayer by Chaplain Cassard, U. S. N.; an address by President Wilson, a prayer by Rabbi Wise and benediction by Father Chidwick.

At the conclusion of these ceremonies the firing party, consisting of the marine company of the Texas, marched in front of the stand and fired three volleys. Taps, sounded by the buglers, concluded the ceremony.

SIEGEL AND VOGEL HAVE DISAPPEARED

Indicted Men Secretly Get Away From New York

New York, May 11.—Henry Siegel, who has been indicted fourteen times on charges growing out of the failure of his private bank and his department stores, sailed secretly for England on board the steamship Olympic.

So far as could be learned none of his friends knew of his intention to visit England or Europe, and much surprise was manifested when news of his departure was passed around.

Frank E. Vogel, Siegel's partner and jointly indicted with him, left the Great Northern hotel on Thursday without leaving any address as to where he could be found and where letters could be sent. His mysterious disappearance, added to the secret departure of Siegel on the Olympic, created a mild sensation.

ASHES TOSSED TO WINDS

Last Wishes of Adams Complied With on Mountain Top

Windsor, Vt., May 11.—The ashes of George D. Adams, who died in South Natick, Mass., were thrown to the winds from the top of Mt. Ascutney, near here, by his three sons.

In his will Adams expressed the desire that his body be cremated and that the ashes be thrown from the mountain which he loved as a child. In accordance with this wish, the three sons climbed the mountain and fulfilled their father's request.

Adams was one of the leading authorities on the manufacture and selling of shoes. He also invented several mechanical appliances. His widow and only daughter are living in California.

SLASHES WIFE'S THROAT

Boston Man Then Uses a Razor Upon His Own Throat

Boston, May 11.—Repulsed by his wife, Mrs. Annie Regan, when he attempted to speak to her on Pinckney street, Charles E. Regan is charged by the police with attacking her with a razor and cutting a three-inch gash in her throat, after which he turned the razor upon himself and cut his throat.

Mrs. Regan had six stitches taken in her wound at the Codman hospital. Regan was carried to the relief hospital, where his injuries were treated. Neither was dangerously injured.

VOTES A MILLION

Payment For Militia Assured by Colorado Legislature

Denver, May 11.—The house of representatives passed the bill authorizing $1,000,000 in bonds to second reading, that action occurring within one hour of its passage on first reading.

Informed that the secretary of war had requested the governor to order a portion of the state militia back into the field and that the guards might not respond unless provisions were made for their pay, is said to have had an important bearing on the quick action of the house leaders.

Real Ability.

"What is the secret of success?" asked the fool.

"The ability to conceal your lack of ability," replied the sage.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MANY VICTIMS OF EARTHQUAKE

Loss of Life In Sicily May Reach Into the Hundreds

FOUR HUNDRED ARE INJURED

Relief Work Difficult Because of Razing of Buildings and Churches by Eruption of Mount Etna—No Correct Estimate of Number of Dead Can Be Made at Present

Rome, May 11.—It may be several days before it can be definitely learned how many lives were lost in the earthquake in Sicily, which devastated the countryside between Mount Etna and the Gulf of Catatina.

One hundred and thirty-nine bodies have been taken from the ruins and about 400 persons are seriously injured. Soldiers are searching the ruins and caring for the injured.

The villages of Linera has disappeared with its 150 inhabitants. They either fled from their homes in time or perished. From the ruins of the village and at Cosentini 110 bodies have been recovered.

On every side is desolation, ruin and death. Automobiles which have attempted to make their way through the stricken districts were forced to make long detours to avoid huge fissures in the ground.

The earthquake was even more severe than the disaster in Messina in 1908. Only the upper stories of houses were then destroyed, but houses, buildings and churches have now been razed to the ground.

Under the command of Generals Trabucchi and Moccagatta rescue work is proceeding very slowly. They have enlisted soldiers, firemen, policemen and Red Cross volunteers.

Refugees from some of the outlying districts report that fire followed the shock which ruined their homes.

The destruction and loss of life would have been even greater had there not been a series of warning tremors which caused hundreds to flee from their homes with their valuables.

The terror-stricken inhabitants fled to Catania, where first reports of the calamity were received. The government has sent hundreds of tents to the stricken district, which are being rapidly erected to shelter the homeless.

Mount Etna, which showed signs of an eruption about two weeks ago, is still active.

The entire population of villages at the base of the volcano deserted the towns and fled to the open country, fearing a disastrous eruption of the volcano as well as further earthquakes.

Priests organized religious processions. Statues of the Madonna and religious relics were carried at the head of these processions, which moved through the streets while the priests and their folowers petitioned for protection.

Corcoran Said to Be Seeking Release of Two Life Prisoners

Cambridge, Mass., May 11.—Interest in the cases of James Mantir and Peter C. Delorey, the young men who were sentenced to life imprisonment three years ago for the murder of Annie Mullin in this city, was revived by a reported declaration by District Attorney Corcoran of Middlesex county that he believes the prisoners to be guiltless of the crime and that he intends to take immediate steps to seek a pardon for them.

Corcoran is reported to have said that he is not only satisfied that there was a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused men, which, had it been felt by the jury, would have prevented their conviction, but that there is no reasonable doubt of their innocence.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

The report of the Massachusetts commission for the blind for the year shows that of the 1149 persons registered 413 were new cases.

Despondent because of illness Mrs. Alice Hughes, 56, committed suicide at New York by throwing herself beneath the trucks of an elevated train. She was instantly killed.

There were 165,000 lobsters shipped into Boston during forty-eight hours. They sold at from 18 to 20 cents per pound.

In Newton, Mass., court, Louis B. McCarthy, 16 years old, who was driving an automobile which fatally hurt Timothy Cummings, was held in $2000.

The town of Attleboro, Mass., wants to become a city. A bill to incorporate was reported by the legislative committee on cities.

MERRYMOUNT

Mount. From this, dates the free and easy reign, of which so much has been said; the two leading features of which were rioting and drunkenness. Morton, by his kind treatment of the Indians, secured their lasting friendship; they keeping him and the rest of the company, constantly supplied with game; thus showing how susceptible the Indians are to kind acts.

Having no cares, they gave themselves up to a gay and hilarious system of living, changing the name of the place from Mount Wollaston to Merry Mount, where, as it is stated in the New England Memorial they setting up a May-pole, adorned with bucks' horns; drinking and dancing about it, and frisking about it like so many fairies, or furies, rather; yea, and worse practices, as if they had anew revived and celebrated the feast of the Roman's Goddess Flora, or the beastly practices of the mad Bacchanalians."

MA-RE MOUNT.

"The inhabitants of Pasonagessit (having translated the name of their habitation from that ancient salvage name to Ma-re-Mount, and being resolved to have the new name confirmed for a memorial to after ages,) did devise amongst themselves to have it performed in a solemne manner with Revels and merriment after the old English custom, prepared to set up a Maypole upon the festival day of Philip and Jacob, and therefor brewed a barrel of excellent beare, and provided a case of bottles to be spent, with other good cheer, for all comers of that day. And because they would have it in a complete form they had prepared a song fitting the time and present occasion.

"And upon May day they brought the May-pole to the place appointed, with drumes, gunnes, pistols, and other fitting instruments for that purpose; and there erected it with the help of Salvages that came thither of purpose to see the manner of our Revels. A goodly pine tree of eighty foote was reared up, with a peare of buckshorns nayled one somewhere neare to the top of it; where it stood as a faire sea mark for directions how to find out the way to mine host of Ma-re-Mount.

"And because it should more fully appeare to what end it was placed there, they had a poem in readiness made, which was fixed to the Maypole, to shew the new name confirmed on that Plantation; which (although it were made according to the occurrent of the time, being Enigmatically composed), puzzled the Seperatist most pitifully to expound it, which for the better information of the reader we have here inserted."

THE POEM.

"Rise Edipeus, and if thou canst unfold
What meanes Caribdis underneath the mould,
When Scilla Solitary on the ground,
(Sitting in form of Niobe,) was found;
Till Amphitrites Darling did Acquaint
Grim Neptune with the tenor of her plaint,
And caus'd him send forth Triton with the sound
Of Trumpet loud at which the Seas were found
So full of Protean formes, that the bold shore
Presented Scilla a new paramore,
So strange as Sampson* and so patient,
As Job himself, directed thus by fate
To Comfort Scilla so unfortunate.

I do professe by Cupid's beautious mother
Here's Scogan's Choice for Scilla, and none other;
Though Scilla's sick with greife, because no signe
Can there be found of Vertue Masarline.
Esculapius come, I know right well;
His laboure's lost when you may ring her knell.
The fatall sister's doome none can withstand,
Nor Pitharea's powre who poynts to land,
With proclammation that the first of May
At Ma-re-Mount shall be kept holly day."

*The man who brought her over was named Sampson Job.

SEPARATISTS SHOCKED.

"The setting up of this May-pole was a lamentable spectacle to the precise Seperatists, that lived at New Plymouth. They termed it an Idol; yea, they called it the Calfe of Horeb; and stood at defiance with the place, naming it Mount Dagon; threatening to make it a woeful Mount and not a Merry-Mount.

"The Riddle for want of Edipus they could not expound, only they made some explication of part of it, and say'd it was meant by Sampson Job, the Carpenter of the shipp that brought over a woman to her husband, that had bin there long before, and thrived so well that hee sent for her and her children to come to him; where shortly after hee died; having no reason but because of the sound of those two words; when (as the truth is,) the man they applyed it to was altogether unknown to the author.

"There was likewise a merry song made, which, (to make their Revels more fashionable,) was sung with a Corus, every man bearing his part; which they performed in a daunce, hand in hand, about the May-pole, whiles one of the company sung, and filled out the good liquor like Ganymedes and Jupiter.

"THE SONGE."

"Drinke and be merry, merry merry boyes—
Let all your delight be in Hymen's Joyes—
Joy to Hymen now the day is come,
About the merry May-pole take a roome,
Make greene garlons, bring bottles out,
And fill sweet nectar freely about.
Uncover thy head, and feare no harme,
For here's good liquor to keep it warme.
Then drinke and be merry, &c
Joy to Hymen, &c.

"Nectar is a thing assigned
By the Deities owne mind—
To cure the heart oppress't with greife,
And of good liquors is the cheife—
Then drinke, &c.
Joy to Hymen, &c.

"Give to the melancolly man
A cup or two of't now and then;
This physick will soone revive his blood,
And make him be of a merrier moode—
Then drinke, &c.
Joy to Hymen, &c.

"Give to the Nymphe that's free from scorn,
No Irisch stuff, nor Schotch, overworne;
Lasses in beaver-coats come away,
Yee shall be welcome to us all the day—
To drinke, &c.
Joy to Hymen, &c.

"This harmless mirth made by younge men (that lived in hope to have wifes brought over to them that would save them a labore to make a voyage to fetch any over,) was much disappointed of the precise Seperatists that keepe much adoe about the tyth of mint and cummin, troubling theor braines more than reason would require about things that are indifferent; and from that time sought occasion against my honest Host of Ma-re-Mount to overthrow his undertakings and to destroy his Plantation quite and cleane.

"It cannot but be remarked how very plausible Morton makes his conduct appear;—but not so, precisely, did it appear to our scrupulous but worthy forefathers.

On the Eve of a Wedding

Mistaken Identity Caused a Complication

By JOHN Y. LARNED

Arthur MacKnight left his office at the conclusion of business hours and went to his bachelor apartments with a light heart. He would sleep that night in those apartments for the last time, for he was about to be married.

MacKnight's love came at first sight. He had made a flying trip abroad the summer before, had seen an American girl in the Kursaal in Lugano, Switzerland, had followed her to Lucerne and had secured an introduction. After two weeks going about in the same party he became engaged to her and the day after his engagement was obliged to leave her at Montreux to catch a steamer for America.

His fiancee, Miss Leona Denton, remained abroad three months longer. Her home was in a different city from that of MacKnight, and since he was very closely confined to business the lovers saw very little of each other. Therefore when he succeeded in arranging for a wedding to take place in the near future he was made a very happy man.

Consent that their daughter should ally herself with a man of whom she had seen so little and about whose antecedents so little was known was given by Miss Denton's parents with reluctance. MacKnight had been able to give no information about his family, had not a relative that he had ever seen, and his statements about his childhood were conflicting. The truth was that the poor fellow was a foundling, he knew he was a foundling and shrank from admitting the fact. Nevertheless he finally did so to his fiancee. But she who had come to love him with as much fervor as he loved her did not dare to communicate the fact to her parents lest they insist upon her breaking off the match. Consequently he was to be married with this secret kept by himself and Miss Denton from those who had a right to know it.

MacKnight reached the city where the Dentons lived too late to see his fiancee till morning. Before going to bed he sat smoking in the lounging room of the hotel where he stopped. It was not a first class house by any means. He had chosen it because it was the only hostelry that was not at a considerable distance from the Dentons. While he was smoking a man entered the room and looked about him uneasily. His gaze fell upon MacKnight, and he seemed surprised. MacKnight was also surprised. Between the two men there was a striking resemblance. Their complexion, hair, height, build were the same. Their clothes were entirely different, MacKnight's being plain, those of the other flashy.

The man passed out of the room, and soon after MacKnight went upstairs and to bed.

He was awakened by a knocking at his door. Rising, he opened it, and there stood a couple of policemen. They entered the room and directed MacKnight to dress himself. He asked what it all meant, but the only information he received was that he was wanted for various offenses. There being nothing for him to do except to obey, he turned to a chair on which he had left his clothes and began putting them on. He was so rattled that he did not for a few moments notice that the clothes were not those he had taken off. Then he saw that the suit was the exact counterpart of the one worn by the man he had seen in the lounging room.

Gradually it came into his head that this person had been hunted by the police and, having noticed the resemblance between himself and MacKnight, had conceived the idea of throwing the officers on a false scent. The supposed criminal could easily have learned the number of his room, opened the door with a skeleton key when all in the house were asleep, purloined MacKnight's clothes and left his own in their place.

Holding up the suit he was ordered to put on, MacKnight gave the policemen the above explanation. They looked at each other as much as to say, "Have we been fooled?" Then, without even consulting, they ordered MacKnight to put on the clothes, first taking the precaution to go through the pockets, in which they found articles to identify the owner with a prominent criminal. The prisoner was taken to a police station and locked in a cell.

To be placed in such a position only a few days before his expected wedding was, to say the least, distressing. MacKnight, who had had no experience in criminal law, did not doubt that he could prove his identity as soon as given an opportunity. What he dreaded was that the episode would strengthen the doubts concerning him held by his fiancee's parents and that they would withdraw their consent to the marriage.

He spent a night of torture, and the next morning early sent for an attorney, who assured him that he could secure an examination at once and, by giving bail for his appearance when the case came to trial, he would be liberated. This was done, and before noon the prisoner, having signed his own bail bond, was released from custody. Calling a cab, he drove at once to his fiancee's.

He had been expected much earlier, and his not coming had occasioned some worry. He proposed to give his explanation to Leona privately, and his not accounting for his delay at once made a bad impression on the rest of the family. As soon as the young couple were left alone he told his bride to be the story of his arrest. She listened eagerly and at his conclusion seemed much dejected. Her parents had not ceased to hold up to her the risk she ran in marrying a man she knew so little about, who had no family connections and whose childhood he had failed to account for. She dreaded lest they would now refuse to permit the wedding to come off as had been arranged.

The pair, after consultation, joined Mr. and Mrs. Denton and made a clean breast of what had occurred. It was evident that both the father and mother regarded the matter as a confirmation of their fears. MacKnight was informed that the wedding day must be put off indefinitely, by which he understood that it would not take place at all with Mr. and Mrs. Denton's consent. After further consultation between the lovers, they agreed that the wedding as arranged must be abandoned. Leona was too distressed to talk about the future, but she surely would not go back on her lover without the best of reasons.

The next morning MacKnight went to the office of his lawyer and was much surprised and disheartened to learn that it would be difficult to prove that he was not the man he was supposed to be. True, if he were the criminal, MacKnight must be accounted for. But might not MacKnight be both himself and the criminal? Persons had been known to lead double lives before, and why not in this case? At any rate, there must be a trial, which would attract a great deal of attention, and, even if the prisoner were acquitted, many persons would believe him guilty.

Leona had an interview with her parents, in which her father expressed the opinion that there was something wrong about her lover and that his arrest was fortunate in that it had saved her from a union with a criminal. The girl came from this interview feeling that no matter what verdict a jury might give with respect to the charge against her lover her father would believe him guilty.

Such was the situation of this young couple on the eve of the wedding day that had been set, with all the attendant expected happiness. But three days intervened before the intended nuptials. A compromise had been effected between Leona and her parents that the invitations should be recalled the next day. The lovers went for a final conference with the lawyer. He advised his client to jump his bail, go to a foreign country under an assumed name and begin life anew.

MacKnight, heartsick over the affair, dreading a trial and his inability to account for his past childhood, decided to act on this advice. It therefore remained with Leona whether she would share his fate or endure a lifelong separation from the man she loved. It was a question which suffered the more, MacKnight or the girl, whose life would be wrecked if she stood by him and would be blighted if she gave him up. A few hours of deliberation were sufficient for a decision. She agreed to marry her lover secretly and to go into oblivion with him.

MacKnight was leaving her home after receiving this decision when he met a man coming up the steps. The comer said he was looking for one Arthur MacKnight. "I am Arthur MacKnight." "I desire to confer with you." The two went back into the house, and the man said:

"I am John Eldredge of Barker, Smith & Eldredge, attorneys, of your city. A few years ago a matter concerning you was left with us, you not to be informed of it till you came to be twenty-five years old. But this charge against you which we have seen printed in the newspapers has seemed to warrant our communicating with you earlier. You were born in wedlock, but your father and mother are dead. Circumstances stood in the way of your mother acknowledging you. Shortly before she died she left a will in our care leaving you her property, you to be paid a part on reaching the age of twenty-five and the rest at thirty. If you need money for your defense of this charge against you I think we can enable you to borrow on your prospects."

Leona, who had heard her lover return to the house, at this juncture entered the room, curious to know what brought him back. MacKnight sprang toward her, folded her in his arms and covered her with kisses.

"The tide has turned," he cried. "All will yet come out as we wish. This gentleman has solved the mystery of my childhood."

It appeared that MacKnight was the son of persons of refinement and that he was heir to an estate of some $50,000. The mystery of his birth having been solved, Mr. Denton's suspicions were allayed, and he sympathized sincerely with the young couple. Considerable money was spent on detectives for the purpose of hunting down the real criminal, and he was found before the date fixed for the trial.

But long before this the lovers were married, for the invitations to the wedding were not recalled, and it occurred on the day that had been fixed.

After his marriage MacKnight took pains to hunt up more minute information of his parents and the reasons why he had been abandoned. All he could learn was that there was a secret marriage, with circumstances that prevented his acknowledgment till those nearest of kin to him were dead. His inheritance came from his mother, who lived under her maiden name.

Told All He Knew.

Pett Ridge, the English humorist, told a story of two American ladies who boarded one of the old horse omnibuses in London and, having settled down on the front seat on top, proceeded to bombard the unfortunate driver with questions about the places they were passing.

The driver reached the limit of his patience in Trafalgar square.

"Look here, ladies," he exclaimed as he started his horses up the hill toward Charing Cross road, "that's the monument to Nelson on the left. St. Martin's church is here on the right. Farther on we pass the Garrick and Wyndham's, the back entrance to the Alhambra and the 'Ippodrome; a bit 'igher up, if all goes well, the Palace; further on we reach the Oxford and the 'Orseshoe. Halfway up Tott'nham Court road, if Providence is good to us, we shall see Whitefield's tabernacle and not much then till we get to the Cobden statue, 'igher up still the Britannia and, eventually the Adelaide, where we stop and go no further.

"And," with a flick of his whip, "this is the bus, them's the 'orses, and I'm the poor bloomin' driver, and now you know pretty nigh as much about it all as I do!"

Japanese Limburger.

Perhaps the most conspicuous among the Japanese vegetables are the long white radishes, called daikon (referred to by foreigners as the Japanese limburger) highly esteemed and eaten by all classes. When boiled they are not unlike turnips, but when pickled the odor of putrefaction is singularly offensive to foreigners. Slices of the pickled product are served as a relish with every native meal. The beautiful dark violet fruit of the eggplant (nasu) partly cooked fresh in soup or salted and used instead of daikon is also much esteemed. Several varieties of mushrooms (take) are popular. The decline of Buddhism and the adoption of western customs has wrought a marked change in Japanese diet. Milk, cheese, butter, eggs, bread, flour, fowls, wild game, fish in limitless quantities and the like are consumed by whosoever (outside the priesthood) can afford them—Kansas City Star.

The First Carpet.

The first carpet ever seen in East Hampton, N. Y., was in Parson Lyman Beecher's house. One day a little money came from Uncle Lot Benton, the good angel of the Beecher family. With it young Lyman bought the cotton; his wife, Roxana, spun it, had it woven and painted it over in oil colors, with a gay border round the edge and groups of flowers in the center.

When the new carpet was laid down the people were astounded at the magnificence of the pastor's parlor. Good old Deacon Talmadge, coming one day, stopped at the door, afraid to enter.

"Walk in, deacon," said the pastor.

"I can't,' he answered, "'thout steppin' on't. D'ye think," he added, in wondering admiration, "ye can have all that and heaven too?" — Youth's Companion.

Fitting Homes to Salaries.

"Buy your house according to your salary."

Larger employers of labor in smaller communities where it can be done successfully are quite generally urging their workmen to buy and not rent homes. In one such plan I notice that no workman is permitted to buy a house under the company's plan which will cost over one-fifth of his monthly wages. The company builds a house for $1,500. It sells this to an employee upon payment of $15 for 100 consecutive months, or an $1,800 house for 100 monthly payments of $18. But the employer will not sell a $1,500 house to a man whose wages are less than $75 a month, or five times the required payment.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Hood of the Maltese Woman.

In his book "The Odd Man In Malta" John Wignacourt describes the ancient faldetta worn by the beautiful Maltese women—a black hood arched over the head with a strip of whalebone and held in place by a hand carrying all the jewelry that is available:

"It is worn by the rich when they go to church and by the poor always. * * * Its appearance is somewhat somber and depressing, and the efforts to look around the corner cause a great number of the women to be cross eyed. Still, it is a thoroughly ineradicable fashion and has great possibilities, since it is difficult to tell who is underneath it."

The Family Dog.

An Edinburgh clergyman says: "Every family should have a dog. It is like a perpetual baby. It betrays no secrets, never sulks, asks no troublesome questions, never gets into debt, never comes down late to breakfast and is always ready for a bit of fun."

Had Heard of Them.

Bobby (to grandmother)—Grandma, have you ever seen an engine wagging its ears? Grandma—No; nonsense, Bobby. I never heard of an engine having any ears. Bobby—Why, haven't you heard of engineers?—Chicago News.

What Did He Mean?

Wife (at dinner)—Cook left us this morning. Husband—Who cooked the dinner? Wife—I did. Husband—Really? Well, we'll have to get a new cook right away.—Lippincott's.

The Bright Side.

"So your wife has eloped with your chauffeur?"

"Yes, but he wasn't much of a chauffeur."—Houston Post.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

ALL INVITED TO CONTRIBUTE

Funds Necessary to Make Celebration a Success

An enthusiastic meeting of the Fourth of July association was held Saturday evening at the rooms of the Board of Trade, President Eugene R. Stone, presiding. The placards for the store windows, calling attention to the intention to celebrate and urging all to co-operate, were received and will be distributed today.

A letter was drawn up which will be forwarded to every society and organization in the city urging them to co-operate both by entering the morning parade, and by contributions to the funds. The matter of funds was gone into thoroughly, and it was decided not to ask the city for any contribution this year. This makes it necessary in order to carry out the plans as outlined, to receive larger subscriptions from the citizens, and it is hoped that everybody will give all possible toward the funds.

Some delay has been experienced in receiving the buttons which were expected last week, but word was received from the manufacturer that they would surely be forwarded some day this week. Another meeting of the association will be held next week and a general invitation is extended to all interested to be present.

In a Strange Place.

JEWISH FUNERAL.

The funeral of Abraham Kaufman, one of the best known Jewish residents of this city, was held from his home at 341 Water street on Sunday morning and was largely attended. Services were held in the synagogue on School street and were conducted by Rev. Julius Sandolovitz.

Delegations were present from the Pride of Quincy lodge, Independent Order of Brith Abraham, and the Young Mens Hebrew Association, with which the deceased was affiliated.

Mr. Kaufman has lived in this city for several years and conducted a junk business. He is survived by his wife, four children, his parents, four sisters and one brother. He was 28 years of age. The body was taken to Dedham for burial.

HOT TODAY.

The temperature at noon today reached the 80 degree mark making it the second warmest day of the season. Once in April the mercury climbed upwards to 80 degrees, and over and that was on April 19, when the temperature at noon was 82 degrees. I took a drop however the next day to the 66 degree mark.

The highest point the mercury reached in May, 1913, was 80 degrees which was on May 31. The average temperature in May, 1913, was 63 plus The lowest point in May last year being 50 degrees on May 16.

JUST MARRIED.

An automobile containing what was evidently a bridal couple passed through City Square this noon and attracted considerable attention. Seated on the rear seat was the bride and bridesmaid, in white while between them sat the groom. Attached to the rear axle was a large cow bell which sounded a note of its approach and served to attract attention to the car. On the back of the car was a large sign reading "we have just been married." The car disappeared up Hancock street and caused many a smile.

WILL BE HOME WEDNESDAY.

The family of A. L. Baker of Wollaston received a telegraphic message this morning announcing the arrival in New York of their son Clair Baker, and that he is due to arrive in Wollaston on Wednesday morning.

Editor For a Day.

When Lord Northcliffe, the English publisher and peer, was plain Mr. Harmsworth, Joseph Pulitzer permitted him to be editor of the New York World for one day in order to exemplify the Harmsworth contention that the New York papers are too big. The tabloid World, famous in newspaper circles, was the result.

Harmsworth called the staff into consultation. Henry N. Cary, then news editor, suggested as a joke that all members of the staff should appear that night in full evening regalia. Everybody consented with one exception—one man refused. Harmsworth came down in a sack suit. He was astonished at the display of evening suits and sniffed the mothball smell from afar. He asked mildly whether the World editors and reporters appeared thus clad as a usual thing, and was solemnly assured they did. The only person dressed like Harmsworth was the editor who would not fall in with the joke.

Also, the only man Harmsworth took back to England with him was the man who was clad like himself.—Saturday Evening Post.

Had to Go and Climb a Tree.

The Countess of Desmond died in 1604 at the age of 140. In his "History of the World" Sir Walter Raleigh states: "I myself knew the old Countess of Desmond, who was married in Edward IV.'s time and held her jointure from all the earls of Desmond since then; and that this is true all the noblemen and gentlemen in Munster can witness." She retained all her faculties to the last, walked ten miles in a day only a week before her death, and according to the inscription on the back of her portrait at Muckross abbey, "in ye course of her long Pilgrimage renewed her teeth twice." The countess looked like living another fifty years, when, as Lord Leicester told Sir William Temple, "she must needs climb a nut tree to gather nuts; so, falling down, she hurt her thigh, which brought a fever, and that brought death."

Shamrock Diet For Athletes.

Has any modern athlete thought of trying the shamrock as training diet? Most of the writers of former times who credited the Irish with eating their national plant spoke of this as evidence of the poverty of the people, though some said it was eaten to make the breath sweet. But Mundy, an Oxford vegetarian, at the end of the seventeenth century observed, with satisfaction, that "the Irish that nourish themselves with their shamrock (which is the purple clover) are swift of foot and of nimble strength." And Linnaeus wrote, "The swift and agile Irishmen nourish themselves with their shamrock, which is the purple trefoil, for they make from the flowers of this plant, breathing a honeyed odor, a bread which is more pleasant than that made from other materials.—London Chronicle.

THE WOMAN WHO WAS TOO DISINTERESTED

There was once a Woman whose Fiance Evinced an Interest in Somebody Else. To this she Paid No Attention.

Said she, "I shall Not Place a Straw in his Way! he must Act as his Conscience Dictates."

"He is much More Likely," said her Friends, "to Act as the Other Woman Dictates unless you Take some Trouble to Prevent It. Although he is really Fonder of You."

HE MARRIED THE OTHER WOMAN.

"Then there is No Occasion for my Taking any Trouble," said she. "I rely on my own Fidelity and the Support of a Good Conscience."

Later her Fiance assured her that He was Unworthy of Her, and Still Later he Married the Other Woman.

Nor did she Win even the Pity of Her Friends, because they Considered that she had Brought it On Herself.

This teaches us that Virtue is its Only Reward.

Without a word of argument, the City Council at the special meeting Monday night, passed over the veto of the Mayor the three express permits which he had returned to the Council without his approval. The only absent member was Councilman Bass, who however came into the Council chamber just as the meeting closed.

There were two matters in the call, namely: To receive and act on report of the Committee on Streets; to receive and act on a comunication from Mayor returning without his approval Orders 143 granting liquor transportation permits to Carl Lilja, Maloney's express and M. J. Connelly.

STREET REPORT.

The first matter was the report of the Committee on Streets who reported an order for a public hearing June 1, on the acceptance of new streets, which was adopted. The order is similar to one passed at the meeting of April 27.

The order called for the delivering of attested copies of the order to abutters on the streets, and owing to the lack of time the Chief of Police sent the attested copies through the mails. The City Solicitor ruled later that copies must be delivered in hand or left at the last and usual place of abode of the owner or owners, and that sending them through the mail did not comply with the law. It was necessary therefore in order to make the hearing legal to call it over again, so that instead of the hearing being held on May 18, it will not be held until June 1.

EXPRESS PERMITS.

The next matter was the communication from the Mayor returning the unsigned liquor permits. There was a large audience of citizens present to see what action would be taken, and the Mayor and City Solicitor occupied seats inside the inclosure, but no questions were asked and neither gentlemen addressed the Council.

"Quincy, May 7, 1914.

"Dear Sir—I return three of the permits to transport intoxicating liquors, without my signature. They are Carl Lilja, Maloney's Express and M. J. Connelly.

"I believe with the large vote for no license, that the number of licenses granted should be reduced, and after careful investigation I am certain that the above reduction will be for the good of the city.

Your respectfully,
(signed) JOHN L. MILLER," Mayor."

All three orders were passed separately by roll call and each was passed, 20 voting in favor of passing over the veto and one in favor of sustaining the veto. The vote was as follows:

Yes,—Barker, Beeman, Barnicoat, Barrows, Craig, Corcoran, Carlson, Ericson, Griffin, Gelotte, Gilliatt, Hadcock, Little, Nelson, O'Dowd, Richards. Ross, Sodergren, Thompson, Williams; 20.

No—Bailey.

Not voting,—President Whiton.

Absent,—Bass.

There being no further business the Council adjourned at 7.54.

After the meeting several reporters gathered about the Mayor to learn what he thought about the matter, or what he intended to do, but they got but little satisfaction as he was not in a talkative mode.

STILL ASK OPINION.

The orders as passed were turned over to City Clerk Crane, this morning. It is the duty of the City Clerk to issue all licenses passed by the Council. When asked what he intended to do, Mr. Crane said that he should refuse to issue the licenses until he had received the opinion of the City Solicitor in writing, and that he would be governed by that opinion.

The general impression seems to be that if the City Solicitor rules that the permits must have the signature of the Mayor, and the Mayor still refuses to affix his signature, that the matter will be brought into the courts. It is understood that the expressmen have combined to carry the matter through if necessary in order that it may be settled once and for all, whether the Mayor's signature is absolutely necessary to make a license effective.

CAMPAIGN FOR MEMBERS.

A campaign for members of Quincy lodge, Junior Order of Moose, was launched at a meeting in Protection hall Monday evening and a large committee was appointed to increase the membership. The campaign will be directed by Albert J. Williams, governor of the Junior lodge and past dictator of the Quincy lodge, to which the members are eligible by transfer on the attainment of their majority. One candidate was initiated under the direction of Dictator Oscar Frisk, Jr., and several applications were received. Plans for the annual May party and dance to be held in Alpha hall were completed.

The presentation was one of the best given in the city this season, and the many ridiculously funny situations were developed with a skill that did not allow the show to drag, but kept it humming merrily along during the entire performance. Individuals were heartily encored at their appearance, and on their exit, and when the final line was spoken long applause was given by the audience.

The ushers were members of the Girls Friendly Society; Miss Helen Croucher, Miss Gertrude Allen, Miss Annie Lowe, Miss Mildred Bean, Miss Dorothy Brokaw, Miss Elsie Whitehead, Miss Ruth Bruce and Mabel Tripp who also sold small baskets of candy between the acts.

Cars were waiting at the door after the play to take the Wollaston, Park and Downs and Atlantic people home, but through an oversight the street railway company was not notified of the event and it was a case of over crowding and walking to get there on time, many missing the first act.

SERIOUS AUTO ACCIDENT

Carriage of Mr. and Mrs. Heaney Struck at Braintree

Mrs. John J. Heaney of 105 Quincy avenue, Braintree received a fracture left rib and minor bruises, and her husband, a bad shaking up, by being thrown from their carriage when it was struck by an automobile at Braintree Monday evening. The automobile operated by Harry White came suddenly upon the carriage at a turn in the street, and when the driver applied the brakes the machine skidded. In the car with White was Miss Helen Stoddard and 100 dozens of eggs. The car after striking the wagon turned upside down on the side of the street and about sixty dozen of the eggs were scrambled into one mess.

Mrs. Heaney was taken to the home of Robert Willey where she was attended by Dr. F. H. Gile. Her injuries were such that it was not thought advisable to remove her to her home. It is alleged that White attempted to remove the number plate from his machine and that Mr. Heaney had a tussle with him to get possession of it which he did.

ANNIVERSARY OF ODD FELLOWSHIP

Order Doing Much to Remove Racial and Other Kinds of Prejudice

Says John D. Mackay in His Address at Alpha Hall

The 95th anniversary of Odd Fellowship in America was celebrated jointly on Monday evening by Mount Wollaston lodge, Manet encampment, and George L. Gill Rebekah lodges, and Alpha hall was none to large for the gathering. Only Odd Fellows and their immediate families were invited, but these make quite a large family in Quincy.

The orchestra composed of members of John Hancock lodge gave a concert while the guests were gathering, and later took part in the entertainment, and furnished good music for the dancing. Members of George L. Gill Rebekah lodge acted as ushers, viz: Mrs. Sadie Wood, Mrs. Sadie Walker, Mrs. Grace Welch, Mrs. Kate Prout, Miss Edith Spargo, Miss Marion Baker, Miss Abbie Feltis, Mrs. Maud Richardson, Mrs. Annie Pushee and Mrs. Lillian Baker. The last number of the concert was the "Star Spangled Banner" when all stood.

Edward Marnock was chairman of the entertainment committee, and welcomed the large gathering. John D. Mackay, chairman of the School Committee, was then introduced for an address on "Odd Fellowship," which set forth the high principles and laudable work which the order was doing.

He said in part:

"There is a beautiful legend concerning our Order to the effect that it had its birth when Titus was governor at Rome and that he wrote the first charter on a golden tablet and gave it to a Jewish legion. The order cannot boast of such venerable antiquity, being less than two centuries old, but it would have been most fitting that its initial authority should have been written in gold; for golden have been its works of benevolence from the day of its institution down to the present day.

"The order is one of our heritages from England, from which country we have received our common language ,our common law, our ideas of good government and many other things which are cherished by the American people. From a handful of workingmen, meeting in the Globe Tavern in the early part of the 18th century has developed that great system of Odd Fellowship represented today wherever the British flag floats.

"And from a handful of Odd Fellows meeting at Baltimore, Maryland 95 years ago have grown the myriad lodges which are found in practically every city and town of the United States. Whenever you go throughout the English speaking world, you are sure to encounter men who will greet you with sincerity in the name of Odd Fellowship and make you feel how closely akin we all really are.

"The libertine and the man of shady business methods are not knowingly admitted to membership in our lodges. It is because of our insistence upon only men of integrity in business affairs being taken into membership that men of standing in the business world and in social life so readily come in. They know they will be obliged to fraternize with only honorable men. And it is because of the insistence by Odd-Fellowship upon clean morals on the part of its candidates that the Rebekas, half a million strong, are enrolled as co-laborers with us.

"After pointing out the work done by the order in removing racial ann other kinds of prejudice within the FIELD FOR EXPLORATION.

It is comonly supposed that little unexplored area is left on the earth's surface, save in the polar regions, and that adventurous men like Theodore Roosevelt will soon find nothing left to discover. But when one looks up the unexplored regions of the earth, it is found that there is work still left for the explorers. Alaska has an unknown section as big as New England. There are unexplored regions in South America, Asia, and upper Canada as big as California or Texas.

The Sahara desert of Africa was formerly a great splotch of white on the maps. It was regarded as valueless. It was long argued as a feasible project, that water be let in to flood it. Further exploration showed the absurdity of this theory, by demonstrating that it has mountains a mile high, with much elevated table land.

In this supposedly valueless tract there are great oases, one of which alone has 4,000,000 date palms. Considerable areas can be made productive by planting with coarse grasses and tenacious varieties of trees.

The world wide search for rubber is leading to further search in the South American wilds. Perhaps the Roosevelt party may have found it. Very likely a better knowledge of South America may yet reduce the high price of automobile tires, and make it possible to sell rubber overshoes having some substance.

It is a costly matter to fit out expeditions to explore these wilds. The results are uncertain, and the governments of the world are not much inclined toward it. The work depends on the scientific curiosity and love for adventure shown by such men as Mr. Roosevelt. There will be much interest to learn whether his expedition, which has just reached the seacoast, has found resources of value to the world.

LIGHT IS HELD TO GUARD SHIPS

Lobos Seized to Prevent Its Destruction by Mexicans

HUERTA ENTERS A PROTEST

State Department Replies That International Rules Supply Basis For Action Because of Order of Dictator to Close Lighthouses—Not Considered an Act of Aggression—Incident Places Outcome of Mediation In the Balance—Much Depends Upon Fighting at Tampico, Where Federals Are Putting Up Stubborn Resistance—Humiliating Treatment of Consul Silliman at Saltillo—Huerta Loses War Munitions

Washington, May 12.—That the occupation of Lobos island by the United States forces under Admiral Badger was justified by the rules of international procedure is the contention made in answer to protests filed on behalf of Dictator Huerta.

The state department has so stated to the mediators, who transmitted a protest from Huerta that such occupation was a violation of the implied agreement that no hostile moves would be undertaken pending the outcome of the mediation negotiations.

Lobos island lighthouse was seized by Badger because he had received credible information that it was to be destroyed by Mexicans. The United States takes the position this act was in no way an act of aggression.

Mexican Foreign Minister Ruiz telegraphed the South American mediators that several United States torpedo boats with a transport and tender appeared off the island of Lobos, landed a party on the island and arrested the lighthouse tenders, who were released after they had turned over the instruments and apparatus for operating the lighthouse. The mediators were asked to make representations to the United States government in connection with the armistice.

According to the terms of a note dispatched to Huerta by Secretary Bryan the island will not be given up. The note explains that the island was seized as a precautionary measure which would insure safety to shipping, since the Mexicans have neglected to operate the lighthouse located on it.

The real significance behind the protest lodged by Huerta is the fact that it was used by General Scott in the last Mexican war as the basis of supplies for the invasion of Mexico through Vera Cruz.

Howard's Report

Admiral Howard, commander of the Pacific fleet, cabled to the navy department that Huerta had ordered the lighthouses on the Pacific coast extinguished so as to impede navigation by American ships. The same order by Huerta is reported to have been made as to lighthouses on the Atlantic side, so that the reported seizure of the lighthouse at Lobos island might be held to be a precautionary measure to keep the lights burning and thus protect all shipping along the coast, where many foreign vessels ply.

As such a precautionary measure, the taking of the lighthouse, it is contended, would be without significance as an occupation or territorial acquisition of the island, and therefore would not justify any charge of violation of armistice.

Important Strategic Point

The island of Lobos lies eight miles off the east coast of Mexico, 180 miles north of Vera Cruz and sixty-five miles south of Tampico. Two islands are near together, Lobos and Blanquilleo. They are due east of Cape Rojo and lie off the long spit of land which envelopes the large lake, Tamiahua, extending inland and northward nearly to Tampico.

Lobos island is near the main route of steamers plying between Vera Cruz and Tampico and has a powerful light to guide shipping, one of the most important along the east coast. The island is low and sandy with nothing on it but the lighthouse equipment, though its location might make it of considerable strategical importance. A line of shoals runs south of the island making navigation dangerous. The town of Tuxpam, in the centre of a rich oil region, lies twenty-five miles southwest on the coast.

Mediation Is Affected

The success of mediation is hanging in the balance as a result of the refusal of the United States to give up the island.

The one hope held out in official circles for the successful progress of mediation centres about the result of the fighting at Tampico. If this important port is captured by the constitutionalists, then it is felt that the Mexican dictator may weaken and giev way to the demands of the United States that he abdicate.

It is believed that at the last ditch he will consent to quit if the United States will take control of the government and preside over an election, rather than permit the constitutionalists to triumph.

Situation at Tampico

While all sorts of wild rumors are flying about relative to the developments at Tampico, the best information from Admiral Mayo contained in dispatches to the navy department and the telegrams sent to the members of the constitutionalist junta say that the federals are putting up a stubborn resistance and that the fighting will last for some days yet.

At the constitutionalists' headquarters word was received that the rebels had succeeded in getting in the city, but it was predicted that it would be several days before the federals, who are strongly entrenched, will capitulate.

The Case of Silliman

The situation is made more tense by the demand made from the state department through the Brazilian minister in Mexico City calling for the immediate release of Consul Silliman, who is reported to be still under arrest at Saltillo.

The first word of his imprisonment reached Washington along with the reports to the effect that the consul had been subjected to the most humiliating treatment at the hands of the federal officials and that the American flag had been outraged. The ministers of Brazil and Egland in Mexico City joined with the United States in their appeal for the release of Silliman.

Because of the battle that is being waged about Saltillo, where the constitutionalists under the command of General Villa are besieging the town, it is feared that the federals will murder Silliman.

The demand for his release on the part of the United States is in the nature of an ultimatum and the strongest note that has come out of the state dearment for many days.

Huerta Won't Get Arms

It is now definitely settled that the arms and ammunition intended for Huerta will not be landed at Vera Cruz. And one of the most important reasons for the failure of the German ship to land these arms, which have been neglected up to this time, is that the emissaries of Huerta were not on the dock with the money to pay for the munitions of war.

It seems that under the agreement which the dictator has with the German firms who are shipping him arms, that a part payment is made at the beginning as a guarantee, but the Germans insist upon cash on delivery.

Had Huerta been able to advance the money at Puerta Mexico in full payment for the arms and ammunition, it is quite probable that they would now be in Mexico City. But the money was not on hand, and of course, with the American forces in control of Vera Cruz, it was impossible to land the arms.

Funston Catches Snipers

One of the interesting developments in the situation of which Washington was informed came in a dispatch from General Funston, stating that he had taken five snipers from a Norwegian vessel in the harbor of Vera Cruz and that they were to be tried for their lives before his military court.

Three of the snipers were citizens of Brazil, one from Peru and one from Chile. The Brazilian minister in Mexico City has appealed to Consul Canada in Vera Cruz to save their lives. Funston wired the war department for instructions and the matter has been turned over to Secretary Bryan.

Federal Gunboat Blown Up

Rear Admiral Howard reported that the abandoned Mexican federal gunboat Moralos was boarded, set on fire and blown up by the constitutionalists at Mazatlan.

The Morales was a small vessel of 1200 tons, built in the Orlando yards in Spain. It was 129 feet long, thrty-four feet beam, with ten feet draft. It carried two four-inch guns, six six-pounders, and a fourteen-inch torpedo tube at the bow and above water.

Howard further reported that the constitutionalist artillery at San Pietras island drove the Mexican transport Korrigan out of the harbor.

An Easy Way.

One of the easiest and most effective ways of escaping the hardships of prison abuses is found in the simple old process of keeping out of prison.—Chicago Record-Herald.

HOME GARDENING.

A Plan For the Better Economic and Educative Use of the Time of Children in Cities, Towns and Manufacturing Villages.

In the cities, towns, manufacturing villages, and suburban communities of the United States there are approximately 13,000,000 children between the ages of 6 and 20. Of these about 9,750,000 are enrolled in the public and private schools. The average daily attendance is 6,500,000, two-thirds of the enrolment and one-half of the school population. These children are taught by 300,000 teachers at a cost for all purposes of $200,000,000. The average length of school term in the cities is 180 days. The average attendance is 120 days. The length of the school day is about five hours.

Probably 5 per cent of these children are away from home during the summer vacation months with their parents at summer resorts or visiting in the country. Between 5 and 10 per cent are employed in some useful healthful, productive occupation. Eighty-five per cent remain at home without any useful, healthful occupation requiring any large part of their time. Most of them have little opportunity for play. Some of them work a portion of the time at occupations at which they earn very little and which are not suited for children of their age. The dangers of idleness and unsuitable occupation are very great for all. A large majority of them belong to families whose members must earn their living by their daily labor and for which the earnings are so meager that anything which can be added by the children is much needed. Many of them are cold in winter, and must go hungry much of the time. More of them live in small, crowded rooms and in poorly furnished homes. More than two-thirds of them leave school at 14 years of age or earlier, to become breadwinners. Because of lack of proper contact with nature and the experience which comes from suitable, purposeful, productive occupations, most of them do not get from their years in school such education as they should.

In this situation is involved an important problem of education and economics which can, it is believed, be solved in no other way so well as by home gardening done by children under the direction of the schools. In all of the manufacturing villages, suburban communities, smaller towns and outskirts of the larger towns and cities there is much valuable land in back yards, vacant lots, and elsewhere which might be used for this purpose. In every school in a community of this kind there should be at least one teacher who knows gardening both theoretically and practically. This teacher who should, of course, be employed twelve months in the year, should teach the elementary sciences in the schools during the school hours and should, out of school hours, direct the home gardening of the children between the ages of 7 and 15.

If possible the teacher should have the assistance of an expert gardener, so that the work may be done in the most practical and profitable way. The teacher and the gardener should help the children find the plots of ground near their homes best suited for garden work, aid them by some co-operative method to have the lots properly plowed and prepared for cultivation, help them select seeds, and show them how to plant, cultivate, and harvest, so as to obtain the best results. The teacher should spend the afternoons, and Saturdays of winter, spring, and fall, when school is in session, and all of the vacation days of summer, visiting the children in their homes, directing their work, and giving to each child such help as it most needs. Once a week or oftener, during the vacation months, the teacher should assemble the children in groups for discussions of their work and of the principles and methods involved.

Vegetables, berries, and fruits grown should be used first as food for the children and their families; then the surplus should be marketed to the best advantage. Through the help of the teacher this can be done in a co-operative way. Ten or 15 cents worth of vegetables each day from the gardens of each of 200 children would amount to $20 or $30. In the summer and fall, when the surplus is large and can not be marketed to advantage, the teacher should direct and help the children in canning and preserving for winter use or for sale. The canning and tomato clubs of the Southern States have already shown what can be done in this way.

It is difficult to estimate the results of this plan when it shall be in full operation throughout the country. For the children it will mean health, strength, joy in work, habits of industry, an understanding of the value of money, as measured in terms of labor, and such knowledge of the phenomena and forces of nature as must be had for an understanding of most of their school lessons. They will also learn something at least of the fundamental principle of morality: that each individual must make his or her own living; must, by some kind of labor of head, hand, or heart, contribute to the common wealth as much as he takes form it; must pay for what he gets in some kind of coin.

The economic and sociological results should also be considered. Many experiments already made show that with proper direction an average child of the ages contemplated can produce on an eighth of an acre of land from $50 to $100 worth of vegetables. A third of the children in the city schools of the United States might easily produce $200,000,000 dollars a year.

This plan in full operation would probably do more toward keeping young children out of the factories and mills than all of the child-labor laws on the statute books. A boy 10 or 12 years of age, with a quarter of an acre of land, working under careful direction, can produce more for the support of the family than could be purchased with the child's wages from the mill. Children should not be ground in the mills nor sweated in the factories; their strength should not be sapped and their nerves racked by working in the heat and dust of indoors, yet all children should learn to work; it is good for them and they joy in it.

This plan will also do much to solve the problem of the idle negro. A large part of the negroes of the Southern States live on the outskirts of cities and small towns. Their cabin homes are frequently on large lots and surrounded with vacant lots covered with weeds and rubbish. During the vacation months the negro children roam idly on the streets, falling into mischief and vice. Under proper direction they might make, on these back yards and vacant lots, enough to support themselves, and more. Their parents might then put into savings banks a good part of their earnings. With the money thus accumulated they could buy or build their own homes and gain some degree of that independence necessary for good citizenship for men and women of any race. The negro children would be kept from vice and would gain habits of industry. Incidentally these negro quarters would be changed from places of ugliness to places of beauty.

Probably the most valuable result of this plan will be found in the fact that it will make it easy for most children to attend school three or four years longer than they now do, a thing more and more desirable, since education for life and citizenship in our industrial, civic, and social democracy can not be obtained before the age of adolescence. In some way all children must have instruction and training after the years of childhood, or state and society must suffer for the failure. If a child can contribute to its support while in school, it may remain in school much longer than if it must be carried as a dead weight until it quits school to go to work.

The fact that this work will produce a generation of men and women who will find their recreation after the close of their eight hour labor day in profitable home gardening is also not the least important reason for its introduction.

Compared with the results, the cost will be inconsiderable. No addition to the number of teachers will be required. It will only be necessary to require different preparation for one teacher in each school. Fifty thousand such teachers will be sufficient for all the city, town, and manufacturing village schools in the United State. To add $500 to the salary of one teacher in each school, in order to retain his services throughout the entire twelve months, would require an additional expenditure of $25,000,000, only one-twelfth of the present total cost of these schools and less than one-eighth of the total value of what may easily be produced by the healthful, joyous, educative labor of children who now spend much more than half of their waking hours in idleness hurtful to them physically mentally, and morally.

In the estimates submitted to Congress by the Commissioner of Education for the support of the Bureau in the next fiscal year an item of $5,700 is included to enable the Bureau to begin the introduction of this kind of work in the schools of the United States. The commissioner believes that it will only be necessary to work out detail of plans and to present them to school officers, together with full information in regard to results of somewhat similar work already done at various places. It will of course be necessary also to induce colleges and training schools for teachers to so modify their courses as to give to some teachers the preparation required for this work. Many such teachers should be prepared in the colleges and schools of agriculture.

ETTOR TO SPEAK HERE.

Joseph Ettor, the central figure in the Lawrence textile strike and leader of the Industrial Workers of the World, is coming to Quincy on Thursday to address the unskilled workmen of the city. His appearance here will be the first step in the organization of a branch of that organization among the unskilled workmen of Quincy. The I. W. W. hope to enlist a majority of the employees of the Fore River shipyard in the ranks.

Ettor was in Wakefield on Monday where he will remain to direct the final stages of the rattan strike in that place. Assisting him is Caleb Howard of Quincy, an organizer, who is making preparations for the Quincy visit. If a large field can be procured Ettor will address the workmen there in preference to a hall. If one cannot be secured his talk may be given in the Finnish Socialist hall on Garfield street.

No excuse, perhaps, will be necessary for further extracts from the singular book of Thomas Morton of Merrymount, the first chapter of which was presented in the Daily Ledger of Monday.

"The Seperatists, envying the prosperity and hope of the Plantation at Ma-re-Mount, (which they p[illegible]ed) beganne to come forward, and [illegible] a good way for gaine in the Beaver trade), conspired together against mine host, especially, (who was the owner of that Plantation), and made up a party against him; and mustered up what aide they could; accounting of him as a great monster.

"Many threatening speeches were give out, both against his person and his habitation, which they divulged should be consumed with fire;—and taking advantage of the time when his company, (which seemed little to regard their threats), were gonee up into the inlands to trade with the Salvages for Beavers. They set upon my honest Host at a place called Wessaguscus, where, (by accident,) they found him. The Inhabitants there were in good hope of the subversion of the Plantation at Ma-re-Mount, which they principally aymed at, and the rather, because mine host was a man that endeavoured to advance the dignity of the Church of England, which they, (on the contrary part,) would labour to vilifie with uncivile termes; enveying against the sacred book of Common Prayer, and mine host, that used it in a laudible manner amongst his family as a practice of piety.

"In breife, mine host must indure to be their prisoner untill they could contrive it so that they might send him for England, (as they said), there to suffer according to the merit of the fact which they intended to father upon him; supposing (belike), it would prove a hainous crime.

"Much rejoicing was made that they had gotten their c[illegible] enemy, (as they concluded him,) whome they purposed to hamper in such sort, that hee should not be able to uphold his Plantation at Ma-re-Mount.

"The conspirators sported themselves at my honest host that meant them no hurt, and were so joccund that they feasted their bodies and fell to tippeling, as if they had obtained a great prize; like the Trojans, when they had the custody of Sinnons' pine-tree horse.

"Mine host fained reefe; and could not be persuaded either to eate or drinke; because he knew emptiness would be a meanes to make him as watchful as the Geese kept in the Roman Capitall; whereon the contrary part, the conspirators would be so drowsy that hee might have an opportunity to give them a slip insteade of a tester. Six persons of the conspiracy were set to watch him at Wessaguscus. But hee kept waking, and in the deade of night, (one lying on the bed for further suerty,) up gets mine host and got to the second dore that hee was to passe, which (notwithstanding the lock,) hee got open, and clapt it after him with such violence, that it affrighted some of the conspirators.

"The word which was given with an alarme was, O he's gon, he's gon, what shall we doe, he's gon. The rest half asleep start up in a maze, and like rames ran their heads one at another full butt in the darke.

"Their grand leader, Capt. Shrimp, tooke on most furiously, and tore his clothes for anger, to see the empty nest and their bird gone.

"In the mean time, mine host was got home to Ma-re-Mount through the woods, eight miles round about the head of the river Monatoquit, that parted the two Plantations—finding his way by the helpe of the lightening, (for it thundered as he went, terribly), and there he prepared powther three pounds dried for his present imployment, and four good gunnes for him, and the two assistants left at his howse with bullets of several sizes, three hundred or thereabouts, to be used if the conspirators should pursue him thether; and these two persons promised their aides in the quarrell, and confirmed that promise with a health in good rosa solis.

"After holding a Council," continues Morton, "Capt. Shrimp takes eight persons more to him;— and like the nine worthies of New Canaan, they imbarque with preapration against Ma-re-Mount, where this monster of a man, (as their phrase was,) had his denne—the whole number, had the rest not bin from home,) being but seaven, would have given Capt. Shrimp, (a quondam Drummer) such a welcome as would have made him wish for a Drume as bigg as Diogenes' tubb ,that hee might have crept into it ought of sight.

"Now the nine worthies are approached and mine host prepared; having intelligence by a Salvage that hastened in love from Wessaguscus to give him notice of their intent.

"The nine worthies coming before the Denne of this supposed monster (this seaven-headed hydra as they termed him,) began like Don Quixote against the wind-mill, to beate a parly and to offer quarter, (if mine host would yeald,) for they resolved to send him for England and bad him lay by his armes.

"But mine host had no sooner set open the dore, and issued out but instantly Capt. Shrimpe and the rest of the worthies stepped to him, lay'd hold of his armes; and had him downe, and so eagerly was every man bent against him, (not regarding any agreement made with such a carnall man,) that they fell upon him as if they would have eaten him.

"Captain Shrimpe and the rest of the nine worthies made themselves (by this outragious riot,) masters of mine host, of Ma-re-Mount, and disposed of what he had at his Plantation."

They sent him to England; this was in 1628. "He returned again into the Country in some short time with less punishment than his demerits deserved, as was apprehended." It was in August, 1629, that he returned. In September, 1631, he was again sent to England, his house being burnt, and liquors confiscated, by order of the General Court.

In 1634 he published a book, called, "New England Canaan." This book is a queer specimen of literature. In turning over its pages, you will see that it abounds in nick-names; such as Capt. Shrimp for Capt. Standish; Capt. Littleworth, for Endicott, Dr. Nobby, for Fuller, &c. Hutchinson says, "he came to New England again in 1643; a letter and a book, full of invectives, which he had written, was produced against him; he was truly called the accuser of the brethren: the Court fined him 100lbs. He was poor and unable to pay it, nothing but his age saved him from the whipping post." He went to Acamenticus now the town of York, in the State of Maine, and there died about 1645.

BRIEFS

Well, we had three days without rain and that is something to be thankful for.

The Lois E. Gragg Sewing Circle is to hold a sale and whist party Wednesday evening at G. A. R. hall.

St. Margaret's Guild of Christ church is giving a pop concert tonight in the parish house.

The annual meeting of the Quincy Women's club is being held this afternoon and the reports will appear in the Daily Ledger of Wednesday.

Chief Engineer Billings reports that during the month of April there were 30 bell and 30 still alarms of fire.

The alarm from Box 61 at 10.35 Monday night was a false alarm. The box is located at the corner of Hancock and Squantum streets and when the department arrived there was no one near the box, and no signs of a fire. The recall sounded immediately after the box.

MOST OF THE GARAGES HIT

Many Changes Necessary to Comply With Law

Owners of private garages throughout the city, as well as some of the large public garages, are being hard hit by the new rules just put into force by the Chief of the District Police, and there is hardly a private garage in the city that will not have to be moved and otherwise changed to meet with the requirements.

Chief Billings of the Fire department has received copies of the new regulations, and he has about completed the job of leaving a copy of them with every owner of a garage in the city. According to Chief Billings there are very few that comply with the rules, and the owners will be put to the expense of changing them before the first of October. In many cases the garage is less than the required distance from a dwelling house, which means that it must be moved. The feature that hits the hardest however is the man who has a small lot of land and has his garage at present in one corner of it. There is not room enough on his lot to have it located the required distance from the house, and the only thing for him to do is to find a location elsewhere or purchase additional land. The result is that the owners of these private garages are very much exercised.

In the case of public garages, many of these are hard hit. For instance, it has been the custom in these garages, when cars are brought in for the night or for storage, to put them as close together as possible to save room, and in many cases the wheels are almost locked together. This now must stop for it will be necessary under the new rules to have a certain number of feet about each car in the garage.

Then there are other rules about exits, and some of the public garages have found that is necessary for them to build additional exits, or doors. Worst of all, however, is the rule about the garages being within fifty feet of a dwelling. There are several public garages in the city that do not comply with this rule and it means quite a hardship for some of them However it is provided that those that do not comply with the rules shall have a certain length of time in which to do so.

A Memory of Burns.

Writing of a visit to Dumfries, "T. P." in his London weekly tells of seeing the spot where Burns caught his fatal chill:

"I had pictured a cross or a tablet or something of the kind. What I saw were two or three brick steps decayed gaping, with the mortar half worn away; just three brick steps; that and nothing more. It did not make the spot less tragic, less impressive, because it stood thus in all its commonnakedness. It was indeed far more impressive in its suggestion, that of utter simplicity and merest commonplaceness, which so often are the marrow and squalid theater on which the resounding and immortal tragedies of life are played."

A Poignant Anecdote.

"The great fault of American servants is familiarity. To be familiar is to be inefficient. A familiar cook is as inefficient as a pessimistic doctor."

The speaker, a prominent society woman, is perhaps the most brilliant conversationalist in New York, a fact which renders more poignant this anecdote.

"I had a cook," she continued "whom I tried to break of her overfamiliarity. What was the result? This cook, discussing me in the servants' hall, said:

"'I don't say she's a bad mistress but she's a woman of only one idea Why, I can't never get her to talk of a single thing but eating.'"—Washington Star.

Whimsical Numbers.

A bright schoolgirl was asked by her teacher to define the word "whimsical."

"It means 'odd,'" she replied.

"And now," the teacher went on "please write a sentence containing the word properly used."

Hesitating, the little ten-year-old took up a pen and, after a moment's thought wrote, "There are two kinds of numbers—whimsical and even."

Reversed.

"Yes," remarked the race horse, "all my achievements have been due simply to putting my best foot forward."

"Yes," replied the mule. "Now, I find that I accomplish most by putting my best foot backward."—Philadelphia Press.

Very Fortunate.

"Nature's works are marvelous."

"Yes. Isn't it fortunate that she provided every woman with some real hair to pin braids and switches to."—Louisville Courier Journal.

MONDAY CLUB COSTUME PARTY

The "Monday Club" of Quincy Point consisting of seven bright, vivacious young ladies, met with Mrs. Frank Hobart on Mill street on Monday morning, just before the noon hour. This meeting was one of particular interest, and mingled with joy and sadness. Sad, because "Jennie" has seen fit to make her home elsewhere than the Point. The party was in the form of a "Costume party" and several interesting characters were represented. Little "Buster Brown" and his little sister, dressed as water nymphs were very cute. The hostess was a typical Dutch maid. Professor "Wiseacre" was there with full instructions about everything you wished to know. The "Middy girl" with her bright black eyes and rosy cheeks made things lively. Lady Pankhurst and her sweet little daughter with her golden tresses hanging down her back added much to the gaiety of the party. After a bountiful repast the party retired to the spacious lawn where the camera was put to work. After singing the club song the party broke up, all having spent a delightful day.

TYPHUS FEVER.

A pronounced case of typhus fever was reported to the Board of Health on Monday at 126 Main street. The patient was a Russian Polander who came to this country about three weeks ago. A police officer was placed on guard over the house to keep anyone from entering the premises. Later in the evening an ambulance arrived on the scene an the patient was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital.

WANTED FOR SETTING FIRE.

Chief of Police Thorne of Millis came to the court house this morning for Benjamin T. Raymond of Weymouth, who was wanted in that town for setting fire to woods. The fire burned over considerable territory and at times assumed a dangerous situation. A warrant for Raymond's arrest was sent to Weymouth and he was brought to Quincy and turned over to Chief Thorne.

lodge rooms and the importance of working hard for the same end on the outside, the speaker closed with a quotation from Zangwill's Melting Pot, which was as follows:

"Here shall the Teuton, the Slav, the Celt, the Latin all unite to build the Republic of man. What is the glory of Rome and Jerusalem, where all nations and races come to worship and look back, compared with the glory of America, where all nations and races come to work and look forward."

A pleasing entertainment followed. Dorothy Carpenter gave a reading which called forth an encore. The orchestra gave a selection, and then the Granite City minstrels held the board for an hour. Matthew Fay and Adolph Restelli were in the circle, while Phil Savard and George Davey were the colored end men. Several well known Odd Fellows came in for jokes including James Moorhead, Jr., Arthur W. Stetson, Charles Harwood, Charles Prout, A. C. Marnock, Charles Vanner, Frank Mitchell, Oscar Halquist, Abel Gomez, J. W. Dennen, and Ed. Goodridge. Thee wee chouses, solos, a whistling solo, anr gand finale.

Then Dorothy Carpenter gave two more readings telling of the raising of money for missionary work, and also of wonderful children. At the close of the entertainment there was dancing until midnight.

Wollaston	0 1 3 0 0 0—4

WILLARDS—CODDINGTONS.

The worst trouncing the Coddingtons ever received was administered by the Willards on Monday afternoon when they enjoyed a bat fest and took the game 11 to 0. The winners played good team work and made but one error.

"Cream" Geddes pitched the first half of the game for Coddington. He held together until the third when the Willards slammed him hard and scored seven runs. McDonald was sent in and finished the game, allowing but three runs. "Beef" Costello was on the receiving end.

Koegler, the winning pitcher fanned 12 men in the sixth inning, a record for the season. Art McMillan of the Willards made the longest hit, his smash to the outfield going for a three bagger. The score by innings:

Willard	1 0 7 3 0 0—11

Batteries—Koegler and Marini; Geddes, McDonald and Fostello.

GAS COMPANY BOWLING.

The office employees of the Citizens Gas Light Co. beat the fitters in the last leg of their bowling series and won the cup offered by the company at the Coliseum Monday night. The trophy will be presented tonight at the last business meeting of the season. The excitement during the match was intense and Alfred J. LaCroix whose total of 311, the highest of the season, made the victory possible, was warmly congratulated by members of the losing team and his own team mates. Ellard had the best single score.

STATE'S SIDE MAY BE QUICKLY CLOSED

Trial of Becker Fairly Under Way In New York

New York, May 12.—Immediately after the jury for the second trial of Charles Becker for the murder of Herman Rosenthal was completed Martin T. Manton, Becker's chief counsel, moved to dismiss the indictment because of insufficient evidence and also moved that a mistrial be declared because of the premature publication of District Attorney Whitman's address to the jury by a New York newspaper.

Both motions were promptly denied and Whitman opened his address. Should proceedings move along as smoothly as those associated with the case expect Whitman will complete the state's case by the end of the week.

AGAIN IN POLICE NET

Woman With Record Charged With Passing Forged Checks

Boston, May 12.—A woman nearly 60 years of age, arrested on two charges of passing forged checks, was identified in the rogues' gallery at police headquarters as Pauline R. Kendricks, a former clever swindler who operated in every section of the United States.

She was located in a lodging house for the Boston police by two Pinkerton detectives. She is now in impoverished circumstances.

Her specialty when arrested in Boston fourteen years ago was pretending to be a trained nurse, going to banks and saying the check was given her by some wealthy depositor for services during illness in his family and that he told her to bring it personally to the bank and have it cashed.

FOUR TO SIX YEARS

Sentence of White Slaver Who Brought a Woman to Boston

Boston, May 12.—Timothy Reardon of New York, who came to Boston with Miss Jessie Williams, was sent to the state prison for a term of not less than four nor more than six years on white slave charges, breaking gas meters and having burglars' tools in his possession.

Miss Williams told a pitiable story of having been brought to Boston and, when she objected to going on the street, of having been beaten by Reardon. She also told that Reardon was a well-known New York crook and was wanted there for various offenses.

CONVICTION OF LABOR LEADERS

Set Aside by United States Supreme Court

DELAY IN THEIR PROSECUTION

Gompers Thus Escapes Jail Sentence of Thirty Days and Mitchell and Morrison Fines of $500 Each—Lengthy Court Proceedings Followed Boycotting of Bucks Company

Washington, May 12.—Conviction of President Gompers, former Vice President Mitchell and Secretary Morrison of the American Federation of Labor of contempt of court in the celebrated Bucks Stove and Range case was set aside by the supreme court.

The highest tribunal said the statute of limitations, which required prosecutions within three years from the date of the committing of the offense, barred prosecution. A jail sentence of thirty days imposed upon Gompers and fines of $500 given the others were set aside.

The contempt charges grew out of the injunction issued by the District of Columbia supreme court to prohibit the federation boycotting the Bucks Stove and Range company. Proceeding as if the contempt cases were part of the injunction suit, the District supreme court held the labor leaders in contempt and sentenced Gompers to one year in jail; Mitchell to nine months, and Morrison to six months.

The supreme court of the United States, on May 15, 1911, set aside those sentences, holding that penal sentences had been erroneously imposed in a civil suit.

The day after the sentences were set aside the District supreme court began new proceedings against the labor leaders. A committee was appointed to report whether there was reasonable cause for holding the men guilty of contempt.

The committee reported that the three men had been guilty of contempt. It charged that Gompers, in December, 1907, had hurried out an issue of the American Federationist, containing the name of the Bucks Stove and Range company on the "We Don't Patronize List," so as to have it published before the injunction took effect, and circulated the edition after the injunction became effective.

It charged contempt for the court in various utterances of Gompers in speeches and editorially in The Federationist. Still another charge was that he printed and circulated a paper known as "An Urgent Appeal for Financial Aid in Defense of Free Press and Free Speech," in which it was contended that he suggested members of the federation might violate the injunction and defeat its object provided they were not within the District of Columbia.

Morrison was charged with cooperating with Gompers in making these publications. Mitchell was likewise charged with co-operation in the circulation of The Federationist and of the "Urgent Appeal" and with presiding over a meeting of the United Mine Workers on Jan. 25, 1908, when a resolution was adopted placing the Bucks company on the unfair list and providing for fines for members who purchased a Bucks stove or range.

The report was approved by the District court and the identical sentences of the first proceedings were imposed.

The District of Colubia court of appeals remanded the case with direction that the sentence of Gompers be modified to one month's imprisonment and the imprisonment of Mitchell and Morrison be changed to a fine of $500 for each man.

The District supreme court committee insisted before the supreme court that the court of appeals had no right to modify the sentences. Counsel for the labor men contended the defendants had not been guilty of contempt.

DEFIANCE IS LAUNCHED

Candidate For Defender Honors Takes the Water at Bath

Bath, Me., May 12.—"Battleship honors" were paid the cup defense yacht Defiance which was launched here. The Maine production for defense of the America's cup went overboard with all the honors of war. Hundreds came here to see the boat go down the incline into the Kennebec.

The christening part of the ceremony was allotted to Miss Frances Clark, daughter of E. W. Clark of Philadelphia, treasurer of the syndicate.

Fully as remarkable as the smoothness of the christening was the expedition of the proceedings at the spar yard. Within an hour after the Defiance dove into the water her mast had been stepped and a sailor had climbed to its top.

All the afternoon the business of rigging went forward at a great rate. By Wednesday the possible defender should be fully equipped and ready for her sails and her trial spin.

ATTACKS ON AMERICA

Attempt by Mexico City Newspapers to Inflame the Populace

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 12.—Mexico City newspapers continue to make bitter attacks on the United States. Alleged copies of the American articles of war are being published in the capital to inflame the public. They represent America military practices as cruel.

The newspapers of the capital also are still insisting that the United States is violating the armistice, this time complaining that the charter of war transports by the war department is a direct violation.

Alfred J. Rorke, correspondent of the Central News, who returned from Mexico City, where he was arrested, says confusion bordering on chaos reigns in the capital, which extends to the highest circles of the government. Huerta, he said, has become careless in all matters of detail connected with his office.

SERIOUS MENACE IN STEAMER LANES

Ice Field Over Four Hundred and Fifty Miles Long

Halifax, May 12.—Ice fields of unusual length lying off the Newfoundland coast and the Grand Banks were reported by Captain Agassiz of the steamer Uranium, which put in here on her voyage from Rotterdam for New York.

Agassiz's observations and those of the revenue cutter Seneca, which is maintaining an ice patrol, show the presence of a broken field of ice more than 450 miles long.

The observations of Agassiz indicated that the ice had moved down from the extreme north, and was likely to prove a serious menace in the transatlantic steamer lanes. Polar sights, and possibly experiences, will be the lot of Atlantic travelers for several weeks.

Reports from Acireale declare that soldiers, priests and citizens are searching the ruins for dead and injured. Upwards of 500 injured have been taken from various villages. The king has subscribed $20,000 to the relief fund and $10,000 additional has been appropriated by the government.

Further shocks were felt on the slopes of Mount Etna, causing intense alarm. These tremors were particularly severe at Randazzo.

BYRNES DENIES ANY SECRECY

New Haven Road Paid Heavily to Fight Financiers

MONEY LEGITIMATELY SPENT

Newspaper Men, Lawyers, Former Members of Legislature and Other Agents Liberally Paid For Supplying Company With Information and Endeavoring to Mold Public Opinion

Washington, May 12.—Asserting that there was absolutely no secrecy about payments made by the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad in the promotion of publicity and that the services of prominent lawyers were obtained at a high cost to help wage a campaign against financial interests that were fighting the road, Timothy E. Byrnes, formerly a vice president of the road, in charge of legislative matters and publicity, was the principal witness when the interstate commerce commission resumed its inquiry into the New Haven's financial affairs.

Byrnes testified that J. O. Wardwell of Boston received $12,000 annually for several years, and $20,000 the last year of his employment by the road, to keep the management advised as to the trend of the financial fight on the New Haven and to give advice as to how to effectively resist it.

He said there was no desire or attempt to keep this under cover. The money was legitimately spent, he thought. He denied that any effort was made by him to influence legislation, or that payments for any such purpose were made through him. Charles H. Enis of Boston, he said, was paid $3000 annually at first, and more later, for services similar to those rendered by Wardwell.

Byrnes testified, further, that several Boston periodicals had been paid considerable sums by the New Haven for advertising; and that various newspaper men and others had been employed by the road to prepare publicity matter.

Counsel Folk tried to force from Byrnes an admission that the employment of H. B. Knowles, who was a member of a recess commission of the Massachusetts legislature dealing with the trolley situation and who was at the same time employed by Byrnes in connection with personal injury cases, was illegitimate. Byrnes protested that he had nothing to do with the trolley matter.

Byrnes captured the audience, chiefly because he kept his temper and head, and replied cheerfully to all the questions about the employment of Boston newspaper men, lawyers, former members of the legislature, and other agents for the New Haven in his work of keeping himself and the road informed on public opinion as well as in endeavoring to mold public opinion.

"These men," said Byrnes, "were not paid for repertorial work. They were paid for bringing us information almost daily, and we received this kind of information from hundreds of sources. I would have preferred to get people off the newspapers. We tried to get men off the papers, and as a fact we had hundreds off."

A Betrothal

Story of a Dancing Mania

By F. A. MITCHEL

In medieval times on the coast of Denmark, overlooking the North sea, was a village the people of which made their living by fishing.

Martin Aarhuus, who followed in the footsteps of his father in getting a living by his nets, wooed and won Maria Stahr, who was conceded to be the prettiest girl in the village. Maria had pale blue eyes and a wealth of very light hair. As to her complexion, it was like milk tinged with rose leaves.

Unfortunately for the lovers, Maria's father was opposed to the match. He was a covetous man and wished to save his daughter's dowry. She was so beautiful that he believed some man having a fair supply of this world's goods would be glad to marry her without the customary settlement on her. He found her with far more resolution than would be expected from beneath those mild eyes of hers. Martin, too, vowed that he would have the girl if he had to run away with her. The old man grew more and more angry, and at last, when quarreling with Martin on the subject, said, in a fit of passion:

"Before you shall possess my daughter I will give her to the devil."

Considering that the words were spoken in anger, nothing was thought of them. In spite of the old man's opposition, the lovers clung to each other and at last summoned their friends to witness their betrothal.

"WE NEED SOME ONE," SAID MARTIN, "TO PUT SPIRIT INTO US."

Since the gathering could not take place at Maria's home on account of her father's opposition, the guests were invited to meet at the house of Martin's parents.

While the festivities attending the betrothal were in progress old Stahr was at home grinding his teeth, though his wife was present at the betrothal.

When early in the evening the guests, recognizing that the occasion was one of sorrow rather than enjoyment, were thinking of returning to their homes there came a rap at the door, and on its being opened a tall, thin man in red doublet and hose, black breeches and a black velvet cap on his head, ornamented with a single red feather, stood in the opening.

"Good people," he said, "I am a traveler from the south on my way to Copenhagen. Not being used to your climate, I am benumbed with cold. I beg shelter of you and something to eat."

No one in those days would think of turning away a traveler who asked to be taken in, and the stranger was made welcome. Some of the viands that had been prepared for the betrothal, with a flagon of wine, were set before him, and he ate and drank heartily. After he had finished and wiped his lips with a napkin, giving his mustache a slight upturn, he seemed to be much refreshed.

"How can I repay you," he asked, "for your hospitality? I am aware that no one, except one entertained at an inn, would offer money. I see that you are gathered to make merry. May I not do something to enliven you?"

"We need some one," said Martin, "to put spirit into us. We are met to celebrate a betrothal. I am to marry this maiden," pointing to Maria, "but you would suppose from her lugubrious appearance that I was going to do her harm."

A shock passed through the assemblage at this harsh remark of Martin's concerning his betrothed, so unlike him, for throughout all old Stahr's opposition Martin had been singularly tender with his beloved. As for Maria, she cast an indignant glance at him and, advancing to the stranger, put her hand on his arm and, leading him from one to another of her guests, introduced him. Martin watched them with flashing eyes, and it was apparent that a turmoil had been stirred within him.

It was evident that there was something in the coming of this stranger that made a great change in the spirit of the assemblage and especially in the pair whose betrothal they had come together to celebrate. In a twinkling he seemed to have irritated Martin and insinuated himself into Maria's good graces. Presently it began to appear that he had enthralled her. The sad look she had worn before was now changed to merriment. She chatted briskly with her companion and laughed gleefully at everything he said. When walking with him and passing Martin she either did not deign to look at him or regarded him with hate.

Maria's mother saw all this, as did every one else, and was desirous of doing something to break it up. She accosted the stranger thus:

"Good sir, do you not play on any musical instrument or sing?"

"I will sing for you with pleasure. Have you a harp?"

The woman brought one of those rude cases on which catgut was stretched and from which have been developed our modern stringed instruments. He struck a chord, and in an instant silence fell on the assembly. There was something weird in it that no one present had ever heard before. Then he began to sing. Every person within sound of his voice was thrilled with a strange sensation. He began low and soft, as if singing a lullaby to a child, gradually rising till his song had all the wildness of a storm wind passing through the rigging of a ship. Then, after a succession of demoniac notes, his voice fell into a basso profundo, giving an impression that infernal fires were rumbling in the bowels of the earth.

Meanwhile Maria had kept her eyes fixed on him, spellbound. Martin, who was watching her, now and again half drew a short dirk he carried in his belt, as if about to plunge it in the stranger's heart. But every time he did so something in the song unnerved him, and he let the knife slide back into its scabbard.

When the song ceased Maria's mother made another attempt to change the conditions. She asked the stranger if he would not play for the company to dance. Immediately he struck a chord that shot a current of exhilaration through every one present. He struck another, and all began to sway. A third drew men and women together in couples. Then began the merriest music that had ever been heard in that quiet village.

First the younger persons present went spinning over the floor, then those who were older, till all were whirling. Children, youths, married persons and white haired old men and women were dancing merrily, while shouts of laughter accompanied the spirited music to which they moved. The longer they danced the wilder grew their antics. Most of them wore wooden shoes, and the clatter was deafening. Now and again when a dancer kicked high his shoe would fly off and go sailing across the room. But no one paid any attention to the missiles, though they were in danger of receiving serious injury.

Persons who had not been invited to the betrothal, hearing the noise, came to the windows and looked in. So catching was the music and the dancing that before long couples were moving on the sidewalk in a wild whirl. As the dance went on these were joined by others till it seemed as if the whole town were bent on beating the pavements with their wooden shoes in crazy capers.

The man who made this mad music, seeing Maria dance past him without a partner, dropped his instrument and put an arm about her, and the two went whirling like the rest. The legend goes that the music went on without the musician, though some versions have it that by this time the people were so crazed that music was not needed to keep them in their mad dance. In vain old Aarhuus and his wife endeavored to call a halt within, and the mayor of the town tried to stop the dancing without. It was all the mayor and old Aarhuus and his wife could do to refrain from dancing themselves.

Finally there was a clap of thunder, and a sudden silence fell on all the village. Persons stood looking at one another, wondering why they had been dancing now that they had no desire to dance. In the house where the betrothal was celebrated all the candles went out. They were at once relighted, and everybody began to look for everybody else. Martin was there, pale and haggard. He had been dancing more wildly than any one else and showed the effect more than others. Then cries arose:

"Where's the stranger who bewitched us?"

"Where's Maria?"

A search revealed neither of them. A girl said when the clap of thunder came she had seen the stranger and Maria whirl up in the air and disappear above the housetops. One gave one story; another gave another. Martin seemed paralyzed. He was thinking what old Stahr had said on one occasion, "Before you shall possess my daughter I will give her to the devil."

For a long while the legend was that Maria was never seen again on earth. Then after men's minds had been broadened it ran that when the clap came the stranger was about to spirit Maria away, but met the village priest, who was coming with a view to quieting the tumult, and the stranger, catching sight of the cross suspended to the father's rosary, slunk away and disappeared. This version adds that Maria was found at her father's house, and the old man, horrified that he had so nearly given his daughter to Satan, relented, gave his consent to the match, and Martin and Maria were married. But when they went to the church for the ceremony Maria carried a cross with her, fearing the devil might be on the watch for her and spirit her away.

STOPS BACK DOOR BEGGING.

Lodging, Supper and Breakfast Supplied and the Sick Cared For—Poormaster and Grocer Divide Profits on Allowance of 25 Cents For Each Meal Served In Unique Institution.

The village of Clayville, in Oneida county, has a unique tramp house. It is a wooden building about twenty feet square. It has one door and one window, plank floors and no basement. Its sanitary provisions would make a health officer gasp for breath, says the New York Times, but it is popular with tramps, and since it was opened about twenty years ago more than 25,000 men have been fed and lodged in the building.

Every tramp who enters the village is entitled to lodging, supper and breakfast in the tramp house. Sometimes if a tramp is ill he remains there for a week or two and comes out looking better than if a metropolitan hospital had had him in charge. The town of Paris pays the cost for the purpose of keeping tramps from sleeping in barns or begging food or lodgings from the people. Before the house was opened the town suffered great annoyance from tramps. Barns were burned and people attacked by men who had been denied food or shelter. The tramp house has solved this problem in a very satisfactory manner.

Goal of Tramps From Many Points.

Tramps come into the village on foot or on freight trains from Utica on the north and Binghamton on the south. The town of Paris is the gateway to the hop fields of the county, the promised land to the tramp fraternity. The men call the little old building "The Castle" and make direct for it after entering the village.

The meals are served on the European plan, and table etiquette is never thought of, for the reason that there isn't any table. Spoons or other silverware is never stolen for the same reason. The guests believe in the old adage, "Fingers were made before forks."

Tramps usually begin arriving at the building about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. When dusk comes a committee of two is selected to make arrangements for the grub. The town poormaster has an understanding with a nearby groceryman whereby the latter supplies food to the tramps. The committee makes an official call upon the merchant, who inquires about the number of men waiting to be fed.

Mealtime at "the Castle."

Then he grinds enough coffee for the crowd, mixes it with some sugar and water in a two gallon pot and throws a slab or two of bologna, several loaves of bread and some canned beans in a flour sack. If he happens to have a supply of stale cookies or fried cakes, in they go too. The committee carries the food down to "the castle," the coffee is boiled on the stove, tin cups are passed around, and everybody digs in.

During the evening the storekeeper goes to "the castle" and takes the name and address of every man. His book shows that "Texas Tommy," "Box Car Jimmy," "One Eye Smith," "Sandy Kelly" and a lot of other men with odd names have a fondness for registering at "the castle."

The town pays the poormaster 25 cents for every meal served, and the poormaster divides profits with the storekeeper. The latter very often contributes without charge old clothes, shoes, stockings, chewing tobacco and pills to those who need them.

SUMMER WHITE HOUSE BILL.

Move to Make Mount Weather an Abode For President.

Various suggestions that the government should provide a summer White House for the president and his family crystallized in a bill introduced by Representative Carlin of Virginia calling for the conversion of Mount Weather, near Bluemont, Va., into a presidential summer home. The place is already government property.

Mount Weather is 2,000 feet above sea level, on the ridge separating the Shenandoah and Loudoun valleys, and is within two hours' ride of Washington. The property was acquired by the weather bureau while Professor Willis Moore was chief of the institution. Hundreds of thousands of dollars had been spent in improvements, but experience demonstrated that it was not available for a weather station. The agricultural appropriation bill provides for the abandonment of the location as a weather observatory.

Bullet Parts Ensign's Hair.

George B. Junkin, an ensign on the battleship Utah, has written to a friend in Philadelphia of his narrow escape from death as the officers and bluejackets went ashore at Vera Cruz. In the first action there Ensign Junkin, who was leading a company of bluejackets, which later took the custom house, felt a bullet cut a hole in his hat and part his hair with the furrow it left.

The Coiffure and the Hat

EARLY in the season's career of style changing, there came an edict from Paris to the effect that "three quarters of the hair to show" should govern the shaping and posing of hats.

Although we have developed much independence of Parisian edicts, this particular one has been favorably considered. The "three-quarters of the hair to show" means that one side of the face and hair is to be silhouetted against the hat brim, or at least to be uncovered by the shape of the hat.

With this in mind the coiffure has risen to the occasion and is considered with reference to the hat. The hair is waved and, since something of the front and back and much of the side must be in evidence, its arrangement across the forehead, at the nape of the neck and at the sides, are all to be considered in adopting a style with reference to its fitness for the hat.

It must fit the face of the wearer, too, and the effort to meet all these requirements has resulted in a variety of new coiffures, mostly high, all waved and, as a rule, attractive.

Women whose length of neck warrant it may wear the hair in a coil at the back, more or less low. The lines of the hair have to be adapted to the face and their direction controlled for it. In the coiffure pictured here with a hat the face will bear the long sloping line of the waved hair from the top of the head to the low coil. In the coiffure without a hat the hair is drawn back from the face in lines that lift instead of falling, and the hair pinned in above the coil. In this coiffure, too, the coil is higher.

This latter arrangement of the front hair, loosely waved about the face and drawn back, is used with a French twist at the back of the head terminating in a coil and puffs at the top. But the hair is very loosely drawn up at the back, with fullness enough to fill in between the hat brim and the head. Bandeau trimmings and underbrim bows are cleverly arranged to help out in this matter of filling in.

Another noteworthy feature of the adaptation of hat to hair is evidenced in the use of malines matching the hair in color. Facings of shirred maline on the underbrims of hats, if made in the color of the hair, are wonderfully effective.

In all the new coiffures the hair is waved and the ears are almost entirely covered. And the hair is brought forward on the cheek when the coiffure is designed for youthful wearers. Sometimes a wave is combed forward and adjusted by means of invisible pins. Sometimes a lock is curled into a wiry ringlet and plastered down with bandoline, as in the coiffure shown here, and rarely a cluster of short ringlets is flattened and fastened down with invisible pins which hold them in place.

DAILY AVERAGE NOW OVER 35

One Day There Were 49 Patients at Hospital

The Board of Trustees of the Quincy City Hospital met Monday afternoon and received an encouraging report from Miss Caroline Hill, superintendent of the institution. The report incorporates not only the increase in patients, but also presents the number of free patients that have been treated at the hospital since February 1.

Dr. George M. Sheahan has been elected to the executive committee to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. John F. Welch.

That the hospital is growing in popularity in this city is evidenced by the fact that the report shows that since Feb. 1, 218 patients have been treated within its doors. Of these 130 were surgical cases, 39 medical, 25 obstetrical and 24 infants. The daily average was over 35. Twenty-one of these cases were accident cases, and the greatest number of patients during any one day was 49.

Of these 218 patients, 120 were discharged relieved, two not relieved, two not treated, 38 well, and 23 died. On May 1 there were 33 patients remaining in the hospital.

The charitable features of the institution are best demonstrated by the fact that in 118 cases the charges were paid in full, and in part by 33, while 67 were treated absolutely free.

The training school for nurses has been increased by two, and on Feb. 4, Miss Anna O. Dick assumed the duties of housekeeper and dietician which means a great deal in the training of the nurses, because each one now has practical training in the actual cooking and preparation of foods.

The new laundry machinery recently installed has been in operation since March 1, and has been satisfactory in all respects. With the increased number of patients there has been no increase in the number of employees in the laundry and the machinery will take care of the increased amount of work for sometime.

The meeting was held at the hospital and was attended by all members of the board. Considerable satisfaction was expressed after the adjournment with the management of the institution.

DISTRICT COURT.

Daniel J. Delory was arraigned for assault on his wife at Weymouth and was fined $15.

George Smith was arraigned on the charge of drunkenness at Quincy. There was a suspended sentence of $15 hanging over him. The suspension was revoked and he was committed.

Calaldo Ciardi, Saverio Caccancello and Frank Sirio were arraigned for assault at Weymouth. Caccancello was found guilty and the case placed on file on payment of $14.15 costs.

Theodore Ferulla was found guilty of violation of the liquor law at Weymouth. Case continued until Aug. 22, to enable him to raise a fine of $75.

LEGAL OPINION WANTED.

There was some talk Monday night after the special Council meeting, that now that the Council had passed the liquor permits the Mayor would sign them. This however is impossible for they have now passed out of his hands and are in the hands of the City Clerk and the Mayor cannot sign them even if he wishes to. City Clerk Crane said this morning that he should call upon the City Solicitor for a written opinion as to his authority in the matter.

MR. BAILEY NEW PRESIDENT

Annual Meeting of Wollaston Parents Association

"Blunders are made by the teacher but singularly neither wants to concede it. Again the child suffers through the differences of the parent and teacher.

"We are passing through an era of experimentation in public schools and the child is at the mercy of the experiment. Some parents have suffered, some teachers have suffered, but the child has suffered inexpressibly.

"I do not say it has been without good but in connection with it has arisen a diversity of opinion and there has been much taught that ought never to have been.

"In the face of these conditions the principle of mutualism needs emphasis more and more. We need to mutually consider, discuss, debate and confer until we come to see what is actually for the welfare of the child.

"The mutual principle will make itself potently effective in the coming years and will result in a sentiment that will result in putting down any move not for the welfare of the child and boosting any move that is for the welfare of the child."

Rev. Mr. Bailey took for his subject the indefinite and seemingly illogical algebraic term "a plus b—x."

Mr. Bailey explained that while this was seemingly an algebraic error inasmuch as two known quantities never equal an unknown in this case it illustrated a basic truth.

"In this instance A stood for the parent, B for the teacher and X for the child and its possible future. "It needs" he said, the union of both parents and teachers in the work of soul building the results of which will not be known until the years of the future reveal the possible outcome.

"The most important work on our hands is not the development of our natural resources, changing deserts into gardens or developing a great literature but rather the creation of a vast body of citizens who will prove themselves by every test refined, cultured, clean and conscientious men and women.

"We are passing now through a real revival of learning; through an educational rennaisance. The physical, mental and moral future of the child possesses vast possibilities undreamed of by the leading psychologist of today.

"We must have no dreamy impractical philosophies operating on our children. We must study the individual child. Study the bad the mischievous, the profane child, and find out what he likes best to do.

"We should place ourselves beside him until we have builded him along those lines and established purposes in his life.

"We should teach our children to apply their energy to a specific end and incorporate in their characters persistency and honor."

The annual meeting of the Wollaston Parents and Teachers Association was held Monday evening in the Wollaston school hall and the following officers elected:

President—Rev. George M. Bailey.
Vice President—David H. Goodspeed
Secretary-Treasurer—Mrs. Arthur B. Hillman.

Directors—Albert N. Murray. Mrs. Herbert H. Albee, Miss Grace Warshaw, Ernest W. Campbell.

Two interesting addresses were delivered by Wollaston clergymen; Rev. Isaiah W. Sneath, Ph D., on "Mutual relations," and Rev. eGorge M. Bailey on "A plus B equals Q."

Several delightful solos were sung by Miss Muriel Badger accompanied by Mrs. Herbert Y. Follett; "A banjo song" by Homer, "An open secret" by Woodman and "I wonder if ever the rose" by Slater.

The report of the secretary, Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham, showed a membership of 197, and although the weather man has held a grudge against them, several record breaking meetings had been held the past season.

Principal Goodspeed stated that $325 had been raised for the supervised playground this summer and it was hoped before long to make this $400.

Albert N. Murray, Charles W. Bailey and Charles E. Goodspeed were appointed a committee to secure additional land for playground purposes and Rev. Carl G. Horst a committee to agitate the lighting of the school clock.

Mrs. Aylmer Hatch and Miss Marion Thomas, the kindergartener reported for the kindergarten committee. During the year 54 names have been enrolled.

Frank A. Page, for the directors, brought in an amendment making the principal permanent first vice president and creating the office of second vice president.

Chester I. Campbell reported for the library committee and Charles E. Goodspeed for the nominating committee.

In his address on "Mutual relations" Rev. Dr. Sneath made a plea for a wider appreciation of the interdependence that is becoming a recognized ethical fact, and the adoption of that attitude known in the philosophy of ethics as "mutualism."

"This is an age" said Dr. Sneath, "not only of criticism but also of antagonism. We have developed an antagonistic nature as parents; we have developed an antagonistic nature as teachers, and the child between the upper and the nether millstone suffers in consequence.

The delegates elected to the national convention at Norfolk, Va., are County President James White of Franklin, Chaplain Rev. Fr. J. J. Chittick of Hyde Park, County Secretary Thomas J. Welsh of Quincy County Financial Secretary James Knox of Weymouth, and William Conroy of Franklin. Nearly 100 attended.

TWO FUNERALS.

James Kerrigan and Thomas A. R. Gould, who died at the Quincy City Hospital within a few minutes of each other, aged 75 and 76 respectively, were both interred in Mt. Wollaston cemetery Monday afternoon in graves, but a short distance apart. Rev. Richard E. Armstrong of Christ Episcopal church officiated at funeral services of both men.

The services for Mr. Kerrigan were held at his home at 258 Quincy avenue and for Mr. Gould at his home on Trafford street. They were well attended.

Miss Marcella L. Kelly, who in June will be the bride of Thomas Mullin of West Quincy, was tendered a linen shower Monday evening by upwards of 50 of her associates of the office of the Rice and Hutchins, South Braintree factory and friends.

The affair took place at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Kelly on Butler road, and was one of the most joyous parties of the season.

Miss Kelly was assisted in receiving by her parents, after which quantities of linen were presented. Songs and games were on the evening's program, and salads, ice cream and cake were served. Both Miss Kelly and her prospective groom are employees at the factory and are very popular with their associates.

WOMEN'S CLUBS BIG FACTOR IN QUINCY'S PROGRESS

YEAR OF ACHIEVEMENT OF QUINCY CLUB

Shown By Reports of Officers at the Annual Meeting Held Yesterday

No Drones in the Hive, Says Mrs. Smith, the President

Although cold and disagreeable the faithful and interested members of the Quincy Womens Club were present Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse for the annual and also the closing meeting of the club.

The president Mrs. Chandler W. Smith presiding asked all to sing the club hymn after which she called for the usual monthly reports and made the following announcements. Although regular delegates had been chosen to attend the annual State Federation meeting at Worcester May 20 and 21, it was thought many others would attend from Quincy. Brown tickets could be obtained of Mrs. Tenney and rooms should be engaged for staying over night as the meetings were in session two days.

Miss Grace Bishop of Wollaston was elected an alternate to attend the Biennial in Chicago in June. Other members attending who were not delegates should be sure of having their club ticket with them to insure admittance to the various meetings. Delegates were instructed to vote in favor of joining with the government in spreading the fact that "The Star Spangled Banner" had been made the national hymn, also to favor the resolution on womens dress that it be simpler, more becoming and modest, etc.

Attention was called to a pure food exhibit arranged by Mrs. Spillane of merchandise found in the store of Johnson Bros., City square. Mrs Mellen of the Education committee was appointed to represent the club on the board of five, as a censorship board on the moving picture shows of the city.

It was voted to have one day known as Quincy Womens Club day in the tea rooms at the Pure Food exhibition at Mechanics building, Boston, the month of October, and the Hospitality committee be the committee to arrange for it. Members were invited to supply themselves with stamps to be used on their mail for advertising the exhibition.

Members were invited to attend a performance of "Engaged" at Foggs Opera house, South Weymouth, May 19 for the benefit of Miss Deane who coached the recent club dramatics.

The nomination committee to prepare the ballot for next year is as follows: Mrs. Zenas S. Arnold, Mrs. J. R. Mellen, Mrs. Levi Turner, Mrs. Carroll E. Bates and Mrs. John O. Short. Mrs. Frank P. Emery was elected alternate in case Mrs. Short could not serve.

Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann spoke of the need of protecting the trees and the help the birds were in the work especially the woodpeckers. The birds should be cared for and protected. Bird houses should be placed for their convenience. Mrs. Pfaffmann has several kinds of bird houses on exhibition and sale at her home and invited the inspection of any interested. She wished also to interest children in the Junior society of the Audubon society. Quincy school children seemed to be especially interested in birds.

An enjoyable musical program was given by Miss Minnie R. Hardwick, soloist with Mrs. John F. Hunt at the piano. She sang very sweetly "May Morning" and "Dawning" and an encore was insisted upon.

At the close of the year, in the look backward, it seems most fitting to pause and think of those who have been called to their heavenly home, the club having this year lost seven members by death. A service in memoriam had been arranged by Miss Harriet E. Turner. She read impressively "Unseen," by Rev. Charles G. Ames. Mrs. Tenney read extracts from Dr. Worcester's "The Living Word"; Mrs. V. E. Miller, the poem "The King's Daughter" by Miss Rebecca P. Utter, and Mrs. Otho A. Hayward played on the piano with much feeling "Traumerei." A basket of pansies and ferns were placed on the table and seven cards bearing the member's name were tied to the basket with lavendar ribbon. The names were as follows:

Mrs. Amos D. Albee—July 3, 1913.
Mrs. James H. Penniman—Aug. 21, 1913.
Miss Dora A. French—Dec. 2, 1913.
Mrs. Charles L. Seavey—Jan. 16, 1914.
Mrs. Carrie L. P. Couchier—Jan. 20, 1914.
Mrs. Joseph Carruthers—Jan. 22, 1914.
Mrs. Arthur F. Capen—March 9, 1914.

The annual reports of the officers and chairmen of committees are given below and the meeting closed with the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds."

The hospitality committee served hot coffee, the pourers being Mrs. Spillane and Mrs. Homer.

CLERK'S REPORT.

To look back over the years work is like looking at a composite picture of well known faces. Here we recognize the imprint of one strong feature and there of another, all blended into a vigorous whole.

The Art and Arts and Crafts Committee have constantly made the Club feel the growing appreciation of Art in every walk of life.

The Civics Committee teachers us to extend our housekeeping from our homes out into our city and through the Philanthropy, the Visiting Nurse and the Education Committees, we are broadening our interest in humanity at large, we are thinking of others rather than of self and extending our motherhood to the children of the poor and alien.

The Home Economics Committee demonstrates the possibilities of scientific management in the affairs of every day life.

The Music Committee is an important factor of our Club, never failing at each meeting to add to the enjoyment of our program.

In these days when the cause of suffrage is advancing so rapidly in Massachusetts, the Current Events Class of the Literature Committee has kept the women informed of the trend of the world's affairs, thus fitting them to think intelligently on the great question of the day.

The House Committee has been vigilant in keeping our Club Home attractive both inside and out, while the Reception Committee has endeavored to create an atmosphere of warm hospitality therein.

The Press, Printing, Legislative Committee Custodian and Woman's Exchange are all active in their several ways and are faithfully doing their special lines of work.

The Program Committee has provided us with a due proportion of instruction and entertainment; the one giving us knowledge in an attractive way, the other furnishing pleasant, wholesome recreation.

Special mention should be made of our Home Talent afternoons when members of our Club have spoken to us intelligently on many subjects. The "Merrymount Monthly Magazine" brought out their varied talents and the Play showed them to be masters of dramatic art.

The chairmen of the committees will tell you this afternoon what they have done during the year to attain these objects.

We are told that in the State Federation our standing is particularly good and we are referred to as one of the Clubs that is doing things. Believing that increased power results to each unit through federation, a movement has originated in our Club and is now being organized, to federate the Women's Clubs in the city. Thus by friendly co-operation it is hoped and expected that much more good may be accomplished. We feel confident, that through the efficiency of the workers and the sympatheic interest of those less active, the Quincy Women's Club has made itself a vital force in the community.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

The report of Corresponding Secretary given publicly should be brief to be appropriate. The work is done for most part in the privacy of her own sanctum and has consisted largely of the compilation of club membership list, the addressing and mailing of various missives which have reached you and the writing of the usual letters that belong to the office.

The work has been less arduous than last year when the membership was increased.

However we have not forgotten that it is a women's prerogative to change her mind and we have twice exercised that privilege and the patience of the corresponding secretary. But it has been a labor of love. The number of pieces of mail matter handled she can not report. She would rather do it all than keep an account, even though it would mount up into the thousands.

The treasurer's report will cover the financial statement. There is in the treasury of the committee postage to the amount of 30 cts.

Caroline E. Tenney.

ART & ARTS & CRAFTS.

The Art and Arts & Crafts Committee for the year 1913-1914 instead of sub-dividing have simply worked along the two lines simultaneously.

Classes in Basketry, four in number have been held, the membership in each class having been limited to five. The course of parlor talks on Home Decoration conducted monthly from November to March inclusive were well attended. A sale of forty-five tickets beside several single admissions was felt to be a proportionate amount of interest unusual for a minor committee to expect, covering as it did more than one tenth of the membership.

The first talk on the Arts and Crafts Movement in New England was given by Mrs. Frances R. Nickerson of Stoneham, a member of the State Federation Art Committee. This occasion was as well a housewarming for our President Mrs. Chandler W. Smith.

The second talk was given at the home of Mrs. George Abele. Mr. Francis W. Wight of Winchester presented a fine paper on Architecture. Music lent an artistic touch to the afternoon's program.

Miss Margaret L. Thomas hospitably entertained us in January. The speaker, Mr. L. W. Jennings of Boston having spoken before on home decoration in a general way confined his paper to artistic lighting of the home.

The coldest day of the year made the February meeting which had promised to be the largest, the smallest in attendance, but by no means in interest. The absentees are to be commiserated. It is not often vouchsafed us as at that time to revel in $8000 worth of rare oriental rugs, each one more than 100 years old. The lively enthusiasm of Mr. James D. Kelley who had worked among oriental rugs, for 40 years and loved them as friends, warmed us all. The last lecture was given in March at the home of Mrs. Herbert H. Albee.

The speaker Mr. Ralph R. Kent gave a talk on Landscape Gardening which he illustrated by many large sketches and appropriately closed the course.

In December we were saddened to receive the resignation of our chairman Mrs. Charles L. Seavey who had become seriously ill. Her death on January 16 was a great blow. Mrs. Seavey had manifested marked ability during her period of service and by her winning personality and devotion had drawn her committee into loving loyalty to herself and the work.

The principal effort of the committee since the close of the talks in March was the lecture on April 17 by Mr. C. Frederick Whitney upon the appreciation of pictures. So generously was this patronized that the committee was able to present to the Club the beautiful picture which adorns our walls.

On April 14 at Alpha hall the committee presented Dr. Henry Warren Poore, who gave a stereopticon lecture on Famous Paintings. But one sale was attempted. Every effort was made to offer at that sale articles of certified merit from well known Arts & Crafts Societies. The salesroom was thronged but it was felt that such sales were not appreciated here and a continuation would be futile.

The coat room which some of you have not yet learned to appropriate, sets of scrim curtains for the two sleeping rooms in the nurses apartment, the gift of $10.00 to Museum of Fine Arts which is as well a gift to the club of four free admissions to the Museum for the ensuing year, and the memorial picture.

Receipts for the year	$110.33
Expenditures	89.50
Balance on hand	$20.83

FORESTRY COMMITTEE.

The Forestry Committee began last autumn to try to interest citizens of Quincy in the care of their trees. The aim of the committee was to save the trees which we have in the city and get them put into a healthy condition. The Massachusetts Forestry Association gave us services of one of their field secretaries for free consultation, so that all persons who cared to know what to do to better the condition of their trees might be informed This forester supplied men to do the work wherever their services were required. The regular price for expert work upon trees is 80 cents an hour. We got our work done for 50 cents an hour. During the months of March, April and May these experts were at work upon the trees in Quincy. Some of the residents with large estates had all their trees looked after. A good deal of grafting and pruning has been done, shade trees have been trimmed and a large number of trees which had decayed portions have been excavated and filled with cement.

People in every section of the city have been interested in this work, but Quincy center and Wollaston are the ANNIVERSARY OF THE W. R. C.

Charter Members Dance the Virginia Reel

The 26th anniversary J. Paul Revere Corps 103 was observed Tuesday evening at G. A. R. hall. The affair was one never to be forgotten by those present. The table was laid in horse shoe shape. Mrs. Idella I. Savage, corps president at head, her officers at right and left, corps members filling in the number (strange to say) twenty-six.

After blessing by Chaplain Mrs. Sarah A. Williams fun commenced, which never wavered the whole evening. Stories were told, toasts were given and old G. A. R. hall rang with laughter. A poem sent by Mrs. Fannie Lane (an old corps member now living in Gloucester) was recited by Mrs. Sarah Williams. Readings by Mrs. Isabel A. Souther, corps secretary, Mrs. Cylinda Richardson, and Mrs. Eelton Field, past president, were enjoyed.

A feature of the evening was the "Virginia Reel" danced by the charter members, showing that even though they had grown gray and some what feeble in working 26 years for the G. A. R., they could dance "the light fantastic." All the old time songs were sung. Mrs. Stewart presiding at piano. "Auld Lang Syne," and flag salute closed the 26th anniversary of Paul J. Revere Corps, 103. May we all be present at the 27th.

TEACHERS AS ACTORS

Present "A Scrap of Paper" for Charity

The teachers of the schools of Quincy presented "A Scrap of Paper" in Alpha hall Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Associated Charities. Nearly all of the seats in the hall were sold in advance, but because of the poor weather not more than 200 attended.

The comedy which contains many dramatic situations and an occasional flirtation with a defiance of the conventions, is a very popular one and its interpretation by the teachers has secured for it a niche in the local hall of fame.

In the cast were:
Prosper Couramont, Frank L. Mansur
Baron De La Glaciere, L. L. Woods

A writer in a Sunday paper labored hard to dissuade women from smoking on the ground that it was bad for their nervous system and might lead to insanity. In Quincy a woman who smoked would be considered already insane.

If the question of Sunday recreation cannot be regulated without police action and judicial decision, then the sooner the better. When Judge Avery has passed on the question, we will know what is Sunday recreation and what is Sabbath desecration, two things that are somewhat mixed in the public mind just at present.

The Odd Fellows' celebration in Alpha hall Monday evening gave the members an opportunity to come together informally. It also gave people on the outside who were invited a chance to see what a good grade of manhood and womanhood is found in the lodges. Our fraternal orders are all doing good work, but none of them excel the order of Odd Fellows, not only in the work of benevolence but in removing race and caste distinctions and making all classes work harmoniously together. There is much work of that kind to be done in the world and the Odd Fellows are doing their full share. Long may the golden, mystic links endure.

THE GANGSTER.

I cannot agree with those who call gangsters the product of social conditions. What more can be done for them than has been? They will not obey their parents; they will not go to school; they cleave to the doctrine that the world owes them a living, which means, of course, without working. The gangster is almost invariably a drug user. He is a coward at heart. Give him cocaine, heroin, any of that group, and physical fear leaves him; he is ready for anything. Worst and most dangerous of all, he will maim or kill for money more readily even than he will through private hate. We talk of the "code" of the gangs, but it is only a code of revenge; no such thing as esprit de corps exists among them.—Judge Edward Swann, Supreme Court, New York.

BABY'S RING.

Mother's quite distracted,
Sister's in despair;
All the household is astir,
Searching everywhere.
Every nook must be explored,
Every corner scanned—
Baby's lost the tiny ring
From her little hand.

Surely never such a babe
Made a mother glad;
Never such a dainty hand
Any baby had!
Smallest ring was ever made
Off her finger slips;
She should have a fairy's ring
For such rosy tips.

When she comes to womanhood,
If she keeps so fair,
She will surely wear the ring
Maidens love to wear.
And lest she should lose it then
(She'll be wise and deep.)
She will give to somebody
Ring and hand to keep.

TO REPRESENT BOTH FACTIONS

Provisional Government In Mexico Planned by Mediators

WILSON PUTS CURB ON ARMY

Troops Ready For Funston, but Thinks They May Not Be Needed—Bryan Explains Lighthouse Capture—O'Shaughnessy's View of the Situation—Huerta Imperils Mediation Plan, Which Will Be Accepted or Rejected by United States Soon After Delegates Reach Niagara Falls—Entire Chartered Transport Fleet Could Be Loaded Within Forty-Eight Hours—Preparations Made For Every Possible Emergency

Washington, May 13.—Elimination of General Huerta and the establishment of a provisional government in Mexico, in which both the Huerta and the constitutionalist factions would be represented, is contemplated in a plan which the three South American mediators now are working out to be proposed for the solution of the entire Mexican problem.

Expressions of confidence that mediation would be successful in averting war between the United States and Mexico came from several members of the cabinet after President Wilson had discussed the whole situation with his official family.

The president is decidedly hopeful. He is anxious that no untoward incidents or indiscreet acts on the part of any of the forces in Mexico should develop to cloud the horizon when the mediation conference begins at Niagara Falls.

The Lighthouse Incident

Secretary Bryan explained at length to the South American mediators that the lighthouse on Lobos island had not been seized in any military sense; that the keepers were free to come and go, but that the American navy had undertaken to keep the lights burning as a protection to the world's navigation.

Justice Lamar of the supreme court of the United States and Frederick W. Lehmann, former solicitor general, who will represent the United States at the mediation conference, are studying data on Mexico and official reports, familiarizing themselves generally with the Mexican problem.

Silliman Released

One tense phase of the situation was relieved by news that J. R. Silliman, American vice consul at Saltillo, had been ordered released by the Huerta government. The mediators are confident that Silliman will get away unharmed.

From a military point of view, the outstanding feature of the day was a confident report from General Funston on the situation at Vera Cruz. No attack on the city is apprehended, the general said, and in any event the American position could not be taken by force.

It became known that President Wilson's sanction for the war department's activities extends merely to preparations for emergencies. Secretary Garrison has been given permission to charter several transports and have big forces of troops in readiness to reinforce Funston, but orders for their movement are being withheld pending developments.

Views of O'Shaughnessy

Former Envoy Nelson O'Shaughnessy told President Wilson that in his judgment no satisfactory solution of the internal troubles of Mexico could be arrived at unless the United States stepped in and took control.

"It doesn't seem to me that there is the slightest chance of the various factions getting together in Mexico and restoring peace unless the United States takes control," he said.

Asked whether or not he was impressed with the determination of President Wilson to stay in Mexico until constitutional government had been restored, O'Shaughnessy said:

"I can't speak for the President of the United States, but I will say that it is evident that he has his mind firmly set on a policy and in my judgment the results will prove to the people of the United States the wisdom and fine motives of their chief executive.

"The feeling between the constitutionalists and the federals is so bitter that they can't get together on a common basis unless the influence of the United States is brought to bear on the situation."

Good Faith Questioned

Quibbling and evasion by Huerta continue to threaten to force the United States to change its peaceful policy. His attitude in piling up petty protests with the mediators against the United States is regarded as indicating he is not serious in his plans to participate in the mediation conferences.

That a comprehensive plan for settling the entire Mexican trouble will be proposed by the A. B. C. mediators was the opinion expressed by Secretary Bryan at Tuesday's cabinet meeting. It was agreed by the president and the cabinet that this plan will be such that it will be accepted or rejected very soon after the mediators reach Niagara Falls. As a result the cabinet members believe it will be possible to tell by the end of next week whether the mediation is likely to avert war or not.

Discussed by Cabinet

For two hours and a half the cabinet canvassed the entire Mexican situation. It was the longest session held since the fleet started south. At its close the members were unusually secretive. It was understood Bryan reported at length on conditions in and about Mexico City.

Secretary Garrison reported that the transports were all heading to Galveston and that they would be ready for immediate service practically immediately. He reported the results of the various conferences held at which the question of mustering the national guard into service was taken up. He reported that better than 50 percent of the total strength of the guard, fully armed and equipped, can be quickly put in service.

It was stated that the entire chartered transport fleet could be loaded within forty-eight hours. As a measure of extreme precaution arrangements have been made for war convoys, should the transports have to put to sea troop-laden.

It was believed by the cabinet that the situation was well in hand and that preparations have been made for every possible emergency. It was also agreed that mediation will have a fair trial and the delay resulting from it will be utilized preparing for hostilities should mediation fail.

A Troublesome Question

The question of whether the constitutionalists will be permitted to import arms through Tampico should they capture that port is seriously troubling the administration. It is known the rebel leaders have been gathering arms at Havana ready to ship across to the northern port. The only way the United States could prevent the delivery of such shipments would be by seizing the custom house there. To do so would alienate the constitutionalists immediately.

Up to the present no definite decision has been arrived at on this question. Because of the friendliness exhibited by Bryan the constitutionalist junta at Washington believes he will oppose any occupancy of Tampico by the United States. But it is certain any attempt to ship the arms and ammunition from Havana into Mexico will bring a bitter protest from the war department.

Case of Foreign Snipers

Another question seriously troubling the administration is the disposition to be made of the three Brazilians, a Peruvian and a Chilian held at Vera Cruz, after being caught sniping American bluejackets. They were to have been tried by a military court, and it had been accepted they would be ordered hanged. The Brazilian ambassador has asked that they be protected, and it is believed they will be ordered held without trial for the present.

GUARDING WATER SUPPLY

Whole Line to Tejar Is Strengthened by Order of Funston

Vera Cruz, May 13.—Slight alterations were made in the position of the American forces to which the Mexican authorities might find objections, but which are regarded by General Funston as justified beyond any question of dispute.

At the Tejar waterworks station there was a detached outpost. Between this post and the main body of troops there were only connecting posts, but on account of the absolute necessity of protecting the water supply of Vera Cruz patrols were ordered placed all along the pipe line.

The water supply is as plentiful as ever, but the increasing population, due to the influx of refugees, has made its conservation one of the most important matters to be considered by Funston.

DEATH SHIP AT BOSTON

Montana Arrives With Bodies of New England Heroes

Boston, May 13.—The funeral ship Montana, bearing the flag-draped caskets of the three New England men who gave up their lives in Mexico, crept through the fog into Boston this morning.

Past vessels whose crews paid their due to the men who had gone, steamed the ship [illegible] Daniel A. Haggerty, Walter L. Watson and Rufus E. Percy on their last cruise. Tomorrow the bodies of the three heroes will be consigned to the grave.

As soon as the cruiser docked at the navy yard the major portion of the crew lined the decks and the others carried the caskets through the lines and to the shore, where thousands were waiting. Squads of marines were detailed for cortege duty, one to conduct the body of Haggerty to his home in Cambridge, another for bearing the body of Watson to the South station, and a third as escort for the body of Percy to the North station.

Relatives and friends from Eastham will care for the body of Seaman Watson, and a host of friends came to this city from Concord, N. H., to bring back the body of Percy with fitting honor.

ENGINE ROOM EXPLOSION

Kills Eight Men and Injures Many Others on Steamer Jefferson

Norfolk, May 13.—Eight persons were killed in an explosion in the engine room of the Old Dominion ship Jefferson near Cape Henry. Several were injured. The ship returned to Norfolk, left the dead and injured, and then resumed her interrupted trip to New York.

The dead are members of the Jefferson's engine room crew. According to local officers of the Old Dominion line the vessel was not badly damaged by the explosion, which occurred as the Jefferson was leaving port. Of the injured, who were taken to a local hospital, it was said several are in a serious condition.

FOR ASSAULTING LITTLE WHITE GIRL

Mob Lynches Negro After Smashing Doors of Jail

Shreveport, La., May 13.—Ed Hamilton, a negro held on the charge of assaulting a 10-year-old white girl, was taken from the parish jail and lynched.

For three hours a mob of 1000 men and boys stood in the rain outside the jail doors, hammering away with a heavy railroad iron at the steel obstacle that kept them from the negro. Steel saws finally were used and entrance was gained by the mob.

Sheriff Flourney had telegraphed the governor for troops and orders had been sent the Shreveport company of the national guard to report to him for service.

Before the company could be assembled the negro had been taken from the jail, a rope placed about his neck and he was dragged half a block from the jail to a telephone pole opposite the courthouse and strung up. A knife was left sticking in the body.

A. P. Q. CHAPTER, D. A. R.

The annual meeting of the Abigail Phillips Quincy chapter, D. A. R. of Wollaston was held May 11 at the home of the regent, Mrs. E. E. Jameson, the regent presiding. One new name was proposed, and Mrs. Elvira M. Chase was elected to membership in the chapter, subject as usual to approval of her papers.

The secretary's annual report showed us to be a really live chapter. The meetings have been held the second Monday of each month from October to May with a good attendance. The papers by the members upon matters of near-by historical interest have been a good education in early Massachusetts history. This department has been in charge of Mrs. Antoinette Paige. The entertainment committee, under the able management of Mrs. Damon, has, during the year, given a concert, held a sale, an exhibition of antiques, and two whist parties, which, with sundry smaller ventures, have netted $100 for the club treasury. The report of Mrs. Sargent, the treasurer, showed our finances to be in exceptionally good condition—all bills paid and a good sized balance in the treasury. Reports were also given by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Pinkham, the registrar, Mrs. S. Crocker, the historian, Mrs. Hingston and the custodian, Mrs. E. O. Woodward.

The chapter then proceeded to election of officers for the next two years. The following persons were elected, the secretary being instructed to cast the ballot. Regent, Mrs. I. F. Waterhouse, vice-regent, Mrs. W. F. Jones; recording secretary, Mrs. Charles Chase; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. O. Woodward; treasurer, Mrs. F. Burgess; registrar, Mrs. S. Crocker; historian, Mrs. Healey; custodian, Mrs. Damon; chaplain, Mrs. G. T. Taylor; librarian, Mrs. A. Paige; auditor, Mrs. Sargent; directors, Mrs. W. Chase, Mrs. J. K. Broughton and Mrs. W. F. Kimball.

Mrs. Jameson, in a few parting words, told of the pleasure she had experienced in the work of the chapter and was about to resign the gavel when Mrs. Waterhouse in the name of the chapter, gave her a beautiful basket of carnations. Mrs. Jameson then transferred the gavel to the new regent, Mrs. Waterhouse, who in a short address pledged herself to work for the chapter's best interests. She announced as chairman of committees for the next two years, entertainment, Mrs. J. K. Barber; program Mrs. E. E. Jameson. The meeting then adjourned. The social hour followed during which refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by members of the hospitality committee.

sections where the most work has been done.

We are glad to report that through the center of the city and in Wollaston we are pretty free of pests. I am informed that there are gypsy moths in plenty on an estate in Squantum and that there are some brown tail moths at Quincy Point. As each gypsy moth patch contains 600 eggs and each brown tail moth nest has 450 eggs, you can see that there is danger from these quarters unless they are looked after immediately. The leopard moths must be watched.

It will be the duty of this committee during the coming year to show club members how great is the need of work upon the trees in our city and in our state, and to call attention to the great benefits to that section of a country which has well-grown healthy trees.

What has the Forestry Committee done for Quincy? It has succeeded in interesting people in Quincy in the care of their trees. About one thousand dollars worth of work has been put upon the trees in our city. That means that a large number of trees have been put into a condition for perfect growth.

This committee has also watched all the legislation on Forestry and a representative has attended the important hearings on this subject.

Martha C. Mackay, chairman.

Two custodians who had been absent from the city have not yet reported on their receipts, which, when added will make an increase to the above amount.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

Madam President and members of the Quincy Women's Club. In this busy world of ours when one assumes an office of responsibility and activity limited by household cares, duties to our relatives and our friends and the many interests which each one of us are known to have in the social and educational work of Club life comes a call to repeat to those who have given us the honor and entrusted us with responsibilities as to the work of the office, the advancements that have been made and the conditions of the various departments of work over which we have had supervision.

In all of our school work we have had the co-operation of the School board of our city and in all instances our labors have been affiliated with the outlined activities assigned by the State Federation.

During the past year this committee has been represented by a school visitor and we deem it a pleasure to state that conscientious and painstaking upon the part of the teachers is the keynote of the success of our childrens education, and an increase in the salary of our teachers would be the means of keeping the best for Quincy whose reputation for good schools and teachers is known throughout the State.

This committee has also been responsible for a series of five lectures given for the benefit of the school children; the result has been very gratifying, about 2,200 children being present, details of which have previously been given. The question of the Moving Picture is one of the hardest problems we have to solve. Nine ladies representing three distinct sub-committees visit our local theatres and report films of western life and of a sensational nature, in a majority, the prevailing pictures presented to the public. Moving pictures if properly supervised help to develop and broaden the minds of young children, and from a quotation by Judge Harvey H. Baker of the Boston Juvenile Court, "would help a good deal in the way of decreasing delinquency among young girls and boys." The objectionable film should be eliminated and we may urge that more pictures of educational value be given here in our home city.

Our attention having been called to the subject of "Peace" we have asked that May 19th may be observed in our public schools with some exercises appropriate to the occasion, and also that our churches through their pastors give to the people a message of "Peace and good will to man."

The summer schools on vocational lines has been discontinued by this committee. First—Because it would be a duplication of the work already in our public schools. Second—It must be conceded that because of the open-armed immigration policy of our nation work in behalf of the welfare of the child is a necessity.

In trying to realize the full extent of our responsibilities, our duties, our privileges in bettering the conditions of life of these future citizens of our city we conducted a six weeks' session of a Kindergarten school in Ward 3 for non-English speaking children of our city. The school proved successful beyond our expectation and feeling a movement had been started in the right direction it is the intention of the committee to continue in this work during the summer season. While this committee have earnestly labored in the educational work of our club they have also zealously labored for the finances to meet the necessary expenses which I will submit as follows:

HOME ECONOMICS REPORT.

On January 13, 1914, Mr. David J. Hickey of Westfield, Massachusetts, addressed the few courageous members who appeared, on "What We Do Not Get For Our Money."

Mr. Hickey is a young chemist and perfectly at home in his work, having been closely associated with Prof. Allyn of Westfield fame, he has had a large experience in analysis work.

To illustrate his talk he brought a large number of specimens. A copper-coated knife was shown,—the copper having been taken from a can of peas. A child's stocking, beautifully dyed was held up:—the dye came from a gelatine pudding mixture. Our attention was called to the adulteration of sausages:—dirty cracker sweepings being usually added. A warning word was given in regard to cheap candies as common furniture glue and varnish form their basis; as a rule. Marischino cherries were mentioned as being picked green, hardened with alum and colored with aniline dyes. Pickles are treated in about the same way.

These are but a few of the articles Mr. Hickey mentioned. At the close of his talk the audience plied him with questions. It was an instructive lecture and I think that those of us who braved the 8 degree below zero temperature ,were well repaid for our braving the gale.

At the last meeting of the year, May 12, the committee arranged an exhibit of foods listed under the Westfield standard. Johnson Brothers kindly loaned these goods. The object of this exhibit was to endeavor to arouse women to more closely examine goods for pure food labels.

Mrs. Maurice P. Spillane, Chairman.

HOUSE COMMITTEE.

The work of the committee has been similar to that of previous years. The grounds have been cared for, the house has received necessary repairs, household supplies have been replenished, and the ordinary details of house management have been arranged. The years expenditure may be found in the Treasurer's Report.

The Chairman wishes to call your particular attention to the fact that an extra stone step has been placed on the path leading to the side entrance of the clubhouse, and hopes that those ladies who follow the latest dictates of fashion may thereby more easily and comfortably ascend.

Jennie E. Sidelinger, chairman.

* * *

LITERATURE COMMITTEE.

The Literature committee has but a modest showing for its work of the past season.

The Current Events course under the leadership of Mrs. Pennock was very successful, there being a large attendance every afternoon and entire satisfaction expressed.

On the 9th of March the committee conducted a literary afternoon having for its subject "George Eliot," it being thought that an occassional return to the older writers might be of interest. A gratifying number responded to the invitation and expressed pleasure with the program prepared. It is exected that two or three similar afternoons will be carried on during the coming season.

The Committee presented for its Club afternoon program the "Merry Mount Monthly" which included most of the features of a modern magazine. It was made rather lighter than originally intended, on account of its being the last program meeting and late in the spring when one feels the stirrings of vagabondia. A class in Literature was proposed but there was no demand for it and the committee also hoped to conduct story hours for children on Sunday afternoons, as is done in many places but the Library Trustees declined to co-operate. The Chairman feels indebted to her Committee for their interest and co-operation.

Alice M. Arnold, chairman.

PHILANTHROPIC

The Chairman of the Philanthropic committee would first call attention to an omission in the club book of the names of two valuable members of her committee. One, Mrs. Levi H. Turner who is most efficient and faithful and the other Miss Mary Griffin who is most helpful in all good work. For one of these omissions, the chairman was responsible and the other name was added after the list was printed. The work of this committee has been done in four departments.

The first of perhaps the most importance is that department especially interested in the Young Women's club with Mrs. George Pfaffmann as the leading spirit. Great devotion and a large amount of time and effort has been spent in this direction and under the guidance of Miss Ethel Hobart, Secretary of the Massachusetts Association of Women Workers, the club took on a new lease of life. Posters of invitation were placed in every ward of the city. Miss Hobart was permitted to talk to the girls at the Tubular Rivet factory at noon, the use of the High School gymnasium was secured after much diplomatic effort, and beeween 125 and 150 girls responded.

Classes were formed in dressmaking with Miss Kelly as teacher. Mrs. Gurney gave of her time and most valuable services in training a dramatic class and folk dancing was begun by Miss Marian Johnson and continued by Miss Ruth Bass. There have been three class evenings a month from 8 to 9 with a social half hour of dancing in the gym from 9 to 9.30 and a social the first Tuesday of each month with some party or entertainment.

The closing social was held in Alpha hall, with a most delightful dramatic presentation of "The Blossoms" coached by Mrs. Gurney, followed by a dance. The club hopes to join the State Federation of girls clubs, giving its members special rates at a vacation house in Rockport and the inspiration of belonging to a larger body of young women interested in the same things. We feel that gain has been made in obtaining the use of the High School and we ask the help of all the women of the club in this effort to plan for the benefit and recreation of the young women of our city.

Our club has given $25 toward the expense, and we have a gift of $20 from the Home Economics committee for which we are most grateful. The girls pay 20 cents a month but the cost of the teachers and janitor service is a heavy tax, which with a varying membership is still an unstable proposition. We need help in providing a pianist for the social half hour each week. Mrs. Pfaffmann would be most grateful to those women who would be willing to assist one or more evenings. We are always glad to have visitors expressing an interest in the work. It may be that we shall need a paid director. Two men are considered necessary for Boys' work at the Y. M. C. A. Work for girls is being systematized and the trained worker is needed to do it right;—one who can get in personal touch with the girl who has not yet the club spirit and is easily lost to the club unless there is some one who has the time for it and who knows how to reach her. We hope to be able to do better work next year and any who can and are willing to help are asked to talk with Mrs. Pfaffmann.

Another department has been that of Friendly Visiting under the direction of Mrs. Percy Davidson. Monthly visits have been made to our Quincy Home and to the Fresh Air Camp. At Christmas time an especially pleasant affair under the direction of Mrs. Levi Turner with the co-operation of the Philanthropic committee of the Wollaston and Riverside Women's clubs was conducted at the Alms house. Entertainment and gifts participated in by all three clubs with the presence of the three presidents and the three chairmen of the Philanthropy committees made it a splendidly co-operative bit of philanthropy. The Wollaston club visited for two months and the Riverside club has just completed two months so the Quincy club will carry on the visits throughout the summer. Any volunteer who might be interested to help in this line will be gladly welcomed. Another division of the Committees was the Associated Charities for its particular work, and under the chairmanship of Mrs. Thomas Fenno a reception was given by Miss Purchase on the completion of her two years as our General Secretary.

There has also been an attempt to have some representation of the committee attend each of the Wednesday conferences at Miss Purchase' office so as to gain a better knowledge of the problems connected with poverty, sickness, intemperance and immorality in our city. The fourth division of our committee was especially interested in the idea of a Philanthropic council which should call together a larger body of those working to better the living conditions in our city. Two meetings were held, one at the City Hall Council Chamber in the interests of the Tuberculosis problem. Dr. Hunting presided, the Board of Health, the physicians and all interested were invited. Dr. Jones presented the plans for a new contagious Hospital and Dr. Liventhal of the State Board of Health and Dr. Morse told of what was being done in other cities. The second conference was arranged in connection with a series carried on by Miss Purchase and gave us some knowledge of the need and purpose of a Home and School Visitor, who preferably should also be a nurse. Miss Beck who had been in the North End for many years told of her experiences and her belief in the great benefit of such a visitor to the community.

In regard to finances we have been too busy with these things to either make or spend much money. We have given small amounts as the need arose. We had 1,000 post cards of the Clubhouse printed, which you may have frequently heard mentioned. Many of them still remain until this day. We hope club members may continue to want to buy and use them so that we may receive a little income from them. The chairman would appreciate any suggestion from club members as to how the committee can better serve the highest and best philanthropic need of the community.

Alice Haynes Marsh.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

The annual report of a press committee is an uninteresting one to make, since in such a committee's work there are none of the grand achievements of philanthropy, education, music, art, science, legislation, or social service, not even the consolation of having added to the club treasury.

Yet, it is an inspiration to any press committee to note how club news in general is growing in the newspaper field, and the "power of the press" seems to warrant the premise that a press committee is a cog in the wheel of progress in Women's Club work.

Your press committee has been, as usual, a busy one, since every department of the club has been most active.

In organizing the work of the press committee, the chairman asked Miss Prescott to continue in charge of the Quincy Daily Ledger accounts, which she kindly consented to do, and you all know how explicitly, tactfully, and with what dignity and good taste those reports have been published.

Mrs. George L. Badger another member of the committee, has done valuable service in furnishing notes with exactness.

Mrs. Fred A. Bartlett has also proven a most helpful member of this committee, greatly aiding the chairman by attending special affairs as press representative, and by taking notes in shorthand at regular meetings.

Your chairman of this committee has done all of the reporting for the Boston Evening Transcript—32 reports, the club having been reported in every Saturday Evening Transcript, save one, during the club year. The chairman has also done special reporting for other publications, and maintained a general censorship, which, needless to say, did not apply to the Ledger.

Our club reports have been well received by the various publications, and very generally accorded desirable space.

The Wollaston Women's Club in editing "The Quincy Evening Telegram" of Feb. 25, very courteously accorded the Quincy Club a prominent space on the first page for the account of the Musicale of the Quincy Club held on the afternoon of the 24th.

All reports have had to be in the Transcript office by Friday morning, so when club events have been held on Thursday evenings, Friday or Saturdays reports have had to be written previous to the events, which is a necessary, but not entirely satisfactory method of reporting.

Mrs. Bowles, Club editor of the Transcript, has been most considerate and generous in her treatment of our press reports, but it is imperative that she condense, since her editor-in-chief cannot grant her space required for all her club news, so it sometimes happens that in condensing, the true sense is destroyed, as in last Saturday evening's issue when the words "Young Women's Club" were cut, and mention made only of "gentlemen's night" which was misleading.

However, the Quincy Women's Club has little reason to complain of its treatment, since many long lists of names have been published, which is contrary to the Transcript's general policy.

It seems advisable, and the chairman of your press committee recommends, that one more member be added to the committee.

This club has no representation in the Christian Science Monitor which has a splendid department of club news, and an extensive circulation among club women.

The present committee could scarcely take on another publication, since, in the busy club season, a small committee is kept much confined to attendance upon affairs for press reporting. Another member upon the committee would greatly relieve this strain.

The chairman extends grateful thanks to each member of her willing and capable committee, and to all the chairmen of committees who have so patiently co-operated with her.

Ida F. Waterhouse, chairman.

VISITING NURSE.

The new Visiting Nurse Committee had its first meeting on May 27, 1913. Seventeen members were present. Mrs. Charles Sampson was elected secretary. The first topic of discussion was the means of raising funds for the year's expenses. It was decided to try the penny-a-day envelopes. Within a few days the envelopes were bought, numbered, and the distribution began, each member of the committee taking twenty.

At the June meeting of the Executive Board, the chairman of the Visiting Nurse Committee asked for $400. The club was unable to give that amount but voted to give $300 which was gratefully received.

Miss Purchase of the Associated Charities invited the committee to attend her weekly conferences and a number were able to do so. At one of these meetings, Miss Beard of the District Nursing Association of Boston, told of the work under her supervision.

In October, collection of the penny-a day envelopes was begun, and by October tenth $280.21 had been collected. During the fall the remaining envelopes were returned until the total amount was $460.53. Most of the envelopes contained $1.22 or $1.25; a few contained less, and a few more. Seven friends sent five dollars each.

The Visiting Nurse afternoon was held at the clubhouse on October 28th, when Dr. Van Allen of Boston spoke very interestingly of "The General Problem of Poverty." Miss McEwan told of of her amusing experiences in the work.

In February another meeting of the committee was held. It was voted that the monthly reports of the nurses be inserted in the Ledger. It was voted that the members of the committee be assessed one dollar each, the proceeds to be used for repairs needed in the Nurses' rooms. The floors have been painted, the woodwork and the large rug in the sitting room cleaned, and smaller rugs for the bedrooms are to be purchased.

In the fall, Mrs. Seavey, chairman of the Arts and Crafts Committee offered curtains to be made by her committee for the bedroom windows. Before this plan could be carried out, she was taken ill and her untimely death was a sad shock to all. Mrs. Tenney, who very generously undertook the chairmanship of the Arts and Crafts Committee for the remainder of the year, carried on the work as it had been planned, and we are grateful to her and her committee for a most acceptable gift. The committee wish also to express their thanks for donations of old linen, infants' clothing, night-gowns, bed linen, rubber sheets, drugs and cotton by various members of the club, and for jelly sent by the Wollaston club.

In April Miss McEwan was taken ill and obliged to go to the hospital for an appendix operation. She is now convalescent but will not be able to resume her work until the last of the summer. As the substitute nurse, Miss Hallett, is obliged to leave June first, a new nurse must be secured before that time.

During the year, 3,242 visits have been made. Of these 949 were for Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, for the care of their policy holders.

LETTER FROM HERO GISBURN

Writes of Injuries and Amputation of His Leg

Timothy J. Collins, local correspondent of the Globe, has just received a letter from Edward A. Gisburn, the Quincy boy wounded at the taking of Vera Cruz by the marines and blue jackets. At this battle Gisburn was reported as among those injured. He was attached to the signal corps of the battleship Florida, and was shot by a Mexican snipper while signalling from the top of a hotel in Vera Cruz.

There have been numerous stories as to how seriously he was injured, one report placing him as being slightly injured and another as being among the dead. The last official report was that his leg had been amputated.

Shortly after the first news of the battle, Mr. Collins wrote Gisburn a letter and he has just received a reply written from the Hospital ship Solace to which he was taken. The letter is the first direct news that has been received in Quincy from the young man. His letter follows:

"U. S. S. Solace, at Sea, May 7, 1914

"Dear Old Friend—The first mail after the news of the fighting reached the States, brought me 19 letters, not one more welcome than yours.

"I dare say grandma was a bit frightened but I'm O. K. and nearly whole. Nearly whole means that I have lost my left leg about three inches above the knee. I was shot through the knee and all the bones were shattered. I bled for about 12 hours and then gas infection set in. When I got to the operating table it was a question of minutes. There wasn't even time to shave my leg before amputating. The stump is healing rapidly, but the nerves are giving me a run. It seems that I have intense pain in the foot that is gone.

"Best regards and remember me to all the boys. I expect to see you in a month or so. I'm on my way to the New York Naval Hospital, where I expect to get on my 'feet' again; then I'm for home.

"I'm in bed propped up on pillows, the mill (typewriter) alongside.

"Gissy."

STAR WITNESS REPEATS STORY

Jack Rose Tells of the Plot to Murder Rosenthal

LATTER'S THREAT TO "SQUEAL"

Led to Hiring of Gunmen at Demand of Becker—Plan Assassination With Zelig's Gang—Driver of "Murder Car" Changes Testimony—Futile Objections by Prisoner's Counsel

New York, May 13.—Counsel for Charles Becker, who is on trial charged with the murder of Herman Rosenthal, obtained an admission from William Shapiro, driver of the gray murder car, that testimony he gave on direct examination at yesterday's session was not the same as that he gave at the trial of the four gunmen.

At the gunmen's trial Shapiro testified that while driving the four gunmen to the Metropole hotel he heard "Dago Frank" say: "Everything is all right. Becker has the cops fixed."

Yesterday he testified that it was "Whitey Lewis" who used the words. Shapiro said his testimony was the truth. He added that it was "Dago Frank" who ordered him to turn his machine toward Sixth avenue when he drew up in front of the Hotel Metropole in Forty-second street.

Shapiro became highly nervous under cross examination by Mr. Manton of Becker's counsel. It is expected his admission will play an important part in the trial later on.

"Bald Jack" Rose, the star witness for the state at the first trial, took the stand after Shapiro. He went fully into the details of the alleged conspiracy that resulted in the death of Rosenthal. He told how Becker had urged him to have the gambler "silenced," and the manner in which he secured the gunmen to "do the job." He also told how he had instilled a fear of a "frameup" and an arrest into the minds of the gunmen to make them murder Rosenthal as, he said, Becker demanded.

While he was telling his story Rose's eyes were never still, shifting between the face of District Attorney Whitman, Becker, the crowd in the courtroom and the floor at his feet. While he talked in a voice that was not audible at the rear of the room his answers were direct and to the point.

Rose told how he watched Becker raid Rosenthal's place; how Becker met Rosenthal later in the back room of a saloon and pleaded necessity for the raid. Becker told Rosenthal, said Rose, that he would save Rosenthal's roulette wheels captured in the raid, remove a policeman on guard in Rosenthal's place, "and let him go ahead," provided Rosenthal would waive examination in police court. Becker, said Rose, told him he would get Rosenthal later on.

Rose said Becker declared Rosenthal answered: "You get me clear and it will be all right. But if you fall down I'll never stop till I get you."

Rose next told how Becker learned that Rosenthal, angered at destruction of his gambling paraphernalia despite Becker's promise to save it, sought several magistrates and the district attorney to "squeal" for revenge.

It was at this time, said Rose, that Becker "got ugly" and refused to have further dealings with Rosenthal looking toward peace.

Becker, he said, proposed that "Big Jack" Zelig, who was in the Tombs, be offered a chance to escape fourteen years' imprisonment.

"Tell him that I'll get him out if he'll send word to some of his gangmen to croak Rosenthal," Rose declared Becker told him. Rose demurred, but Becker assured him "it was no harm to kill a guy like Rosenthal."

With Harry Vallon, said the witness, he went to the Tombs to see Zelig and plan the assassination. He gave Zelig $100 from Becker, he said, and Zelig agreed to bring about the killing, but insisted on being released from prison on bail. Finally, said Rose, it was arranged to raise $10,000 for Zelig's bail, and then Becker, Rose, Weber and Vallon met to settle the final details of Rosenthal's murder.

Rose bent forward with great earnestness as he declared Becker insisted that Rosenthal must die, and the jurymen followed every word with intense interest.

Constantly throughout Rose's story, Manton attempted to have ruled out any testimony that tended to connect Becker as having been in league with gamblers. He was on his feet at any hint or suggestion that Rose was to tell of any "inside" work of Becker's. Each time, however, Manton's objection was futile. "Bald Jack's" story flowed on.

EXPERIENCE WEEK OF SERIOUS PERIL

Thirty-Two Seamen Rescued After Crash With Iceberg

St. Pierre, Miq., May 13.—The captain and thirty-one seamen of the French fishing schooner Saint Solens, which kept afloat a week after being in a collision with an iceberg on the East Grand Banks, were rescued by the fishing schooner Marie, which arrived here from St. Malo.

The crew of the Solens pumped hard for seven days after the schooner crashed into the berg. They were finally sighted by the Marie. It is believed that the Solens sank within a short time after she was abandoned.

The others dead in the family are: George Palmer, the stepson, and George Palmer, the father. All three were Spiritualists.

The story of the spirit calls that preceded Mrs. Palmer's death and that of her husband was told by her brother, Henry D. Palmer. He said she was in good health up to the time of her stepson's death Wednesday, but that night she heard the call.

CAPITAL'S FALL SEEMS CERTAIN

Huerta Depending Upon United States to Save His Life

PUEBLA IS BEING FORTIFIED

Dictator Prepares to Make Last Stand There Until Our Army Can Get Him —Mexican Mediation Delegates Plan to Be Absent For an Extended Period—Are Glad to Get Away

Vera Cruz, May 13.—So imminent is the fall of Mexico City that the three representatives of the government now on their way to Niagara Falls with their families not only were secretly delighted to leave the dangers of the capital, but have planned to continue their journey to Europe after appearing before the A. B. C. mediators in the Canadian city.

They know Dictator Huerta has planned to make a last stand in Puebla, 150 miles toward Vera Cruz from the capital. There he can flee after the devastation of Mexico City has set in and with his Supremos Poderos, the regiment which will remain faithful to him when others have deserted, he expects to be able to hold out against the rebels until the American forces come and rescue him.

The Mexican mediation delegates, Rabasa, Roderiquez and Elguero, expressed to their friends here their delight at leaving the capital. Every man of them was accompanied by his family and vast amounts of baggage. The party was obviously not leaving for a short trip, but for an extended stay from their homes. They told their friends here they had seen too many signs that Huerta was prepared to fall, Samson-like, pushing the now tottering pillars of his government from their base and going to destruction amid the tumbling walls.

This may be expected, it is said, within a few weeks, or forty days at the most. Then, amid a carnival of looting, murder and the crashing of tumbling walls of public buildings, mined by the dictator, the flimsy semblance of government maintained in Mexico City may come to an end.

But Huerta will not be eliminated. He will still have his last card to play. Word passed to the friends of the mediators here is that the dictator feels secure in the belief that President Wilson cannot permit him to be killed.

A precedent has been set as to the killing of Mexican presidents in the Madero assassination. If President Wilson should permit Huerta to be assassinated then he could not recognize the president who took office over the body of the dead dictator. Therefore Huerta does not expect to be dragged out in the night as was Madero at the order of a rebel leader and shot down. He will flee to Puebla and in that stronghold guard his life against the assault of the revolutionary hosts until the American army can come and get him.

Arms and ammunition have been sent to Puebla in great quantities. It is well located for purposes of defense. In the state of Puebla, near Tlascala, in the mountain passes and gorges, the dictator's small force of loyal men could stand off an army greatly outnumbering them long enough to enable the Americans to reach the scene.

Should Huerta succeed in reaching Puebla as he plans and the rebels attack him there, it would not be the first time that city has known war.

It was at Puebla that General Porfirio Diaz, the deposed dictator, won his most brilliant victory as an army officer, May 2, 1867.

Back in 1812 Augustin Itarbide, later crowned emperor, captured the city. There Diaz and General Zaragoza defeated the army of Napoleon III. in 1862. In 1847 General Scott and his American forces captured the city.

It was captured by the French in 1862, only to be recaptured by the Mexican forces a few days later.

Huerta has given the peace delegates now on the high seas no instructions. They do not know what policy they shall be instructed to follow before the mediators. Huerta told them their instructions would be handed to them in New York.

SYMPOSIUM OF SALADS.

A dinner or luncheon without a salad would be as noticeable as to leave out the coffee or tea. The refreshing crisp salads are an aid to digestion, and also add much nutriment in the way of accessories, such as the dressing.

Sweetbread and Cucumber Salad.—Parboil the sweetbreads and put into cold water until ready to make the salad. Pare two medium sized cucumbers and cut into half-inch dice, cut the sweetbread into the same sized pieces. Whip a pint of cream until stiff, stir in gradually a half cupful of boiled dressing, season well with lemon juice, salt, paprika and onion juice, and mix with the meat and cucumber. Heap on lettuce leaves or in cups of head lettuce.

Benares Salad.—This is a most delicious and unusual salad, if it is prepared with fresh cocoanuts. Two cupfuls finely diced cocoanut, a cupful of sour apple diced, a finely chopped red pepper and two tablespoonfuls of finely cut onion or onion juice, a sprinkling of parsley, and serve with a salad dressing made of four parts of oil, one part vinegar, a seasoning of salt and pepper and a teaspoonful of powdered sugar.

Cucumber Salad.—Select large sized cucumbers and without peeling cut a good slice from the side, scoop out the pulp, chop fine, mix with onion and parsley and bits of firm, ripe tomato, cover with French dressing, and heap into the cucumber shells, which are placed on a bed of lettuce leaves.

A very pretty salad, and one which will appeal to a great many tastes, is that of sliced cucumbers and tomatoes laid in overlapping rows on a platter lined with lettuce leaves. The salad dressing is passed after each one has helped himself to the desired vegetables.

Sliced tomatoes, laid on a lettuce leaf, one slice to a person, heaped with celery and onion finely chopped and served with French dressing makes a most delightful salad.

POP CONCERT BY THE GUILD

Pleasing Program Presented at Parish House

The pop concert of St. Margaret's Guild in the parish house of Christ church on Teusday evening was a joyous affair for the many who attended. Square tables decorated with bright colors and with vases of cut flowers, tulips, jonquils and palms, transformed the interior main hall into a huge dining room and soft drinks and ices were served by an efficient committee.

During the evening ther were piano solos by Miss Margaret Hogan; soprano solos by Miss Celina Beleveau, Miss Irene Howes, Miss Cora Barnicoat; bass solos by George Davey, popular songs by Everett Clark, cornet solos by Harry Sprague, readings by Miss Phyllis Smith, cello solos by Master Theodore Smith and dancing by Miss Ramah Baker. The accompanists of the evening were Miss Olive Barnicoat, Hilton Marr and Mrs. John Greene.

The program was well rendered and was greatly appreciated as was shown by the hearty encores.

The committee was comprised of members of the guild. The entertainment was under the direction of Miss Olive A. Smith, Miss Edith W. Smith, Miss Bertha Wallace, Miss Alice Findley and Miss Ethel Schools. The refreshment committee included Miss Gertrude Jones and Miss Louise Moyle and the decorations were by Miss Mildred Smith, Miss Ardelle McDonald and Miss Margaret Hogan.

UNDER QUARANTINE.

Although no further cases of typhus fever have developed in Quincy Point the residents of that section are considerably alarmed, principally because of the wholesale and flagrant violation of the quarantine regulations by the men living in the house at 126 Main street where the first and only case was discovered.

The violation occured Tuesday morning when a majority of the 25 men under quarantine left the house by the rear windows while the officer stationed there by the Board of Health was patroling the front of the house. Most of them were later rounded up in the Fore River shipyard where they are employed and were taken back to the house. Today an officer at the back of the house prevented another exodus.

According to the Board of Health typhus fever is a communicable disease and is considered one of the most dangerous plagues of the present day. It is transmitted by body louse and originates in vermin and filth.

Until noon no unfavorable reports had been received regarding of the condition of the Russian Polander who was removed to the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston when the disease was diagnosed, although the medical profession considers it a fatal one.

The State Board of Health has recommended that sulphur be burned in large quantities throughout the house and that all of the inmates be "boiled" This is being done today under the direction of the local board, and if at the end of a short period nothing develops the quarantine will be removed The men who make their home there will be under medical observation for some weeks to come.

YEAR BOOK COMMITTEE.

The work of compiling the Yearbook is really a most interesting and satisfactory thing to do requiring not only great accuracy but also great haste as the materials for the book cannot be put in the hands of the committee until a very late day and the books must be printed and placed in the hands of the members prior to the first meeting in the fall.

While each succeeding committee may profit somewhat by the mistakes of its predecessors, the success of the Year Book Committee consists in its ability to arrange quickly and perfectly the lists that are collected from various sources.

By omitting the preference list in this year's book, a neater appearance is made in the list of members, while a card catalogue of the preferences for committees is fully as effectual in assisting the chairmen in making up their committees.

It has been suggested that the club might adopt a club color as many clubs have done and in this way a uniformity of cover might be effective.

While we regret the omission of one or two names, we consider the year-book for 1913-1914 a creditable production.

Any corrections, suggestions or changes will gladly be welcomed by the committee in their work of preparing the new year-book for the year 1914-1915.

Cordelia J. Cummings, chairman.

THE PRESIDENT.

The club year which closes today has been a busy one for the president. Her duties which have been invariably pleasant have not always been performed to her satisfaction but the spirit of our club motto for the year, "In Good Things Unity in Small Things Liberty, in all Things Charity" seems to have been in the minds of all and the year has been a happy one. All has been harmonious in the meetings of the Executive Board, every member of which has stood ready to further the desires of the president and the welfare of the club.

There have been no drones in the hive. It has been eminently gratifying to see the work of our various committees going on so successfully, and if one may specialize which is difficult where all are so praiseworthy, to see the earnestness with which our young girls club has been conducted and the splendid plans for its growth and activities. The acquirement of the High school gymnasium and other rooms in the building for the use of the club was due entirely to the efforts of the committee in charge of the Girls' club and is a great stride in the direction of greater use of our public buildings. Your president wishes to record her hearty appreciation of the splendid work of all her committees and would like to speak of each one in detail but time will not permit. It was a source of great satisfaction to your presiding officer that the club was able to place the name of its former president Mrs. George W. Morton in memoriam by the contribution of $100, to the Endowment Fund of the General Federation. It is also gratifying to note the interest of the club members in Federation work and the attendance at the Federation meetings.

Much is expected from the Union of our own city clubs which in the first steps of federation is showing the great advantage to be gained by united effort and closer acquaintance.

Our co-operation with the general secretary of the Associated Charities is valuable to both organizations. An invitation from the Quincy Board of Trade to your president to attend the luncheon given the visiting grocers and wives was accepted and it proved a most enjoyable occasion. A Moving Picture Machine recorded the party as the members stepped out of the front door of the Adams building and your president, in all the glory of her new spring hat was perpetuated forever. We surely welcome all overtures from other Quincy organizations and earnestly desire to co-operate with all for the welfare of our city.

Many courtesies have been extended from neighboring clubs and some have been accepted but the days were too full to admit of the acceptance of all. There was no guest day upon our program this year, but the club entertained a conference of the State Federation Music Committee of which your president is a member, thus enabling her to return the courtesies which had been extended.

In February of 1915, the club will celebrate its tenth anniversary and at that time we shall wish to have our friends with us and to observe in some fitting way the end of the first decade of our existence. The president of a club is surely the servant of its members and woe be to the other party on the line! The telephone and the pen are surely her tools of trade and get little time for rest.

The postman too must be glad when her term has ended for the armfuls of mail which he daily brings to her door materially increase the weight of his pack. The quantities of literature advertising the virtues of artists, lecturers and entertainers who wish to appear upon our club program are no small matter to be delivered, read and considered, but as a member of your program committee your president can safely promise that it will be done and all the pros and cons duly weighed. She can safely vouch for the earnestness of the program committee and their sincere efforts to provide a program which will give satisfaction to the club members. Did you ever think what it means to try to make up a program which shall be perfectly acceptable to 400 people? Try it and see if it is an easy matter! The president thanks her associates upon the executive board for their hearty co-operation and their unremitting efforts and expresses her appreciation of the kindliness of all the club members. She has a sincere desire to know each one personally and regrets that at the end of the first year of her service she cannot call all by name. She asks you to make yourselves known to her, as some have already done, that she may have a personal acquaintance with all.

Will the members please consider the club and this fine old house which shelters so much of good, their own to enjoy and improve in any way they can? And shall we continue in another year of service together accomplishing more and more for the good of the community thus enriching our own lives as well as those less fortunate than ourselves?

Alma Faunce Smith.

MAY PARTY.

The annual May party of the Ladies Sodality of St. Mary's church was held in St. Josephs hall Tuesday evening with a large attendance of members of the parishes of the city and friends present.

The program included dancing until midnight in the upper hall, and whist in the lower hall at which the winner of the general prize was Miss Helen F. Burke. Souvenirs were awarded to Joseph McGilvray, John Minihan, William Schaetzl, Mrs. James Riley, Mrs. Frank Canavan and Miss Catherine McDonald.

The affair was one of the prettiest of the season and is the leading social event of that section. The plans were completed under the direction of Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy, who was assisted by a large corps of assistants. The chairmen of the various committees were:—dancing, Mrs. R. McDonald; whist, Mrs. John Minihan; refreshments, Mrs. Annie White decoration committee, Miss Annie Galvin.

Make Him Content.

One of the principal duties entailed upon the housewife is insuring the comfort of the husband. Every man is contented so long as the solid comforts of life are his—so long as his meals are to his liking and his home always ready for his occupancy.

At a reunion and banquet of the Boys of 1906, Quincy High school, at the United States hotel, Boston, on Tuesday vening it was votel to agitate the formation of an Alumnae association at Quincy High school, and a committee was apointed to take definite steps in this direction.

The committee will confer with the School Committee, principal of the High school, and members of other classes ina nendaevor to secure their cooperation in fifmly establishing a permanent alumni association that will be a lasting benefit to the school.

The boys met in the hotel parlors and after enjoying an hour of sociability, during which old times were recalled, those present sat down to an excellent menu shortly after seven.

The afterdinner exercises were opned with Lucien H. Thayer as toastmaster and many were the shafts of wit in response to the various calls.

Carl G. Fowler, the only benedict of the class present, read some gems of original verse concerning various members of the class, and concluded with a toast to the girls of the class which was drunk with loud acclaim.

A silent toast was given for the four boys of the class who have passed away. They are James Vincent Martin, died 1911; Alvin Hatfield Powtney, died 1910; Archie Asel Rogers, died 1908; Joseph Henry McDonald, died 1908.

PICKET PUT UNDER ARREST

Trouble This Morning at the Shipyard gate

Considerable excitement developed among the striking Syrian reamers and bolters gathered outside of the Fore River shipyard gates this morning, when Charles Joseph, one of their pickets, was placed under arrest by Patrick Bradley of the yard police.

According to the story told by the police, Joseph was one of the earliest on the scene and persisted in forcing men from the line. He succeeded in intimidating a number of foreigners, but objected when Officer Bradley told them they were at liberty to report for work.

Joseph, it is alleged grabbed Officer Bradley around the neck and the strikers crowded around the struggling men in a menacing way.

A telephone message to police headquarters brought the auto and several patrolmen, and Joseph was placed under arrest on a charge of drunkenness. He was not arraigned in court this morning because of his condition, and additional charges may be preferred against him when he is arraigned Thursday.

The number of men that have suspended work is open to debate, Caleb W. Howard, the local I. W. W. organizer claiming that 300 are on strike, while at the office of the company a less number is given.

HAS ASKED AN OPINION

City Clerk Holds Up the Express Permits

City Clerk Crane said this morning that he had not as yet issued either of three liquor permits passed Monday evening over the veto of the Mayor and that he would not issue them until he had received an opinion from the City Solicitor.

This morning the City Clerk gave a letter to the City Solicitor asking for a written opinion on the question, which the City Solicitor after reading placed in his pocket and left for Boston. It is probable that he will render his opinion in a day or so.

One of the amusing incidents connected with the discussion of granting liquor permits over the Mayor's veto came to light Monday. A certain Councilman who has been devoting his spare minutes to reading law bearing on the question telephoned the City Clerk from Boston that he had dug out a law which fitted the case and which assured him that the Mayor's signature was not necessary.

He gave the City Clerk the number of the chapter of the Revised Laws for him to read, and then hung up his telephone receiver. The City Clerk pulled down his law volumes and upon looking up the chapter given, found that the Councilman had got his numbers twisted somewhat for the chapter referred to was one relating to granting a charter to the crematory at Forest Hills. Perhaps he regarded it as a burning issue.

The City Clerk has not as yet learned the correct number of the chapter to which the Councilman had reference.

In a Strange Place.

Little Alice was visiting her grandparents in an eastern city. One Sunday grandpa took her to church with him. When sermon time came Mary looked around a little, and, seeing a relative up in the gallery, whispered shrilly: "Oh, grandpa, look up there! See Cousin Mary sitting on a shelf!"

Permit Issued by Mayor Allowing Ettor and Howard to Speak

Garage Owners Much Exercised Over New Rules

City Clerk Crane has been beseiged during the past few days by owners of private garages to find out just where they are at and what they must do in order to maintain their garage. The new rules governing these garages seem to be rather complicated, and somewhat hard to understand. One man interprets them one way and another a different way. It is a question who is right. In order to be enabled to give information asked for City Clerk Crane, visited the office of the District Police today.

"No opinion from the City Solicitor as yet," was the reply of the City Clerk this morning when asked about the granting of the liquor permit orders passed over the Mayor's veto last Monday evening by the City Council. Until the City Clerk receives a written opinion he will take no action in the matter.

The City Council Committee on Public Buildings, before whom is pending the addition to the Atherton Hough school at Houghs Neck is to make an inspection of the building this afternoon, in order that they may be able to act more intelligently on the matter when it comes before them at a meeting of the committee to beheld this evening.

It was reported about the corridors at City Hall this morning that the three additional permanent firemen authorized by a recent order of the City Council, would be appointed by the Mayor sometime today to take effect next Monday.

It was also reported about the corridors that the Civil Service Commission had refused the Mayor the permission he asked, to keep Thomas Cahill in the office of Assistant Commissioner, and that the Mayor was informed that he must appoint one of the three gentlemen who successfully passed the recent civil service examination. It is said that the chances are that the Mayor will make the appointment to that position sometime today, to take effect next Monday.

The flag on City Hall was placed at half mast this morning out of respect to Corporal Daniel A. Haggerty, of Cambridge, the first soldier to be killed at the battle of Vera Cruz, whose funeral takes place today. Governor Walsh, sent out a request that the flags on all public buildings throughout the state be placed at half mast today during the services. Scores were injured Wednesday at the Cambridge Armory in a wild rush to view the body. The police were powerless and it was necessary for the militia to be called out to restore order at bayonet points.

A permit was issued by the Mayor this morning to Ettor and Howard the two I. W. W. organizers to speak in City Square tonight. The permit provides that the speaking must be in the English language, and between the hours of 7.30 and 10 o'clock There will be a large police detail on hand to preserve order should any disturbance arise. No trouble however is anticipated.

The Board of Health have issued cards giving the dates for clean-up days at Houghs Neck and Squantum, upon which dates the teams of the Board of Health will remove all rubbish that may be placed on the street line for collection. One day each month has been selected.

WORKING FOR SCHOOLHOUSE

Squantum Also Wants Piece of Fire Apparatus

"The whole Mexican nation is not worth the lives of one of our soldiers or sailors," declared T. F. Callahan in a talk on "Mexico," before the members of the Squantum Improvement association at the meeting at Lee's Inn on Tuesday evening. Mr. Callahan recently returned from a trip to Mexico and when he was there trains were under guard of President Huerta's soldiers. He said he was very glad that he got out of Mexico when he did.

President Wilson is doing a wonderful work he said, in trying to prevent war between the United States and Mexico. When you hear it stated that we could go into Mexico and wipe them up within a few months, persons who make those remarks do not know what they are talking about. The Mexican's are wonderful horsemen, they are born riders and sharpshooters, they are tricky and cruel.

Mr. Callahan told in a very interesting way of his trip from Squantum to Mexico and to a mine in Leon of which he is a heavy stockholder.

Three new members were voted into the association, William J. Whitley, Bellevue road; Carl H. Lindgren, Park avenue; John Kundsin, Pratt road.

Chairman Anderson of the refuse committee told of his efforts to get the Quincy Board of Health to send teams to Squantum to collect garbage during last week. Although people throughout the section set out their boxes and barrels they are yet uncollected. Councilman Nelson said he would use his endeavors to see if the collection could be made.

Councilman Carlson, chairman of the street railway committee, reported that Superintendent Gammons of the Bay State Street railway had promised half hour time on the Squantum line beginning May 15. After some discussion over the schedule it was voted 15 to 4 that it was desirable that cars leave Squantum at five minutes of the hour and 25 minutes past.

Reports on the project of securing a school site in Squantum was made by Councilman Nelson. Councilman Carlson, who is a member of the public buildings and grounds committee of the City Council promised he would do what he could to aid Squantum in getting a school site.

Councilman Carlson urged that the association take some action regarding fire protection. It was voted that the Quincy fire chief be asked to furnish a piece of hand apparatus for Squantum, and that a committee be appointed to find a suitable place for keeping such apparatus. John Holmes is chairman of the committee.

ANDREW McPHERSON

The funeral services of Andrew McPherson of 8 South Central avenue, on Wednesday afternoon, were in charge of John Hancock lodge of Odd Fellows, and were attended by members of Rural lodge of Masons and John Adams council, Royal Arcanum. Rev. Dr. Sneath of the Congregational church was the officiating clergyman, and Edward E. Bullock sang feelingly three hymns, "Lead kindly light," "Abide with Me" and "Nearer My God to Thee." The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Interment was in Mount Wollaston.

NO AGREEMENT AT SHIPYARD

But No Trouble Today Among the Strikers

Contrasted to the riotous scene at the gates of the Fore River shipyard Wednesday morning there were no signs of disorder there this morning. The pickets of the striking reamers and bolters were in line and succeeded in coaxing several foreigners to suspend through sympathy. An agreement between the strikers and the company officials has not been reached.

Joseph Ettor of the I. W. W. will address the strikers tonight and a permit has been granted him to speak in City Square. Special precaution will be taken by the police to prevent any hostile demonstrations the department having in mind to what extent the foreigners in the recent Lawrence strike were inflamed.

The permit to speak covers the hours from 7.30 to 10 o'clock, and during that time there will be other speakers who will sing the praises of the I. W. W. Organizers are in this city today advertising the meeting.

Caleb W. Howard, who was a leader in the Hopedale strike and took a prominent part in the Wakefield trouble which is now being arbitrated, has charge of the meeting. This morning he appeared as the citizen counsel for Charles Joseph arrested in connection with an exciting scene at the shipyard gates Wednesday morning. He was arraigned on a charge of drunkenness and with assault on an officer. The case was continued until Wednesday and Joseph is out on bail furnished by a fellow countryman. The defendant expects to have Thomas Connolly represent him in court Wednesday.

LAUNCHING AT EARLY DATE

President Powell Recalling Former Officials

It is understood that quite a number of the high salaried men at the Fore River shipyard who were dropped about the time President Bowles resigned his office, have been recalled by President Powell. Business is rushing at the plant at the present time. Among the vessels under way are the battleship Nevada, the steamships Atlantic and Pacific, the submarine tender Fulton, torpedo boat destroyers Cushing and Tucker, and the submarine torpedo boats, L-1, L-2, L-3, L-4, L-9, K-10, and M-1.

The date for the launching of the Atlantic has been set for May 26, and for the Pacific on June 20 or thereabouts. These two steamships are being built for the Emery Steamship Company and are being built ultimately for service between Boston and Pacific coast ports. The vessels will be completed within about a month after they are launched.

R. A. MASONS.

Charles H. Johnson gave his illustrated lecture on "George Washington" before St. Stephen's Royal Arch Chapter Wednesday evening. He also showed some twenty or more views taken during the trial trips of the Argentine dreadnaught Rivadavia. The work of the evening was the most excellent masters' degree which was exemplified on a class of twelve candidates, music being by the Wollaston quartette. Refreshments were served after the convocation.

The stormy weather has greatly interfered with the field work of the Assessors and they are considerably behind in their work. It is impossible to do any field work during stormy weather because of the large books of record and there have been an unusual number of stormy days during the past two months. They are now in Ward Four.

SHOULD STUDY OUR HISTORY

David W. Murray Upholds the Constitution

"The particular crisis we are in today is simply because the conscience of this nation as expressed in the Constitution is violated and troubled, and if perchance in the coming year some of you men leave your homes and go to that southern country to fight, your fight will be for the principles laid down in the Constitution of the United States."

In these words David W. Murray of of Hyde Park closed his lecture before John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, in Electa hall Wednesday night. His topic was the "Constitution of the United States." Mr. Murray who is a former representative and was defeated for the Senate last fall was the speaker in the opening of the series of lectures for members and their friends on government.

Worthy President Frank J. Duffy presided and presented the lecturer. The Eagles degree was conferred on 15 candidates by the staff of the local aerie, and 21 applications for membership were received. The proposed all day sea outing was discussed, and arrangements left in the hands of the entertainment committee.

Mr. Murray's address followed the meeting. He said any one feature of this government and its constitution would be solid enough for hours upon hours talk.

In touching upon the requirements necessary to enjoy the freedom of citizenship in this country, he spoke of his experiences before the court saying that many young men lack a knowledge of our history. "Your interest in government is your contribution to that which makes the government of the United States," he said and he was warmly applauded.

Our civilization is all worked out on the Constitution written years ago, when government was established here, and next to the Bible it is the greatest book in history.

"So, brother members" said Mr. Murray" in orders such as these, founded on patriotic principles and in which the red, white and blue takes so conspicuous a part in the ritual, it is meet and proper to publicly discuss the Constitution, and its one phase—liberty. The members are to be congratulated at the opening of this course."

WATER PAILS NECESSARY.

Some complaint is made because the water has been shut off from the several drinking fountains of the city. This action is due to an order from the Massachusetts Department of Animal Industry, which has ordered all public fountains shut off permanently on account of glanders. The water department however have caused faucets to be placed on every fountain so that teamsters who carry pails can readily water their horses.

QUINCY WOMAN THE HEROINE

Was Passenger on the Ill Fated Steamer Jefferson

Passengers on the steamship Jefferson, on which nine men were badly scalded Monday night when one of her boilers burst, are loud in their praises of the heroism of Miss Mabel Elliott, of 83 Marlboro street, Norfolk Downs, a passenger on the steamship. While other women about her fainted she calmly bound up the horrible burns of a large Swedish water tender, while he begged to be shot or thrown into the sea.

The shock of the explosion extinguished all of the lights except in the companion ways which were lighted by oil lamps. The room where the explosion occurred was filled with steam, into which not the bravest man would venture. Out of this dashed Magnus Olsen, his clothing and skin burned away. Miss Elliott awakened by the screams stepped from her stateroom just as Olsen fell at her feet in agony. Other women fainted, but Miss Eliott grabbed a bottle of olive oil from the table and a nightdress and bandaged the man's burns, and directed that he be put in her berth. He begged to be shot or thrown overboard and died shortly after he was taken to the Norfolk hospital. Officers and passengers on the boat were loud in their praises of the work of Miss Eliott.

Miss Eliott is a daughter by a former marriage of Mrs. Walter J. Merriam of 83 Bromfield street. She had been in Norfolk, Va., all winter suffering from rheumatism, and it is supposed that she was on her way homea. She is a native of New York but has lived in Boston and suburbs for the past twenty years. She is 23 years of age and has resided in Norfolk Downs about a year.

The Jefferson docked at New York on Wednesday and Mrs. Merriam received a telegram from Miss Eliott saying that she would be at home Thursday, but she made no reference to the accident on the Jefferson.

QUARANTINE REMOVED.

The quarantine of the house at 126 Main street where a Russian Polander was found suffering from typhus fever, was discontinued Wednesday, after a thorough fumigation by the Board of Health. The men were given permission to report for work at the Fore River shipyard, and most of them have done so. For the first time since the quarantine was established there was no patrolman guarding the premises Wednesday evening. All of the boarders in the house will be kept under medical supervision and most of the physicians of the city are watching to prevent for further spread of the disease. The patient who is in the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston is doing fairly well.

DROWNING REPORTED

Police Dragging Fallon Quarry for Body

William Keefe, a six year old boy was drowned in the abandoned Fallon quarry about 11.30 this morning. Little Willie and another boy were tossing stones into the water and he fell overboard. His companion ran and notified people in the vicinity. They telephoned police headquarters, and this afternoon Chief Burrill and police officers are dragging the quarry. The boy is said to have lived on Copeland street.

The boy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Keefe of Copeland street who conduct a small variety store near Miller street.

FAMILY POISONED AT BRAINTREE

Mrs. Philopena Leo, wife of Domenico Leo and her four children Angelina, Maria, Teresa and Giuseppina of Fairview avenue, South Braintree, are seriously ill at their home from eating a poisonous plant known as wild indigo. The plant was picked by the husband and father during Wednesday in a field near the Randolph line, it being supposed by him to be wild asparagus. Mrs. Leo cooked the greens and in order that the children might retire, she had supper with them early in the evening.

Shortly after eating the greens both Mrs. Leo and the children were taken ill and Dr. C. A. Sullivan was called. The physicians discovered that instead of asparagus the mother and children had eaten a poisonous plant. Later in the night the children were considered out of duger but the condition of the mother was considered serious.

STREETS OF CONCRETE.

Considerable interest is being taken in a new form of street building which is being tried out. Instead of building a street of macadam, or other material, the street is built entirely of concrete. The wearing qualities of this kind of a street are said to be excellent, and that they last much longer than macadam, or other built streets which are torn to pieces by swiftly passing automobiles, whose tires suck up the street in places leaving it full of holes. The Massachusetts Highway Association which is meeting today is to view such a street as a part of its program.

Taxes are growing higher and higher everywhere, but the voters can always find another set of rascals to put into office.

There is a general feeling among the men that if they produently delay raking up the garden, their wives may attend to it for them.

The item that President Wilson attended the circus is not a roundabout way of stating that he was in the congressional gallery.

The damage done by war to the progress of the nation is emphasized by the remark of Frank Chance that it would hurt base ball.

NOBLE IDEALS.

Now, believe me, God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best. There is a time when we are not content to be such merchants or doctors or lawyers as we see on the dead level or below it. The woman longs to glorify her womanhood as sister, wife or mother. * * * Here is God—God standing silently at the door all day long—God whispering to the soul that to be pure and true is to succeed in life, and whatever we get short of that will burn up like stubble though the whole world may try to save it.—Robert Collyer.

Half the gossips of society would perish if the books that are truly worth reading were but read.—Dawson.

Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body. As by the one health is preserved, strengthened and invigorated, by the other virtue (which is the health of the mind) is kept alive, cherished and confirmed.—Addison.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

TAMPICO TAKEN BY THE REBELS

Encounter Desperate Resistance In Their Final Attack

GUNBOATS FLEE TO HARBOR

May Seek to Prevent Landing of Supplies, Thus Raising Interesting Questions—Fall of City of Utmost Importance to Constitutionalists' Cause—Rebels See No Basis on Which They Can Co-operate With Huertistas In Provisional Government—May Be Review of Seizure of Lighthouse on Lobos Island—Zapata Will Not Enter Mexico City Ahead of Constitutionalists — O'Shaughnessy Thinks Huerta Will Stick

Washington, May 14.—Evacuation of Tampico by the Mexican federal garrison has begun, according to a relayed wireless dispatch to the navy department from Rear Admiral Mayo. The federal troops are leaving by the railroad.

That the rebels encountered desperate resistance in their final attack on Tampico and that they were compelled to carry their fight to the heart of the town was indicated by Mayo's report.

The federals are retreating by way of the railroad leading to San Luis Potosi, and it is assumed that they hope to reach Pachuca, the terminus of a railway line that leads indirectly to Mexico City. The railroad out of Tampico to Monterey is held by the constitutionalists.

Mexican Gunboats Flee

Mayo further reported that the Mexican federal gunboats Bravo and Zaragoza steamed out of the Panuco river and anchored near the foreign warships.

The taking of Tampico, the port next in importance to Vera Cruz, will raise many interesting questions, as the constitutionalists held no seacoast towns. It is possible that the federal gunboats outside the harbor may seek to prevent arms and supplies from landing at Tampico, but such an interference with international commerce might not be tolerated by the big foreign ships lying there, and complications are possible.

As there is an embargo on the exportation of arms into Mexico from the United States, ammunition could be shipped only from European ports, and hitherto there has been no interference by General Huerta with foreign commerce, other than that with the United States.

With success at Tampico, the constitutionalists will press hard for possession of Saltillo and San Luis Potosi, whither the garrison from Tampico is believed to have fled.

Huerta Revenue Cut Off

With the fall of Tampico the constitutionalists come into revenues estimated at $300,000 a week. The victory won by the forces of Carranza, after a desperate fight lasting three days, is regarded in the capital as presaging the end of the Huerta regime in Mexico.

The capture of Tampico is of the utmost importance to the constitutionalists' cause in Mexico. It means that two-thirds of the revenue of the dictator has been cut off. It means that Huerta will not be able to move a train in Mexico unless by the use of wood for fuel, since practically all of the railways use crude oil.

Furthermore, the constitutionalists are now in position to receive arms and ammunition to be used in the advance on Mexico City, and it is understood that a large shipment will be landed with the seizure of the control of the custom house by the forces of General Gonzales.

Plans of Mediators

As stumbling blocks in the path of preliminary attempts to compose the Mexican problem appeared to be gradually disappearing, suggestions of the mediators' tentative plans unofficially were revealed.

Disposition of the five South Americans detained by General Funston at Vera Cruz for sniping was held in abeyance and the Lobos "occupation" incident had not been lost sight of.

A report that the South American envoys tentatively were considering a plan for possible establishment of a form of government to include two administrators to be named by the federals, two by the constitutionalists and a fifth by the mediators, attracted some attention, and immediately drew from Carranza's agents the declaration that any such proposal would not be acceptable to their chief. Huerta opposes any plan that will not give him a voice in naming his successor.

Robert Pesquiera, Carranza's confidential representative, asserted:

"We have beaten Huerta at every turn, and why should we yield our advantage when we have the reforms for which we strive almost within our grasp? This has been a fight of 100 years for reform, and we will not be content to have those years of fighting wasted."

Other constitutionalists asserted there was no basis on which Huertistas and the rebels could co-operate in a provisional government.

The Lobos Island Incident

The result of the Lobos island "occupation" incident is awaited with considerable interest. Rear Admiral Badger's declaration, "no occupation in a military sense has occurred," assured the administration officials of the trend of what happened at the east coast lighthouse station.

There was, however, a disposition in some quarters to believe the incident had not been closed, and that there might be a review of that phase of the situation which arose when Huerta was said to have ordered the suspension of lights on the west coast to hinder navigation of American ships.

The United States government, it was understood, had maintained in reply to Huerta's protest that the island was seized only as a means of operating the beacon in the interests of shipping along Mexico's gulf coast.

Zapata Advices Reassuring

Assertions of the constitutionalists that there was an understanding between Zapata, the southern insurrecto leader, and Carranza, that Zapata would not attempt to enter Mexico City until after it had been captured by the constitutionalists had a tempering effect on fear expressed that if the Huerta regime suddenly were to collapse the southern rebels might pillage the capital. The constitutionalist agents asserted Zapata had recognized Carranza as his chief.

While the envoys proceeded with their plans for the Niagara Falls conference the American mission, Messrs. Lamar and Lehmann, conferred to arrange details of their work. They will consult President Wilson and Secretary Bryan about the personnel of their party, which probably will include several members of the staff of the state department.

Huerta Won't Voluntarily Retire

Little light was thrown on the conference between Nelson O'Shaughnessy and President Wilson. It is known, however, that the former charge at Mexico City told the president he was convinced Huerta would never voluntarily retire as dictator. So far as the mediators are concerned, O'Shaughnessy is known to have told the president that, from personal observation, he believed it would be very difficult to find a common ground on which all Mexican factions could agree.

There would always be certain Mexicans, he told the president, who would oppose organized government. But if the majority of the factions could be reconciled, O'Shaughnessy is understood to have said, and then a strong government set up in Mexico City which would have the recognition of the United States and Latin America, it could easily secure the necessary funds to pacify the malcontents with a fighting army.

CROWD AT HAGGERTY'S BIER

Militia and Extra Police Necessary to Preserve Order

Cambridge, Mass., May 14.—Many women and children fainted and several were slightly injured in a great crush of persons seeking admission to the Cambridge state armory last night to pay homage to Marine Corporal Daniel A. Haggerty, whose body lay in state in the armory.

To control the immense throng two companies of the Eighth regiment, M. V. M., were called out, and twenty policemen were hurried to the scene to help the twelve already on duty.

The crowd, restless at being unable to gain admittance to view the Haggerty bier, stormed the armory from all sides. One section of it forced its way into the drill shed by the side door, while another jammed through the front doors. Panic reigned until the arrival of the militia and extra policemen.

It is estimated that fully 25,000 passed Haggerty's bier during the night.

"What is the secret of success?" asked the fool.

"The ability to conceal your lack of ability," replied the sage.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

NOW TROUBLED BY CONSCIENCE

Rose Sorry He Plotted to Have Rosenthal Slain

ON THE STAND FIVE HOURS

Remains Unperturbed as Charges of Murder and Other Crimes Are Hurled at Him—Tells of Killing of "Spanish Louie" and Describes Schepps as His "Lobby Gow"

New York, May 14.—"Bald Jack" Rose, chief witness for the prosecution at the second trial of Charles Becker, charged with being the instigator of the plot that resulted in the murder of Herman Rosenthal, came from the stand at the conclusion of five hours of relentless cross examination, bright-eyed and smiling.

The informer quietly and unfalteringly answered every question asked him by Martin T. Manton, chief of Becker's counsel. Even when Manton shouted accusations of murder at Rose, and tried to make him admit that he had made his living by committing petty larcenies and by selling opium to the slaves of the habit of New York's Chinatown, the former gambler remained unperturbed.

Rose's expression never changed during all the grilling. He reiterated his story of underworld intrigue and murder with a calm and matter-of-fact air. He showed no fear, no emotion and no remorse, except on one occasion. Then he said his conscience pricked him when he thought over how he had plotted to have Herman Rosenthal murdered. "It pricks me now," he added.

Manton managed to get Rose to admit that there were minor discrepancies between the testimony he offered at the first trial and that he gave on direct examination Wednesday. Rose said his testimony Wednesday was more complete in places than his former testimony. At the same time, he said, he told some things at the first trial which he did not mention at this one.

"I know so much about it, and have talked so much about it," said Rose, "it is impossible for me not to leave some things out now and then."

Manton put to the witness a series of questions designed to show that Rosenthal figured prominently in a gamblers' war and was hated. Rose admitted that Sam Paul, a gambler, and Rosenthal had a falling out soon after the latter's house was raided. Rose also said Rosenthal hired "Spanish Louie" to kill Sam Paul. "Louie" failed to do it. He told Rosenthal, according to Rose, that Paul had given him $50, and he would not shoot a man who was so generous. Then, Rose said, Rosenthal hired "Bloody Mike" to kill "Spanish Louie." The killing followed.

The witness conceded that he had broken with Rosenthal after the latter had spread tales that Rose was a "squealer" thereby putting Rose's life in danger.

The defense read extracts from newspaper stories written under Rose's name. The witness admitted that many of the statements therein were his, including the declaration that he could hire men to commit almost any crime.

Schepps His "Lobby Gow"

In reply to questions, Rose came down to the time he was removed from the Tombs prison, after he surrendered, to the West Side prison. He told of many conferences he had with the district attorney. He described Schepps as his "lobby gow." A lobby gow is, in the language of the East Side, as Rose described it, "a pal and a friend, willing to do almost anything he is told."

Manton read to the jury a letter written by Rose to Schepps while the latter was in hiding at Hot Springs, Ark. In this letter Rose said Becker had "thrown him down like a dog," and that the district attorney had promised immunity to him (Rose), Schepps, Webber and Vallon. He then asked Schepps, whom he addressed as "Dear Old Pal," to return to New York and surrender.

At one point Manton shook his finger under Rose's nose and shouted: "Are you guilty of murder?"

Rose wriggled in his chair, hesitated, and whispered, "No."

Whitman and Manton clashed at that point in regard to a statement which Manton alleged Louis Plitt, Becker's press agent, had made.

Justice Seabury finally allowed Manton to ask Rose: "Did you tell Plitt, in reply to a question asking Rose whether it was a fact that Becker had anything to do with the murder of Rosenthal: 'I swear by all that is holy that Becker didn't have a thing to do with it?'"

Rose denied this. He added that his conscience pricked him while he was arranging for the murder of Rosenthal.

"It pricks me now, too," he said.

The cross examination was concluded shortly after that.

SMALL CITY AT MERRYMOUNT

Over 100 Buildings May Be Erected For Soldiers

When asked this morning if he had granted any permits to the United States government for the erection of any buildings at Merrymount Park for the regulars of the coast artillery, Inspector of Buildings Merrill said that he had not. Futhermore, he said, that in case the government decided to build any buildings on the park it would not be necessary for it to obtain a permit.

Although the government has received bids for the necessary buildings at the Park should the coast artillery decide to go into camp there, no contract has as yet been let for them, and none will until such time as orders are received from Washington.

Capt. Matthews has received orders to be in readiness to commence operations as soon as orders are received. It is reported that bids have been received for the erection of 107 buildings which include bath houses, mess quarters, etc. Same to be constructed inside of ten days from the awarding of the contract. The estimated cost is $15,000.

NEW HAVEN R. R. AFFAIRS

The $1000 Paid DeKnight Not Shipyard Money

Quincy men, and men well known here, figured prominently on Tuesday at the hearing in Washington relative to affairs of the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R.

Timothy E. Byrnes, former vice president of the New Haven, testified that $1000 paid to Clarence W. De Knight, a Washington lawyer, by Ex-Rear Admiral F. T. Bowles, then president of the Fore River Shipbuilding corporation, for services in connection with the Panama legislation, in reality came from the New Haven treasury. The Senate lobby investigating committee recently had De Knight and Bowles before it with relation to the transaction, but the New Haven's connection was not then brought out.

Mr. Byrnes was on the stand two hours, and again was questioned as to payments made through his office to various persons for services to the New Haven, and particularly as to the work of Arthur P. Russell of Wollaston, an assistant attorney in the Boston office. Mr. Byrnes resented what he called "insinuations" in the queries as to Legislative work.

Questioned as to the employment of W. S. McNary of Boston, Mr. Byrnes said McNary was given about $1000 mainly for making a careful study of the probable effect of the Grand Trunk Railroad coming into Boston, which was being considered.

BANQUET OF GAS EMPLOYEES.

The Citizens' Gas Light Service Club held its final banquet of the season in the Thompson cafe on Tuesday evening after which there was a short business meeting and a theatre party at Kincaides Theatre. Occupying a conspicuous position on the festive board was the silver trophy, offered by the company to the team winning the championship of the bowling league, which was won by the office employees in the last match on Monday evening. The affair was informal and early in the fall the meetings of the club will be again resumed and a similar program carried out throughout the winter months.

BARGAINS IN USED CARS.

"Buyers of used cars are certainly getting some real bargains from us this spring," says Manager Hinchcliffe, of the Winton branch, 674 Commonwealth avenue, Boston. "In line with the Winton Company's conservative policy, we have been especially careful during the past winter selling season in taking used cars in trade. The result is that, while we are not loaded up with cars of this kind, we have some handsome, luxurious cars at prices far below what the cars are actually worth."

LIBRARY NOTES.

In these days when the stores are filled with charmingly illustrated books for children, it is an interesting study to trace the development of the movement to provide the younger generation with really good pictures for their pleasure and education.

First Walter Crane then Randolph Caldecote began to illustrate the old tales—"Arabian Nights," "Story of Perrault," etc.— with landscapes, "in perfect interpretation of nature and incomparable chords of color harmony."

But is was left to the third of this trio of pioneers—Kate Greenaway—to "put the child on the scene, in all its naivete, its gaucheries, its touching charm, shy alarms, discoveries, embarrassments and victories; the stumbling of it in winter days, the enchanted smiles of its springtime and all the history of its heart."

The present collection of Library Art club pictures exhibited in the Art Gallery of the Thomas Crane Public Library illustrates perfectly the charm of this artist's work.

Miss Greenaway's first efforts were the illustrating of other people's books, for example, her pictures for Browning's "Pied Piper of Hamelin" which are here on exhibition. Under her hand the Mayor and corporation, the rats, the people of Hamelin and the Piper himself "come alive" for the delectation of all children who love the old tale with its repetition, lilt and rapid movement.

But the limitation of making pictures to fit someone else's ideas, did not satisfy Miss Greenaway long and in 1877 she submitted to her publishers, "Under the window," a group of her own simple little verses, illustrated in their own spirit. These famous examples of her ability are also included in the Art Club exhibition.

Children will be particularly interested in seeing these pictures and reading the verses, while older people wishing to continue a study of Miss Greenaway's genius, will find her life by Spielmann and Laylard (shelf No. 438.138) a most readable biography.

SCHOOL HALLS.

It is not yet generally understood judging by the applications that are coming to the School Committee from time to time, that the school halls of the city cannot be used for the purpose of giving theatricals. This is not because of any ruling by the Committee, but by order of the State Police department, which prohibits their use for any purpose where curtains or scenery is to be used. An inspector from the State department recently inspected all the school buildings of the city, and reported to the Superintendent that the buildings were unusually safe so far as fire hazard was concerned; more so, in fact, than any other city about Boston that he had inspected.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

A large amount of machinery has just been placed in the Industrial school, on loan from the Fore River shipyard, with option of purchase within two years at very favorable terms. Because of lack of business at the yard it has been necessary to lay off several of the apprentices, who will until further developments attend school on full time. Applications are being received constantly for the full time school for next year, and there is little doubt of the classes being filled.

HIGH SCHOOL PROGRAMMES.

The grammar school pupils who graduate this year are busy selecting the courses and programmes of work at the High school. It is interesting to note that both parents and pupils are this year giving the matter more than the usual amount of thought and attention, and the Superintendent is receiving far more than the usual number of requests for advice. It is very essential that this should be the case, as in a great number of instances, the whole success of the High school course depends upon a judicious selection of studies.

PRE-VOCATIONAL CLASSES.

The Willard school pre-vocational class of girls served a lunch today to a few invited guests which was both dainty and satisfying. This class, as well as the Coddington class, has had a very successful year, and a good number of the girls who graduate will enter the household arts class at the High school next fall to continue along the same lines that they have been pursuing in the grammar grades.

HIGH SCHOOL CONCERT.

The High school chorus is planning to give a concert on Wednesday evening, May 27, in the School hall, assisted by a mixed quartette and an orchestra. The concert will consist of the cantata, "The May Queen" together with special numbers by the quartette.

ADAMS SCHOOL.

A May party will be held in the assembly hall of the Adams school on Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, and the program will include many features of interest to the people of the district. The party will be under the direction of the art committee of the Parent-Teachers' Association and its purpose is to secure funds for decorations. The Spanish dance, given at the Pageant of Nations in Music hall will be repeated, and a May Pole dance will be given. Candy and ice cream will be on sale.

Mystified the Missionary.

It is well known that some of the most determined and powerful opponents that missionaries have to meet in India are those who profess to be able to work wonders such as the magicians of Egypt used to support their religion. One missionary decided to test what they could do, so he asked one of them for a demonstration of his power. The magician asked the missionary if he had a rupee. The latter produced one from his pocket, showed it and was asked to hold it tightly in his hand. The juggler was seated on his carpet about six feet away from the missionary.

"Are you sure you have the coin?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

"Now, then, open your hand," said the juggler.

The missionary did so with great caution, but all his caution was in vain, for there leaped from his hand a small snake, which the juggler immediately seized, at the same time taking out of his bag the rupee which belonged to the missionary!—London Family Herald.

Dreadful Dressing.

"To speak moderately, I truly confesse, it is beyond the ken of my understanding to conceive, how those women should have any true grace, or valuable vertue, that have so little wit, as to disfigure themselves with such exotick garbes, as not only dismantles their native lovely lustre, but transclouts them into gant bar geese, ill shapen—shotten—shell fish. Egyptian Hyeroglyphicks, or at least into French flurts of the pastry, which a proper English woman should scorne with her heels; it is no marvell they wear drailes on the hinder part of their heads, having nothing as it seems in the fore part but a few Squirrils brains to help them frisk from ill favor'd fashion to another."

The modern way of dressing is dreadful, isn't it? So it was in 1645 when Nathaniel Ward, in "The Simple Cobler," wrote the paragraph quoted. —F. P. A. in New York Tribune.

A Nice Discrimination.

The subtleties of the Paris furniture dealers, to whom American millionaires flie for ancient patterns, were illustrated in a case before a civil court. In this case the plaintiff was a Frenchman, M. Balbo, who at a sale bought for $100 a mahogany desk which was described to him as an "empire" desk. It proved, however, to be of modern make, and M. Balbo sued the seller for giving a false trade description. The defense was illuminating. It was set out that there are three ways of describing such furniture: "Empire style" means modern furniture imitated from old models; "empire furniture" indicates there is a doubt as to its origin, and "empire epoque" is the only guaranty for authentic furniture of the empire period.—Indianapolis News.

Easy Borrowing Terms.

In the course of a lecture on "Government Finances and Social Life In Japan" before the Japan society in London, Kengo Mori, financial commissioner and attache for the imperial Japanese government, said that in the olden days gentlemen tried to keep aloof from all money transactions. Of course there were borrowers and lenders then, as there are today, and even among the Samurai class. But their agreements, if written at all, were always worded in a manner characteristic of the spirit of the times. One such agreement ran: "Dear Sir—I hereby confirm that I borrowed from you the above mentioned sum of money. Should I not repay the sum you are entitled to laugh at me in public."

Living Fish Net.

A peculiar method of fishing is employed by the natives of certain islands of Oceania. At stated intervals about 200 of them will assemble on the beach and all together plunge into the water, each carrying a branch of the cocoa palm. At a given distance from the shore they will turn toward it and form a compact half circle, each holding his palm branch perpendicularly in the water, thus forming a kind of seine. The leader of the party gives a signal, and this living net approaches the shore gradually, in perfect order, driving before it a multitude of fishes. Surrounded by this living wall and caught in the cocoa palm blanches, many fish are cast on the sands, and others are killed with sticks.

The Great Lesson.

"Agatha, love, do you mean to tell me that such a little hat as that cost $27.50?"

"Geoffrey, dear, before you have been a husband many years you will learn the great lesson that the dimensions of a hat afford no criterion for judging the size of the bill."—Chicago Tribune.

Nicely Translated.

A quaint translation is that by the young Japanese who wished to turn into his mother tongue the English proverb, "Out of sight, out of mind." He evolved a translation which, being construed back into English, read, "The invisible is insane."

Nero and Zero.

Willie—Pop, what's the difference between Nero and zero. Father—Nero had a hot time and zero a cold time. Now, run on to bed.—Florida Times-Union.

A Smile.

"Can you tell me what a smile is?" asked a gentleman of a little girl.

"Yes, sir. It's the whisper of a laugh."

Don't Tempt Them.

"There are two things," remarked the man on the car, "we should never tempt—fate and a mule." — Toledo Blade.

NO COMPROMISE

Bay State Progressives Intend to Put Up an Active Fight

Boston, May 14.—Plenty of evidence that the Progressives of this state are preparing to wage another strenuous fight at the coming state election, and that Charles S. Bird will again be a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination of his party this fall, was furnished at a "powwow" of about 300 of the "Bull Moosers" which was held here last night.

The session was one to consider ways and means to carry on the battle of the Progressives in the coming fall.

Several of the speakers scored the talk of amalgamation with Republicans and this resolution was passed:

"The Progressive party of Massachusetts enters upon the campaign of 1914 pledged unalterably to the principles which have been our faith and inspiration for two years of remarkable growth.

"The battle for human rights will this year, as in the past and always, be waged without compromise, scornful of political combination and with an unswerving devotion to a cause which must triumph in the end."

HOTEL MANAGER GONE

Police Say Audit of Books Shows They Were Falsified

Worcester, Mass., May 14.—Search is being made for George C. Jenner, 62, manager of Hotel Standish, who has been missing for two weeks. H. M. Prentice, owner of the hotel, says Jenner left a note when he departed, stating that he had misused money of the hotel.

Investigation of the books by an auditing company shows, the police say, that they have been falsified, the alleged falsifications covering a period of nearly two years, or practically Jenner's entire term as manager. He was previously a clerk at the hotel.

WAKEFIELD GIVES UP ELECTRIC PLANT

Costs Town More to Manufacture Light Than to Buy It

Wakefield, Mass., May 14.—Wakefield has gone out of business, so far as the manufacture of electricity is concerned. The municipal light board announced that it had signed a contract with an electrict light company to supply the town with electricity and the operation of the local plant will be stopped.

The price is 2.68 cents a kilowatt on the basis of 420,000 kilowatts a year, making the yearly cost $11,284.45. Proportionate reduction will be made as consumption increases.

This price will save the town several thousand dollars a year, as the average cost by local manufacture has been 5.25 cents a kilowatt. The town will continue its gas works.

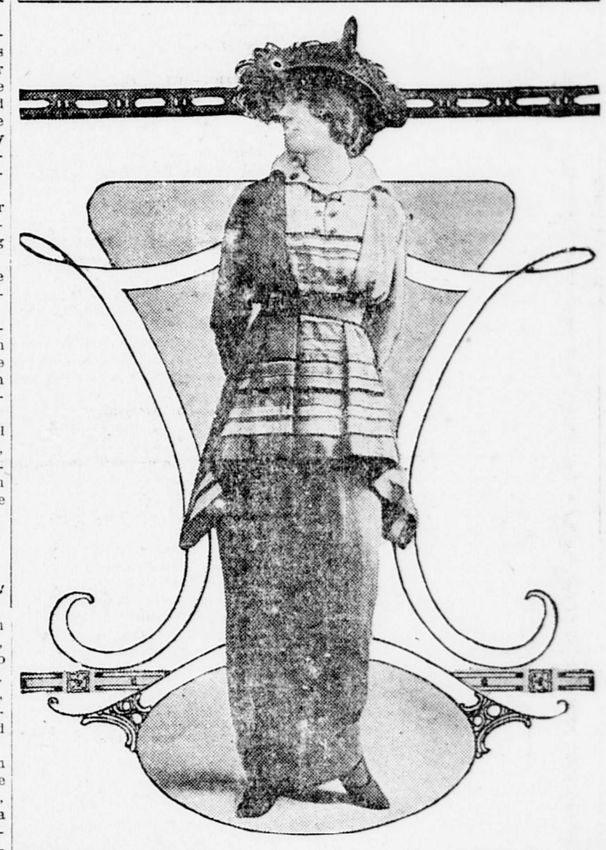
SIX MONTHS FOR LEADERS

Disturbers In Rockefeller Church Are Sent to Workhouse

New York, May 14.—Bouck White, author and socialist preacher, was sentenced to six months in the workhouse for having disturbed the services at Cavalry Baptist church on Sunday last. John D. Rockefeller and his son are members of this church, and White had entered the edifice with some followers to protest against the Colorado mine war.

Milo Woolman, who calls himself a writer, ad who accompanied White, also received six months' sentence. Manuel Lopez was given ten days. Seven others in the party were released on probation.

Novelty for Spring Outdoor Wear



SERGE with a wide wale or a heavy whipcord or any of the fancy corded weaves in fabrics used in making a gown like that shown here will develop a costume as chic as any the season has offered, although in a design so simple that it is distinguished. By comparison with the flounced or, more properly, tiered skirts, and the much fussed up but pretty jackets which the present mode parades in endless variety, this dress is uncompromisingly simple. Yet it follows the mode and will be singled out as one of the most attractive exponents of it.

The same style is pretty in taffeta silk, in satin and in plain cloths. But the last do not prove so easy to hang in the lines pictured in this illustration. There must be a certain degree of stiffness in the weave for the best results.

This gown, like all the other successful ones, hangs upon the figure in the easiest manner. The skirt is narrowed at the bottom by gathering the body into a wide band at the lower edge. The band, in this case, is of the same material as the rest of the skirt, although with a sparing use of the striped trimming elsewhere it might be made of the stripe, with fine effect.

The plain blouse, open at the front, has a fairly long skirt of the fabric of the gown. It terminates in a wide border of Roman striped ribbon with a panel let in at the front which extends up on the bodice to the bust line. There is a vest of white net and flaring collar which turns back from the neck all around. It is supported with fine wires that hold it in shape, and finished with a narrow binding of ribbon.

The overskirt is shaped to lengthen at the sides and back and is turned up across the back, showing the reverse side of the striped border across half its width. The sleeves are long with the upper part wide at the arm's eye and gradually narrowing to the elbow. Below this they are narrowed to the arm with no room to spare.

Altogether this gown and hat may be classed among those that possess distinction. Black colonial pumps and black silk hose clothe the feet.

Fault of the Dictionary.

A business concern, after running its own trade organ for some time, decided that it must have a printing department under its own supervision, because it found that "the ordinary printing office is not properly equipped to get out large quantities of special matter on short notice in an up to date manner and at an 'equanomical' cost." Soon after one partner turned to the other and inquired, "Do you spell 'e-q-u-e' or 'e-q-u-i' in 'equinomical?'" "I am not sure," said the other. "Look in the dictionary." After searching the first said with pained surprise, "'Tain't here." The second came to help him but had no better success. Then they stared at each other in astonishment till one exclaimed, "Well, what do you think of a man that would get up a big dictionary like that and not put in such a common word as 'equinomical?'"—Argonaut.

IS QUINCY SATISFIED?

The Evidence Is Convincing. The Testimony Open to Investigation.

Before a statement can be accepted here, it must be supported by local testimony—by the evidence of someone residing in Quincy. Statements from unknown people in remote places may be true, but we cannot prove them. Here is a statement by a Quincy resident:

C. P. Russell, 27 Washington Street, Quincy, Mass., says: "My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I also suffered from pains in my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, and the first box relieved me. I intend to continue taking this medicine."

"When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name." Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Russell had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Vera Cruz, May 14.—General Funston need fear no trouble along his outer lines if a letter sent into the city by General Navarrete, in command of the advanced position of the Mexicans, is a true indication of the Mexicans' attitude.

Navarrete addressed the editor of a local newspaper regarding the reported movement by his forces against Vera Cruz.

"I beg that you deny this news," said Navarrete, "since, in accordance with orders which we have received, all offensive movements have been stopped while the armistice lasts."

The Americans are informed regarding the positions of the Mexicans in the vicinity of their outposts and know reasonably well their strength. So weak are they at present that the staff has felt no uneasiness regarding the outcome of any aggression. But they have feared somewhat the complication which might follow the harassing of their lines by small bodies of troops.

Navarrete's assurances, although not reaching the American headquarters in official form, have served to convince Funston there is no intention to precipitate trouble at this quarter.

There does exist, however, a vague apprehension of important developments at the capital. This is not traceable to any specific information and in no quarter could there be found any tangible evidence on which to base this theory. Staff officers and many away from headquarters, however, appear convinced that General Huerta must face a crisis within a few days.

It appears improbable that the rebels will be in a position to attack the capital for many days and perhaps weeks, but there is a growing feeling of unrest among the residents, and a few high officers in the army now stationed at Mexico City are said to have been manifesting signs of unwillingness to continue supporting a man whom they regard as already defeated and in whose policy they do not fully agree.

Stories that Huerta is strengthening the city against attack continue to arrive. He has withdrawn to the capital more men of his army, taking troops, it is said, even from the districts between the capital and Vera Cruz.

The Mexican outposts, while mostly of a detached character, are almost in sight of the American lines, but it is reasonably certain the total number of Mexican troops within striking distance is less than 3000 men.

The captain of the Turret Hill was picked up by another steamer after he had clung for several hours to a life buoy. The remainder of the crew, numbering twelve, were drowned.

MAN'S BODY REBUILT

Remarkable Surgical Feat Performed In Montreal Hospital

Montreal, May 14.—Last July Alcide Bisson, a miner, sustained severe injuries while drilling in the asbestos mines near Danville, Que. A ton or more of rock fell on him, causing frightful injuries to the lower part of his body. The pelvis bones were crushed, and internal organs affected.

His employers brought Bisson to the Montreal general hospital and the surgeons set to work to save the man's life. Five distinct operations were necessary in order to complete the work of repair.

The pelvic bones were set up in place again. The internal organs were patched and in one instance almost completely renewed. Even a vein was taken out of the man's leg to replace one of the intestinal tubes.

Bisson has just been discharged from the hospital, completely cured. He is still somewhat weak, but he is able to walk about freely and is looking well. He is 35 years old, married, with two children.

REALIZED BY ALL POLITICAL PARTIES

Suffrage Question Beyond Academic Stage, Says Dr. Shaw

Rome, May 14.—Rev. Dr. Anna H. Shaw, president of the National American Woman's Suffrage association, delivered an address on woman suffrage at the fourth public meeting under the auspices of the International Council of Women.

She said the first duty of patriotic woman was to bring the practical life of governments into harmony with the fundamental principle of justice, which demands equal privileges and equal opportunities for all, regardless of sex.

During the past five years, she said, woman suffrage has grown from an academic to a practical question and all political parties had realized it was one with which governments must speedily deal. She declared the growth of the suffrage movement had been proved in several ways.

Money In a Melting Mood.

The Spanish owner of a Mexican ranch in the days of President Diaz conducted a soap factory, this being common among the big ranchers, who in this way use the waste product of the cattle and sheep business. He ran a general store and paid his men in soap, which could be turned in at the store for the necessaries of life. The soap was soft, and it melted or wasted away so that its purchasing price was much decreased when it was weighed in at the store against other commodities. The ignorant peons had heard vaguely of Diaz, and eventually they mounted their horses and rode 500 miles to the City of Mexico. A house servant would have turned them away, it is related, save that the president happened to see them through a window. He ordered them admitted and heard the story in great wrath. His verdict against the oppressor was that all back wages, irrespective of the soap currency, should be paid them and other reforms instituted on penalty of confiscation of the ranch.—New York Times.

Mahogany Trees.

True mahogany is distinctly a native of tropical America, but occasionally small specimens have been found in southern Florida, and similar trees never reaching the height of the American relative, have been found in India. Mahogany has been planted in southern Florida, southern California and Mexico, but only as an ornamental tree, for it is of such slow growth and requires for full maturity such natural surroundings that for commercial purposes it would be impossible of cultivation. It is a giant among even the giants of a tropical forest. It towers sometimes to a height of 100 feet. The trunk is often fifty feet in length and twelve feet in diameter, and it divides into huge arms and throws its shade over a vast extent of surface. The precise period of growth is not accurately known, but when large it changes little during the life of man, the time of its arrival at maturity being estimated at 200 years.—Houston Post.

APARTMENTS NOW READY FOR INSPECTION

WHEN HE HUSTLED.

She stood by the window watching the retreating figure of the young man, too much absorbed to notice the entrance of her father until he was by her side. Without speaking she leaned her arm upon his shoulder and thus they watched until the young man was no longer in sight. Then her father spoke:

"It won't do, Elsie. You've got to tell him I said so. He isn't the one."

The hand which had been caressing his hair was thrown out with indignant protest and the girl faced him, pained surprise in every curve of the dainty lips.

"What's wrong, father?" she demanded. "Why haven't you said that before?

The gray eyes gazing into her own held far more kindness than his words. They were full of stern decision.

"Because I haven't been sure. Now I am. Fred Denton can never support a wife. He isn't able to now, and he never will be. You've got to call it off."

"But, father," she began.

"It's no use, Elsie," he interrupted. "It isn't in him. A young man to succeed nowadays must get out and hustle, and that's something Fred Denton will never do. He spends his time in his office reading, reading, reading, and that never brought patients to a doctor yet."

"Why, the other night there was an accident at Cedar Glens. Kensett was mixed up in it. Had a drunken chauffeur, and the whole car came precious near going over the cliff. Would have gone if it hadn't been for a young man who understood splinting and who saved it in the nick of time.

"As it was, Kensett got off with a broken collar bone, a friend of his came home with a smashed hand, and—well, you read it in the papers. That sawbones is fixed for life just because he happened to be on the spot and knew what to do and how to do it. But it wasn't Denton. He was in his office reading up on the microbes of leprosy or some other outlandish disease."

"Fred was just telling me," began Elsie when her father cut her short.

"Then, too, he had a little money in one of the banks. Where's that? He wasn't content to let it stay where it was. He asked me what I thought about Aurora stocks, and I told him they weren't worth the matches to burn 'em, but he invested in them. Where are they now? Whew! Now you see 'em and now you don't.

"Father, if you would only listen—"

"Listen to what—the same old story of love in a flat and your $500 a year? I've got a deal on hand and won't be home before tomorrow night. In the meantime you just give me that ring on your finger and I'll return it to Fred Denton, M. D."

Slowly his daughter drew off the ring, a curious expression growing in her eyes, one which her father was quick to observe.

"See here, Elsie," he said as he took it from her. "I want you to promise that if he calls you won't see him until I give you permission—that is, if I ever do."

"You are very unjust, father. If you would only listen—"

"I've waited too long already," he responded, starting off. "Mind your promise, Elsie. There isn't to be any more of this nonsense."

"Perhaps there'll be more instead of less," she murmured as the door closed behind him. Then she went up the stairs to her room with a tread as full of decision as his tones had been.

It didn't take long for her to reappear dressed for the street, and fifteen minutes later she surprised a certain young man who was very busily engaged doing nothing at all in a pleasantly furnished office of a downtown business block.

"He wouldn't give me a chance to say a single word," she concluded indignantly.

"We won't try to explain," he said. "Suppose you take this trip to New York with me this morning? You look very bride-y," he continued—"white dress, white hat, white shoes and gloves. Really, Elsie, one would almost believe that you had dressed purposely for a wedding trip."

"Fred Denton, you don't believe—" she paused, crimson to the very ears. Then she added irrelevantly:

"Father ran away with mother: I've heard him tell about it time and time again."

"Come on!" Denton cried.

"It doesn't seem right, Fred. Father has always been the kindest, the best father in existence, and he is doing this just because he loves me."

"That's just the reason why we're doing what we are," was his ready response. "Come, dear: we haven't a moment to lose. You go to the Wilson avenue station and take the train from there, while I trolley it to Woodlawn and get on board at that place. Then no one will see us together until after we leave the city, and we are all O. K."

At Woodlawn station she saw Fred Denton swing himself upon the platform of the smoker, but the city streets were far behind them, and the train was speeding fast through the country meadows before he joined her. When he did he held in his hand a little circlet of gold whose center held a very familiar diamond. Slipping into the seat beside her he said:

"Better put this upon your finger. It's been away from its place too long already."

"Why, Fred," she gasped, "where did you get that?"

"Your father handed it to me a few moments ago."

"Father! Where is he? Where did you see him?"

"He's back there in the smoker," he replied nonchalantly. "He gave it to me just after the train left Woodlawn."

Her face went white.

"What did you say?"

"Nothing. I was passing through the car on my way to you when he hailed me and said in the pleasantest tones imaginable: 'Mr. Denton, I promised my daughter to give you this package. There isn't to be any answer.' I took it from him, with an 'All right,' and came on into the next car, sitting where I knew he could see me from his seat. Then I waited awhile and hunted you up."

"He told me this morning he was going away for a couple of days." Tears were very near her eyes. "Oh, Fred, if he should see us and try to make a scene! What will we do?"

"See here, little girl," said Denton tenderly, "you've got your engagement ring back again, haven't you? Now, in the course of three or four hours I intend to supplement that with a plain gold band. Don't you worry. Aurora stocks may have gone up in hot air, but I didn't. Your father wants you to marry a hustler. Now, you just watch me deliver the goods when he calls for them."

"First call for dinner! First call for dinner!" cried the porter on his way to the smoker.

"Shall we go now," Denton asked "or do you prefer waiting a little?"

"Father always likes an early dinner," she answered, "and he'll be sure to pass through here very soon. There won't be so many in the dining car. Let's go now."

They found a vacant table in the far end of the dining car and seated themselves there. Scarcely had their order been served when Kingston entered. Elsie, raising her eyes, saw him standing in the aisle, and she gave a little sigh, which made Denton look quickly around. A moment more and he was by their table.

"I will sit here," he said to the waiter. "Bring my plate to this table." When they were alone he spoke again, this time to his daughter.

"Is this the way you keep promises?"

"You did not ask me to promise not to meet Fred," she answered, "so just after you left I went to his office."

"Then what?" he asked.

"Then," said Fred, before Elsie could speak, "I asked Elsie to take this trip with me, and she consented."

Huh!" grunted Kingston. "A wedding trip, I presume."

"Hardly that," responded Denton, "as we are not married yet. We just expect to be when we reach New York."

"Then what?" The question was asked in a tone which made Elsie quiver.

"Nothing much," Denton answered coolly, "only Aurora stocks brought me in a neat $3000 more than I put into them, and yesterday I secured a position as house physician in the Woodlawn sanitarium, and that's good for $2000 a year."

"What's that?" asked Kingston sharply.

"You see, Kensett is one of the most influential men connected with that institution, and the little service I was fortunate enough to render the night that drunken chauffeur tried to kill him brought me the place. I've worked for it for three months, but that clinched it, sure."

"I thought that was a fellow by the name of Lent?" growled Kingston.

"That's what the papers said. I didn't care whether they called me Lent or Easter, so long as I got the place and Elsie with it."

Three hours later in the vestry of the Little Church Around the Corner the bride was given away by her father.—Abbie F. Ransom.

YARRINGTON'S PLOT

Thieving Cattle Rustler Checkmated by a Girl

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Ben Yarrington placed his thumbs on the edge of the table and rose to his tall height. His little brown eyes bored deeply into the frank upturned gaze of his stepdaughter, Sadie.

"Girl," said Ben slowly, his sandy mustache working grotesquely with every movement of his lean jaws; "girl, you can do as I say and give Mason the right about tonight or you can find another home!"

"Why?" uttered Sadie.

"Because—because I won't have him coming here friendly and mealy mouthed a-courtin' you when the coyote is changing brands on my cattle and adding to his own herd! That's why! It's war to the knife between Dick Mason and me, and if you don't give him the right about I will!"

Sadie laughed softly.

You can fight your own battles with Dick Mason," she said. "I shall not be your cat's paw in the matter! As for branding your cattle and stealing them for his own range, why, the man who is doing it is eating supper down in your own bunkhouse!"

"Name the man!" Yarrington taunted.

"Your foreman, Red Brady!"

"Thanks for the compliment, Miss Sadie!" broke in a bitter voice from the doorway. "I always knew you had a high opinion of yours truly!"

The girl and the man turned slowly and looked into the savage features of Red Brady. And a most unpleasant sight he presented at the moment, for his plain freckled face was distorted with rage and his wide mouth smiled evilly while his little red-brown eyes held a murderous flame.

"Listeners never hear good of themselves, Red," said Ben.

"I just happened along and I'm glad I heard what I did, Yarrington! It's bad enough to lose our critters to that mean skunk that calls himself Dick Mason without my getting blamed for it! What would I get out of it, hey?"

"You might satisfy your grudge against Mr. Mason," retorted Sadie.

"Grudge, hey?" Red Brady attempted a scornful laugh, but it ended flatly. "I ain't got any grudge against any man that lives on the square! But when a feller comes down into Fox county and calls himself a cattle raiser and does all his raisin' by rustlin' other folks' critters! We've lost seven strays this week, and I can swear that they're on Mason's range with his brand on 'em!"

"Perhaps you put them there yourself! In that case your information would be perfectly correct," was Sadie's spirited rejoinder.

Sadie Farnham flashed one long look, mingled with reproach, contempt

Up in her own little whitewashed chamber she paused for a moment with her slim brown hand pressed over her eyes. In that brief space of time she relived the years since her mother, a frail widow, with a ten-year-old daughter, had come into this genial climate to keep house for a brother, the owner of a large cattle ranch.

The brother had died, and his property had fallen to Mrs. Farnham, and Mrs. Farnham's lonesome heart had fallen captive to the handsome, bluff personality of Ben Yarrington. After they were married the two ranches were consolidated, and then, somehow, Sadie's mother had lost title to it, and Yarrington owned it all.

"There is only one thing to do," said Sadie, taking her hands down and facing the difficulty. "I'll pack my things to Sulphur Springs, and I'll get a job at doing housework or something until I know just how to set out to earn my living."

Sadie worked busily all the evening. She heard a number of men ride into the yard and heard her stepfather's voice and knew that they had all gone away together. She drew a long breath of relief.

"That will make it easier," she murmured.

The moon was high in the heavens when she completed her work. Three great trunks and several bundles were the results of her labors, and she was almost asleep from fatigue, but she brought her mother's favorite chair and added it to the pile.

Half an hour later she was riding out of the yard on her own cream colored horse, while Ching Loo, the cook, was driving one of the big wagons on which her goods were loaded.

"Ching, we shall meet some of the men coming back," said Sadie dubiously.

"Ah, no, missee," cackled the Chinese. "Me dlive like Ole Nick, you-call-um, all alound by Debble creek—no can find—no can meet—no wolly!"

"You are so kind, Ching Loo," sobbed the weary girl. "I shall try not to worry, only I am too tired to have any trouble tonight."

"No tlouble," assured the confident oriental, and, lashing the lean sorrels into a mad gallop, he turned the wagon into the back trail around by Devil's creek and left Sadie to ride on alone to the town.

If she could only see Dick Mason! But he was away at the county seat and would not return for another week.

As she passed the boundaries of Mason's ranch she heard the sound of hoarse voices in argument.

Was it possible that the men who had come for Yarrington that night had meditated a raid upon Mason's place in search of lost cattle? If that was so, with Red Brady in the plot, they would undoubtedly manufacture proof of Mason's dishonesty and thus empowered would run the young rancher out of the county for good.

With a sharp cry Sadie turned her horse down the line of wire fencing, and when she found a weak spot she put the gallant little mare over it and padded noiselessly across the range until she was behind the black bulk of Mason's bunkhouse.

Slipping from the saddle, she held a gun in each hand and crept quietly around the house, flattening her slim form against the boards, until she reached the deep shadow of a clump of mesquite. Now the scene opened before her like the setting of a stage for a western play.

Cowboys glided to and fro on noiseless feet, and, to Sadie's indignation and surprise, she saw that Mason's cow punchers were apparently on the most friendly terms with Ben Yarrington and his horde of bad men. Her sharp ears heard the gist of their talk. There was to be a hasty gathering of Mason's herds. A few undesirables were to be left behind, and the remainder were to be driven on to Yarrington's ranges and rebranded. There were half a dozen "greasers" among Yarrington's men, who were experts at this work. And, worst of all, Mason's men appeared to be hand in glove with the conspirators and had promised recklessly to swear away their employer's honor if the matter came into court.

Presently two horsemen came riding slowly by and circled to a standstill near her hiding place. She recognized them as two of Dick Mason's most trusted men.

"I'm afraid he didn't get my wire!" muttered Dol Vanness hurriedly. "He ought to be here by this time!"

"I've staved off them coyotes as long as possible," rejoined Joey Brown disconsolately. "They're jest yapping for to get their hosses behind the hull Mason outfit and send it kiuting over on to Yarrington's range. It's all I can do to keep our boys from wiping the hull passel of 'em out here and now!"

"I know it, but we just got to play with 'em till the boss gets here. I want to catch 'em with the goods on—that's enough! Rustle along, there, Joey. They'll suspect we ain't in with 'em!"

The two horsemen circled again and went back to join the others, while Sadie's valiant little heart sang for joy. Now she understood the situation. Mason's men were only pretending to conspire with Yarrington and his companions. In reality they had sent word to Dick Mason and were impatiently waiting his arrival before meting out justice to the cattle thieves.

The score of cowboys waiting impatiently for Yarrington's signal to make a dash for the cattle range were startled by the sudden appearance among them of Sadie Farnham's cream pony, with the girl falling helplessly over the silky mane of the sturdy little beast, and so cleverly and so quietly had Sadie come among them that Cream had reached the side of Dol Vanness' big gray before the startled men realied what had happened.

"What's happened to the gal?"

"It's your Sadie, Yarrington!"

And other voices took up the chorus of questioning as the girl slipped limply into the arms of Dol Vanness, who had leaped to catch her. As he shouldered her slim form she managed to whisper in his ear:

"It's a fake, Dol! Hold 'em here a little longer. Dick's coming!"

"She's badly off!" blurted out Dol excitedly. "Wait a minute, you fellows, till I bring her to. We can't go off and leave her. Yarrington, it's your darter, come here and pour a little of your whisky down her throat!"

Yarrington came forward reluctantly. "What do you mean butting in on my work, eh?" he hissed in Sadie's ear as the fiery liquor caused her to cough and splutter.

"You told—me—to—leave!" murmured Sadie faintly.

"Did you Yarrington?" demanded Dol fiercely. "Why, every man in Fox county believes that—that"— Dol stopped short. He, too, heard the distant sound of hoofs.

"Yah! Believes what?" demanded Yarrington fiercely.

"Beat it for the house when the gun play opens," hissed Dol in Sadie's ear as he lifted her to her feet and gave her a push toward the little white house among the trees.

"Now, Yarrington, what is it you want to know?" asked Dol, edging toward his horse. He was astride of it in an instant and with a gun in either hand was inviting Ben Yarrington to throw his own weapons on the ground and hold his hands high.

And at the same moment the whole yard seemed unexpectedly full of strange men and a little brilliant gunplay in the beginning was quickly over and every Yarrington man found that he had two men to face—one of Mason's outfit and the other, one of the posse which Dick had hastily gathered with the sheriff as he approached his ranch.

Sadie retreated to the vine wreathed porch and there Dick found her when the excitement was over.

"Dear," he whispered, kneeling beside her, his handsome face close to her own: "Dol has told me about it. Did Yarrington actually turn you out?"

In a few words his sweetheart had revealed the story to Dick Mason and his indignation was unrestrained. "The best way to settle that coyote is to make him give back your property!" he decided as they watched the discomfited band from Yarrington's ride away toward Sulphur Springs with the posse in command.

"Yes," said Sadie demurely. "And now, Dick, what about me?"

"Why, when I got Dol's message that Yarrington was making me trouble and that I was to get here before morning, I calculated that it would mean a bad break between you and that old coyote of a stepfather of yours. And so when I stopped for the sheriff I just dropped word with the sky pilot in Sulphur to happen along here at breakfast time and I'd have a job for him. I wondered what I'd do for a cook; mine lit out yesterday, the boys say. And here comes one, sure enough!" He pointed toward the open gate, through which Ching Loo was carefully guiding the lean sorrels, the big wagon rolled behind, heaped high with Sadie's belongings.

"You sure came to stay, sweetheart," smiled Dick as he went down to welcome the tired Celestial.

Sadie laughed happily as she stood in the sunshine and nodded greeting to Ching Loo, who was making bewildered explanations of his wanderings of the night.

"Go allee samee alound Debbil's creek. No can find trail to Sulpur. Velly tlied, so comee here. Missee allee same likee come here?" he asked dubiously.

"You did the proper thing, Ching!" assured Dick, slipping a large gold coin into Ching's hand. "Miss Sadie stay here now, all time; and you too. Can cook?"

Ching nodded delightedly.

"Can cook."

"Can cook wedding breakfast?" persisted Dick.

"Can cook—anytling!" cried Ching ardently.

"Then hop into the kitchen and get up the best wedding breakfast you know how. Chop, chop! Sabe? Miss Sadie marry me this morning. She's going to put on her wedding dress now. That's right, Ching; put the trunks in the house."

Couldn't Remember His Star.

As illustrative of the fits of abstraction to which some men are subject in an extraordinary degree, Sir Henry Irving was fond of relating a story of his former manager, Charles Dillon. Some years after "The Bells" had made Irving famous he chanced to meet Dillon and was outspoken in his delight.

Dillon looked him over, finally remarking that he had no recollection of him. Irving reminded him of the tour they had made together and mentioner his name. Dillon thought for awhile, and, recognition appearing to dawn upon him, he extended his hand. "Irving? Oh, yes. I remember the name," he declared reminiscently. "And what are you doing now, Irving?"

WHEELER BROS SHOW COMING

All the contracts necessary for the innumerable details of the exhibition of a large circus institution have been made for the early appearance in this city of the Wheeler Bros. Circus & the Famous Stampede Wild West. This is one of the world's largest amusement enterprises, and because of its peculiar combination it is probably the most interesting.

It is advertised by the management that it is without a peer in point of performance, and it would seem as if this boast is justified in a combination which includes two such shows. The Wheeler Bros. has for years been conceded a place in the front rank of circuses, and in many points it has been given first place. It could not be excelled for its horses, the quality and completeness of its equipment or the attention given to the numerous details which are essential for the production of a performance.

When the combination of the Wheeler Bros. Circus & Famous Stampede Wild West was accomplished, the amusement world was not surprised, as the combination had been predicted. The deal was a fortunate one for amusement patrons, inasmuch as they are now able to see the two shows for the prices formerly charged for one. To enable the performances of the two exhibitions to be given simultaneously and without cutting out a single act of either, has been a great herculean task, but it has been accomplished, and the result will be seen when the Wheeler Bros. Circus & Famous Stampede Wild West Shows appear in Quincy on Wednesday, May 20.

MASSACHUSETTS STONE.

Quincy manufacturers read with interest the endorsement given Massachusetts granite at the State House. The committee in charge of the proposed extensions to the building unanimously reported a bill to require that the stone material necessary be procured within the Commonwealth.

How Hammer of Death Struck James.

The old parish church of Plumstead is probably at least 1,000 years old The picturesque churchyard, a cherished haunt of the poet Bloomfield during his visits to Shooters Hill, contains a delightfully choice "derangement of epitaphs." One of these, on "Master James Darling, aged 10," teaches a lesson of moderation during the cherry season to the youth of other places besides Plumstead. Speaking from his tombstone, Master Darling exclaims:

The hammer of death was give to me
For eating the cherries off the tree.

Repartee.

Magistrate (to offending motorist)—You are fined 40 shillings. Motorist—All right, old man. You must take it out of a fiver. Magistrate—You are now fined £5. Anything more to say? Motorist—By Jove, sir, no! You're too quick at repartee.—London Sketch.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY
WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

SURGERY TAMES WILD MAN SLAYER

Brain Operation Gives Vicious Brute New Character.

DISPOSITION NOW THE BEST

Described as a Human Being of the Lowest Order When Put In Prison, Undergoes Magic Transformation and May Get Pardon—Blow Held Responsible For Condition.

At the direction of the New Jersey court of pardons a full investigation is being made into the strange case of Jonas Szikely, confined in the state prison at Trenton, and as a result it is possible that at the next term of court the man may receive a pardon. The account of the operation on Szikely's brain a few months ago caused a sensation in the medical world. The story is best told in the official report:

"The case of Jonas Szikely, who is serving a sentence of thirty years from Oct. 10, 1910, for murder, is one of extraordinary interest. It is reported to us that when he was brought to the state prison he seemed little more than a giant brute, with a savage, forbidding countenance, uncouth habits, grabbing his food, spilling it over himself while eating, and in general of about as low an order as it seemed possible for a human being to be.

Blow on Head Caused Injury.

"He had received a terrible blow on the back of his head near the top, which had been inflicted, as the prison authorities understood, in the struggle during which the murder was committed.

"During nearly three years after being received at the prison he was kept under close guard, and, while he seemed never to have exhibited any disposition to injure any one, he looked and acted like such a typical brute that the authorities never felt disposed to take chances with him. During all of this time the prisoner would frequently and suddenly cry out, although he gave no other indications of having any localized pain.

"About six or eight months ago the visiting physician, Dr. Martin W. Reddan, decided to operate by removing part of the skull to see if there had been a splinter of bone driven in at the time he received the blow on the head so that it pressed upon the brain. The operation was performed, the splinter of bone was found and removed, thus relieving the pressure, and as the patient was coming out of ether the attendants were astounded to hear him utter fragments of the English language, which, since he had come to prison, no one had ever heard him speak, and upon his entirely coming out from the influence of ether and recovering the surgeon and all the prison authorties were wonderfully surprised to find that, instead of the brute features and expression of before the operation, the man now exhibited a bright, kindly, humane countenance, quite intelligent, and has since shown one of the kindest dispositions to be found anywhere.

Ignorant of Subsequent Events.

"He is constantly helping everybody, doing little things for the other prisoners' comfort and working with perfect obedience and cheerfulness, so that everybody, prisoners and authorities alike, have become particularly fond of him.

"He has no recollection of anything which has happened since he had the impression, as he was going home from his work, that he was being 'held up' until he came out of the ether after the operation.

"He knows nothing of his trial, nothing of the struggle at the time the murder was committed, never heard the name of the man who was killed, does not know how many men took part in the struggle nor anything about the events of his arrest, trial, conviction and incarceration.

"From the representations made by the surgeon and by the prison authorities, your committee think it was quite possible that this man may, by the blow received at the time the struggle commenced wherein a man was killed, have been at once transformed from a conscious, responsible human being into the irresponsible condition under which he has existed up to the time of the operation and that while in that condition may have killed a man and been tried and convicted without any one realizing his mental irresponsibility. If this is so, of course, no murder was committed, and now that the man has been restored to himself he should receive a full pardon."

A School For Storekeepers.

A "school for storekeepers," consisting of a three day course of lectures and demonstrations, has been opened at the University of Kansas, with several hundred country merchants from all parts of the state in attendance. The course was arranged by Professor D. C. Croissant to give the small town and country storekeepers new ideas in business, advertising and store management.

Congress Adds to National Forest.

Nearly 17,000 acres have been added by congress to the Caribou national forest, Idaho. This is one of the first of such additions through congressional action and is the largest so far made by direct legislation.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Quincy Lodge No. 261 N. E. O. P. is to have a children's party Friday evening.

H. Everett Crane is confined to his home with tonsilitis, which seems to be quite prevalent about the city at the present time.

Mrs. Agnes G. Fletcher was on Wednesday re-elected grand chaplain of the Grand lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor.

The two plays to be presented by the Thalia club at High school hall on Friday evening are sure to be of interest. High school boys and girls are in the casts.

In the Grammar school league Tuesday the Massachusetts Field defeated the Gridley Bryant 7 to 3, and Washington won from Cranch 4 to 3 in five innings.

The base ball game between Quincy and Hingham High school has been postponed indefinitely. The next game will be with Revere High at Revere, on Friday.

The sun after a two days visit to some other quarter of the globe made its appearance again this morning and was most welcome. It is hoped that now it has appeared again it will remain pleasant for a time.

A twelve room house, stable and 10,000 feet of land situated on the corner of Newport avenue and Elmwood avenue, Wollaston, will be sold at auction Saturday at 3 o'clock by Auctioneer Charles H. Johnson.

The Y. M. C. A. has the reputation for putting on good shows and many are looking forward to the minstrel show which is to be given under its auspices in Music hall next week Wednesday. The members are to be assisted by a coterie of popular young ladies who contribute much to the novelty of the program.

The Loyal Temperance Legion met in Wollaston school hall at nine o'clock Monday morning, the president, Stewart Dimmick presiding. Mrs. Ada F. Frisbee, state organizer, held the children's attention by telling them stories in her usual pleasing manner.

Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., was pleased to welcome back to membership one of its charter members on Tuesday evening. When George W. Cummings moved away he resigned his membership, but although located at South Boston he still has an attachment for Mt. Wollaston.

Only one day in May since 1896 had lower noon temperature ten Wednesday and that was 41 degrees on May 11, 1907. In several years none of the days in May had noon temperature below 50. This was true in 1913 and 1911 and 48 was the record in 1912.

The annual opening night of the Squantum yacht club will be held at the clubhouse, Wollaston beach, Saturday evening. The affair will open with a banquet at 7 o'clock which will be followed by an entertainment. A pleasant evening is assured the members.

Commissioner Brown says that if he can only have a few days of good weather he will be able to oil all the streets named in the street watering schedule. As the weather has been for the past month he has only been able to do street oiling more than one or two days a week and then under unfavorable conditions.

The many friends of Miss Angela C. McCarthy of Chestnut street anticipate great pleasure in hearing her sing in "The Messiah" at Foggs Opera house, South Weymouth, Sunday evening. The oratorio is given under the auspices of the Weymouth Choral Society, the principals being Frederic Kennedy, tenor; Oscar L. Huntting, bass; Mlle. Wilhelmina Calvert, soprano; Miss Angela McCarthy alto.

BUSY SEASON IN GRANITE YARDS

All Contractors Are Hustling to Get Out Memorial Day Orders

Pneumatic Tools and Electric Motors Much in Use

Business in the granite district is humming at the present time, and every manufacturer in the city has all the work he can handle. The new year started in rather quiet in this industry for a time it looked as though the tariff had played havoc with the New England trade. It is probable, however, that the extreme winter weather in January and February had more to do with the dullness than anything else. Starting in early in April business began to pick up. New orders began to be received and since that time the manufacturers have had all they could attend to.

Most of the memorials now being cut in Quincy are of the medium size variety, and call for immediate delivery in order that they may be set before Memorial day. The granite men are very anxious that no customer who desires his memorial for the national Memorial day should be disappointed, so that every available cutter has been employed. Now and then one runs across a man who says that the business has gone to the dogs, and that he is unable to find employment, but the fact is that no first class workman is without work. With the present scale of wages, manufacturers as a rule will not hire a cutter unless he is a first class man, although at times when he is particularly rushed he will put on some men who are not what are called high skilled men.

The reason is very readily understood, and that is that the scale of prices in the agreement between the manufacturer and cutters does not make any distinction between the prices for a first class cutter and one that is not. There is a provision, however, in the agreement that makes it possible for some of the less skilled men to obtain work by the day at a compensation, they are capable of earning. As a general thing the

BOY'S BODY RECOVERED

Police Successful in Dragging Fallon Quarry

The body of William Keefe who was drowned in the abandoned Fallon quarry Thursday, was recovered by the police that afternoon at 3.15, three hours after he fell into the waters. The only witness to the drowning was a little Finn boy who ran screaming to a shed near by. Men employed there, ran to the bank but there were no signs of the Keefe boy. A little bundle of clothes on the rocks was all that was left to tell the story. They notified police headquarters and under the direction of Chief Burrell a squad of officers successfully dragged the waters.

FINES FOR AUTOISTS

It was automobile day at the district court this morning, and quite a number of drivers were before the court. With the exception of two cases they were arraigned for speeding. The two exceptions were for violation of the rules by using an excluded road and using a merchandise vehicle on a pleasure drive. The cases were as follows:

Curtis F. Wing of Wollaston was fined $10; Russel S. Fenn of Brookline $20; George R. Clifford of Dorchester $10; Joel M. Hunter of Boston $10; Harry P. Brigham of Brookline $15; Theodore Dahlberg of Newton $20; and Max Shanrio of Boston $20; for exceeding the speed limit. Alex Craig was fined $5 costs for using an excluded road. William G. Crookshank of Milton who was arraigned several days ago for using a merchandise vehicle on a pleasure drive was found not guilty and discharged.

LUNCHEON AT WOLLASTON.

Supt. Albert L. Barbour, Principal Wood and Mrs. Wood, School Committeeman Joseph H. McPherson and Miss Ethel Vogler the master's assistant, were the guests of the industrial classes of the Willard school at a luncheon served at noon Thursday. The menu included three courses and consisted of corn soup and crackers, steak and mashed potatoes, asparagus on toast, tomato salad, cheese crackers, strawberry shortcake and coffee. The food was prepared by the members of the class under the direction of Miss Helena Dempsey, their teacher, who presided. The general sentiment that prevailed after the dinner was that the city was justified in teaching industrial subjects, and that further invitations to similar affairs would be immediately accepted.

ADAMS STREET TRANSFER

Perley E. Barbour Buys the Drake Estate

Ricker's Real Estate Agency reports today the sale of the Adams street estate of Herbert T. Drake to Perley E. Barbour of Braintree.

Mr. Barbour is a Brockton manufacturer associated with his brother John A. Barbour of Brookline, doing a large business in leather welting. Mrs. Barbour is a former Quincy resident, a daughter of John R. Graham of Bangor, Maine, and her friends here are much pleased that she has decided to make Quincy her future home, especially as she is leaving a beautiful home in Braintree.

This is one of the most important real estate sales for some time and shows a boom in Quincy real estate.

CITY HALL NOTES.

The City Council Committee on Public Buildings paid a visit to Houghs Neck late Thursday afternoon and looked over the school building for which a four-room addition is wanted. A number of the Houghs Neck Associates were present and the committee were informed of some of the wants of the district, particularly in relation to a public playground which they have petitioned for. Later in the evening the committee held a meeting at City Hall.

The three expressmen whose permits were refused by the Mayor, but later passed over the objection of the Mayor, will probably know definitely Saturday where they are at. When the orders were filed with the City Clerk after being passed over the veto, the City Clerk rightly refused to issue the permits until he had received an opinion from the City Solicitor. Such an opinion was requested from the City Solicitor, but has not been received as yet. However this morning the City Clerk was informed by the City Solicitor that he would render his opinion in writing Saturday morning, and any further action by the City Clerk will be governed by that ruling.

CARD OF THANKS.

The Associated Charities of Quincy wish to thank those teachers of the Association who as actors and coach so willingly contributed their services for the benefit of the Associated Charities. We regret the handicap of small stage and inadequate scenery, which however was more troublesome to them than to the appreciative audience. We thank the musicians under the able leadership of Dr. Merrill who gave so much added pleasure to the performance—also those who contributed candy and the ushers. We are grateful to W. G. Shaw for furniture and use of truck for moving stage properties. Especially do we thank the public who braved the elements in support of the cause. We feel that a considerable sum of money will be added to the treasury so much needed at this time.

ETTOR SPEAKS IN CITY SQUARE

Attracts a Crowd But Many Take Exceptions to His Comments

Connolly's Reference to Hagerty Also Resented

Joseph A. Ettor and Thomas G. Connolly, the notorious I. W. W. leaders, were threatened, hissed and jeered while speaking in City Square Thursday evening, and it looked for the minute as though trouble would ensue in the crowd of 600 men, women and children.

The difficulties commenced when Connolly spoke of the first-page stories of Daniel A. Hagerty's heroism. Connolly said Hagerty was an economic failure, and that he went into the service to get food for his stomach, as did every other man in the army and navy.

Grumblings of disapproval were heard on the outside of the crowd the minute the remarks were made. As Connolly continued, "Let Hagerty alone" was shouted in a voice as strong as Connolly's and filled with emotion, and others called out "He's a liar." Connolly brought his speech quickly to a close, and quiet was soon restored.

When Ettor arose to speak, he roundly scored the people who made the outcries, and said they were corporation hoodlums. He said a permit was secured for the purpose of holding a peaceful meeting and he wanted unsympathetic people to move on. Whatever disturbance is created here tonight will be only that provoked by the capitalists through their stool pigeons, supported by the police. This is a meeting in which we will exercise the right of free speech and despite these jeers in whoever's interest they may be uttered.

Ettor then opened his discussion on the rights of labor, and as more jeers rent the air, he cried "keep quiet, go on about your business. This meeting is for an organization. If anyone is killed here tonight it cannot be said it was because of the workmen." (Groans.)

He then picked up his argument and when again interrupted he advised his listeners to "never mind those fellows. Just keep cool and I will take care of them," and his chest was expanded as he smiled a glorious smile. "There will be no riot in this meeting tonight." "Stay where you are," said he, pointing to several fidgety men standing just below him. It is a long way from them to you. They will stand and hiss, but that is as far as they will go. "Come back here," he cried, as one stepped from his place and worked his way out of the crowd, "come back and don't be frightened. I will take care of you."

His discussion of the strike at the Fore River shipyard, which he came to lead for the evening at any rate, was uninteresting in many respects, and if he had not been the Joe Ettor, that led the Lawrence trouble, it is doubtful if many would have remained.

He declared a man worked Tuesday and earned enough to buy food to give him strength to work Wednesday, and so on, and on Sunday the employer let him rest, so as to be stronger than ever on Monday." "Christ," he said, "made the world in six days and rested on the seventh. His work was finished, and it is not on record that he has gone to work since then.

EARLY MARRIAGES.

Vincent Astor, who married Miss Helen Huntington, a few days ago, is but 22 years of age. His bride is only 20. It is almost a boy and girl marriage. How it sounds like old fashioned life, or a chapter out of the Waverley novels!

To people whose future is assured, like the Astors, such a union at this early age involves no sacrifices and no heroisms. To the ordinary fellow and girl of 22 and 20, in city life at least, it means renting an apartment on some unfashionable or even sordid street. Many former social comradeships have to be given up. The bridegroom may have to drop his clubs, and the bride must be cleaning house while her former associates are playing bridge.

But the postponeemnt of marriage means that educated and cultivated people have small families, thus failing to contribute their share of well bred sons and daughters. More than that, the postponement develops a lazy regard for luxury, a tolerance of easy vices, and habits of extravagant spending, particularly in the case of men.

It is true that many young people have crude tastes at 22 and 20. The girl with the ready laugh and high spirits fascinates many boys. Later they learn that her vivacity was largely assumed for a purpose, and that underneath the surface there may lie a sharp tongue.

But this is more than offset by the fact that at the early age young people have more generous and democratic ideals. They are apt to mate up on the basis of natural affinity of tastes. Later they become colder and more calculating and marry for dollars. This is the cause of an infinite number of shipwrecks.

There is too little of the pioneer spirit, too little willingness to take chances, endure hardships, for the sake of love and a home. Plain living during early married life develops many fine traits of character. Social economists seem to think that the postponement of marriage is usually an evil.

SERIOUS PLIGHT OF FEDERALS

Facing Death as They Hastily Flee From Tampico

PROBABLY CAUGHT IN TRAP

Number of Dead In Attack on City Placed at Three Hundred—Huerta's Back to Wall, as He Has No Chance to Check Advance of Constitutionalists and End of His Regime Is Now In Sight—Said to Have Agreed to Fight In the Open, to Avoid Bombardment of Capital—Complications Likely to Arise From Rebels' Capture of Tampico—Unarmed Civilians to Take Charge of Oil Wells at Request of Wilson

Washington, May 15.—A dispatch from Vera Cruz says a violent electrical storm in the vicinity of Tampico has rendered the wireless virtually useless, and only meagre details of the situation at that port, which was evacuated by the federals, have been received.

The plight of the federals under General Zaragoza, who are retiring in the direction of San Luis Potosi along the railroad from Tampico, is considered by those who know the country most serious.

The federal forces under Zaragoza fled under cover of a downpour of rain, being followed by the forces of Generals Gonzales and Caballero.

Ten cannon and fourteen machine guns were placed to the north of the city on Monday night by constitutionalists, the official version said. Tuesday morning a heavy fire from the machine guns was poured into the defending federal forces. The constitutionalists' cannon played havoc, it was said, with the entire federal entrenchment. The roar of the ten cannon at Tampico was almost continuous from the opening of the final assault on Tuesday morning, until the federals fled in disorder Wednesday afternoon.

Gunboats Are Useless

The federal gunboats seemed to have lost their effectiveness and the constitutionalists asserted that they paid little attention to them in the latter part of the fight.

The last constitutionalist attack on Tampico began under the leadership of Caballero.

The constitutionalists have overrun the territory about San Luis Potosi and control a considerable portion of the railroad. Northward toward the federal lines, the country is rugged and barren, and probably impassable to the weary veterans of Tampico, which has long been under siege.

At Zaragoza's rear are constitutional forces, elated by victory, and ready to press after him. The general belief is that the little force of federals will be cut to pieces before it reaches the lines south of San Luis Potosi.

Foreigners Are Safe

News was received that the warning of Caballero of his purpose to attack Tampico with artillery and force a surrender was given to the commander of the British cruiser Hermoine on May 9.

Foreign residents immediately began to go aboard the various ships. It is reported that all foreigners left the city, except a few Americans who chose to remain.

Within the city native patriotic demonstrations occurred frequently before the attack began. A few recruits had reached Zaragoza, but the rebel forces had increased to 5000, with twelve field guns, making the odds against the federals hopeless. The ammunition supply aboard the federal gunboats had been greatly reduced, and this is considered the probable cause of Zaragoza's evacuation.

Report 300 Killed

The total force of constitutionalists taking part in the attack on the city numbered about 7000 men. The total killed is placed at 300.

The streets of Tampico are patrolled by constitutionalist cavalry. Invitations already have been issued to foreigners to return to the city and resume their business affairs under guarantee of protection by Gonzales.

Statements by the commanders at Tampico indicate that little time will be lost in closing in on San Luis Potosi and Saltillo. Tampico advices are that the constitutionalists hope to capture these cities within two weeks at the latest.

Huerta's Fall Is Near

With the capture of the city of Tampico by the rebels, and with the federals at Saltillo, San Luis Potosi and Tuxpam bottled up by constitutionalist troops, all of northern Mexico is in the hands of Generals Villa and Carranza, and the end of the Huerta regime is at last in sight.

Foreigners at Vera Cruz declare General Huerta is ready to leave Mexico if the United States will guarantee his safe conduct, though before leeing he may make a final stand at Puebla, the stronghold which he has fortified 150 miles from Mexico City toward Vera Cruz.

The remnant of the Tampico garrison is in flight toward San Luis Potosi and two of the three federal gunboats which kept off the rebel army for months are under surveillance of the American warships off Tampico, following their retreat out to sea to avoid capture. The third, the Vera Cruz, is still up the river.

Rear Admiral Mayo has designated vessels of his fleet to follow the gunboats, should they leave, as they are free to do.

With the fall of Tampico the line of advance of the constitutionalist forces toward the south has been drawn from coast to coast.

Cabrera For President?

Constitutionalist officials expect the swift capture of Saltillo and San Luis Potosi by Villa, and then an immediate advance on Mexico City. They assert that neither Carranza nor Villa will become president if their cause wins, and that Senor Cabrera, now European agent, is their choice.

General Huerta is fighting with his back to a wall that offers little defense, for rumors are current that Zapata and possibly the Figueroas with their followers will combine with the victorious constitutionalists and carry out an assault on Mexico City from the south as Villa drives home his attack from the north.

Want Fight In the Open

The foreign diplomats already have demanded that the battle for the possession of the city be fought in the open and the capital not subjected to a bombardment. Huerta is reported to have agreed to this request, but with the stipulation that he might withdraw with his troops within the city's defenses when defeat, which even he admits is certain, overwhelms him in the field.

In Mexico City itself revolt against Huerta's rule is seething. Constitutionalist agents work openly with handbills, while their orators inflame the citizens against the dictator. It is common gossip there that the members of Huerta's official family are jealously watching him for the first sign of weakness, which would mean their ruin as well as his.

An Important Event

There is no question that the capture of Tampico is the greatest event in the Carranza-Villa campaign against Huerta. It gives them an outlet to the world for their trade and for the importation of war munitions.

But right here is where many complications may arise. Huerta, whom many of the nations of the world have recognized as the president of Mexico, may declare a blockade of the port, and he has the warships with which to enforce it against the rebels. Those nations who have recognized the present government must submit to an effective blockade and cannot complain if ships flying their flags are captured in any attempt to run it.

Oil Wells to Be Reopened

General Carranza notified the state department that the United States may send representatives to the oil districts to look out for American interests there.

Annoucement of Carranza's action was made at the White House. He granted a special request sent to him from Washington, and President Wilson expressed his pleasure over the answer from the constitutionalist leader.

When receiving a delegation of oil men who called at the White House to protest against the neglect shown by the United States toward the owners of these properties, President Wilson gave assurances that as soon as Tampico was in the hands of the constitutionalists he would make special efforts to have the oil properties protected.

He directed Secretary Bryan to get in touch with Carranza and urge him to permit the oil wells to be reopened. As a special favor to the United States Carranza agreed to let unarmed civilians take charge of the properties.

OUTRAGES ON AMERICANS

Reports of Beatings and Looting of Stores and Homes In Mexico

Eagle Pass, Tex., May 15.—Refugees arriving here from Saltillo and Gaudalajara brought reports of outrages on Americans.

Wholesale destruction of American property was reported in Gaudalajara. It was said that stores had been looted and homes stripped of furniture. Several Americans were reported beaten.

All Americans, it was said, were herded together and ordered to leave the city at once. The small colony, including some women and children, left the city in wagons. They are supposed to be trying to make their way through a hostile country to the border.

WOUNDED RETURN HOME

Heroes Unwilling to Talk About Their Brave Performances

New York, May 15.—The wounded heroes of Vera Cruz—all eager to go back and fight some more Mexicans—came home on the naval hospital ship Solace.

Stetchers carried twenty-eight of the men ashore when the ship docked at the Brooklyn navy yard and then those with lesser injuries rushed down the gangplank, most of them into the arms of waiting friends.

In all there were 101 invalided men on the Solace, and three bodies in flag-draped coffins. Of the wounded thirty-nine are expected to be well enough to go back to the fighting line.

Many of the others will never bear arms again, for a missing arm or leg puts a sailor or a marine into the ranks of the pensioners.

There were plenty of stories of heroism on board the Solace, but it was difficult to get the principal actors to talk about them.

FUNERAL OF HAGGERTY

State and City Officials Attend the Services at Cambridge

Cambridge, Mass., May 15.—With all the honors that could be accorded him, both military and civic, Corporal Daniel A. Haggerty of Cambridge, one of the marines who fell at Vera Cruz, was buried in the "honor lot" at Cambridge cemetery.

Previous to the interment a solemn high mass requiem was celebrated in St. Patrick's church. The services were attended by state and city officials.

In the funeral procession were marines, bluejackets and the militia. The civic bodies included the G. A. R., members of the Army and Navy union, Knights of Columbus, Eagles, Elks, Spanish War Veterans and a delegation of employes of the Boston Elevated Railway.

TAYLOR INTERESTS BOUGHT BY LANNIN

President of Red Sox Team Has Become Its Sole Owner

Boston, May 15.—President Lannin of the Red Sox team is now the sole and undisputed owner of the Boston American league baseball team.

The deal by which the change went into effect was put through yesterday and Charles H. and John I. Taylor, who had been identified with the local American league club for more than a decade, severed their connection with the team.

While the price of Lannin's purchase is not given, it is said to have been approximately $300,000. Only last winter Lannin became half owner of the franchise when the American league had decided that local ownership was demanded by the fans, and that the stock then held by outsiders should be sold to those who would have the interests of Boston fans more nearly at heart.

SPENDS NIGHT IN JAIL

Tenor Constantino Released After Furnishing Bail of $5000

Boston, May 15.—Florencio Constantino, $2000 per sing opera singer, lover of luxury, and man who smiles all over when he is pleased, after a night in a jail cell and a long, weary day in a sheriff's office, was freed last night on $5000 bail.

The grand opera star was arrested Wednesday night at the Hotel Bellevue to prevent his departure for Buenos Ayres without paying a judgment of $30,000, which Oscar Hammerstein, the grand opera impressario, secured against him in a New York court.

INDIAN NAME PASONAGESSIT

Formerly the Name Applied to Quincy Territory

Editors Daily Ledger:

The Indian name for Quincy, which (as is well known,) with Braintree, Randolph and Holbrook, comprised the old town of Braintree, was, as stated in Thomas Morton's book "New English Canaan,"—Passonagessit.

The Indian name for Weymouth was Wessagusset. The locality of the original Weymouth settlement was long a matter of dispute, but was cleared up by Charles Francis Adams, formerly of Quincy, now of South Lincoln, whose pamphlet upon the subject is in the Public Library. It was located to the north-east of Hunt's Hill in Weymouth, (directly across from Germantown,) which hill formerly projected far into the present channel, but was dredged away a number of years ago. It is not possible to say with certainty just what exact spot it occupied, as the cross which marks it on the crude old map covers quite a large extent of territory. The map was known as Winthrop's map of 1634, and was discovered in London by Henry F. Waters. (See Adams Three Episodes, Vol. 1, Page 61.) It may safely be stated, however, that the settlement was about where the Bayside Hotel stands.

The writer was curious concerning the meaning of these two Indian names and so wrote to J. W. Hodge, Ethnologist-in-Charge, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C. The Indians who lived in this vicinity belonged to the Massachusetts tribe of the Algonquin race. Mr. Hodge says that Passonagessit means "at the place of grass," and Wessagusset means "at the place of the swamp oak," to be translated "grasses" or "oaks" as the singular or plural would be equally correct. If these designations sound very general to us, recall such English names as Green Harbor, or Sunny Creek, the latter of which all boys of twenty-five years ago well remember.

And finally as to the Indian name Massachusetts. In Teel's History of Milton is printed a letter from J. Hammond Trumbull of Hartford, Conn., an unquestioned authority on the Algonquin dialect, which explains its meaning and derivation. Remember that the word has now become Anglicized, and its parts were spelled in many different ways. "Mass" meant great, but was not so spelt, as for instance John Eliot spelt it "mishe" "achu" was "adchu" in Indian and meant hill; "etts" was corrupted from the Indian "ut" which meant, as near as can be given "at the place of" it being the same as the endings of the words Passonagessit—and Wessagusset. Teele's history tells it very interestingly. The meaning loses force by being too literally translated.

For instance, if one cowboy asked another where Custer was killed he would perhaps reply "Up in the Little Big Horn Country," using Country as equivalent to place, region, locality or anything else you prefer, roughly described, having landmarks and areas more gauged by the eye than the rule.

So a fair translation of the Indian name, now spelled Massachusetts would be "region around the big hills" and of course the Blue Hill range of Quincy and Milton was meant. The suffix "set" is very common in Indian local names, Neponset, and Wachuset, and in the latter name you will notice the "achu" or "adchu" meaning hill, as in Massachusetts.

Yours truly,
James L. Edwards.

FABLES FOR THE FAIR

THE WOMAN WHO ADAPTED HERSELF

There was once a Woman who was Asked to Sing at a Summer Entertainment for the Benefit of a Country Library which None of the Natives Wanted. Having heard that her Rival in the Vocal Arena was also going to Sing she Laid a Plan to Annihilate her.

"The Foolish Thing will be Sure to Sing Something entirely Over their Heads," she reasoned, "and Make them feel Awkward by displaying her most Gorgeous Toilette—which will be Very Unkind of her, to be sure. I will Teach her a Thing or Two."

On the Night of the Concert the Country People had Assembled from Far and Near to See the Swell Ladies and Gentlemen.

The Woman who was Asked to Sing appeared in a Simple White Muslin with a Wild Rose in her Hair. An Old Man from the Village accompanied her on his Violin, as she sang "Annie Laurie." For an Encore she sang "Home, Sweet Home," so Touchingly that the Old Man Wept and Played very Flat. He Lived in the Poor House.

But the other Country People were both Surprised and Disgusted. "Goodness Alive!" said they, "is that All? Our Jenny Knows that Piece. And Malvina's Graduation Dress had More Ruffles than That."

Nor were the City People better Pleased. "She certainly Has a Great deal of Nerve," said they. "One would Think she was Tetrazzini, or Mary Garden at the Least," and they Refused to Applaud.

The Rival wore a Silver Brocade with Turquoise Chiffon. She had an Aigrette in her Hair and carried a Bouquet of Orchids. Her first Song was Elsa's Dream from "Lohengrin," in German, and was Wildly Applauded, everyone Wishing to Show that he Understood it Perfectly. As an Encore she sang a French Selection. Being Urged to sing a Third time, she gave a Spanish Toreador Song, which was Deeply Appreciated.

The Local Paper the Next Day Described her Costume as Extremely Tasteful and Remarked that it was a Real Pleasure to hear Old Favorites Rendered with Such Spirit.

This teaches us: When in Rome we should Do as the Romans Don't.

The Footlights Glare

KINCAIDE THEATRE, QUINCY.

A great show is billed to begin Monday at Quincy's pretty playhouse. Regardless of expense, Manager Wardwell secured and will show the first reels made of the great funeral procession in New York City last Monday of the U. S. boys who fell at Vera Cruz. Every one will want to see this touching and timely picture.

Pathe Weekly always full of interest, will show several Mexican War views. The "Perils of Pauline" that great continued $25,000 prize picture, will be presented in two intensely gripping parts.

Keith-quality vaudeville attractions include LaVelle & Rowland in modern dances; Wilson & Aubrey, burlesque bar experts; Harold Yates, that versatile chap; and Mr. and Mrs. David E. Dow & Co., presenting their great comedy playlet entitled "Murder will out." There are other pictures, and lots of good music by the regular orchestra in this great show for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon and evening.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

American scenes, incidents and characters combine to make "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," one of the best of modern comedies. Its action takes place in a quiet New England town, and its plot involves the humorous trials and tribulations of Aunt Mary with her scapegrace nephew. Merriment and humor fill every scene of the play and as produced by John Craig at the Castle Square next week it will offer a series of performances that will draw multitudes who love to laugh at a play and acting that is filled with comedy.

Its cast will include the leading members of Mr. Craig's company, and as acted at the Castle Square it will be sure to have a spirited and artistic presentation.

THE POPS.

The third week of the Pops which begins May 18th, will be the last week of Mr. Urack's appearance as conductor and he is certain to increase greatly his already pronounced favor with the public by the programmes he has provided. Monday night will bring a general programme characteristic of the Pop concerts. Tuesday evening the concert will be of more than ordinary importance and interest. The Norwegian Societies of Boston and the vicinity are celebrating Sunday, May 17, the centenary of the Independence of their native country. Tuesday at the Pops will be National Norwegian night. A number of characteristic works by Norwegian composers will be played and Norwegian Singing Societies will take an important part in the programme. The opportunity to hear good male choruses is not so common as to take from it the flavor of novelty. The first German night of the season will be May 20th, and the first French night, May 21. May 22, in commemoration of the thirty-first anniversary of the death of Richard Wagner, Mr. Urack will give his second Wagner programme—a third of the numbers being devoted to excerpts from music drama.

In answer to many inquiries the Management of the Pops wishes to announce that the annual Harvard Night is set for May 26th.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

For E. H. Sothern's second and last week at the Shubert Theatre, beginning Monday night, the repertoire is arranged as follows: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Wednesday nights and at the Wednesday matinee, "Charlemagne;" Thursday and Friday nights, "Lord Dundreary" Saturday matinee, "If I Were King;" Saturday night, "Hamlet."

Mr. Sothern's first week has witnessed a series of large audiences, and his productions have been received with the usual demonstrations of aproval. "If I Were King" and "Lord Dundreary" have suffered no loss of popularity through several seasons disuse, and display a drawing power as strong as if they were novelties instead of revivals. "Charlemagne" will now be seen for the first time in this city. The play is in four acts and seven scenes, the action taking place in France and Lombardy; and Mr. Sothern will impersonate Charles, the elder son of Pepin the Short, King of the Franks.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

The last week of Bayard Veiller's "Within the Law," at the Majestic Theatre is announced. This is the melodrama treating of modern conditions in New York life, which has caused a sensation not only in the metropolis, but throughout the country; for it has provoked editorial comment and praise from such eminent Americans as Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, who wrote of the play "All employers of labor, who underpay their women employees, should go to see this play for the lesson it will teach them;" and the Bishop of Wyoming, who said, "I shall never forget the lesson it portrayed." "Within the Law" is in four acts and as many scenes. Jane Cowl heads the company. The engagement will terminate Saturday night, May 23rd.

Talking Shop.

Enthusiastic interest in one's occupation is always an advantage, but, on the other hand, it is not well for a woman in business to talk of her work at all times and places. Naturally, the thing that we do constantly is our most absorbing interest, but we must remember that other people have other things to talk about.

LINEN SHOWER AT WOLLASTON

Miss Etta Holmes Is Remembered by Friends

A linen shower was the surprise of the evening for Miss Etta Holmes of North Central avenue after the regular meeting of the Nearer and Farther Lights society of the Baptist church, which was held at the new home of the Charles W. Baileys, Highland avenue with Miss Esther Spaulding, hostess. Miss Omie Carter addressed the members on "Assam," the country to which she goes in September under the Student Volunteer Movement, after which a May basket, all white and gold, was given Miss Holmes. It was filled with all kinds of beautiful pieces of linen, many of which were embroidered. Miss Holmes marriage to Dr. William Parker of Everett takes place in June. Those present were Mrs. Joseph Walther, Mrs. Charles Kempton, Mrs Charles M. Roach, Mrs. Louis S. Cleaves, Mrs. Leon Talbot, Mrs. Aldewin Hatfield, Mrs. Samuel MacKay. NEW OFFICERS.

Quincy lodge, No. 20, O. U. B., met Wednesday evening at the Universalist church parlor. Two new members were initiated, Frederick Ward and Merton Grant. Following the business session a very interesting talk was given by Leo P. Noonan. The work of a reporter was clearly portrayed with its problems, its triumphs in "getting a story," its humor and its tragedy.

Rev. Mr. Ward, the chaplain of the lodge, told of the reporters he had met, commending the ability, the fair play, the sense of honor and good will that he has found to characterize reporters.

Refreshments were served. The name O. U. B. stands for Order of Universal Brotherhood. Quincy lodge meets the second and fourth Wednesdays. New pins have been ordered for all the members.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are:

President—Lester Sprague.
Vice President—Willard Hyland.
Secretary—Bartlett Spooner.
Treasurer—Elmer Sprague.
Chaplain—Merrill Ward.
S. W.—Chester French.
J. W.—Freeland Hyland.
S.—Edgar Pinel.

WANT ADDITION TO SCHOOL

At the annual meeting of the Parents and Teachers Association held in the hall of the Massachusetts Fields school, Thursday evening, the following officers were elected:

President—S. J. Ripley.

Vice President—Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes.

Secretary—Mrs. Douglas Wetmore.

Treasurer—David H. Goodspeed.

Executive committee—Miss Annie M. Bennett, Herbert J. Polk, Louis Fleschman.

A lengthy discussion on increased school accommodations followed the reading of annual reports, general opinion favoring an addition to the present building rather than a building in some other part of the district.

Following the business meeting a social hour was enjoyed during which ice cream and other refreshments were served by a committee headed by Mrs. Daniel L. Miller.

This closed the schedule for the season.

CIVICS COMMITTEE.

The Civic committee has had an active year. We have followed legislation which has had bearing on our work and endorsed such as seemed desirable. The committee feel that great good is being done for the city as well as for individuals by the ever increasing number of children's gardens which are being carried on under our direction.

The number has been increasing at the rate of about 500 a year and this year more than two thousand orders for seeds have been filled which represent more than 13,000 packages of seeds. We shall hold an exhibition of the garden products in August and send the best of it to the Horticultural show in Boston. A large amount of money is given in prizes and ribbons, and many children not only beautify their homes and provdie vegetables for their families, but earn much money by their sale and prizes.

We have started a new project this year in supplying nursery stock at a nominal cost. Although the idea is new and not widely understood, nearly seventy dollars in orders have been received. Next year we hope to extend the work and accomplish it earlier in the Spring.

To provide funds for our various lines of work we have conducted two large entertainments, the Assembly and the Revels.

We shall have a busy summer, and besides our garden work we plan a war on mosquitoes and such other activity as will tend towards general civic usefulness.

The next Revels will be held Jan. 15, 1915, and we are considering changing the date of the Assembly from the day after Thanksgiving to the night before Thanksgiving.

The Forestry branch of the Civic committee has been extraordinarily active and a report will be made by the sub chairman in charge of that department, Mrs. Mackay.

BUSY IN GRANITE YARDS

manufacturer prefers skilled men, and the second class men are only used in extreme cases. This is the reason that one finds some supposed skilled granite cutters working with a pick and shovel.

During the present month the travelling electric derrick at Quincy Adams has been worked to its utmost capacity in order to get the finished product loaded onto the cars ready for shipment, and it has been necessary to obtain a permit from the police department to work on Sundays at times in order to catch up with the rush of work.

The old rule followed at Quincy Adams was for a teamster to wait until his load could be unloaded onto the cars. Now however the plan is, if the load cannot be handled immediately to leave the wagon and come after it later. The shipping facilities at South Quincy are not what they should be and there is always more or less complaint.

The Quincy correspondent in the Granite Cutters Journal tells the situation in a nut shell when he says "Our hopes are realized. Business is getting better, and many men have got jobs during the month."

While the use of granite is being urged for the proposed dry dock in Boston, and the chances are good that it will be used, it is very doubtful if Quincy gets a show at it, for the reason, that the shipping facilities are not such that Quincy can compete in price with other Massachusetts granite centres which have the advantage of water front dock, from which their granite can be shipped. Then Quincy granite is not quarried as easily.

It would be a revelation to some of the olden time granite workers should come back to life and wander through the granite cutting yards. They would see many things that they never even dreamed of. At every yard they visited they would find that much of the roughing off and the skim letter and carved work instead of being done by the old fashioned slow hand tools is now being done with the wonderful pneumatic tools, which besides doing the job in less than a third of the time formerly required, as a much better job. Instead of seeing two men breaking their backs at the cranks of a large derrick, they would see them operated by silent running engines whose power was obtained from a small compartment, in the engine room, in which is located an electric motor. Power is there when wanted, and when not wanted, is shut off and the manufacturer is put to no expense.

Some of the modern appliances now in use are wonderful, and are doing much to facilitate the shortening of the time necessary to get out a finished monument.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The Ladies Aid Society of the East Congregational church had one of the best social and financial successes of the season at their birthday social Wednesday evening at the church. The great success of the affair is due to the efficient work of Mrs. Carlton who had charge of it. The entertainment consisted of a concert given by the "Kitchen orchestra," solos by several members of the church and readings by Mrs. Paul Babcock. The concert was extremely humorous. The members of the orchestra were: Mrs. Benjamin Fuller, Dorothy Fuller, Emily Doherty, Mrs. Olaf Olsen, Eliot Olsen, Mr. Louis Harlow, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. L. V. Gosselin, Mr. Howard Knox, Lawrence Abbot, Annie Ward, Alice Lakin, Mrs. Hurd, Flora Thrasher, Paul Carlton and Mr. Carlton. The costumes were very funny and the acting of Mr. Knox caused many a burst of laughter. After the entertainment, refreshments were served under the direction of Mrs. Lydia Shapleigh assisted by Lawrence Abbot, Mr. Gosselin, Marjorie Hollidge, Mrs. Hamlin, Pearl Hathaway and several others. The idea of admission was a very novel and successful one. Each person was to pay a penny for every year he was old. Small bags were supplied for this purpose and they were in charge of Mrs. Ira Hill.

TROLLEY LEAGUE VICTORY

The Quincy team of the Trolley league beat the Torrey Street team of Brockton in that city Thursday, 10 to 9. The feature of the game was the playing of Gaw of Quincy who secured four hits out of five times at the bat, two of them for extra bases. His work was instrumental in keeping Quincy in the lead.

In the eighth inning the Torreys made four runs through the loose playing of Quincy but made no more when the winners tightened up. Quincy's fielder, Lemieux played a star game, taking four flies, two of which were headed for safe territory just in back of second. The Italian battery, Malnati and Ross also performed well.

The game was not without its humorous features either, for George W. Ford of this city, after sending a man to second, followed him along and struck a coaching attitude at second base. He was requested to stick at first or third base.

INTERCLASS MEET.

An interclass meet, at which it is expected all of the athletes of the Quincy High school will participate, will be held on the Merrymount Oval on the afternoon of May 28. It will be the first opportunity the freshmen runners will have of demonstrating their ability. Many of them performed exceptionally well during their grammar school courses and several dark horses may be uncovered. The upper class men will not have more than a score of runners and jumpers and there is much speculation as to who will garner the greater number of points. The final arrangements for the meet were made at a track team meeting on Thursday.

CODDINGTONS WIN.

Strong hitting by the Coddingtons won a game from the Lincolns Thursday afternoon, 9 to 1. McDonald the winning pitcher, had the losers at his mercy. Coddington apparently struck a winning stride while the Lincolns lacked the get together spirit. The score:

Coddington	0	2	2	0	4	1	—9
Lincoln	0	1	0	0	0	0	—1

Batteries—McDonald and Fostello; Locarni and Carlson.

ANOTHER FOR WASHINGTON.

The Washington won their third straight game Thursday in defeating the Wollastons 11 to 0. Strong stick work gave the Pointers the jump early in the game and the slaughter continued the entire six innings. The winning battery was Gamble and Thayer.

Dr. Johnson's Rebuke.

Dr. Johnson was once in company with a gentleman who affected to maintain Dean Berkeley's strange position "that nothing exists but as perceived by some mind." When the gentleman was going away Dr. Johnson said to him: "Pray, sir, don't leave us; for we may, perhaps, forget to think of you and then you will cease to exist."

WEBBER LIED IN CASE OF BECKER

Admission Wrung From Him In Cross-Examination

STICKS TO ESSENTIAL POINTS

Ex-Policeman's Attorneys Appear Pleased With Testimony—Rose Ordeal Ends With Clearing Up Apparent Discrepancies—Court Rebukes Manton For Assailing Whitman

New York, May 15.—Counsel for Charles Becker, charged with the murder of Herman Rosenthal, obtained from "Bridgie" Webber, described as the financial backer of the plot that resulted in the killing of Rosenthal, admissions that he had lied to Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty, had said things during his direct examination earlier in the day that he omitted the first time Becker was on trial for his life, and had sworn to affidavits that he swore yesterday were false.

Under fire of the cross examination Webber trembled and his mouth quivered and then curled into a smile. At times he seemed to defy Martin T. Manton, Becker's chief counsel, to draw any contradictory statements from him. At other times he appeared to give away to despair. Twice he admitted he was remorseful for the part he had taken in the crime.

Mention of the death of the four gunmen in the electric chair affected the witness almost to the point of tears. But he regained control of himself and went on with his testimony.

In its essential points the story he told of the murder conspiracy and its result remained unchanged by cross examination. Attorneys for the defense, however, expressed themselves as gratified that they had made Webber admit he had lied.

With every breach in his story of the Rosethal murder repaired, and his whole narrative of how Becker instigated the gambler's death untouched, "Bald Jack" Rose ended his ordeal as star witness for the state before Webber took the stand.

Led by District Attorney Whitman in redirect examination, Rose cleared up every apparent discrepancy which the skilful questioning of Manton had apparently shown in his version of how the four gunmen killed Rosenthal.

Hot tilts between Whitman and Manton marked the last few moments of Rose's testimony. As he saw his labor wasted by Rose's replies, Manton grew angry and practically accused Whitman of coaching the witness. Then Justice Seabury broke in. He sharply called Manton to order, and Becker's counsel, apparently disheartened, ceased his tactics.

GET AFTER UNIONISTS

Suffragists Make Things Disagreeable For Lansdowne and Carson

London, May 15.—Militant suffragettes turned from their attacks upon Liberals and opened fire upon the Unionists. The residences of Lord Lansdowne, Conservative leader of the house of peers, and Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Ulster Unionists, were both raided by militant members of the Women's Social and Political union.

Mrs. Dacre Fox and Mrs. ("General") Flora Drummond were the leaders in the raids.

Mrs. Fox went to the residence of Lansdowne and demanded admission. The butler slammed the door in her face, and the enraged suffragette commenced beating a mad tattoo upon the door with her fists. A crowd soon collected and Mrs. Fox was arrested after a struggle.

In the meantime Mrs. Drummond and some companions were enacting a similar scene at the residence of Carson.

POISON IN GARDEN HOSE

Man Who Drank From it Remains In a State of Coma

South Norwalk, Conn., May 15.—Frank Augustine of this place sought to quench his thirst by drinking from a garden hose, forgetting that it had been used to spray the trees and shrubbery with a poison solution.

He took only one swallow because of the bitter taste, but in a few minutes fell into a state of coma from which it has been impossible to arouse him. Augustine is now in a hospital.

Le Fave Charged With Murder of Pearl Frost and Walter Hills

Salem, Mass., May 15.—A plea of not guilty was made by George Le Fave, arraigned on an indictment charging him with the murder of Pearl M. Frost and Walter P. Hills at Peabody, April 3. Le Fave was remanded to jail to await trial, for which no date was set.

Jealousy is the motive ascribed by the prosecution. It is alleged that Le Fave visited the Hills home, where Miss Frost was employed, and killed the young woman, afterwards shooting Hills, who attempted to overpower him.

NEW HAVEN'S "SLUSH FUND"

Over $1,000,000 For Stock Worth Ten Cents a Pound

MELLEN MAKES REVELATIONS

Money Paid to Strangers to Go Into Hands of "Men of Influence" In Westchester Road Deal, With Famous Thief Catcher as Go-Between —Backed by Late J. P. Morgan

Washington, May 15.—Charles S. Mellen began what promises to be the most amazing story of high finance ever related in the United States. The former head of the New Haven system, as a witness before the interstate commerce commission, publicly declared that he planned to reveal the entire plot whereby the legislatures and city governments were purchased and entire railway systems manipulated for the benefit of Wall street insiders.

Although interrupted at the very commencement of his tale, he showed how he personally paid out "over a million dollars" for stock the value of which he placed at "10 cents a pound."

Mellen laid the ground work for the painting of what he promises shall be his masterpiece. Then he was excused to go back to New England to gather up documentary evidence to back up his amazing recitals. He will continue his story next Tuesday.

Standing out prominently in Mellen's story was the fact that he was the late J. P. Morgan's representative. He said he was put at the head of the New Haven by Morgan. Apparently he wanted to tell all about the agreement which made him the guiding spirit in all of the wonderful manipulation of New England's railway systems.

But the commission's counsel, Joseph W. Folk, for some unexplained reason, shunted him from this line and took up one minor transaction, the acquisition of some 24,000 shares of the stock of the New York, Westchester and Boston railway. This is the electric line between the Harlem and New Rochelle in New York state over which the fast flyers of the New Haven road rushed eastward into New England.

Mellen admitted that the New Haven directors put at his disposal $1,200,000 worth of New Haven stock to be used in acquiring the 24,000 shares of the Westchester line from "persons of influence."

He said he did not know the identity of these people; that he did business through the late Tom Byrnes, New York's famous thief catcher and establisher of the Wall street dead line. Byrnes negotiated for the shares and Mellen paid for them in personal due bills, redeemable either in New Haven stock or in cash. When asked to identify the persons who got the money, Mellen leaned far over the table and, looking Folk squarely in the eye, said:

"They were all alike. They would slide into my office and get by my clerks. Then they would pull an envelope out of their pocket. They would take a paper out and say: 'I have your due bill here for $10,000' or some such sum. Then I would would look at it. I would see it was in my own handwriting. I would ask: 'Do you want a check?' They would say: 'Nothing doing, I want cash.'

"Then I would draw a check to Charles S. Mellen for the amount; would send it out and get it cashed. First I would ask how they wanted it and they would say in small bills. I would give them the money, tear the due bills in small pieces and see that it went down the sewer. I knew none of them, but from their noses I would always make up my mind that they came from New York's East Side."

Discussing Mellen's testimony, Folk said:

"These due bills constituted a sort of slush fund with which it was hoped to corrupt New York city aldermen, judges and police officials. The New Haven wanted thirteen changes made in the Westchester railroad franchises before taking over the road, and it took this means to get them made. I have evidence to prove that the changes were arranged for and that even certain judicial decisions to remove obstacles in the pathway of the changes were all arranged for, in advance."

Malay Superstitions.

A Malay child has to be sturdy to survive the perils of his birth and babyhood. Only an iron constitution could bear the balls of rice that are stuffed into his mouth or the cold bath which greets him immediately on his appearance in the world. But it is not that a Malay mother is indifferent to the physical welfare of her offspring. When her child falls ill no one could be more solicitous. The house and the village are ransacked to find the cause of the sickness. If it is suspected to be in the interior of the house the services of a native doctor are obtained. After concentrating his thoughts upon the pit of his stomach for a time he will probably call for a "female cocoanut." Taking then a knife of a peculiar shape, he mutters incantations in a forgotten tongue and proceeds to shave the nut. If the person who has bewitched the child is living in the house he will awake the next morning with a skull as bald as the cocoanut itself.

The Long Arm of Coincidence.

Lady Macdonell in her reminiscences tells of a curious incident which occurred thirty-six hours after leaving Southampton. A large bird perched itself on the summit of the mainmast, a sailor went up and caught it and brought it down, and it proved to be a brown owl!

"I am superstitious about owls," says Lady Macdonell, "and was very depressed, especially as I had left my favorite sister ill. The sailors tied a string round the poor, dazed creature's leg and were rather ill treating it, so I offered them 2 shillings for the bird, which they accepted, and I then let it out of my porthole. The captain told me that they often caught even smaller birds on the mast, especially when the wind was blowing off the land. On arriving at Lisbon we received a telegram to say that thirty-six hours after my departure my sister had passed away and also Lady Macdonell, the wife of General Sir A. Macdonell, my brother-in-law. It was a strange coincidence."

Offered Him Shelter.

"One of the characteristics of my old comrade, Amos Stillman, was bravery in actual fighting service," said the old soldier. "Another characteristic was a sense of humor, which stood him in good stead, even in the face of danger and contributed not a little to the gayety of his comrades.

"At the battle of Cold Harbor, just before making the charge and while under the Confederate fire, our corporal, who was over six feet high and scarcely bigger around than a gun barrel, became excited as the enemy's bullets plowed up the earth about him.

"'What kind of a place is this to keep a man in?' he demanded. 'Absolutely without protection!'

"He had no more than spoken when Private Stillman stuck his ramrod in the ground.

"'Here, corporal,' said he, 'get behind this.'"—New York Globe.

Thackeray as a Lecturer.

Thackeray did not always enjoy giving lectures, and there seems to have been a curious difference in his manner of delivering them. In one town a member of the audience, after admiring Thackeray's clear and telling delivery, declared that in expression he was like nothing so much as "a monument of grief." Yet one of his hearers at a subsequent lecture found him "a radiant, smiling, buoyant personality." From Edinburgh he wrote to Mrs. Fanshawe: "The lectures have been a success. I was famously hissed for speaking disrespectfully of Mary, queen of Scots, but it was good fun and made the evening more amusing. I am to repeat the lecture here, and so for reading out of a book for sixteen hours shall get £500."—London Mail.

Weather Forecasts.

The first attempt at scientific forecasting of the weather was the result of a storm which during the Crimean war, Nov. 14, 1854, almost destroyed the fleets of France and England. As a storm had raged several days earlier in France, Vaillant, the French minister of war, directed that investigations be made to see if the two storms were the same and if the progress of the disturbances could have been foretold. It was demonstrated that the two were in reality one storm and that its path could have been ascertained and the fleet forewarned in ample time to reach safety.

The Princess Aline

She Had Remarkable Diplomatic Talent

By MILLARD MALTBIE

The Princess Aline of Crakovia was an object of great concern to her father, King Ludwig. His majesty had five sons and one daughter. The succession being therefore established beyond a reasonable doubt by her brothers, the princess was of no importance whatever on that account. But she was of great value in another direction. A province, Guadix, had been wrested in war from Crakovia by King Philip of Ancovia, an adjoining power. A proposition had come from Philip for the hand of the Princess Aline for Ferdinand, crown prince of Ancovia. It had been declined. A deputation was then sent by King Philip offering, if the matrimonial proposition were accepted, to restore to Crakovia the province that had been ceded.

"I WILL NOT MARRY PRINCE FERDINAND."

King Ludwig was not only astonished at this remarkable offer; he was delighted. Without consulting his daughter in the matter he replied at once that the proposition was accepted.

The deputation was about to return with this reply when the princess was informed that she was to take a husband she had never seen without having been consulted. She at once notified her father that she did not intend to marry any one and she certainly would not marry Prince Ferdinand. King Ludwig sent for his daughter and informed her that she must marry the prince because on her doing so depended the restoration of the lost province, whereupon Aline replied that if a hundred provinces could be gained by her marriage still would she remain a maid. At this her father was so dumfounded that he could voice no reply.

When the deputation returned to Ancovia and reported the failure of this second proposition King Philip was both astonished and perplexed. The laws of Ancovia with regard to the marriages of members of the royal family were very closely drawn. So many provisions had been incorporated into them that there was not a single princess of the blood in Europe except Aline who was eligible. The king called his son into his cabinet and told him what had taken place, concluding with the words:

"I propose to declare war against Crakovia and compel the princess to marry you."

"Father," said the prince thoughtfully, "there is an old saying that you can take a horse to water, but you can't make him drink. You may conquer Crakovia and annex it to your kingdom, you may make the princess a prisoner and force her to the altar, but you can't make her say that she will take me for her wedded husband."

"My son," replied the king after weighing the prince's words, "you are right. Such a course might succeed with a man, but not with a woman."

The Princess Aline being the only daughter in the royal family, besides being very attractive—though it was known that she had a will of her own—had been very popular till it leaked out that she had refused in marriage the crown prince of Ancovia, with the lost province in the palm. The cession of this territory had been as sore a point with the Crakovians as the surrender of Alsace and Lorraine with the French. A century and a half before the cession of Gaudix, Crakovia had been obliged to cede one-half its territory to Ancovia, and when Gaudix was lost to them they were broken hearted. For these reasons, when it became known that Aline had refused to give herself in exchange for Gaudix, popular favor turned against her, and she became as much hated as she had before been beloved. She appeared as usual in public places till her treatment by the people became markedly disrespectful; then she retired to one of her father's country palaces, where it was undersfood she lived a secluded life.

One day Prince Ferdinand happened to go through the room where his sisters were studying their lessons under their governess. His attention was arrested by the young woman, and under pretense of inquiring what the children were studying he fell into conversation with their teacher. So pleased was he with her intelligence that he made frequent visits to the schoolroom and asked his mother, the queen, if the governess might not be admitted to the social functions of the court. The queen assented, and the prince announced the fact to the recipient of the royal favor. To his surprise, the latter declined the honor, saying that her mind was concentrated on the education of her pupils and she would not like to have it diverted.

There was in her something so superior to other women with whom the prince came in daily contact that his admiration for the governess grew rapidly. Whenever he found it possible to get away from the fawning associates who surrounded him he would seek his untitled friend and refresh himself with her engaging though independent personality.

One day the prince awoke to the fact that he loved one whom as a prince of the blood he could not marry. He kept his secret from her for some time, but at last yielded to the pressure within him and avowed his love. She did not reproach him for so doing, but the next day handed in her resignation as teacher for the royal children, and when the prince sought her again he found that she had left the palace. He endeavored to learn where she had gone, but failed to gain any trace of her.

From this time a marked change was noticed in Prince Ferdinand. In public he had caught the popular heart by a happy manner that was natural to him, but now he seldom appeared to the people and when he did looked gloomy and morose. It became known that there was no woman living whom the laws of his country would permit him to marry, and those who attributed the change in him to this cause sympathized with him instead of blaming him. Nevertheless, in the main the prince was an example of the adage, "Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone." He fulfilled this almost literally, for princes are dependent on friends the same as other persons, and Ferdinand's intimate friends ceased to find pleasure in his society. He was therefore left much to himself. However, he was very indifferent to all associates.

One day a messenger arrived at the court of Ancovia announcing that if King Philip desired King Ludwig would be pleased to reopen negotiations for the hand of the Princess Aline. King Philip at once sent for his son and announced the glad tidings.

"Something must have occurred to change the conditions," he said to the prince. "I shall withdraw the offer to restore the province of Guadix. We may get the princess without losing this valuable territory."

"Do what you like in the matter," replied Ferdinand. "I shall be obedient to your wishes."

In truth, the prince secretly hoped that the withdrawal of the previous offer would break off the negotiations. The idea of marriage except with the girl he loved was repulsive to him.

So King Philip replied to King Ludwig that he would be pleased to renew his request for the hand of the princess, but he could not now consent to give up Guadix. King Ludwig replied that the matter was in the hands of his daughter and if the crown prince wished for her hand he would have to make the request in person. Philip was delighted.

"I told you so," he said to his son. "Something has occurred to change the situation. Go to the princess, but not as a beggar. We'll get her and keep Guadix."

The prince departed at the head of a splendid retinue and with handsome presents to seek a wife simply that he might give an heir to the throne. There was no method of traveling in those days except on or behind horses and not much communication between the different countries. King Philip waited impatiently to hear of the prince's success, hoping that no cession of territory would be necessary. Finally a message came from his son stating that the Princess Aline would marry him, demanding not only the restoration of Guadix, but that much larger territory which had been ceded to Ancovia a century and a half before. What was more astonishing than this was that the prince urged that the conditions be accepted.

The shock was more than King Philip could bear. He was an old man and in poor health. He fell on the floor in a faint, was carried to his bed and died the next day.

Immediately after the king's demise the chancellor of the realm made posthaste to Crakovia to announce to the crown prince his accession to the throne. He found Ferdinand basking in the princess' smiles, but just as the chancellor was about to kneel with the words, "The king is dead—long live the king!" he stopped, paralyzed. In the Princess Aline he recognized the governess of the royal children of Ancovia. But, recovering himself, he found voice to make the announcement.

Before King Ferdinand left Crakovia he had a consultation with King Ludwig wherein a new distribution of all the territory that had been ceded to Crakovia was made. Crakovia getting the larger share. After the documents had been signed the wedding between the young king and the princess took place amid such rejoicings as had never before occurred in Crakovia. The lost popularity of the princess was not only restored to her, but she could not appear in public without receiving a storm of acclamation.

After ten years' blackening boots at Paterson, N. J., Tony Sabatino, with $15,000 in cash, is on his way to Italy.

At a school election at White Plains, N. Y., women voters checked their babies in a room set apart for the purpose and then cast their ballots.

PANAMA CANAL TAKES ON WARLIKE APPEARANCE

Reported Mexican Threat Cause of Preparations to Meet Hostile Army.

Sixteen miles of trenches for riflemen, with as many miles more of approach and maneuvering trails, suitable for cavalry and mountain, even field, artillery, have been completed along the Panama canal.

The trenches are capable of accommodating, if necessary, 25,000 men. They have been so plotted that in many places they will make possible not only frontal but flank fire upon any attacking party.

Soldiers of the Tenth infantry are on duty at the locks and at every other part of the canal where a crank and dynamite might do damage or where a hostile army might strike.

Work on the fortifications at either entrance to the canal has so far progressed that there are several pieces of high power ordnance in readiness to do effective work at any moment.

Officers of the submarine fleet on duty at Panama have "plotted ranges" over the entire field of this ordnance.

Members of the zone police have been put on "plain clothes" duty, and attend every party of tourists, ready at once to note any suspicious action by any one who might try to see too much.

Work on the trenches has been under way for some time. The other activities followed the circulation of hand bills in Panama City announcing that the Mexicans would "never allow the Panama canal to be finished."

Visitors have lately been surprised by the appearance at every station along the way of soldiers on their trains. Guarding bridges and culverts, the blowing up of which might interrupt traffic across the isthmus, as well as guarding the approaches to the locks of the canal themselves, these soldiers have missed their accustomed ice water. Every train that stops in their neighborhood, therefore, is boarded by the thirsty men, to the amazement of the passengers, and while good natured conductors look the other way, the soldiers drink deep.

THE A. B. C. MEDIATORS.

Da Gama, Naon and Mujica Have Had Wide Diplomatic Experience.

John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American union, furnishes sketches of the three South American diplomatists who have undertaken to adjust Mexico's troubles at conferences in Canada beginning May 18.

Dr. Domicio da Gama, ambassador of Brazil, succeeded Joaquim Nabuco, who accomplished much to increase the friendship between his country and the United States, to which he was accredited. Da Gama began his professional life as a journalist. In 1893 he was appointed secretary to Brazil's special commission in Washington, where President Cleveland was arbiter in a question between Brazil and Argentina. From 1896 to 1900 he was connected with special missions in Europe. In 1901 he was made charge d'affaires at Brussels. In 1907 he was Brazilian minister to Peru and in 1908 was transferred to Argentina.

Dr. Romulo S. Naon, minister of Argentina, was first recognized in public life when he won a medal at the University of Buenos Aires for a thesis on a matter of great interest to his country. In 1902 he was elected to the lower house of the federal congress and also in 1906, distinguishing himself throughout as a debater. President Alcorta appointed Dr. Naon secretary of justice and public instruction. He was appointed minister of Argentina in Washington in 1911.

Eduardo Suarez Mujica is a native of Santiago, Chile, and studied law at the National university. Soon after obtaining his degree he received a post in the office of the minister of foreign affairs, and soon afterward was made assistant secretary of state. While thus in close touch with diplomatic life he had numerous intricate international problems to handle. He was called to become the intendente of the province of Altacama, which he later represented in the national congress. In 1908 the late President Montt gave him the portfolios of justice and public instruction. Senor Mujica entered the diplomatic service of Chile in 1909, when he was appointed minister to Mexico and Cuba.

NEW RULES FOR GARAGES

Those Already Built May Be Exempt

City Clerk Crane visited the office of the District Police Thursday afternoon to obtain some information first hand in relation to the new rules regarding garages. What was particularly desired was information relative to existing private garages, about which he has had many inquiries.

From the information he received it can be stated that the new rules do not apply to existing private garages unless such garage contains more than four automobiles, in which case they would come under the rules. All new private garages erected however will have to comply with the rules.

Under the new rules it would be necessary to obtain a permit to erect the building from the Inspector of buildings as usual, after which said permit must be approved by the Chief Engineer of the Fire department.

If the owner of a garage desires to keep gasoline in his garage, other than what is in the tank on his car, he must obtain a license or permit for the same from the City Council. In such case it will be necessary for the City Council to hold a public hearing on the matter and the applicant must notify every abutter within a certain number of feet of the building where it is proposed to keep the gasoline.

Up to the present time the mere advertising of the hearing in a local paper has been deemed sufficient, and after the permit is granted by the City Council it had to be approved by the Chief of the District police. Now however it will be necessary to notify every abutter of the hearing and when the permit is granted by the City Council, it will have to read "subject to the approval of the Chief Engineer of the Fire department.

EITOR SPEECH

Quincy needed education along industrial lines. Foreigners are brought here, and a mean advantage taken of them, and when the I. W. W. is explained all will know how it helps them. He later on took up the collection to defray the expenses of the open air meeting.

Connolly who nearly precipitated a riot because of his reference to Daniel A. Hagerty was the first speaker. He said "this hero who is such a hero, that they came by tens of thousands to see his dead body, in such multitudes that some were crushed, is Daniel A. Hagerty. I say nothing against or for him, but simply point to him as a symptom of our trouble. On the other hand if I speak of Rockefeller don't think I denounce him.

I speak and condemn the servitude for which he stood. Hagerty is an American hero tonight, because he went to the front to fight the battle of international capitalism. Judged by the ordinary economic standard of today he was a failure. He could not get a living, and to procure food and clothing and shelter to keep him alive he went into service. His mission was to educate his physical capacity in order to kill as many of the enemy as possible. His enemy? No!

Connolly then went on to show the amount of money invested in Mexico by Americans, and said the American flag does not fly in Greenland because there are no minerals in that ground. Because there are in Mexico, that is why Hagerty was in Vera Cruz.

"There is not a man among you who wants to go to Mexico in case of war, unless it is one of the Fore River capitalists.Hagerty went down there for $15 per month and found, and was willing to fight the capitalist fight, and that is why he is on the front page of the papers. If he had not been an economic failure, and I do not condemn the present standard, he would be no hero.

"In all, 27 men, women and children met death at Colorado the day before Hagerty was killed. None of them have front page mention and why not? Because the workers of Colorado were fighting their own fight, and Hagerty fought for the capitalist. That is why. In the interest of the I. W. W., I ask you of my blood, to forget your differences, to remember the words of Christ who never told any one to kill another." (Jeers.)

The meeting broke up about 10.30, after Ettor had talked about 90 minutes and answered questions during the balance of the time.

Ettor in his speech said: "Workers are running a race unlike all others. In a foot race the winner gets something, but in this race, in which the boss plays the driver and speed setter, there is only one premium, the faster you work the faster you wear out, and the sooner you reach the graveyard.

"In the huge workshops there is no God, no Christ, no Bible , no crucifix. The office has no Bible, they have the bank book. It is far more interesting than all the ten commandments and all the Sermons on the Mount. Their crucifix is a yard stick or a tape measure.

"There is no maximum wage for the I. W. W. I say get as much as you can. We are in Mexico today because of the instinct to serve rather than to ride on the other fellows back."

CALLED TO WAKEFIELD

The Metropolitan Park police officers who were at the District Court this morning were summoned to Wakefield and all left immediately. The message was received by Sergt. Garrett. This morning the strikers attacked workmen going through the gates at the rattan factory, stoned cars carrying other workmen and overpowered the local police. The Metropolitan officers were ordered to prepare for riot duty.

Ettor arrived after the demonstration. He expressed surprise, saying everything was peaceable Thursday when he left. The man he accused of starting the riot he said had an I. W. W. card which he had secured under false pretences.

NEW ENGLAND STOMACH SUFFERERS FIND SHORT ROAD BACK TO HEALTH

Victims of Digestive Disorders Tell of Wonderful Effect of Mayr Remedy.

Many New England stomach sufferers and, in fact, people all over the United States have found remarkable results from the use of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

Hundreds in this state alone have taken this remedy and tell today of the benefits they received. Its effects come quickly—the first dose convinces; no long treatment. Here is what two who have taken it say:

MRS. S. E. JOHNSON, 61 Whitmore Street, Hartford, Conn., wrote: "My pains left me the next day after taking the treatment. It is simply wonderful how it relieved me."

MRS. CLARE SHAW, 21 Majestic Avenue, Norwood, R. I., wrote: "I received your sample treatment and it saved my life. I am better now than I have been for 20 years."

Mrs. Shaw had been treated both here and abroad and had undergone an operation. She found relief quickly. These statements come from letters among thousands. The remedy is known everywhere for its true merit.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many say it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox's drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

STRONG PLEA FOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE

Made by Margaret Foley at an Open Air Meeting in City Square

Men Now Responsible For the Evils Which Exist

A crowd of two hundred or more gathered in City Square Friday night to hear Margaret Foley, the well known suffrage speaker. Miss Foley was advertised to speak at 8 o'clock but womanlike she was not on time, it being 8.40 before her automobile made its appearance. By that time many of those who had gathered during the early part of the evening had become tired of waiting and had gone elsewhere. Her automobile was gaily decorated with flags, prominent among which was the large yellow flag of the suffragettes. On the back of the car was a large sign reading "Woman votes in 1915."

As the car came to a stop near the fountain, Officer Charles Olson approached, and taking of his helmet bowed low before the women, and pointed to the place where she might speak. Miss Foley was in fine voice, and spoke for about thirty minutes, telling why women should be given the right of franchise.

It has been argued by some said Miss Foley, that if given the ballot, the bad women would not vote right, but a woman no matter how bad she is given the vote, can be depended upon when she enters the booth with the Australian ballot to vote right. But five percent of the inmates of jails throughout the country are women, which leaves ninety-five percent men. You do not allow these women to vote yet when these bad men are released from jail they have the right to vote. All we ask is a square deal. Men claim they need the vote to protect themselves and working women need the vote fully as much to regulate the conditions under which they work. There are a few women who meet in parlors of private houses, among congenial friends, and eat and drink, who are against votes for women, but once it is obtained these will be the first to take advantage of it.

Business women need the vote to secure for themselves a fair show in their business. Tax-paying women need the vote to protect their propery. Mothers need the vote to regulate the moral conditions under which their children are brought up.

Because women have to obey the laws, because they suffer from bad government; because they are housewives; because they are consumers,

PRESENTATION TO JAMES PEASE

For Over Fifteen Years at Fore River Shipyard

Just after he had "rung in" last night at the pass gate of Fore River shipyard, James Pease, was called by Chief Bradley to step to the desk. The chief in a few well chosen words presented Mr. Pease with a handsome meerschaum pipe. The chief spoke of the long and honorable service put in by Mr. Pease on behalf of this and former companies, and expressed the hope that while retiring from actual work that he would long be spared to smoke his pipe in peace and that all his troubles both large and small would go up in smoke.

Mr. Pease in accepting the gift, feelingly replied, and said he would always look back to the days spent at shipyard with pleasure, and that he would always hold fellow workers dear to him. Mr. Pease has been employed by Fore River for over 15 years. He is a Civil war veteran, and a member of many organizations, who wish he may long be spared to wend his ways among his numerous friends.

Ambassador Page says that writing is as uncertain work as gambling. Most people, though, are sure to get their manuscripts back if they enclose stamps.

THALIA CLUB DRAMATICS

Two Enjoyable Plays and Musical Program

All the characters who took part in the Thalia Club dramatics at High School hall last evening did exceedingly well, so that it would be unfair to praise one and not mention each and every one. All the young ladies in the two casts were the recipients of flowers.

The casts of characters in "A Bachelor's Banquet" was:

Major Rattan, Gilbert Hamlin
Dick Foster, Willard Crocker
Nat Stillman, Andrew Deane
Mrs. Mortimer, Miss Priscilla Robinson
Della Mortimer Miss Florence Crowell
Constance Oldfield Miss Ruth Jones

The cast for "Ici On Parle Francais" was:

Mr. Spriggins Donald Crocker
Victor Du Blois, Reginald Gay
Mrs. Spriggins Miss Margaret Magee
Angelina Spriggins Miss Ramah Baker
Julia Miss Dorothy Brokaw
Anna Maria Miss Margaret Atwood

The plays were given under the direction of the dramatic committee which includes Miss Jordine Davison, chairman, Miss Katherine Reed, Miss Hazel Livingston, and Miss Dawes, Miss O'Neil and Miss Zeller.

Music by the High School orchestra, under the direction of Miss Maude Amsden, shows that the school has several accomplished musicians enrolled. They played like veterans and the selections were a pleasing part of the program. C. Carroll O'Neill contributed a solo, and it was so good that he was twice recalled.

MAY FESTIVAL AT ADAMS

Each Grade Contributed Feature to Program

Throngs of children of the Adams school attended the May festival given in the school hall Friday evening by the Art committee of the Parent-Teachers Association. An attractive program was finely given and is being repeated this aternoon.

The numbers were under the direction of the teachers. The program was:

Little Red Riding Hood, Grade 1 pupils, Miss Euphrasia Hernan.

The Three Wishes, playlet, Grade Two, Miss Lora Lamb.

Billy Bob Tail, Pussy Cat's Visit to the Queen, by Grade 3, Miss Elizabeth Dolan.

Good Night March, costumed, Grade 2 and 3, Miss Martha Isaac.

Folk Dancing, by Grades 5 and 6, Miss Ruth Kemp.

A Geography Dream, by Grade 5, Miss Bessie Roberts.

May Day, by Grade 4, Mrs. Lucy A. Page.

Pumpkin Pie, Grade 7 boys, Miss Jane Griffin.

May Pole dance by children, Miss Jane Griffin.

Waking the Flowers, by Grade 6 Miss Elizabeth Ross.

The hall was decorated with pink roses and peach blossoms under the direction of Miss Nellie Desmond, Quincy avenue. The booths scattered about the hall were in charge of the following:—cake, Mrs. Roderick McLellan; ice cream, Miss Mary Griffin; tea, Mrs. George Linton; punch, Mrs. James Craig; candy, Mrs. Albert Williams.

Avoid White Paper.

White paper is not as good as blue or brown for wrapping up things that are to be put away for a long while as the chloride of lime in the paper will fade fabrics.

EXPRESSMEN GET PERMITS

Legally Passed by City Council Says Solicitor

The three expressmen who were denied their permit to transport liquor on account of the refusal of the Mayor to approve the orders, and which orders were later passed over the veto by the City Council, will get their permits, and in fact one of them already has received it. There was a question if the permit would be legal without the signature of the Mayor and the City Clerk put the question up to the City Solicitor for a ruling.

This morning the City Solicitor made his ruling and in consequence of it the permits will be issued. In view of the widespread interest in the question the ruling of the City Solicitor is printed in full. It was as follows:—

Emery L. Crane, Esq., City Clerk, Quincy, Mass.

Dear Sir:—In reply to your letter of the 12th inst., relating to orders of the Council granting permits to transport liquor, I would reply as follows:

Under the provisions of Section 2, Chapter 421, Acts of 1906, "the Mayor and Aldermen in cities—shall annually grant and issue one or more permits—" for the transportation of liquor.

Section 3 of said Chapter 421 provides that "all permits issued pursuant to this act shall be signed by the Licensing Board, shall be recorded by the City of Town Clerk before becoming operative—"

Chapter 8 of the Revised Laws. Section 5, 10th clause, provides that "the words "Mayor and Alderman" shall mean Board of Aldermen except as applied to appointments."

In the City of Quincy the City Council takes the place of the Board of Aldermen and I am of the opinion that the meaning of the words "Mayor and Aldermen" as used in Chapter 421 of the Acts of 1906 should be construed in accordance with the definition set forth in Chapter 8 of the Revised Laws.

The City Council having voted to grant permits to transport liquor to Carl Lilja, Maloney's Express and M. J. Connelly, the Mayor having returned the same without his approval and the City Council on the 11th inst. having voted to grant said permits, notwithstanding the objection of the Mayor, I am of the opinion that said votes have been properly passed by the City Council.

The responsibility of granting the licenses is cast upon the City Council and the individual members of the licensing board in signing the permits perform a merely ministerial duty.

When the permits are properly signed, it becomes your duty as City Clerk to record the same.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) Walter S. Pinkham,
City Solicitor

PLANS FOR NEW PARISH HOUSE

Substantial Addition to Unitarian Church at Wollaston

Will Have Two Floors, One With Large Hall

A special parish meeting will be held, Monday evening, by the Wollaston Unitarian society to take definite and official action concerning the erection of a parish house.

At a meeting of members of the parish on May 6 it was unanimously voted to erect a parish house. The meeting on Monday evening will be held to officially ratify this action, and further discuss the proposed plans.

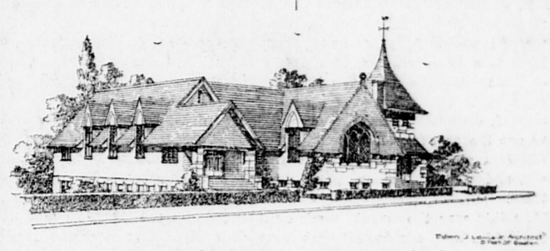
A parish house committee of fifteen headed by Roy C. Baker has been busily at work since the recent meeting collecting subscriptions and pledges, with the result that a substantial amount will probably be reported at the meeting Monday.

Composing the committee are Roy C. Baker, Frederick H. Bishop, Louis B. Weston, Dr. John L. Merrill, Albert R. Moulton, Rev. Carl G. Horst, Edward J. Cummings, Mrs. Harold Green, Eugene H Sprague, Charles E. Barker, William E. Rowe, Mrs. Ralph W. Oldham, E. Tyler Brigham, Leon D. Browne and Charles T. Baker.

At the May 6 meeting the plans herewith presented were approved and the completed building will cost $12,000. One half of this will be raised by subscription, the other half by mortgage.

The addition will be of two stories, and will be constructed along the same architectural lines as the present church. Like the church the first story will be of stone and the second of wood.

Entrance will be made through a vestibule 12 by 18 from which a stairway will lead down to the coatrooms in the vestry of the present church.



PRESENT CHURCH WITH ADDITION.

"Two men down," in President Wilson's team of daughters! Miss Margaret Wilson at the bat!

The principal result expected from the meeting of the peace mediators is that envoys will have a fine chance to see Niagara Falls.

The man who wears the first straw hat down town has some excellent qualifications for success as a baseball umpire.

The undertakers seem to be the only force in Mexico that is really working for peace.

If a Congressman can get appropriations for his own district at a rate that would bankrupt the country if every district got them, he is sure to be re-elected.

ENCOURAGE FLOWER GARDENING

One of the prettiest public movements of recent years has been the competition established in many places, for the beautifying of home grounds with flowers and shrubbery.

A wonderful transformation can be made in a small estate by a little tasteful work. A raw and weedy lawn is a temptation to the children of the neighborhood to turn it into a sand pit. When you get flowers started, even the kidlets can be made to see the necessity of keeping off. Children almost invariably like flowers, and are willing to help raise them.

In this way the most unpleasant parts of a town can be made the most attractive. A little cottage surrounded by grass and flower beds attracts more interest than a handsome mansion. In the former case the impression is given that it is the personal work and love for beauty of the owners. In the case of the wealthy estate, it is too evidently the paid work of hired men.

GRAND OPERA SINGER.

One of the great figures of the musical world, Madame Lillian Nordica, has just passed away. As the world sees her life, it was a scene of cheering audiences, dignified by the praise of the severest critics. For the place which she occupied a thousand young women are striving. The laborious effort, the sacrifices by which she reached success, are not realized.

There is something pathetic in the fruitless effort which a host of singers are making to attain a success of this kind. Every city of any size has a number of voices which in some respects can be compared with the great operatic stars. But for every one that makes a large success, a whole regiment is turned down. The same old names appear year after year at the big opera houses. It seems cruel to encourage young people to enter a field where so few attain the ends they are working for.

The public is very whimsical. It is not enough that a singer have vocal cords producing organ tones, mellow and rounded, capable of filling a great auditorium. It is not enough that these be trained to the limit of graceful flexibility. A singer must also possess gifts of enchanting vivacity, throwing the spell of her vivacious and winning personality over the audience.

To become a great singer a girl ought to be under the hands of a competent teacher by the time she is nine years old. She must be practising trills while her comrades are dancing. She must have a robust body capable of living in drafty sleeping cars, and eating the indigestible food of hotels. And she must be backed by thousands of dollars, to place her in the best musical schools.

It is a great responsibility to encourage those who have real gifts, but fall just a little short, to try the dizzy path to this kind of success. Better the simpler pleasures and more certain rewards of the church choir and the friendly musical circles of home!

EASTERN STAR DANCING PARTY

Quincy chapter, Order of Eastern Star, held an invitation dancing party in Alpha hall Friday evening which was attended by 60 couples. A carnival spirit prevailed throughout the evening and the modern dances prevailed.

Exhibition dances of the Brazilienne, Maxixe and thes Hesitation waltz were given by Miss Marion Bills of Upland road and her brother, Earl Bills. Their interpretation of these, the most graceful of the modern dances was warmly applauded.

The grand march was early in the evening and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Musgrave were the leading couple. Later Mrs. Thomas Cassey led the favor dance, when caps were distributed to the men and fans to the girls. Refreshments were served, consisting of frappe and ices. Music for dancing was by Reed's orchestra of Dorchester.

The committee in charge was Mrs. Gertrude Cassey, Mrs. Amy Musgrave, Miss Margaret Milne, Miss Mildred Crowleyl, Miss Annie Rose, Miss Cora Barnicoat, Miss Elizabeth Laing, Miss Anna Brundage and Mss Jessie Raymond. The men on the committee were Thomas Cassey, William Tarbox and Charles L. Gilliatt.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

The boys of the Braintree Y. M. C. A. held a "mock trial" at the parish house of the North church last evening which was one of the most mirth-provoking occasions of the season. The defendant was Richard Hunt and under the alias of "Dick" was tried on the charge of having "with malice and mischevious nature aforethought bruised, injured, and demolished with a rock a certain bottle placed upon the limb of a tree until it, the said bottle, was no longer capable of fulfilling its original purpose." The prosecution was in the name of "The Commonwealth of Manomet." Frederick C Folsom and Herbert A. Bryant were the able counsel and Ernest P. Conlon occupied the bench The judge's rulings showed much wisdom and no personal interest in the case, with the result that "Dick" was fairly tried and is today a free man.

Mr. Conlon demonstrated as only a clever entertainer can the possibilities in an impromptu mock-trial, he having insisted there should be no set plan or rehearsal. Mr. Folsom, as counsel for the defendant, was a good second and turned many threatening points to the safety of his client.

The evening was of further particular interest to the Y. M. C. A. members and their friends in that it was the first appearance of Irving T. Gumb before a Braintree audience. Mr. Gumb has been engaged as superintendent of the summer camp at Manomet for the entire summer and comes well fitted to make the conduct of the camp second to none in training and instructing his charges in the many activities of a boys' camp. Mr. Gumb is now a Junior in Brown University. Before going to Brown he was assistant boys' director at the Q. Y. M. C. A. For the past three summers he has been assistant superintendent of the Lowell Y. M. C. A. camps and also one of the playground directors of that, his home city. He has a reputation as speaker and story teller and since his engagement by the Braintree Association a few weeks ago has laid out a carefully planned season's work, including the sanitation and provisioning of the camp and its occupants. He was given a rousing reception by the boys.

The camp prospectus which was distributed during the evening promises well for the Braintree boys who have put in their applications for a season "in camp," and Mr. F. C. Folsom of the boys' work committee is advising all who expect to be in camp to make their applications early, as the accommodations are limited.

James E. Folsom, chairman of the finance committee, is busy with plans for augmenting the Association's funds by a sum of five hundred dollars to cover necessary expenditures beyond the "board bill" of the boys.

Overheard at the Club.

"Mazie Gayway says she makes her husband pay her a dollar every time he kisses her. She's saving for a limousine." "Now, if she'd only adopted a similar plan before she met Gayway, she might have had a whole garage."—Judge.

MANY HEADS BATTERED

Police Have Strenuous Time With Riotous Wakefield Strikers

Wakefield, Mass., May 16.—Women with babies in their arms and with crying children tugging at their skirts, threw themselves into the midst of two riots here which marked the crisis in the five-weeks' strike at the rattan works of Heywood Bros. and Wakefield company and fought side by side with the 800 striking Italians, who resented the importation of strike breakers.

The first riot occurred when the loyal employes and strike breakers attempted to go to work. The other was at the closing hour.

At its conclusion, one policeman, Benjamin Finklestein of the metropolitan park police, was sent to a hospital, where he is in a serious condition from having been struck on the head by a brick; four of the rioters had to be carried into the town hall, suffering from their injuries; six others were arrested charged with being implicated in the rioting.

There were dozens of broken heads, and through one street blood spots at frequent intervals showed where the fight had been waged most bitterly.

ACCEPTANCE TESTS OF NEW DESTROYER

Show the McDougal Equal to Contract Requirements

Bath, Me., May 16.—The torpedo boat destroyer McDougal successfully completed the last of her official builders' acceptance tests, a ten-hour endurance run, at 15¼ knots.

The start was made off Portland light and the destroyer circled several times between the ship and Monhegan island. The destroyer is expected to be ready for delivery early next month.

Officials of the Bat Iron Works announced that all the trials were highly successful in every way, and that the McDougal proved herself equal to all contract requirements.

On the four-hour top speed run at sea she made 30.72 knots, the requirement being 30.05 knots. The top speed for 15 minutes was 31.02.

Captain Dingley said that for a four-mile dash the vessel made 33.07 knots.

STORY OF ROSE CORROBORATED

Startling Admissions by Widow of "Lefty Louie"

CONFESSES HUSBAND'S GUILT

Backs Up Testimony That Gunmen Took Tip From "Bald Jack" to Kill Rosenthal — Saw Husband Give Them Money and Lied to Save Him From Death—Becker Is Hard Hit

New York, May 16.—Breaking the silence beyond the electric chair, Mrs. Lillian Rosenberg, widow of "Lefty Louie," the gunman, virtually confessed her husband's part in the killing of Herman Rosenthal in testifying at the trial of Charles Becker, who is charged with the same crime.

She was the people's witness, and her startling admissions created the first big sensation of the trial and brought gloom to the Becker camp.

The prosecution's promise of new corroboration of "Bald Jack" Rose's story of the murder plot was forcefully realized. The gunmen's widow testified that Rose came as Becker's agent to the apartment where she and her husband lived and told "Lefty Louie" that the only way he could keep Becker from "framing up" himself and the other gunmen for carrying concealed weapons was to kill Rosenthal. Subsequent events showed that the gunmen took Rose's tip.

"I lied to save my husband," she told Lawyer Manton, Becker's chief counsel, when he pointed to the record of her testimony at the gunmen's trial which showed that she denied she heard any talk about Becker, or killing Rosenthal, between Rose and "Lefty Louie."

Inadvertently, counsel for the defense emphasized the damaging nature of her testimony when he sought to discredit the witness by asking her if she had ever told it to any one else beside the district attorney.

"I told Rabbi Kopfstein," she said, "and I promised my husband——"

Her answer was cut off at this point with an objection by Manton.

Rabbi Kopfstein walked with "Lefty Louie" to the electric chair. He is rabbi of the Bronx synagogue, where the parents of the dead gunman worship.

The gunman's widow furnished another prop for Rose's story by testifying that on the evening after the murder "Lefty Louie" came home with a package of money, and she practically saw him distribute it among the other gunmen, all of whom were there. That night, she said, they "packed up their things" and left the city.

In direct examination yesterday Harry Vallon corroborated the main points of Rose's story, and was then turned over to the defense. He admitted under cross examination that he had known Rosenthal for fifteen years and that they had had a disagreement six months before Rosenthal was murdered. The witness denied, however, that he had quarrelled with Rosenthal. It is a contention of the defense that Rosenthal was a victim of a gamblers' quarrel.

It was a big day for the prosecution. The added strength to the case against Becker, over that presented by the people at the first trial, began to show. Beyond the shadow cast over the defendant by the wife of the dead Rosenberg lurked another foreboding influence in the testimony of George H. Young, formerly secretary to George Dougherty, second deputy police commissioner under Rhinelander Waldo.

Young almost clinched the contention of the prosecution that Becker made no effort to apprehend Rose when he knew the police and the district attorney were looking for him after the murder, and when he (Becker) also knew Rose was hiding at the time in the home of Harry Pollock.

The opening of the second chapter of the people's case—the chapter of new witnesses—promises further sensational testimony when court reconvenes on Monday. It became known that Charles B. Plitt, one time press agent for Becker, when the latter was in command of the famous "strong arm squad," has turned state's evidence and will testify for the people.

Plitt is expected to furnish corroborative evidence of the now famous "Harlem conference," where Becker is said to have given Webber and Rose the final word to "croak" Rosenthal, according to the testimony of the three informers. His close association with Becker up to the very night of the murder raises the possibility of damaging testimony to the defendant which cannot be weighed at this time.

CHILDRENS AUTO OUTING

Will Be Taken to Nantasket Beach June 10

Over 700 automobiles will be required to transport the 2500 crippled orphaned and destitute children and their attendants to and from Nantasket beach, Wednesday, June 10, when the annual outing to these little unfortunates will be given under the auspices of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association. Almost a thousand more children than attended the outing last year will be provided for and Secretary Chester I. Campbell, Wollaston, states that in order not to disappoint a single child he will have to rely on the generosity of owners of automobiles for the loan of their car and a driver for this occasion.

The Boston Automobile Dealers' Association have already subscribed about half of the number of cars that will be needed so it is evident that private owners of cars in Greater Boston will have to give their automobiles in order to make the affair a success. It is no small task to arrange for such a huge fleet of motor cars and obtain sufficient funds for the feeding and entertainment of this army of children. Secretary Campbell, however, delights in this particular work and he states that if hard work will make it a success it is already assured of the largest outing ever given by the Association.

All communications relative to the loan of cars or donations should be made to Chester I. Campbell, 5 Park Square, Boston.

QUINCY HIGH TENNIS VICTORY

The tennis team of the Quincy High school, playing exceptionally well considering their short preparation, defeated the Boston Latin school team on the courts of the Quincy club Friday afternoon. Their victories were straight in the singles and in the doubles they split even. The best spirit prevails among the members and all are striving to annex victories.

The summary:

Crother of Quincy beat Gordon, 5-7, 6-1, 6-1.

Favreau of Quincy beat Campbell, 6-2, 6-1.

Rollins of Quincy beat Sullivan, 6-4 6-3.

White and Barstow of Quincy beat Sullivan and Murphy of Boston, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

CRANCH VICTORY.

Cranch beat Quincy in the first extra innings game this season on Friday afternoon, 2 to 1. There were two out and two strikes on Nelson when Tapper stole home with the extra run in the eighth. The game was very fast and full of clean cut plays. The score by innings;

Cranch	1 0 0 0 0 0 0 1—2

Batteries—Tapper and Nelson. LeBlanc and Spinney.

Tennis lovers will travel toward the courts of the Quincy Tennis club Tuesday to see Quincy High meet Melrose in an interscholastic match. From the showing of both teams it will be a case of "when Greek meets Greek."

LOSE AGAIN TO REVERE

Quincy High Unable to Strike Winning Gate

Quincy High lost its seventh straight game on Friday, and was defeated for the second time this season by Revere High school at Revere. The winners were strong at the bat, hitting in the pinches, while Quincy was unable to fathom the delivery of Webb.

Webb, Johnson and Colburn knocked in two runs apiece with two baggers while Quincy's scoring was brought about by Dolan who sent two men home with a double and then scored himself on errors.

The slugging of O'Connor, who was relieved by Anderson, for a total of 14 hits, tells the story of why Quincy did not win. They fielded better than Revere but were weak with the willow, and in the fourth Creedon and Larkin fanned with two on. In the ninth Creedon and Stedman did the same.

The feature play of the game was the spearing of a line drive by Sawyer in the ninth, doubling Colburn at third. The play was made so fast that a triple play could easily have been made had Revere's slate been clean. Larkin also made a pretty catch of a fly in short field. The summary:

Revere	0 3 0 2 0 2 0 1 x—8

Runs made by—Kirstein 2, Brodbine 2, Webb, Harvey 2, Colburn, Creedon, Stedman, Dolan. Two Base Hits—Webb, Colburn, Johnson, Dolan Cox. Stolen Bases—Reardon, Bates Brodbine, Sabetti 2. Bases on Balls by—Johnson 2, Webb 2, O'Connor, Anderson. Struck Out by—Johnson 4, Webb 7, O'Connor 6. Sacrifice Hits—Ferinoyle 2, Ford. Double Plays—Sawyer to Ford. Hit by Pitched Ball—Larkin, Stedman, Sabetti. Wild Pitches—Webb, Passed Balls—Colburn. Umpire—Colburn.

WILLARDS LOSE.

The Massachusetts Fields school beat the Willards on Smith's field Friday afternoon, 3 to 1. The game was one of the most interesting of the season. Ganzel, for the Fields school, fanned nine men, while Keogler of the Willards secured one less. Inability of the Willards to hit in the pinches cost them the victory. The score by innings:

Fields School	0 1 1 0 1 x—3
Willard	0 0 0 1 0 0—1

Batteries—Ganzel and Ranagan; Koegler and Marini.

BIG SCORE.

John Hancocks rolled up the record score of the season in defeating the Atherton Houghs 23 to 0 Friday afternoon. The winners suggested that the game be stopped in the fourth but the Neckers were game and played it out.

Many reached first on passes and scored through loose playing. The Hancocks made nine hits. The winning battery was McDonald and Thompson, while Mowry and Jackson performed for the losers.

AN ULTIMATUM SENT TO HUERTA

Must Supply Information as to the Fate of Parks

PRIVATE REPORTED EXECUTED

Funston Hears Man Thought to Have Been Insane Was Shot as Spy and His Body Burned—Peace Meeting Is Postponed, Negotiations at Niagara Falls Being Put Off Until Wednesday—Revolutionists Within Eighteen Miles of Capital and Foreigners Make Ready to Defend Themselves—Rebels In Full Control at Tampico—United States Takes Advantage of Three Weeks' Lull

Washington, May 16.—The United States demanded of the Huerta government news of the fate of Private Parks, the American infantryman who strayed into Mexican lines near Vera Cruz, declaring that unless information about him was given immediately, the American government would consider that "an unfriendly and hostile act" had been committed, in violation of the understanding for a cessation of hostilities pending mediation.

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan drafted a strong communication, after receiving word from the Brazilian minister in Mexico City that Parks had been "executed." It is believed the communication demands that Huerta produce the missing man, dead or alive, within a certain stipulated time.

To back up such a demand the army forces are getting ready. Large quantities of supplies are being shipped to Galveston from New York and other stations.

With the supplies on hand the troops remaining at Texas City could be under way for Vera Cruz in three hours. Should the army go into active service it seems almost certain that an alliance will be formed with the constitutionalists.

Parks Shot as Spy

No mention was made in the minister's report of whether Parks was shot as a spy after a court martial or whether his body was burned, as has persistently been reported to General Funston. The American government cabled the Brazilian minister to inform the Huerta government of the strong feeling of the United States in the matter, directing him to make vigorous representations concerning the incident.

The note asked the minister to protest to the Huerta government that, if Parks were alive, the failure to explain his whereabouts was in itself an unfriendly attitude, and that if the soldier has been executed, as has been reported, such execution of a man who came into the Mexican lines in full uniform was contrary to military procedure of civilized nations and an act of hostility.

Parks Apparently Insane

Parks, who, according to Funston, was apparently insane, voluntarily rode into the Mexican lines. As he went in uniform, the United States contends he should have been treated as a prisoner of war and not executed as a spy. The burning of his body, which is indicated in reports from Funston as well as by stories reaching the Brazilian legation in Mexico City, is held by the United States to be contrary to the rules of civilized warfare.

The three South American mediators had received no communication from the United States about the Parks incident, and persons in the confidence of the president said the affair probably would not interfere with the beginning of the mediation proceedings, though it was recalled in many quarters that the United States accepted the tender of good offices with the reservation that no hostile acts toward Americans should occur while the negotiations were in progress.

Silliman Is Safe

The receipt of word by the British embassy from Sir Lionel Carden, British minister in Mexico City, that J. R. Silliman, the missing American vice consul, was on his way by rail from Saltillo to Mexico City, brought the first news about Silliman in several days, considerably relieving the anxiety that had been felt by officials. The British vice consul at Saltillo telegraphed the information to Sir Lionel Carden.

The Parks and Silliman incidents have been looked upon in many quarters as likely to embarrass the mediation negotiations.

Postponement of Peace Meeting

The peace negotiations which were to open at Niagara Falls, Ont., on Monday have been postponed until Wednesday. All of the South American envoys and the American delegates to the meeting have as a consequence postponed their departure from Washington. This delay will give an opportunity for Huerta's envoys to reach Washington and to tarry there for a while.

Whether the delay has anything to do with the fate of Tampico and the acute situation at Mexico City will be determined later. Certainly with the constitutionalists in full control of Tampico, with Villa advancing on Saltillo and San Luis Potosi with a large and apparently well-equipped army, with Zapata operating within eighteen miles of the City of Mexico on the south, with revolt seething within the capital itself, with the American army at Vera Cruz and with the dictator's peace envoys approaching Niagara Falls with "full powers" to settle the differences between himself and the United States, Huerta's back is, indeed, against the wall.

Crisis Seems Very Near

So imminent does the crisis appear to Mexico City that the foreigners there are looking over their supplies of arms an ammunition in anticipation of a siege.

Just what has become of that part of the federal garrison that sought to escape from Tampico is not known. If it reaches safety, hemmed in as it is by desert and rebels, it will be lucky.

The ineffective part played by the federal gunboats was due to lack of ammunition. For this same reason they were unable to blockade the port, and have hurried to Puerto Mexico for ammunition and instructions. If they can get the former they may return and prevent by armed force the rebels using Tampico for the importation of arms.

Huerta's Attitude Unknown

President Wilson's cabinet discussed the Mexican situation at very great length. Secretary Bryan told the cabinet that a postponement of the mediation conferences was at the request of the Huerta envoys. They sent word direct to the mediators that there were a number of matters they desired to confer upon among themselves before joining the other conferees. While the ostensible excuse was the long journey and the difficulty of close railroad connections, it was believed the Huerta representatives are far from being a unit as to what they can or cannot do.

The cabinet considered reports from Rear Admiral Mayo at Tampico. There was a difference of opinion as to what action this government should take if the Huerta gunboats declare a blockade of the harbor of Tampico. It was decided that for the present no definite action would be planned, but that the entire matter would be held in abeyance until it was seen what was going to happen at Tampico.

Lull Taken Advantage Of

The cabinet meeting again emphasized the state of preparedness of the United States forces. The lull of the last three weeks has been taken advantage of to such an extent that the army is now almost on an absolute war basis, while the navy is ready for any development.

Reports that the constitutionalists might be represented at Niagara Falls were revived. When Bryan was told of the report he said:

"I have no knowledge of any such proposition. So far as I know, General Carranza may change his original position that he will not participate in the mediation conferences."

Despite the Bryan statement, however, South American diplomats who have been following the situation said they believed Carranza will have representatives within call should the mediators find that Huerta's representatives are willing to fall in with a plan to settle the whole Mexican trouble at once.

Conditions In Mexico

Order rapidly is being restored in Tampico, reports indicate, and Rear Admiral Mayo, with the Des Moines and Dolphin, has resumed a position in the river in front of the town. It was known that practically all foreigners had left Tampico before its evacuation by the federals, and no reports of damage to foreign property in the final fighting has been received.

With practically all northern Mexico in control of the constitutionalists, Villa is preparing to lead the assault against Saltillo. His army has been provisioned for a thirty days' campaign and it was said that apparently there were plenty of arms and ammunition for the siege.

Constitutional strategists have figured that if they took Saltillo the federal garrison there would concentrate at San Luis Potosi, leaving that city as one of the points where Huerta would make a final stand against the constitutionalist campaign aimed at Mexico City.

POLICE CALLED TO QUELL MILITANTS

Suffragettes Make a Farce of Court Proceedings

London, May 16.—Sentences of a month's imprisonment each were pronounced on "General" Mrs. Flora Drummond and Mrs. Dacre Fox, militant suffragette leaders, charged with disturbing the peace by camping on the doorsteps of the residences of Sir Edward Carson and Lord Lansdowne.

The accused refused to give sureties to keep the peace for six months. They turned the court proceedings into a farce by interrupting the evidence and continuing to talk and jeer at the magistrate while he was pronouncing sentence.

When ordered to be taken to the cells the women became so violent that it was necessary to call in policemen to remove them from the prisoners' inclosure. They were taken out of the court screaming and shrieking.

J. FREDERICK TRUNDY, Petitioner

Respectfully represents your petitioner, J. Frederick Trundy, of Boston in our County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that he is the owner in fee of a certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated in Randolph, in our County of Norfolk bounded as follows:—

Westerly on High Street; Northerly on land formerly of the late George L. Binney; Easterly on land formerly of the heirs of Joshua Mann; and Southerly on land formerly of the heirs of Thomas Reed. Containing about one acre of land and being all and the same premises described in deed to me from Thomas Kiley dated August 6, 1913 recorded with Norfolk Deeds, Book 1266, Page 127.

Your petitioner further says that said premises were formerly owned by one Ellen Simpson, now Ellen Howard, then of said Randolph but now of Canton in our said County of Norfolk; that on the 8th day of March, 1870 she, together with her then husband, William H. Simpson, conveyed said property by mortgage deed to one Loring Binney, of said Randolph, which mortgage was duly recorded with Norfolk Deeds Book 390, Page 226 and given to secure the payment of the principal sum of fifty (50) dollars one year from the date thereof with interest at the rate of eight per cent. The property was subsequently conveyed by said Ellen Howard to said Thomas Kiley by deed dated August 20, 1883, recorded as aforesaid Book 549, Page 561.

Your petitioner further says that he and his predecessors in title have been in uninterrupted possession of said premises for more than twenty years after the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the full performance of the condition thereof; and that said mortgage has never been discharged of record and is a cloud on the title.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that this Honorable Court shall adjudge, order and decree that said mortgage is not a valid incumbrance upon the title of said premises and that the same be discharged, and for such other and further relief as to this Honorable Court shall seem proper.

JOHN FREDERICK TRUNDY

His Cousins

They Came to See Him at College at the Wrong Time

By F. A. MITCHEL

"What's the matter, Alec?"

"Matter enough! I've an exam coming off on Wednesday on a subject I know nothing about. I'm practicing for twirler for the varsity team and have left preparation for this exam for the last three days before it takes place, when I propose to bone day and night, braced by strong tea (and sandwiches during the night), till the bell rings for the ordeal, go right in before I spill any of it out of my cranium or it has a chance to evaporate and go through just as if I had been studying regularly."

"Why do you need to be so well prepared? Couldn't you scrape through by answering the minimum number of the questions?"

"I've got to take an oral exam, and you know very well what that means. I shall be called on to start in anywhere, haphazard, and reel it out by the yard. If I happen to strike a place I don't know anything about I'm flunked."

"Well, then, why don't you carry out your plan to stuff yourself?"

"Why don't I? Read that."

Alexander Pomeroy handed his chum, William Chandler, a letter from his mother stating that his two cousins, Belle and Lucy Winchester, the daughters of her favorite sister, had come on from Colorado, where they had always lived, to make her a visit. They had never seen a large university and were especially anxious to visit one. She had proposed to them to go to H. to inspect the college, and they were delighted with the plan. They would come down Monday morning and remain till Wednesday afternoon. Of course they would need some one to pilot them—in fact, show them attention during their stay in H. The writer thought that since the end of the term was at hand, when the breaking up was about to take place and not much doing, Alec would have plenty of time to devote to his cousins.

"Nothing doing at the end of the term, eh?" remarked Billy Chandler. "I like that. I suppose your mammy considers exams perfunctory ceremonies. Are your cousins pretty girls?"

"How do I know? I've never seen either of them."

"Oh, you haven't? In that case I don't know but that I can help you out. Not having the muscles for athletics as you have, I'm obliged to take an interest in my studies or be bored with too much time to spare. I have passed all my exams but one and am well prepared for that. I wouldn't mind showing a couple of pretty girls the sights, and since they have never seen you I don't see why I shouldn't impersonate you."

"Will you?" exclaimed Alec, thrusting out his fist and taking his chum's hand in a viselike grip.

"If you like."

"It's a go. I shall be free to do a three days' grind, get through my exam, and what time I don't need for that I can put into twirl practice."

Monday afternoon Mr. Chandler was at the station to meet the incoming train, and, seeing a couple of very pretty girls, aged respectively nineteen and seventeen, alight and look around for some one, he stepped up to them and asked:

"Are you my cousins?"

"Yes," replied the elder of the two. "But you don't correspond with the descriptions we've had of you. We supposed we were going to meet an Ajax."

"You can't tell about us athletes. We cover our muscles with loose togs, and it's very deceptive."

"I'm Belle and she's Lucy."

The scamp put up his lips to each girl in turn for a cousinly kiss, which was granted without compunction. Then he led the way to his auto standing outside the station. They all stepped in, the two girls on the rear seats, and Billy took them to a boarding house where no students resided, for that would have been dangerous to his identity. Furthermore, he was not known to the two old maids who kept it and unblushingly gave his name as Alexander Pomeroy. Leaving the young ladies there till after luncheon, he returned to his room, where he found a friend, Tom Oglethorpe, in the act of filling a pipe. It had occurred to Billy that one girl would be far more companionable than two, so he let Tom into the secret and invited him to turn a party of three into one of four. Tom was nothing loath and agreed to join the party for an inspection of cottage buildings in the afternoon, to be followed by an automobile ride.

Never was a pleasanter visit made by two young ladies or enjoyed more by two young men than on this occasion. The girls were shown the chapel, the art building, the gymnasium and this and that and the other "hall" donated by alumni, most of whom had finished the careers for which the college had prepared them and gone to their long homes. There was a class reception to attend here, a debating match there, and it seemed that something had been provided every day for the visitors' entertainment.

Now, it so happened that the real Alec Pomeroy, who was preparing himself for an examination in conic sections, got a brand new practical idea into his head. "Wouldn't it be a good scheme," he mused, "for me to apply these principles of the ellipse, the parabola and the hyperbole to my twirling? Perhaps an hour's practice with a ball would not only rest me, but would help me to catch on to the principles involved. I would understand better the reasons for my curves, and it would help me in my exams."

Throwing down his books, he betook himself to a shed erected for practice in twirling and began to throw the ball at a hypothetical batsman set up for the purpose. While doing so he heard a voice behind him:

"This is the place where our baseball pitchers learn to do the 'drop,' the 'incurve' and other stunts that go to make a baseball twirler."

Looking around, Mr. Pomeroy saw his representative, Billy Chandler, Tom Oglethorpe and his two cousins, the girls, staring at him with the eyes of sightseers. Billy continued his remarks with the intonation of a Roman guide expatiating on the arch of Titus:

"This gentleman now practicing is our principal twirler. Twirlers are selected for having their brains in their shoulders, football men for their brains being located in their legs. You see before you Mr. William Chandler, of whom great things are expected during the coming baseball senson from the fact that he studies conic sections solely with the view to understanding the curves that will enable him to put a ball where he likes. Step this way, Mr. Chandler, I wish to present you to my cousins."

Alec Pomeroy ceased his practice and lumbered shamefacedly to the party. He was in trousers and sweater, and there was no hat on his head for him to doff to the ladies, only a forelock that hung down over his forehead. He had noted Billy's remarks about a pitcher's brains being in his shoulders and resolved to turn the tables on him.

"Your cousin Alec," he said to the girls, "is one of the first men in his class. His intellect is neither in his shoulders nor his legs; it is all in his head. Though he leads his class and is a pig in the matter of prizes, he is as modest as a little child. He is the soul of honor and the most popular man in college."

The speaker paused from his encomiums on himself for breath, and before he could recommence Billy led the girls away, remarking that flattery was odious to him.

"Why, Alec," said Belle, with whom he had paired from the first, "I didn't know you were such a prominent young man."

All pleasant as well as disagreeable affairs must have an end, and while Alec Pomeroy was scraping bottom on his examination his cousins were bidding Billy and Tom goodby. On their arrival at their aunt's they astonished her with the information they had received of her son's prominence in scholarship and popularity, which was adorned by his modesty. Mrs. Pomeroy was delighted, having supposed that her son had gone in for athletics rather than study.

This plot might have passed off without being exposed had not a mutual admiration sprung up between Billy Chandler and Belle Winchester. Billy was dying to see her again, but he could not go to visit her without giving away the deception that had been practiced on her. She wrote her cousin frequently, her letters being turned over to Billy and being answered by him in his chum's name, every letter of Billy's growing more and more affectionate. At last Belle wrote her "beloved cousin" that she was about to return to her home. This was too much for Billy, and he started at once to see her.

Billy's resolutions with regard to an immediate confession were excellent. The only trouble with them was the difficulty of his carrying them out. He expected to meet Mrs. Pomeroy, Belle and Lucy on arrival and had prepared some jocular remarks when Alec's mother should see a stranger instead of her son. But Mrs. Pomeroy and Lucy were out when he arrived. This upset his plans. However, he was so overjoyed at meeting with Belle that it didn't matter much—for the time being. He spent two hours with the young lady, during which, instead of beginning with a confession of his identity, he began with a confession of his feelings.

Suddenly the door of the library, in which the young persons sat, opened and Mrs. Pomeroy discovered her niece in close proximity to a stranger.

"Aunty," said Belle, jumping up, with a blush on her face, "Alec's come."

Mrs. Pomeroy stood mute with astonishment.

"Where is he?" she asked coldly.

"Why, here, of course. What do you mean?"

"I owe you all an explanation," stammered Billy, with a face as red as a cock's comb, and, beginning at the wrong end of his story, he got inextricably confused. But a series of questions from the older lady finally elicited the information required, and a smile settled on the face of Mrs. Pomeroy and Lucy. As for Belle, she didn't know whether to smile or to cry or to hide her blushing face in a lounge pillow.

Mrs. Pomeroy helped matters by thanking Billy for correcting her mistake in sending her cousins to Alec on the eve of an important examination, after which the meeting resolved itself into a reception of Billy's credentials in the matter of an application for the hand of Belle Winchester. They appeared to be satisfactory, and the young lady returned to her home engaged. The day after the next college commencement, at which Billy took honors, he went to Colorado to claim his bride.

HOUSE WARMING BY CLUB MEN

Granite City Members Call on Benjamin F. Chase

Thirty or more members of the Granite City club, made a social call Friday evening to the home of Benjamin F. Chase. Ben has reecntly occupied a new home on Marlboro street and the visit, aside from being a social call, might also be called a kind of house warming. The visit was unexpected on his part, and it was not until a dozen automobiles drew up in front of his home and the unbidden guests began to enter and take possession that Ben was aware of what was doing.

Of course they were immediately made welcome, and told that the house was theirs for the remainder of the evening. One of the automobiles brought down a supply of dishes and cooking utensils, and in a few minutes the chefs were busy in the kitchen preparing a lunch which was served later in the evening. This included cold ham, lobster salad, hot coffee and rolls.

In another automobile was a handsome electric parlor lamp which later in the evening was presented to the host and hostess as a little remembrance.

Ben was considerably rattled by the unexpected gift, but partially recovering himself, made a few rambling remarks, which conveyed to the party how pleased he was with their gift, as well as with their visit.

During the evening which followed, there was vocal and instrumental music, while those inclined, indulged in a game of bid whist. It was near the hour of midnight when some one said "home," and the party took their departure wishing Ben and Mrs. Chase much happiness in their new home, and in turn being informed that the latch string would always be found on the outside of the door.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SUPPER.

The annual supper tendered to honorary members was held by the Christian Endeavor society in the vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church, Friday evening.

At the after dinner exercises, Eugene Smith was the toastmaster, and those responding were Rev. Isaiah W. Sneath, Ph.D., Rev. Rufus B. Tobey, Mrs. Sneath and Miss Marion Farwell.

A number of Christian Endeavor cheers were led by Sturgis Hunt, and a series of steropticon views enjoyed. Games were played and the evening concluded with the singing of songs.

MANET CLUB MINSTRELS

Large Chorus and Popular Favorites Win Applause

The Manet Club, popular Quincy boys, blossomed forth in their first old time minstrel show in Music hall Friday evening. The presentation was easily the peer of any given in this city in the past few years, and its success was due in a great measure to its well balanced, full toned chorus of 40 voices.

A dance which continued until two o'clock followed the show, and at both the attendance was large. Music throughout the entire bill was by Provosts orchestra, and Master Theo Smith, its junior cellist during the program played the Rosary and an English hunting song and was well received .

Matt Fay of this city was director and the interlocutor was Charles Sullivan. He received during the evening telegrams from and for notables, men prominent in public life and popular residents, which carried many a witty joke. The deliveries were by Daniel Manahan, dressed in an A. D. T. uniform. He looked and acted the part, and created considerable excitement when he last appeared leading a young goat. He said it was just a kid on the audience, while the message referred to someone butting in.

The opening chorus consisted of all of the popular song hits of the day, and no sooner had the circle, blacked and costumed in green braided coats, red trousers and high riding boots, finished, than the applause commenced. From then on the program was one continuous round of pleasure for audience and participants alike.

Charlie Brown rendered the first end song, "Oh, you cute little chicken," and three encores were responded to. The interpretation of two popular ballads by Everett Clark, the well known tenor, was liberally applauded and encored, and Rio Albonetti no sooner sang the last words of his song, "I'll do it all over again" than he was obliged to do it to still the applause.

Phil Savard who has made his appearance in many local shows sang "All aboard for Dixie Land," and after several encores Matt Fay presented three whistling solos, and was given a fine reception.

Harold Warmington, the best coon shouter on the ends, introduced "That naughty melody" and Billy Crammon sang "Miss Caroline," dancing through its chorus with a professional air.

Adolph Restelli, sang "You broke my heart to pass the time away," and to still the thunderous applause he sang "Have a heart." The last end song was "This is the life," by George Davey, who is likewise well known to local minstrelsy. He secured considerable applause and in the grand finale that followed there were two tableaux, "Flag Guardians" and "The Boys of '61."

DISTRICT COURT.

James Daly was sentenced to one month in the house of correction for drunkenness at Weymouth.

Patrick Maeton was fined $10, and Charles Fitzpatrick was sentenced to one month in the house of correction, for drunkenness at Quincy.

The continued case of Martin L. Chase for larceny at Cohasset was called and he was sentenced to six months in the house of correction.

William J. Fitzgerald was sentenced to three months in the house of correction for larceny at Weymouth. He is to make restitution and sentence was suspended until April 1915.

David Silverman came into court and withdrew his appeal on a finding for voalation of the junk ordinance and his case was placed on file on the payment of $10 costs.

STREET FLOOR SHOWING HALL.

NEW PARISH HOUSE

On the upper floor, on a level with the vestibule and church auditorium will be a parish hall, which will be used for entertainments, lectures, dramatics, etc. The hall is 40 by 47 and has a seating capacity of 300. A large stage 19 feet deep with a 20 foot prescenium is a feature of the hall.

On the lower floor will be a supper room 37 by 48 where dances, card parties, etc, may be held. By means of sliding glass doors it is possible to throw this room and the present vestry into one large room.

The present kitchen in the vestry will be changed into coat rooms and a new kitchen 17 by 23 included in the addition.

Two committee or class rooms, 10 by 15, and 11 by 17, are features of the lower floor, and provision is made for table storage when not in use. A stairway at the back will connect the two floors and also provide a rear entrance to the parish house.

In addition there will probably be two fire exits, not shown on the plans, from the supper room. The proposed changes interfere very little with the interior of the present church auditorium, the only difference being that a portion of one of the windows will be transformed into a door connecting the church with the parish hall.

Taken as a whole the plans offer a solution for the present crowded conditions of the church, and there is little doubt but what the necessary amount of money will be forthcoming.

It is planned to complete the parish house by next November, and to this end the campaign is going on with a rush. Plans are by Edwin J. Lewis, Jr., of Boston.

MAYOR MILLER DISPLEASED

Some Question Over Appointment of Firemen

The three men whom it was announced Friday had been appointed as permanent members of the Fire department are wondering whether they are really appointed or not. Under the civil service rules, appointments to the Fire department have always been made by the Chief of the Fire department, although it has been the rule for the Chief to consult with the Mayor in regard to the matter. It is understood that Chief Billings had a consultation with the Mayor in regard to the men who should be appointed and as a result the Chief, on Friday, gave out the names published. Now the Mayor comes forward and says that no appointments have been made, and the question is what will be the outcome

Chief Billings, when seen this morning, and asked what the situation was, replied that he had nothing to say in regard to the matter at the present time, although he did say that doubtless it would be straightened out in a few days. The Chief said that he was unable to see the Mayor this morning. It was given out in the corridor of City Hall this morning that the Mayor was very busy and that he could not see anyone today.

and because they need every help in making their childrens environment good, they should vote equally with men. The women need the vote, the men need it, and the state needs it.

We are told that woman's place is the home, well be it so, but what do we expect her to do in her home? She is a failure unless she does certain things. She can be responsible for the cleanliness of the house, the wholesomeness of the food, the children's health and their morals; but if her neighbors are allowed to live in filth; if dealers in supplies are permitted to sell poor food, unclean milk and stale eggs; if the fire escapes on the house are insufficient; if the air is laden with germs of tuberculosis and other contagious diseases she cannot protect herself. The city can do it. The city government elected by the people, who are now the men, so that it is the men who are responsible for unclean houses, unwholesome food, bad plumbing, danger from fire, immoral influences of the street, and the risk of tuberculosis and other diseases. Yet the women are the ones who are held responsible. In simple justice to them, let them have something to say as to what the conditions shall be. The one way to do this is to let them vote.

While Miss Foley was speaking other ladies passed through the audience with cards which they asked the men to sign pledging their support when the referendum came to them in 1915. Some signed and some did not. Everything was very orderly, and there were no remarks hurled at the speaker by the hoodlum element which usually is found in such gatherings.

LINEN SHOWER.

Miss Margaret Reilly, a well known young lady of West Quincy, was given a linen shower at the home of Mrs. Matthew Morrissey of 20 Euclid avenue, last evening. Miss Reilly is shortly to become the bride of John J. Barron of West Quincy. The hostess was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Morrissey McGrath and Miss Elizabeth Reilly. The bride to be was showered with some very handsome pieces of linen, among them being some beautiful hand embroidery and Mexican drawn work. Whist was enjoyed, Miss Nellie and Rose Morrissey receiving prizes. Refreshments were served. All left at a late hour wishing Miss Reilly and Mr. Barron many joys on their journey across the sea of matrimony.

Amalgamation of Wollaston and Squantum Clubs Meets With Favor

Opening Night of Squantum Yacht Club—Cup Offered

Visiting commodores, members and friends, to the number of 135 attended the opening night of the Squantum Yacht Club in the clubhouse Saturday night and enjoyed the banquet which was followed by a vaudeville performance by professional talent.

Signal flags and pennants of the Interclub Yacht Racing Association formed a conspicuous part in the decorations of the hall, and most of those present were sufficiently acquainted with the shore line of the bay to appreciate their significance.

The banquet tables comfortably accommodated those present and throughout the entire program the spirit of real good fellowship prevailed.

The menu consisted of:

Hot Bouillon en tasse Bread Sticks
Hot Boiled Salmon, Egg Sauce
Dressed Lettuce
Cold Roast Chicken Cranberry Sauce
Mashed Potato
Sweet Bread Croquettes Green Peas
Lobster Salad
Strawberries Vanilla Ice Cream
Frozen Pudding
Assorted Cakes Rolls Coffee

Commodore Eleazer F. Drew presided during the evening, and seated on his right was Commodore Frank Taylor of the Wollaston Yacht club. Commodore Harry S. Crane of the Quincy Yacht club was on his left. Other visitors were Commodore W. L. Barnard of the Hingham Yacht club, Commodore John Scott of the South Boston Yacht Club, President J. T. Harland and Secretary F. H. Campbell of the Interclub Yacht Racing Association, and Commodore "Eddie" Hopkins of the Mosquito Fleet Yacht club.

At the concluson of the banquet Commodore Drew opened the post prandial exercises, and he had Commodore Taylor exchanged courtesies, after which the former presented the Squantum club with a shield won by its members in a bowling tournament during the past winter, and Commodore Drew presented a shield won by Wollaston in the pool tournament. The presentations were a surprise to each club and were followed by loud applause. Brief speeches of acceptance were made by both men.

When Commodore Taylor, a few minutes later, proposed the amalgamation of the clubs his proposal received vigorous applause and his reference to a joint illumination was roundly clapped. In a review of the relations of the clubs the past three years he mentioned several points of interest, and in closing he heartily endorsed the amalgamation, and promised the executive committee of his club would be always ready to meet Squantum's committee and talk the matter over.

Senator Langelier said he and Representative Sandberg had been working on the channel and have a favorable promise since the Port Directors favor it. He promised to use all the energy he possessed to have it dug out again.

You, who have been deprived of the privilege of digging clams for some time, he said, will be interested to know that I have the promise of the Metropolitan Park Commissioners that if our local board of Health will write a letter to the Metropolitan officials they will have their officers acknowledge the permits. (Cheers.)

Commodore Drew announced that a handsome cup, on exhibition in Filene's window in Boston, had been presented by J. D. McIntyre, chairman of the regatta committee for the winner of the new 18-foot class. This announcement received hearty applause. First race May 24.

Short addresses were made by the other guests, and one and all invited the members of Squantum to visit them on Memorial Day. Reference was also made to the bowling league, and it was strongly intimated that the Boston clubs were desirous of seeing Squantum and Wollaston jointly represented.

The affair was under the direction of the house committee, directed by the energetic William L. Hartley, its popular chairman, who was assisted by J. M. Ellison, H. J. Welch, J. M. Hayes and H. A. Ward.

The service was cleverly worded and a padlock was used in place of the usual ring. In the party were:

FIRE CHIEF SUSPENDED

Mayor Appoints A. L. Mead Acting Chief

Evidently provoked because Chief Billings of the Fire Department had given the newspaper men of the city the information on Friday of the three men appointed to the permanent fire department, the Mayor on Saturday notified Chief Billings that he had been suspended until May 20.

The notice came to Chief Billings late Saturday afternoon by mail, and the suspension was the general topic of conversation Saturday night.

At the same time Chief Billings was suspended, Capt. A. L. Mead of the Central fire station was appointed as Acting Chief.

Chief Billings would have little to say over his suspension, but referred all inquirers to the Mayor.

It was common talk about City Square on Saturday that the Mayor was angered, if such a harsh word may be used, because Chief Billings had announced the appointments, and Saturday refused himself to all callers at his office at City Hall, even the Chief not being received.

The suspension of Chief Billings, as stated above, was a subject of general conversation Saturday evening and it was generally looked upon as a serious state of affairs, and even more so when the three district engineers were ignored and a captain placed in charge.

That the Chief had been suspended was not generally known among the call men Saturday night and at the fire at South Quincy that night the call men being ignorant of what had taken place, refused to take orders from the Acting Chief, taking orders only from the District Chief.

Ever since the Fire department of the city has been under civil service the appointments to the permanent and call force have been made by the Chief Engineer, as the civil service records will show and not by the Mayor. It has always been the custom for the Chief to consult with the Mayor before making any appointments, and it is understood that was done in this case.

There are numerous rumors about City Square as to just why the Mayor should have suspended Chief Engineer Billings. It is generally supposed that the suspension was due to the fact that the Chief had given out the information of the appointment of three permanent firemen instead of the Mayor.

There is still another rumor that the cause of the drastic action was due to the fact that one of the men named was selected by a member of the City Council. According to the story a certain councilman promised that should the order for three additional men pass that he would use his efforts to have certain men appointed. Chief Billings refused to name the men desired, or to whom the job had been promised, and the Mayor when appealed to by the Councilman also got somewhat provoked that a member of the City Council should promise positions to men which were not in his power to give. In other words so the story goes the Mayor turned the Councilman down flat. When the names were made public, however, it is said that one at least of the three was that selected by the Councilman. This naturally did not please the Chief Executive and may, as rumor has it, have something to do with the suspension of Chief Billings.

The Mayor is equally as non communicative on the matter of the suspension as Chief Billings, and the general public are left to guess what the real cause of the suspension was.

It is understood that the three men whose names were made public last Friday and who were supposed to report for duty this morning, did not do so. The outcome of the controversy will be awaited with interest.

Mayor Miller when seen this morning and asked about the suspension of Chief Engineer Billings said that he had nothing to say. That Chief Billings was having a little vacation and would probably return to work Wednesday.

When asked about the rumors

TWO BAD FIRES SATURDAY NIGHT

Four Horses Lost at Stable of the Empire Polishing Co. at South Quincy

Squantum House is Damaged Several Thousand

The fire department was called out Saturday night to cope with two bad fires. The first was in the stable of the Empire Polishing Co. at South Quincy, for which an alarm sounded from Box 39 at 10.13. The fire was discovered by ex-Councilman Murdock A. Cambell, D. McKenzie and Malcolm McLeod. They sounded the alarm and rushed to the barn and tried to open the door to release the four horses known to be in the stable. They were unable to open the door and securing a heavy log used it as a battering ram and forced an entrance. As the door opened a sheet of flame came out, which prevented their entering. By this time the fire department arrived on the scene and the firemen got several streams of water onto the building, and soon had the satisfaction of conquering the flames.

Two of the horses valued at $300 each were dead and the other two so badly burned that they had to be killed. The fire evidently started in the hay loft and had made considerable headway before it was discovered. The Empire Polishing company is composed of John A. Clarke and Angus Martin. The loss will be about $200 beside the horses.

SQUANTUM ALARM.

The second alarm of the night came in at 1.25 from Box 82 located at the corner of Bellevue road and Huckins avenue and was for a lively fire in a large vacant house owned by Councilman Carlson, known as the "Vacation house." The fire started in the attic of the house and was discovered by Michael Coburn who sounded the alarm. As soon as the first alarm had completed its four rounds the box was pulled again. This acted as a second alarm and brought the apparatus from Wollaston.

The Atlantic auto chemical made a remarkably quick run to the fire, and according to Councilman Carlson, the owner, it could not have been over four minutes before the apparatus was at the scene and the company was running a line of hose to the fire. Acting Chief, Capt. Meade, arrived a few minutes later with the Central station auto chemical, and in half an hour the fire was under control having been confined to the attic where it started although water had run down through the floors ruining the plastering on the rooms in the lower part of the house.

Councilman Carlson who was early on the scene and watched the work of the firemen, speaks in the highest praise of their work. They arrived early said Councilman Carlson and went to work in a systematic manner and it was not long before the fire was under control.

The building is a large one situated on prominent ground and has been used for some time as a co-

INDEPENDENCE OF NORWAY

Centennial Anniversary Observed By Norwegian Society

"Together and true, till the mountains fall, God bless the land of Norway" was the dominant thought of those attending the observance of the 100th anniversary of the constitutional independence of Norway in Electa hall on Saturday evening.

The affair was held under the auspices of the Norwegian Society of this city and nearly all of the Norwegians of Quincy and their families were present. Many had attended and participated in the opening event of the aniversary in Boston in the afternoon when there was a meeting in front of the Leif Ericsen statue at which there was speechmaking and the singing of Norwegian songs. Senator Louis F. R. Langelier and Representative Edward J. Sandberg were present in the evening and gave short addresses.

The hall was festooned in red, white and blue, the national colors of Norway and America alike, and refreshments were served during the evening while the old country dances were enjoyed. The celebration closed with three snappy cheers for "Norge."

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Dr. Naysmith of Boston gave a very interesting lecture on "Peace" Friday, May 15 to the pupils of the High school in the assembly hall. Dr. Naysmith was introduced by Charles L. Curtis, the principal; and received a wonderful applause from the pupils. Dr. Naysmith spoke about the Mexican situation, and said it was altogether unnecessary for us to enter into any trouble with that nation. The speaker was procured by Mrs. Forbes, who is one of the busiest workers for peace in this section of the country.

Miss Edith C. Johnson of Bridgewater Normal school spent the week end at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Johnson on Washington street.

Considerable interest in golf playing has been aroused among the younger element of the East Milton section within the last few weeks. It is no unusual sight to see a crowd of young golfers trailing around their "home made" links during the afternoon after school.

Plans are under way for a "bigger and better" class day this year at the High school. The alumni has been invited to take part in the exercises and have taken a strong interest in the idea. The freshmen have elected their class marshal who is Louis Gosselin. This is the highest honor a class can confer on one of its members, and all of "Louie's" friends are congratulating him. Miss Belcher is chairman of the class day committee which includes: Palfrey Mather '14, Helen Cross '14, Robert Sweeney '14, Walter Farrel '14, Kenneth Johnson '15, Alma Jardine '16, and Vera Stevenson '17. The Juniors have elected their committee for costumes and the members are: Bena Erhardt, chairman, Alice Damon, Edith Swift, Marion Hathaway and Rachel Farrington. The general plans and marches will be made known next week.

There were special services at the Mission Church of Our Saviour Sunday where the parish festival was celebrated. In the evening Bishop Riis of southern Ohio spoke.

The botany club of the High school took a trip to Ponkapoag Friday and had a fine time.

HOUGHS NECK ASSOCIATES.

The Houghs Neck Associates held an entertainment and moving picture show in the Sea Street Dream theatre Friday evening, May 15. The program included quartette selections by Charles Finn, Ernest Higgins, Charles R. Nason and Henry French; baritone solos by Frank J. Hagan; popular songs by Edward J. Broders; readings by Ellen Atwater Gowdy; vocal selections by Miss Bertha Cote; musical selections by Macolm B. Seaver, Daniel C. Moore and Mrs. Richard Ring. The monologist was Billy Troy and the moving pictures were selected subjects.

HUERTA GETS "URGENT" WORD

Official Explanation of Parks' Death Is Demanded

SAN FRANCISCO BRIDGE GONE

Assumed That It Was Destroyed by Mexican Federals—Communication With Mexico City Still Open—Villa Begins Santillo Attack, the Vanguard Being Led by Brother of Murdered President Madero—Representatives of United States and Mexico to Be First Heard Separately and In Secret at Mediation Conclave—Mexican Delegates Concede Huerta's Fall and Think Peace Near

Washington, May 18.—It is the general belief here that the United States government has delivered an ultimatum to General Huerta demanding that the body of Samuel Parks, the demented private of the Twenty-eighth infantry, shot to death by Mexican soldiers, be surrendered to General Funston at Vera Cruz.

An official explanation of the execution of Parks has also been demanded, it is declared, and a statement of the reasons, if there were any, why a soldier in the uniform of the United States should be put to death after he had wandered in a dazed condition into the Mexican lines.

A report that the government has taken the step longed for by the American troops at Vera Cruz has reached them, and General Funston's army is ready to exact swift retribution.

Secretary of State Bryan will not admit that his representations to Huerta through the Brazilian ambassador in Mexico City have taken the form of an ultimatum, but he concedes they were "urgent."

Officially, Bryan has accepted the promise of the Huerta government to investigate Parks' death promptly, but administration officials have little hope that this means anything but another attempt by Huerta and his advisors to temporize.

Bridge Is Destroyed

The chief military development was a report from General Funston that the San Francisco bridge on the Inter-Oceanic railroad had been destroyed. Funston did not say how the bridge had been destroyed, but it was assumed by Washington officials that it was done by federal soldiers.

The bridge, which spanned a ravine and the river Antigua, was of steel construction, 168 feet long. Its destruction will not affect Vera Cruz communication with Mexico City, as the principal route is over the Mexican Central railroad.

Funston also reported rumors that General Navarette, the federal commander, was in the vicinity of Vera Cruz, with a force of 3000 men. Army officers seriously doubted, however, that Navarette has so many troops in his command.

Funston said the five Mexican "snipers," at first believed to be South Americans, had been released, in accordance with instructions received from Secretary Garrison.

Satillo Attack Is Begun

General Villa's attack upon Saltillo has begun. It is reported at Hippolito, Mex., that the federals already are evacuating the city and falling back upon San Luis Potosi. So easy a victory would be a surprise, as Villa has not yet brought his whole army of 20,000 men into action.

The attack began with an assault by Villa's vanguard, the brigade commanded by General Madero, brother the murdered president of Mexico, upon the heavily defended federal entrenchments at Ramos Arispe, seven miles from Saltillo. Madero has routed the federals at Paredon and promises to clear the way for the attack of Villa's main army.

At sunrise Sunday twelve of Villa's cannon, so placed as to command the federal entrenchments, began the bombardment. The federals replied with a lively machine gun fire.

Big Fight Probably On

Meanwhile Villa, with headquarters at Paredon, brought up the brigades of Generals Monclovia, Herrera, Chao and Ortega, and artillery cavalry and infantry hurried forward for the big battle which is believed to be in progress.

Near the city the various constitutionalist comands were ordered to separate and attack the federal outposts from different directions, enveloping the whole federal position. The federals were understood to be well fortified and desperate resistance was expected by the rebels.

A new embarrassment was added to the Mexican situation when it was learned that a Dutch cruiser has landed marines at Tampico to protect the Dutch oil interests in that vicinity and that the constitutionalists had demanded that the marines leave the Panuco river.

Plans of Mediators

The A. B. C. mediators, the Mexican commissioners, and the American delegates to the mediation conclave to be opened at Niagara Falls on Wednesday, are proceeding upon the assumption that the crisis over the death of Parks will not interfere with their efforts to compose the differences between the United States and Huerta.

MEXICO'S DELEGATES

Huerta's Representatives Appear to Be Optimistic

© 1914, by American Press Association.

Two of the delegates sent by Huerta to the peace conference which opens at Niagara Falls. At the top is Emilio Rabasa and below Luis Elguero.

They have arranged their program for the conferences. First the mediators will listen to the representations of the Mexican delegates in secret, the American commissioners not being admitted to this conference. Next the United States commissioners will be heard by the mediators in the absence of the Huerta delegates.

Gradually the mediators will attempt to find a common ground upon which the delegates from Mexico and the United States may agree and, if this is achieved, will bring all the members of the conference together for final discussion and action.

Spanish will be the language used in conference with the Mexicans, while English will be employed in discussion with the Americans.

Mexican Delegates Optimistic

Before the departure of the Mexican delegates for New York, on their way to Niagara Falls, they were about the lobby of their hotel, and chatted with Washington Mexicans. Though the Mexicans would make no statement, declaring it would be inexpedient for them to say anything in advance of the negotiations, it was learned from quarters in close touch with them that they are decidedly optimistic concerning the chances for mediation.

Mexicans and other persons who talked with them say that they realize that the present administration in Mexico City is fast crumbling, and with the choice of someone to succeed Huerta the delegates are said to be most interested in the vital questions of what is to follow—that guarantees are to be obtained against possible confiscation of property by the invading constitutionalists, that protection will be made against conditions of anarchy and what kind of government, that will be stable and will secure world-wide recognition, can be set up.

Persons close to the delegates emphasized that the three men who would represent the Huerta government at the mediation were not "Huertistas" or the representatives of any group of persons, but were representative of the best interests of the people in the territory controlled by the Mexican federal government.

Rebels Cheer For Wilson

That the constitutionalist soldiers cheered for President Wilson when they entered the plaza of Tampico after driving the federals out of the city is the story told by an employe of the Waters-Pierce Oil company, who has arrived at Vera Cruz.

General Superintendent Warren of the Waters-Pierce company said when the federals fled and the victorious rebels marched into the plaza their cheers for the constitutionalist commanders were mingled with those for Wilson.

Charlton is chafing at the delay in his trial, which will not be called until late in the autumn.

RECEIVE ORDER TO SURRENDER

Men Convicted In "Dynamite Case" Going to Prison

MUST GIVE UP ON JUNE 6

Date Set by Court of Appeals For Labor Leaders to Begin Sentences In Federal Prison, Where Five Already Are Confined—Nineteen Men to Be Deprived of Their Liberty

Chicago, May 18.—The labor leaders sentenced in the "dynamiting cases," who are at liberty on bonds, have less than three more weeks of liberty. The United States circuit court of appeals ordered them to surrender June 6 to the warden of the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kas., or be taken to the penitentiary from Chicago on that day.

Only a pardon from President Wilson can now save the convicted men from serving their sentences, which range from one to six years. Elijah Zoline, of counsel for the defendants, said he had presented to the president a petition carrying nearly 500,000 signatures.

The court's order will affect only nineteen of the twenty-four men who were sentenced, five of them having returned voluntarily to the penitentiary after the United States circuit court of appeals denied them a new trial. They are Murray L. Pennell, Springfield, Ills.; Frank C. Webb, New York; Phillip A. Conley, New Orleans; John T. Butler, Buffalo, and Edward Smythe of Peoria.

The court took under advisement the cases of Olaf Tveitmoe of San Francisco, Richard H. Houlihan of Chicago and William D. Bernhardt of Cincinanti.

Originally, thirty of the convicted men filed appeals for new trials. The United States circuit of appeals upheld the conviction of twenty-four, and granted new trials for six. As to three of the latter—Tveitmoe, Houlihan and Bernhardt—the government requested a rehearing, which was granted.

C. W. Miller, counsel for the government, said the court properly held that the general conspiracy had been established and that twenty-four of the defendants were directly connected with the conspiracy to transport dynamite and nitroglycerine upon passenger trains.

The evidence, he said, must be largely circumstantial, but that "every link in the chain of circumstances is present" and that the verdict of the jury "is sustained by substantial evidence on every material point; that a clear prima facie case was established against Tveitmoe, Houlihan and Bernhardt."

The government lawyer next took the cases of the three defendants individually, touching on the evidence brought out in the trial of the case, and argued that the testimony was such that the defendants were not entitled to new trials.

Zoline replied that the three men had not been convincingly connected with the conspiracy, at the trial, and were entitled to a new hearing.

HELPS ANTI-TRUST BILLS

President's View of Mellen's Testimony Before Commerce Board

Washington, May 18.—There will be no blocking of the New Haven investigation by the interstate commerce commission, so far as the White House is concerned.

It became known that President Wilson has decided that the testimony of Charles S. Mellen is so striking and significant that its publication at this time will be of great value in accelerating anti-trust legislation now before congress and in bringing about a strong public opinion against high finance of the type that cotrolled the New Haven road.

For this reason he is not inclined to take sides in the controversy between Attorney General McReynolds and Solicitor Folk of the interstate commerce commission.

The murderer had been condemned by the criminal court to life imprisonment for the crime. He appealed and the superior court upheld the decision, but changed the sentence into condemnation to death.

Among Our Churches

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. B. A. Willmott, the pastor, preached at both services on Sunday to large congregations. His morning subject was "Growing in grace."

In conformity with the request of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America for a Peace Sunday, the subject of the evening address was "Lay down your arms." The pastor gave three reasons why wars should cease, and international disputes be settled by arbitration. First, however, he paid a tribute to the Society of Friends, or Quakers, who after many years were witnessing the fruits of their labors. The speaker confessed that he was a recent convert to arbitration, as he had 200 years of fighting blood in him.

The first reason for arbitration was the economic one. The cost of armament, the accumulated debt, and big interest accounts were leading the weaker nations into bankruptcy, and seriously burdening all nations. The producers, and I mean all who work, must bear the burden. The burden may become so great as to cause social revolution. The army and the navy have been taking those strongest physically, when they should be establishing homes and industries.

The second reason was more important, the growing appreciation of the work of man. The waste of war was scarcely in keeping with the high ideal of manhood. Christ taught that disputes should be settled by arbitration. Armies cannot be abolished, and battleships sent to the scrap heads, because as in civil life we need courts and police, so in National life we must have a guardian power around us.

The third and supreme reason is the growing brotherhood of the races. He deplored the class consciousness engendered by such papers as the Hearst papers which were a menace to the country. Wars have been largely for the benefit of the few. Our National Senate and Roosevelt disappointed us. The speaker predicted that the time is coming when Great Britain, France and Germany will join hands with America and say to the weaker nations, "Lay down your arms" and adjust your differences by arbitration. Wars must cease.

FIRST PARISH.

The sermon by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson on "Muck-raking and moral progress," on Sunday, recognized the full value of the service which has been rendered to society during the past few years in calling attention to the glaring instances of crime, injustice and moral pollution existing unrebuked in our modern life. It is necessary at times to awaken us all out of our comfortable self-complacency and make us realize that there are threatening evils in our midst which need to be corrected and which require the earnest and united efforts of all good men and women.

But he called attention to an opposite danger which is now infesting itself today in the form of sensational stories in newspapers, periodicals and current novels, exploiting all sorts of corruption and uncleanness, until the whole horizon seems to be filled with things that are untrue, impure, unjust, unlovely and of evil report.

He mentioned the recent action of one of our local industries in replacing rubbish heaps with pansy beds in order to promote greater efficiency among the workmen. This was one way of putting into effect the Master's words: "Overcome evil with good." If each one will strive to cultivate the good, the true and the beautiful, then the things that are vile and unwholesome will disappear, as darkness fades away in the presence of the light.

Sunday morning Mr. Hudson will speak upon "The moral responsibility of citizens and legislators."

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

With public attention turned as it now is toward affairs between the United States and Mexico, "Peace," the subject of the morning sermon, could not fail to interest. Rev. Joseph Walther, the pastor said, "The world cannot be without warfare until people everywhere know the Lord Jesus Christ and are governed by His spirit." While we are waiting for that day, we as Christians, can preach and pray and practice peace in our own everyday life."

The anthem rendered by the chorus choir at this service was Mendelssohn's "How lovely are the messengers."

At 6 a union meeting of the Junior and Senior C. E. societies was held in charge of Mrs. Walther who conducted it in the manner that she does at the Sunday afternoon meetings. Both societies enjoyed it and were benefited by it.

Wednesday afternoon, at 3 the Woman's Home Mission Society connected with the church, will meet with Mrs. L. A. Collett, 213 Squantum street, Montclair. Subject, "Pickaninnies, big and little." Leader, Mrs. J. Arthur Jewell.

Wednesday evening at 7.45, a conference of workers in the elementary departments of the Norfolk East District Sunday School Association will be held in this church. Mrs. Ware, the State Secretary, and others will give helpful talks. A good attendance urged.

Thursday evening, at 7.45, the regular meeting for praise, prayer and testimony will be held in the chapel.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

Rev. George M. Bailey preached at the Sunday morning service from the text found in Isaiah 63:3—"I have trodden the wine press alone."

He emphasized the points in which Jesus stood alone—as in greatness of his love, in comprehension of sin, in trials and in sacrifice. We each make our life march alone, fighting our own battles as the years go; tho' we have the assurance that "though I pass through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me." Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook rendered a beautiful and appropriate solo entitled "He knows the way" by Briggs.

There was a very large audience at the evening union service at which Dr. Martin D. Kneeland was the speaker. Dr. Kneeland is secretary of the Massachusetts Sabbath Protective League, the aim of which is to uphold and enforce the Sunday laws and encourage the proper observance of the Lord's day. Miss Holbrook sang "How beautiful upon the mountains" by Harker.

The Ladies' Aid Society had charge of an interesting prayer meeting last Thursday night, which took the form of an oldfashioned service, to which many contributed reminiscences of former days.

The Sunday School will be in charge of the service this week Thursday evening and expect to have a helpful and inspiring meeting to which every one is cordially invited.

Mrs. A. R. Poquette will superintend a "Peddlers' Parade" for the benefit of the Ladies' Aid Society in the vestry on Friday evening. It will be a unique and interesting affair in which many will take part with articles of every description on sale at peddlers' prices.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

The theme of the pastor's helpful sermon at the morning service was "Peace." Text, taken from Job. 22:21—"Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace, thereby good shall come unto thee." In opening, the pastor at once stated he was not to deal with the subject of political or social peace, but rather the peace of God that passeth understanding.

"To the thousands of people in the midst of misery and perplexing conditions, is it not possible for them to have a peace that will help them to live their lives? Job says, "yes." "Acquaint yourself with God and be at peace." How?

"1st—Through nature; flowers, stars and the seashore; thus coming in closer touch with God; thus getting a clearer vision, a larger knowledge of Him who rules over all.

"2d—Through Jesus Christ who is the revelation of God. Knowledge of God brings peace. The reading of the life of Jesus would transform human society.

"3rd—A larger acquaintance with God through fellowship and communion with Him. There is tragedy in mere acquaintance. Today there is a possibility of God becoming a hidden God. Every busy man needs to have a sense of God's friendship; needs every now and again to turn aside from cares and duties and let God speak to his soul. Such fellowship will bring peace.

A union meeting of the Junion and Senior C. E. Societies was held at 6 P. M.

At 7 P. M. a union meeting was held at the Methodist church in the interest of Sabbath observance.

At the Thursday evening prayer service the subject will be "making a bright side to life."

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

At the Sunday morning service, Rev. Carl G. Horst, preached from the text "the hope of eternal life"—Titus 3:7—to a most interested and attentive congregation. The preacher said that immortality is a matter of hope, as the text says, not of knowledge. Scientific proof has to do with what can be experienced. Immortality is beyond the experience of the present life. Modern science can neither deny nor affirm a future life, which is a matter of hope and faith. We walk by faith, not sight. Faith in immortality does not imply the resurrection of the body. That the Christian church has taught this doctrine there can be no doubt. Whoever today repeats the so-called Apostles' Creed at a church service and uses the words "I believe in the resurrection of the body" honestly, states his belief that in the morning of the resurrection the particles of matter, which now compose his body will be collected and reanimated. But the great apostle to the Gentiles rejects the idea that the resurrection body will be identical with that which we deposit in the grave there slowly to decay or which we commit to the purifying flames, a much better, quicker, cleaner and more hygienic process. Paul teaches that the body we shall have in the next world is no more identical with the one we lay aside in the grave, than the plant is identical with the seed. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. While here on earth the soul manifests itself in and through the body and at death it leaves the house it has occupied and passes on to whatever place it has fitted itself to enter, there to reap what is has sown here. The life to come, then, is a blessed hope. It is a matter of faith, not an object of experimental knowledge. As James Martineau finely says 'we believe in immortality not because we have proved it, but we are forever trying to prove it because we believe it."

A special meeting of the Wollaston Unitarian Society will be held in the vestry this evening at 7.45. This meeting is held to consider the feasibility of building a parish house. Let every member attend.

The Ladies' Aid Alliance last year sent a box of books to form the nucleus of a public library in Ossipee, N. H., and wishes to send another box this summer. Please look through your books and hand or send all you can spare to Mrs. Thomas Lacey, 145 Grand View avenue, Wollaston.

The annual Unitarian May Meetings are held in Boston next week. Eighteen national societies within the body of the Unitarian church of the United States and Canada will hold meetings.

PARK AND DOWNS.

The sermon Sunday morning was one of exceeding great helpfulness inspiring and uplifting in its influence upon our daily lives, full of understanding, encouragement and sympathy causing one no longer to feel that duty was so cold a thing, and no one understood. The minister, Rev. William B. Ayers, took for his text, Matthew XI--28. "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." The speaker reviewed the condition of the world today—and the state of individual life. He showed our need of rest, our need of a faith, simple, binding, helpful in a Christ who is at once a friend, and a Redeemer."

The evening service was one of absorbing interest. The large number present each Sabbath shows an unabated interest maintained. The minister took for his text Matthew XIV—"The disciples beheld Jesus walking on the Sea." The disciples went out in a boat on the Sea of Galilee and there, in the most unexpected place, they found Jesus walking on the water. They should not have been surprised, for in a way the ocean is God's natural habitation. I never can look at the laughing waves of the ocean but what I think of the great purging spirit of God. When sailing, the two elements that contribute to your pleasure, are wind and water. Without wind and ocean the inhabitants of the earth would perish in a single year of pestilence. Wind and ocean are two great purifying agents of God in the world.

Then followed some good wholesome advice to boys and girls and men and women with regard to the easy breaking down of moral restraint on crowded boats and beaches. The two great agencies of purification are turned so easily by man into means of contamination.

The moral lesson portrayed so clearly and in so forcible a manner should in no small degree bring about a clearer perception of one's duty, and a closer companionship with God.

The midweek prayer services are of the utmost help, and give strength for life's battle.

RIDING EXPERTS.

The new and wonderful European arenic features that have been added to the Wheeler Bros., Shows appearing in Quincy Wednesday, May 20 are many and varied, but none stand out so prominently in the brilliant galaxy of star feature acts as the Le-Roy-Sexton Troupe, now seen for the first time in America. These clever people are acknowledged the champion riding experts of Europe, and appear in what is classed as the only original equestrian acts known to the circus for the past half century.

Their simplest feats are not within the range of accomplishment of the average equestrian, and their more heroic efforts are the bane of envious rivals. They are noted for their dextrous individual and conjunctive performances, which embrace a series of riding and athletic stunts entirely new to the American arena, concluding with simultaneous bounding leaps from the ground to the backs of horses. The certainty of execution with which all their feats are accomplished gives a finished touch that is so frequently lacking in ordinary riders. The Leroy-Sexton Troupe are not alone, however, in the Wheeler Bros. Equestrian contingent There are many other riders of both sexes.

A company of geniune Cossack riders in native costume, give an exhibition of daring whirlwind riding, which has never been equalled. Positively the greatest act of its kind ever offered by any travelling organization.

DUNCAN SAILS.

The torpedo boat destroyer Duncan, the fastest of its kind in the navy, left the Fore River shipyard Saturday for the Boston navy yard. A month ago she stripped a turbine on one of her record runs and her engine was removed and sent there for repairs. The boat was then towed down and it is reinstalled. She will be put into immediate condition for Mexican service.

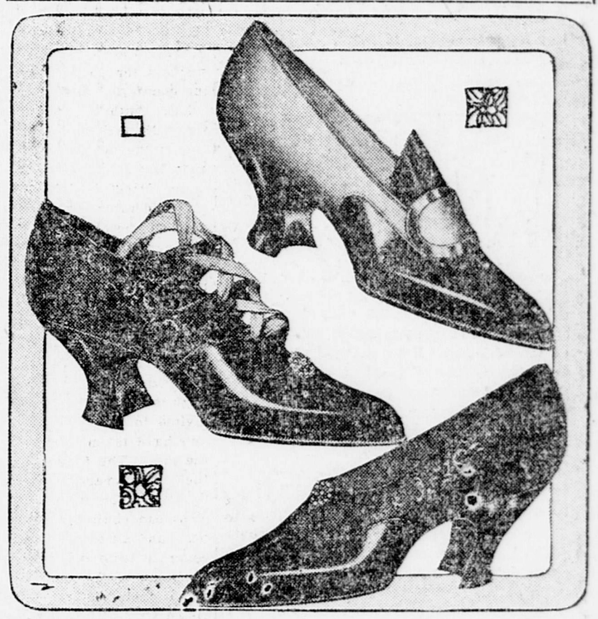
MRS. C. R. APPLEGATE

Tells Mothers What To Do For Delicate Children.

"My little boy has been rather delicate for a long time. He was always very pale and his appetite was poor. Several people recommended 'Vinol.' I gave it to him and he took it willingly, as the taste is delicious. In a short time I noticed a great improvement in his appetite. He soon had more color in his cheeks. He is now well like other children and romps about every afternoon after school. I am so happy with what Vinol did for my little boy, that I want every mother to know about it."—Mrs. C. R. Applegate, Dayton, Ohio.

This delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil is a wonderful body builder and strength creator for both young and old. We promise to give back your money in every such case where Vinol does not benefit. This shows our faith in Vinol. Edward J. Murphy, Druggist, Quincy, Mass.

Colonial Ties and Pumps



THE shoes of today distinguish their American makers, for they are brilliant achievements in the realm of footwear. When one considers that the fashionable shoe is wide of the mark in shape when it comes to following the natural lines of the foot, and yet is comfortable, it is possible to realize something of the ingenuity which is demonstrated in its making.

The most popular shoe for ordinary wear, the neatest and most shapely, is the Colonial Pump, like that shown in the picture. It is developed in many different styles and combinations of leathers or of leather and fabrics. These embody the patent leather vamp and the quarter of other leather or of plain or brocaded fabrics. Contrasting color is used in the quarters sometimes; light gray or white, and light tan are among the more pleasing effects.

The pumps are fastened (apparently) under buckles of cut steel or silver filigree or enamel. Pumps for evening wear are often made with vamp of satin and quarter of patent calfskin, with finish of rhinestone buckles or ornaments. The pump shown here is ideal in style and may be considered a criterion by which to measure others.

There is almost as great a variety in ties as in pumps. They are shaped on much the same lines and made of the same materials. For semi-dress and for dancing shoes they insure clever effects. The style of the tie indicates small rhinestone ornaments and buckles, and these one finds upon them. The tango tie, with ribbon lace, shown in the picture, is a conception in ties that could hardly be excelled for beauty.

In many of the pumps and ties the buckles or ornaments are placed at the sides. The effect is elegant. A simpler tie is shown in the third figure, very quiet in design and graceful in shape. It is furnished with patent colt vamp and black brocaded quarters. It has a lightweight sole, easy for dancing and a new Spanish heel flattering to the foot.

American women grow more exacting with each season in the matter of footwear. And American manufacturers keep up with all these demands and foster others, in fact, create them, by showing marvels of fine finish and elegant taste in shoes. In this particular article we excel all other people in clothing the feet of the moderns and the civilized, appropriately.

Now we are beginning to depart from black and to insist upon clean streets, that lighter colors may walk without becoming too soon begrimed.

FORE RIVER VICTORY

Shipyard Team Shut Out Telephone Men

The Fore River shipyard team shut out the N. E. T. & T. Co., in their first home game at Merrymount Park Saturday, 3 to 0. It was a Manufacturer's league contest.

The first ball was thrown out by President Joseph W. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Coporation midst the cheers of about 500 lusty voiced fans. President Powell, who took office several weeks ago, was on the scene early. Before taking his position to toss the first ball he was in conversation with many of the fans and because of his youthful appearance was mistaken for a reporter.

The game was a personal victory almost for Charles Knight, who fanned 16 men, making a total of 30 strikeouts in two games. He was allowed but eight hits. Several snappy plays featured the game.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS RANSACK STEAMER

Eventually Find They Worked on a False Tip

Boston, May 18.—A mysterious tip, which set the entire customs and immigration departments agog and precipitated a raid on the United Fruit steamer Carrillo immediately upon her arrival from Cuba, attracted unusual interest among government men as to where the first word came from which started all the trouble over nothing.

The trouble was over nothing because after the vessel had been thoroughly searched from hurricane deck to keel by twelve blue-coated officials for an hour and a half not a single dutiable thing or a single stowed-away alien was found. It is thought someone was trying to play a joke.

The average increase to be granted will range from 3¾ to 4 percent. This information was obtained from exceptionally reliable sources here.

CHEWED BOOTS TO KEEP ALIVE

Seamen Thirteen Days Adrift In an Open Boat

FOUR COLOMBIAN SURVIVORS

Snatched From Very Jaws of Death by Revenue Cutter After Eleven Comrades Had Died and Their Bodies Had Been Cast Overboard—Limit of Human Endurance

Halifax, May 18.—After thirteen days of terrible suffering in an open boat, four survivors of the freight steamer Columbian were picked up in the North Atlantic, forty miles south of Sable island, by the United States revenue cutter Seneca.

Eleven others of the boat's crew which left the Columbia when she was burned, just south of Sable island on May 3, had succumbed to injuries and priyations and their bodies had been thrown overboard.

The death roll of the lost freighter now stands at fifteen. Twenty-seven other members of the crew were saved by the Cunard liner Franconia and the steamer Manhattan after two days of exposure.

The men snatched from death by the Seneca were First Officer Terrio, Seamen Kendall and Belanger and Fireman Ludwigson.

The survivors had lived on only a few ship's biscuits and a cask of water which had long since been exhausted. They had gone the limit of human endurance.

When their short allowance of biscuits and water had failed, they maintained life by chewing boot leather and the few stray crumbs of hardtack. Rain water served them when their water cask went dry.

The first two days after drifting away from the flaming Columbia they saw three steamers, too far off to be signaled.

Hope for the missing third boat had been abandoned after a dozen transatlantic liners searched for five days within a wide radius of the spot where the Columbian burst into flames.

To sea-faring men, it seemed impossible that a small boat could pass through the series of gales that has since swept those waters, and the news that the Seneca had picked up survivors was received almost with incredulity.

Although the survivors were too weak from their suffering to tell the story completely, the revenue cutter's officers gathered that some of the sixteen who had hastily piled into the third boat had been so badly burned that they died within the first few days. It was decided to lighten the boat by casting the bodies overboard at once.

Some who had tumbled from their bunks at the first explosion and had rushed on deck half-clothed succumbed to the cold. Others, weakened by starvation and thirst, gradually sank into lethargy that was scarcely to be mistaken from death.

Somehow the survivors managed to keep the boat head-on to the seas when the weather became rough, but for the past few days little or no effort could be made to guide the craft. Day by day the number dwindled until the four who were left sank limply to the bottom of the boat and awaited the end.

When the lookout of the Seneca, scanning the horizon for bergs on the ice patrol, sighted the small boat through his glasses not a sign of life was seen. The Seneca put on all speed and running down to the lifeboat sent her gig alongside. The emaciated survivors were quickly transferred to the deck of the cutter and brandy forced between the parched lips.

As all the men were in urgent need of hospital attention, the Seneca was pushed under forced draught to Halifax, the nearest port.

It is considered doubtful if any of the five can cast any light on the cause of the explosions which wrecked the Columbian. The thirteen men landed at Boston by the Franconia were unable to solve the mystery. Captain McDonald and fourteen others were picked up by the Manhattan, which was bound for Antwerp, and their version of the accident has not been made known.

CANAL IMPEDIMENTS ARE ALL REMOVED

Freight Is Started Through Big Ditch on Five Barges

Panama, May 18.—Water borne freight begun passing through the canal today when five barges, carrying about 2100 tons of miscellaneous cargo, started from Balboa, at the Pacific end, to be towed to Cristobal, at the Atlantic end of the canal.

At Paraiso the railroad trestle has been removed and a new pontoon bridge swung into position, over which trains are now passing. The Empire suspension bridge has practically been removed. Thus, all the impediments to traffic through the canal are out of the way.

ONE CHECK FOR $10,000

Much Money Pledged at Prohibition Mass Meeting at Boston

Boston, May 18.—Thousands of dollars were subscribed at a mass meeting in Tremont temple towards the country-wide prohibition campaign that will be inaugurated next fall by a so-called "Flying Squadron." J. F. Hanly, former governor of Indiana, and Oliver W. Stewart made the appeal for funds and outlined the purposes of the campaign.

A single contribution of $10,000 was made by J. B. Lewis of Boston. The thousand-odd men and women in the audience gave sums ranging from 10 cents to $50. It was stated that $200,000 is needed to send the "Flying Squadron" through every state and large city of the union.

The squadron of ten will visit 150 cities, enlisting recruits for the prohibition movement.

Six Thousand Ford Company Employes to Be Laid Off

Detroit, May 18.—The Ford Motor company will lay off about 6000 men within the next three weeks, according to announcement made by Treasurer Couzens of the company. His explanation of the action was that the annual slack season in the automobile business was at hand.

Couzens would not say exactly how many men were to be laid off, but he intimated that 6000 would be the approximate total. They will be dropped at the rate of 200 to 300 a day and it will begin on Friday.

FACED FOUR LIONS.

Coolness and Daring of a Plucky Kaffir Herdboy.

Four lions attacked a herd of cattle on a farm at Romsey, South Africa, says the Rhodesia Herald. The herdboy was standing on an ant heap examining a pair of boots he had got the day previous, when he heard a low growl near him. On looking up he saw that three lions had got hold of three cows, while another lion stood looking on.

The boy pulled off his boots and threw them at the nearest lion, and then made a rush for them with a stick, shouting at the same time at the top of his voice to another herdboy to bring a gun.

In the meantime two lions had got their cows down, but, nothing daunted, the Kaffir made a rush for them, and the lions moved away from their prey. The boy then rounded up his cattle (he had 108 head), and while he was doing so had to chase the lions away several times. When he was at one side the lions would try to catch the cattle on the other. However, he brought all his cattle safely home, though one of the cows afterward died, the claw of a lion having penetrated her lung.

For cool daring it would be hard to beat the chasing of four lions single handed and with no weapons except a pair of boots and a stick.

LEARNING HOW TO UNLEARN.

Modern Scientists Harking Back to Thales of Miletus.

When we were young and knew without doubt that the molecule was composed of two or three ultimate parts, called atoms, we listened complacently to the statement that "science progresses in a straight line, philosophy around in a circle, or at best along a helical spiral." Now that we are older and believe that the simplest atom has nearly 1,800 parts, we find that perhaps the helix is expressive of science as well, observes the editor of the Engineering and Mining Journal.

We believe, with the alchemists, that the so called elements are fundamentally the same. Whether we will transmute one to another remains to be seen; we follow the alchemists in attempting it.

Were one of the Greek philosophers, Thales of Miletus, for instance, to stroll into a modern assembly of physicists and chemists, the language would be more troublesome than the ideas. He would hear the physical chemist remarking cheerfully that there is no matter, for that which we call matter is only energy, and Thales would remark, "Plagiarist." The disciples of relativity, the ultra modern physicists, would tell him that space and time are one, and Thales would sigh to think of his boyish debates.

John Locke.

John Locke, whose "Essay on the Human Understanding" was the first work that attracted attention in England to metaphysical speculation, was born at Wrington, England, Aug. 29, 1632, and died at Oates, England, Oct. 28, 1704. The chief purpose of the essay was to find the original source and scope of human knowledge. The conclusions he arrived at in this study were that there is no such thing as "innate idea; that the human mind is as a sheet of white paper prepared to be written upon; that the knowledge thereon written is supplied by experience and that sensation and reflection are the two sources of all our ideas." He made the first sketch when he was thirty-eight years of age and finished it seventeen years later. The book was bitterly attacked.

A Boat Survival.

The dghaisa (pronounced dysa), the gondola of Malta, is a survival, says John Wignacourt in "The Odd Man In Malta," of the oldest vessel ever used and varies little in shape from the Egyptian boats of the dead. Actually the eye of Osiris is still to be seen upon the prow. It is propelled by two experienced oarsmen, one of whom always stands. When the Gregale wind is sweeping the harbors and the steam ferries are unsafe you can still use the trusty dghaisa. It is a gay little craft, painted in brilliant colors—in this respect a contrast to the somber gondola of Venice.

Pleasant For the Callers.

Two ladies made a formal call on a distant acquaintance. The maid asked them to wait until she ascertained whether the person inquired for was in. Presently she tripped downstairs and announced that "the lady was not at home." One of the callers, finding that she had forgotten her cards, said to her friend, "Let me write my name on your card."

"Oh, it isn't at all necessary, miss," put in the maid cheerfully; "I told her who it was."—New York Globe.

Gone For Good.

SHOCKING THE SALAMBOS

Deed of Vengeance and Its Happy Sequel

By ROBERT J. PEARSALL

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Andrew Hemphill glanced at the gaudy prints outside of the Gaiety theater, started to pass on, hesitated, saw the sign "five cents" above the ticket window, turned in, paid his nickel and entered the folding doors.

Then he leaned back in his seat and stared at the white curtain on which moving pictures would presently be thrown, and in a few moments saw shaping there a little private moving picture of his own, so distasteful that he fought against the illusion for a while, and then resigned himself to it, as he had many times before, and let his memory run riot.

His father was the village merchant. Andrew had been offered the choice between a clerkship in the store and a position as teller and all-round man in the village bank. In an evil hour he had chosen the latter.

Still, for two years everything had gone well. He had followed the leisurely routine of his work contentedly and might still be following it, if—

At the thought a snarl disfigured his face. If it had not been for John Barton! For years he had been saying that.

Every misfortune of his life he traced to this one case. When he found himself penniless and hungry, he muttered the words.

When he lay on freezing nights shelterless, for lack of money to hire himself a bed, he blamed it on John Barton.

It was a simple story. John Barton was the cashier. They two were the only employees of the bank, the only ones, save the president, who had access to the funds. There had been a robbery. Andrew had been arrested.

Part of the money was found in his room.

He found it impossible to account for his actions on the night of the robbery. He had been lured away by a faked message.

It was clearly a frameup against him, and by whom but John Barton? But he could not prove it.

Arrested and imprisoned, he lost his nerve. The jail was old and rickety, and one night he pried the bars away with a leg of the iron bathtub. He escaped, but only into a larger prison.

For to him, nameless, friendless, penniless, with a price on his head, offered by the Bankers' association, of which he shuddered to think, the freedom which he gained proved less desirable than the confinement from which he had fled.

Pursued by misfortune, haunted always by dread of recognition and arrest, he drifted from place to place, a nondescript wanderer, sometimes a worker, sometimes a tramp.

His life was ruined, and he knew it. And for its ruin he hated himself, and he hated doubly, with a hatred that had through years of brooding grown into a monomania, its first cause, John Barton.

The curtain ran up, and the show began. A short skirted singer and a black faced comedian appeared. Andrew stirred restlessly and wished himself again in the streets.

There followed a mediocre juggler and a man who went through the uninteresting process of being tied and shackled in various ways and then releasing himself. And then the feature bill of the evening was announced: "The great Salambos."

Andrew straightened himself with a convulsive start that caused his neighbors on either side to look at him apprehensively, for in the suave personage bowing from the side of the stage and smilingly introducing his own act he recognized John Barton!

It was impossible, but it was true.

The same face, the same figure, the same voice, the same—Andrew strained his eyes—the same scar above the right eyebrow.

And while Andrew strove against the leash of his will, longing to spring upon the stage and throttle the man who had so wronged him, but holding himself nevertheless in his seat, the Salambos retired, the lights were dimmed and the act began.

Through a hazy mist of blood Andrew saw the rest of the performance.

He saw the great Salambos, enveloped in a mystic halo of yellow light, move stiffly upon the stage.

He heard the hated voice chanting monotonously the explanation of his feats.

"I am the human salamander," he said, "the man who is impervious to fire, heat and electricity. Now I grasp those glowing balls, white heated by 5,000 volts from your own city power house, five times the amount required to electrocute the ordinary man.

"To touch me now would mean instant death. Now I blow flames from my mouth to prove that my body is like a raging furnace. Now I ignite this cloth from my finger tip, this cigar, this candle. Now"—

It was really a mystifying performance, but Andrew at first paid little attention to it.

He only knew that his enemy was before him, unsuspecting, and in his power.

But toward the last of the act an idea began to form, an idea so devilish that at first he recoiled from it, but so satisfying to his almost insane craving for revenge that he could not rid himself of it.

It was a continuous vaudeville show, and he sat through two performances.

When he finally left the idea had shaped itself. But as yet his unaccustomed mind only dallied with it.

The knowledge that he could do the thing was a pleasing tidbit to his imagination. Its actual performance was impossible as yet.

It is an old, old story. Night after night he came to the Gaiety, sat unheeding through the first few acts, sat with strained attention through the performance of the Salambos, nursing his hatred, gloating over his enemy, accustoming his mind to the at first impossible deed.

He could not sleep; he could not eat; he could think of nothing but his revenge.

One of Andrew's many occupations had been that of a telephone linesman, so he went about his task that night in a workmanlike manner that excited no curiosity in the minds of those that happened to notice him.

He had timed the performance accurately.

At the exact moment that John Barton appeared on the stage of the Gaiety in the character of the Salambos Andrew reached the top of a high pole just outside of the theater.

He seated himself astride the crosspiece bearing the heavy cables, insulated, but alive with deadly energy.

From one of these cables a small wire branched off into the Gaiety, supplying that building with light and also, as Andrew had learned, with the electricity used by the Salambos in his act.

Andrew, equipped with insulated pliers and heavy rubber gloves, removed the insulation from the small wire and from another cable with practiced hands.

Then he attached another short wire he had brought with him to the exposed stretch of cable.

He waited a moment. There was a burst of applause from within the theater.

He knew what that marked, the first exhibition of immunity on the part of the Salambos, the seizing of the electrically heated balls.

Instantly he dropped the wire from his pliers upon the exposed surface of the wire that led into the Gaiety, knowing that it would send 10,000 additional volts of electricity crashing through the body of his enemy.

There was a crackling sound like a thousand firecrackers.

A sudden white light flared through the screened windows of the theater.

The applause died out to a sickening silence, and Andrew heard the sound of a heavy fall.

Then came sudden screams and hoarse shouts and a sharp slam that Andrew knew for the hasty dropping of an asbestos curtain.

From out the exits of the theater poured a panic stricken mob, and Andrew dropped unobserved into its midst. And, as he listened to the excited exclamations that came to him from every side, his madness dropped from him, and he saw himself for what he was—a murderer!

"It's what comes of playing with death!" said one man.

"It must have killed him instantly," said another. "Why, when he dropped there seemed nothing left of him. His clothes went that quick, like a flash. Lord, I can see it now."

"Here come the firemen. Make way, make way there."

Andrew slunk away up a side street. Of a sudden he was very sick.

He leaned weakly against the side of a building, and men passing thought him drunk.

Why had he done it? Why, why? Revenge? Revenge on whom? For what? He could not remember.

He had killed the Salambos, they said. Who was the Salambos? What matter? He had killed him. He was a murderer. He had killed, killed—

After awhile he recovered to a certain extent and staggered away.

His memory came back, too, and he knew whom he had killed, and why, but it brought only fresh torture.

John Barton—why, he had played with John Barton as a boy! And he had killed him. No, no, impossible!

But, yes, he had killed the Salambos, and the Salambos was John Barton, and John Barton was the Salambos, and—

He found himself repeating this rigmarole aloud and checked himself in terror.

He saw people whom he met looking at him curiously, and tried to get a grip on himself.

But he kept on walking. He wanted to go back to his room, but he was afraid. Somebody or something might meet him there.

He wanted to go into a saloon and get a drink. It might steady him, but again he was afraid.

He walked, walked, walked. Sometimes he broke into a shambling run. He left the downtown district far behind.

His path now led between long rows of darkened houses, filled with sleeping people. Sleeping! He would never be able to sleep again.

Hours passed. Beneath a flickering street light he looked at his watch. It was 4 o'clock. Soon it would be daylight.

At the thought a mighty terror seized him and shook him from head to foot. Light!

How could he face the light? Stripped of its mantle of darkness, would

"ARE YOU REALLY ALIVE?" HE HALF WHISPERED.

But when the first sickly light of morning stole over the city he stopped and gasped and reeled back against a telephone pole.

For the instinct of the criminal had asserted itself, his unguided steps had shaped themselves to a circle, and he was standing in front of the Gaiety theater.

For fully five minutes he stood with eyes staring and mouth agape.

Then something snapped in his brain like a cord, and the strain relaxed. He would hide his guilt no longer. With lagging but determined steps he started away, headed straight for the police station.

But his body, weak from its all night vigil, seemed about to fail him.

At the first street corner he stopped and, leaning against a building, waited for a car.

A taxicab whirled down the street. Andrew saw it without realization, and when it stopped in front of him and the occupant sprang out he still paid no attention.

It was only when he heard his own name called loudly that he roused himself with a start of terrified amazement.

For the voice was John Barton's voice, and the figure approaching him with outstretched hand was John Barton's figure.

But John Barton was dead!

His hand, however, was warm, and his voice was anything but the voice of a corpse.

"Andrew! As I live, Andrew Hemphill! You know me, don't you, Andy? Come, brace up! Hey, you," to the chauffeur, "give me a hand here. The man's fainted!"

When Andrew recovered consciousness he was in the Harbor Emergency hospital, and his hand was enveloped in the hand of the man whom he had thought he had murdered.

"Are you really alive?" he half whispered.

"Me? It's you that's the dead one, from appearances. What on earth was the matter?"

"I thought"—

"You don't mean to say that you thought you were still wanted back home? Lord! You've been cleared long ago.

"The president of the bank died and left a confession that he was the guilty one, that he had been short in his accounts and faked the robbery to cover the shortage and tried to cover his own steps by throwing the blame on you.

"Of course there's a technical charge of jail breaking against you, but that won't amount to a hang. And your old father's crazy to find you. We'll go back together. I've got to go back east and have another dummy made anyway, and so"—

"Another dummy!"

"Yes. Don't you know that you're talking to the great Salambos?" Andrew shuddered. "Well, you are, and some crazy fool switched on about 20,000 volts of electricity last night and burned the dummy that the audience thought was myself into a crisp.

"The papers are full of it this morning. It's spoiled my graft here on the coast anyway until they forget about it, and so"—

But Andrew had fainted again.

BENJAMIN KING PASSES AWAY

Was Curator of Birthplace of President Adams

Benjamin King, a veteran railroad man, a veteran Odd Fellow, veteran reman and one of the best known residents of Wollaston, passed peacefully away this morning at his home. Mr. King has been complaining of trouble about the heart for several days. This morning he arose as usual and had breakfast. After breakfast he went to his room and laid down and passed into a peaceful sleep from which he did not awake. He was found sometime later, and his son Samuel M. King, notified.

Mr. King was born in Boston, Aug. 4, 1832. He spent his younger days about his native place and was educated in the public schools of Boston. Leaving school he entered the employ of the old Boston & Albany railroad as a fireman. While engaged as such he was in an accident during which his engine left the iron and toppled over onto Mr. King. It was thought that he was fatally injured but later recovered.

He never returned to the locomotive cab, however, but returned to the railroad and was employed in the shops for 54 years. It was while thus employed that he became a member of the Boston fire department and was captain of Hose 2, located on Hudson street. He did gallant work while a member of the Boston fire department and was a member of the Veteran Firemans association of that city until it went out of existence.

It was during the war times that he was connected with the Boston Fire department and during the great fire in Boston in 1872, although not then a member of the department the old spirit was still with him and putting on his veteran firemans badge he reported to District Chief Regan for duty and was assigned to take charge of the out of town firemen at the fire in the Brown & Durrell building. This duty he faithfully performed.

He came to Quincy in 1871 and has since made this city his home. He was appointed an assistant engineer of the fire department of the city and served during the years 1886 and 1887. For several years past he has had charge of the birthplace of President John Quincy Adams for the Quincy Historical society.

Mr. King was for some years a member of the Board of Managers of Public Burial Places of this city, having been first appointed in 1898. He was also at one time sexton of the Wollaston Congregational church.

Mr. King was also a veteran Odd Fellaw being a member of Tremont lodge for fifty years and Trimount encampment of Boston.

He was very much interested in music and for many years sang in church at Wollaston. Funeral services will be held Wednesday from the home of his son 245 South Central avenue, Wollaston at 2 o'clock.

He leaves one son, Samuel M. King.

about City Square this morning that Thomas Cahill had been discharged from the position as "Assistant Commissioner" and had been appointed as foreman of the Board of Health in place of William Taylor who had been discharged, the Mayor laughed, and said that there was nothing to it.

Commissioner Brown when asked about the rumors relative to Cahill said that he had nothing to say.

Rumor says that the councilman referred to is Charles R. Ross of Ward Three. Over the telephone Mr. Ross said he had no conversation with the Mayor, and had promised no jobs, and that the Mayor has told him by 'phone that he was not the one that was reported to have received the scolding.

TWO BAD FIRES

operative summer vacation house for working girls. Some time ago the building was purchased by Councilman Carlson who has been making extensive alterations to the building, so that it was in first class condition. The building had been recently wired for electric light. In all he had expended nearly $3000 in repairs.

The building is not permanently occupied, although the lower part of the building had been in use some evenings by the Squantum association as a place of meeting. People early on the scene thought they heard cries of fire from some one inside of the building. Then the sounds died down. Thinking that possibly someone might be in the building the firemen searched it thoroughly but could find no trace of any person.

The fire evidently started in the attic of the house and when discovered was breaking out through the roof. The electric light switches are located in the upper part of the house. There are two of these switches, one operating the lights in the upper part of the house and the other the lower part of the house. The switch operating the upper part of the house was supposed to be off, but investigation Sunday found that it had been thrown on, but by whom no one knows. A state fire inspector was at the building Sunday, and his report after investigation was that wires must in some way have been the cause.

The loss on the building will reach to several thousand dollars.

The Squantum correspondent of the Daily Ledger puts the loss at $4,000, and says the fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin as the building was unoccupied and when discovered the front door of the building was open. Two strange men were seen in Squantum after midnight Saturday and police inspectors are at work on the case. One of them, who was in Squantum most of the day Sunday, said he had an important clue as to the identity of these men whom he wants to question in regard to the fire.

The prompt discovery of the fire was in part due to the vigilance of "Larry," a pet dog of Mrs. Matthew McGrain of Bay Side road. "Larry" saw the flames as soon as they broke through the roof and his incessant barking awoke people along Bay Side road. M. P. Colman telephoned the Quincy fire department and then dressed and hurried to the scene of the fire. He was the first to arrive and found the front door of the structure open, but no one in the corridors.

Edward Carlson went into the building when the fire first broke out and saved an organ which is the property of Rev. T. W. Davison o fthe Atlantic Memorial church. Sunday through the kindness of Hiram A. Morse and Herman Berghaus, who have just leased the Squantum Inn, church services were held at the Squantum Inn.

QUINCY A. A. DEFEATED.

The Quincy A. A. were beaten in their first game Saturday afternoon by the Braintree White Sox. The sporting public of Braintree saw Ross, their moundsman, fan 21 of the visitors and establish a record for the season. Quincy played good base ball but were unable to outwit the resourceful Ross. Les Andrews pitched the first six innings for the Quincy and was succeeded by "Bull Moose" Brown. Reports are that the latter is an all-round man and can be turned into a high class pitcher without much coaching.

ATLANTIC A. A. WIN.

The Atlantic A. A. by heavy hitting and excellent team work whitewashed the Warland A. C. of Cambridge at the Ward Six playground Saturday afternoon, 16 to 0. Teevan, a new Atlantic man, was the star of the game. McNally let but one visitor reach third and allowed but four hits. Atlantic made 19 hits. The score by innings:—

Atlantic 0 3 2 3 2 1 4 1—16

Batteries—McNally and O'Connell; Monte and Abbott.

FESTIVAL A SUCCESS.

The May festival of the Parents-Teachers Association of the Adams school was continued Saturday afternoon and was as successful as on Friday evening. Mothers, children and visiting teachers were among the large attendance. The proceeds will be applied to the decorative fund which is being rapidly increased.

PRESS ON STRIKE.

Because the Daily Ledger press went on a strike Saturday it was impossible to print the full edition, which no one regrets more than the publishers. It is hoped there may be no further trouble today.

TRIBUTE TO G. A. R. AND OUR FLAG

Secretary of State Donahue Speaker at Sons of Veterans Meeting

Record of Grand Army Will Long Be an Inspiration

Legislation is being enacted daily that will create a higher respect for our flag, protect it from anarchists and the Industrial Workers of the World, from its use by political parties no matter how laudable their intention may be, and in every movement for its protection Massachusetts has been in the fore front , declared Secretary of State Frank J. Donahue, division commander of the Sons of Veterans, at a union meeting in Faxon hall Monday evening. The words, like shots from a gun, aroused such feeling in those present that hearty cheers, mingled with applause and stamping of feet greeted it.

Camp Antietam of South Braintree, Col. Thomas Weston camp of Hingham, and Col. Oliver W. Peabody camp of Milton, were represented by delegations, and the greater number were from Col. Abner Packard camp of this city under whose auspices the meeting was held.

Many members of Post No. 88, Grand Army of the Republic were on hand and Commander C. R. Marstin and Comrade Edward Lennon gave personal reminiscenses, while J. I. Botting of Hingham, district aid and commander of the Hingham camp spoke on membership.

The committee in charge was Senior Vice Commander William French, Color Bearer Albert Farnum and Guide Lester Porter. Commander Edward Prouty presided and between speeches there were selections by French's orchestra.

Mr. Donahue's address was along general lines and embodied many reasons why eligibles should affiliate. He spoke for about 35 minutes and his references to the history of the growth of the nation and the leaders of their time were inspirational.

He said he was glad to see the Grand Army veterans present and in their presence wished to make his acknowledgements of grateful obligation to those who stood as a wall between ourselves and enemies and made it possible for you and I to enjoy the blessings of the free institutions of the country. They went forth to the music of the union, singing "Hail Columbia" and the "Star Spangled Banner" and they returned singing "John Brown's body lies a mouldering in his grave." They went forth to save this union and a higher power decreed their return as victors of a sacred war.

FRANK J. DONAHUE,
Secretary of State.

After all else is forgotten , the record of the G. A. R. will be a part of the glory of the country and an inspiration to future peoples. War is terrible but so is everything else in life that makes progress possible, and it is written there shall be no remission of sin without the shedding of blood.

The speaker said he could not see how a man who had in his veins the blood of a veteran can fail to affiliate with the Sons of Veterans and show his respect for his father, his father's

ALL ORDERS WERE OBEYED

Says Capt. Mead Who Is Acting Chief

Capt. A. L. Mead, of the Fire department, who is at present Acting Chief, takes exception to the statement that some of the call men, refused to take orders from him at the South Quincy fire Saturday night. He says that no matter whether he is at a fire as Acting Chief or as Captain, the call men of the city have always taken his orders and obeyed them, and that he is not merely a captain of the Central fire station but of the whole department. His letter is as follows:
Editor Daily Ledger:

Under your article "Fire Chief Suspended" in Monday night's Ledger the following is a part.

"That the Chief had been suspended was not generally known among the call men Saturday night, and at the fire in South Quincy that night the call men being ignorant of what had taken place, refused to take orders from the Acting Chief, taking orders only from the District Chief."

Now any one reading the above article would naturally infer that the men do not take orders from me as a Captain at any time, but if they had known that I was Acting Chief Saturday night they might have taken my orders then.

If I give an order either in the capacity of Captain or Acting Chief, believe me, Mr. Editor, they are going to be obeyed. Now at the fire in South Quincy, and also the one at Squantum, no man disobeyed one of my orders, but on the other hand they all took hold with a will, and worked hard, and I have nothing but the highest praise for them for the way they performed their work.

Respectfully Yours,
ALFRED L. MEAD,
Captain Quincy Fire Department.
Quincy, May 19, 1914.

It looks as though real summer weather was near at hand. Three days without a storm is quite a record.

RESOLVE SUBSTITUTED

For Unfavorable Report on Stuart Claim

(Special from State House.)

The House of Representatives, moved by the fervid appeal of Representative Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy, on Monday overturned the unfavorable report of the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs on the resolve to compensate John Stuart, whose shipbuilding business was irreparably damaged, it is alleged by the construction of the drawless bridge over Sachem brook in the Quincy Shore Reservation.

Representative Sandberg, protesting against the unfair and inconsistent report of the committee, indicated that he is reconciled to the belief that the committee, unconsciously or otherwise, has fallen into the unforgivable rut of reporting matters regardless of their merits.

The bill came before the House with an adverse report by the committee. The question was of accepting the committee's report. Representative Sandberg and Representative Edward N. Dahlborg of Brockton argued against the acceptance of the report Representative Sandberg moved the substitution of the resolve, itself, for the committee's unfavorable report, and the motion carried. The resolve, which, is as follows, will now go to to the committee on ways and means for further consideration:—

"Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the treasury of the commonwealth the sum of $5000 to John Stuart, in full compensation for loss and damage heretofore sustained by him in his business and property, by reason of the construction of a drawless bridge over the channel of Sachem brook, so-called, in the Quincy Shore Reservation in this city of Quincy."

In support of his motion, Representative Sandberg said:—

"Mr. Stuart came to Wollaston over twenty years ago, started in a modest way and built up prosperous, profitable shipbuilding plant. His reputation extended to distant points. He built in one year fourteen boats for the United States government, at another time three boats for James J. Hill, the railroad magnate, famous as president of the Great Northen Railway. He has also constructed boats for residents in Denmark and Finland, and hast hus, indirectly at least, materially added to the advertising of the commonwealth.

"Since the construction of the bridge he has received letters from Nova Scotia and South Africa asking him to continue the construction of boats, which he is now unable to build on account of the bridge. Because of the fact that the bridge is drawless, Mr. Stuart is unable to float new boats under the bridge. In fact, you couldn't float a piece of planking under the bridge now, the water is so shallow. And not only is his shipbuilding plant ruined by the presence of the bridge but the value of the land itself is materially decreased.

"In the year 1913 the legislature authorized the payments to individuals in fifteen different instances where there was absolutely no liability on the part of the commonwealth, but purely gratuitous for the sake of justice. In the year 1912, twenty-one such resolves were passed. This year the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs has reported a bill for the payment of $10,000 to the owner of land in Stoneham where the owner of the land had a jury's award but dissatisfied with the amount because he believed it to be inadequate.

"It might be said in closing, as illustrative of the fact, that John Stuart has suffered irreparably, that before the drawless bridge was constructed he employed fifty men at his plant. Today he employs one man."

REPRESENTATIVE SANDBERG.

STOUGHTON HOTEL FIRE

Calls Out Quincy Departme t at 2 15 A. M.

The fire department was called out on a wild goose chase at 2.15 this morning for the fire in the Fairview house at North Stoughton. Someone who saw the illumination, thinking a big fire in progress called the Central station by telephone and notified them.

Just about the same time someone pulled in an alarm from Box 38. As the department speed toward the box the sky was brightly illuminated and they made up their minds that they had a big fire on their hands. Meeting a police officer he informed them that there was no fire in Quincy but that it was in Braintree. After returning to quarters, it was learned by telephone that the fire was in North Stoughton. The loss was $20,000.

The alarm from Box 21 at 3.45 Monday afternoon was for a slight fire on the roof of the old Hayes house on Gas place occupied by John Martin. The house is some distance from the fire alarm box and when the department arrived at the box, there was no one there to direct them to the fire, and it required considerable chasing about before it was finally located. The fire started from a bonfire and did but little damage.

PARISH HOUSE AT WOLLASTON

The adjourned meeting of the Wollaston Unitarian Society to consider the proposed parish house, was held Monday evening, and largely attended by people of the church. Walter E. Simmons presided. There was a general discussion of the proposed addition to the church, as illustrated in the Daily Ledger of Saturday. At a late hour an adjournment was taken until Friday evening, when it is probable the plans will be ratified.

MRS. PATRICK BENNETT.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Bennett wife of Patrick Bennett, was held from her home at 13 O'Connell avenue, this morning and was largely attended. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at the St. Mary's church by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy and music was by the regular choir. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

The sewing circle of the Daughters of Veterans will hold an all day meeting on Wednesday with Mrs. M. C. Flynn, Prospect street off Storr avenue, Braintree.

BOARD OF SURVEY IS RECOMMENDED

City Council Lay Report of Committee on Table Until Next Meeting

Councilman Ross Asks Explanation from Mayor

Seldom have the attendants at meetings of the City Council seen such a display of bitterness, as was shown Monday evening by Mayor Miller against the newspapers. It came during the time when Councilman Ross, speaking to a question of personal privilege, denied emphatically the rumors that he had asked the Mayor to appoint certain men to the fire department. After making his statement, he called upon the Mayor to verify his statement.

In reply, the Mayor, after asking the gentleman if he had a chip on his shoulder, proceeded to lay it onto the newspapers. He declared that he had never been interviewed by the newspapers. That they made stuff up out of whole cloth and put words into his mouth which he had never said. That one of them visited his office that morning, and that he did not say anything to him, but his paper came out with a whole column.

Continuing in a quieter tone, the Mayor said I told you that I could not give you two men from one ward; and a little later, in reply to a pointed question from the Councilman, the Mayor qualified his statement by saying that he had told them, he could not have two from one ward.

Councilman Ross in his statement said that he had been a resident of Quincy for thirty years, and a member of the City Council for three years. That he had always tried to do his duty, and that he felt considerably cut up by the statements in the newspapers that he had tried to influence the Mayor in regard to the appointment of firemen. He was always ready to help his constituents find employment, but he never promised a man a position. He had never promised any man a position on the Fire department.

He had seen the article in the Bulletin last week, and a few days later he had been told that he was the man referred to. He denied again that he had ever promised a job on the Fire department to any man. He then asked the Mayor if he had asked him to appoint certain men to the fire department.

Mayor Miller—"If he did not ask for any one, why did I tell him he could not have two men from one ward?"

In reply to further questions the Mayor said that Councilman Ross had not tried to interfere with executive functions.

Councilman Craig had a few words to say about the paper in question having good dope. Personally, he would not ask a job for any friend.

This closed the incident.

The absent members at the meeting were Councilman Bass, Carlson and Little.

APPOINTMENTS.

Communications were received from the Mayor appointing George S. Williams, a measurer of wood, Edward Schuppert a special constable, and John J. Greenquist, a public weigher, all of which were confirmed.

TAX REFUND.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the Tax Collector, asking for an appropriation of $110.83 to refund George A. Richards for amount paid on a tax title sale. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Bailey offered an order for that amount which was referred to the Finance Committee.

A number of applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the License committee.

An application of P. Wolk to drive a wagon for the collection of junk was received under suspension of the rules, and referred to the proper committee.

An application of Jacob Goldner to change the location of his junk collector's license from Cyril street to Sumner street was laid on the table until later, when Councilman Beeman offered an order making the transfer which was adopted.

A petition of the street railway for a location for poles on Water street was referred to the Committee on Streets.

An application from the street railway for a re-location of its poles on [illegible] road was granted.

CITY HALL NEWS.

Mayor Miller has little cause for complaint against the local newspapers, at the way in which he and his administration have been used by them during his period in office. When Mayor Miller assumed office the editor of the Daily Ledger determined not to antagonize his administration, but in the interest of the city to give him every moral support possible, and this has been done. There have been numerous occasions when had we so desired we could have attacked certain acts, but have not done so for the reason stated above.

Mayor Miller's statement to the City Council Monday night, that he had never been interviewed, was quite a broad statement to make. In almost the next breath he stated that newspaper men came to his office daily and then went away and printed a lot of stuff he had not said.

Newspaper men, as a rule do not call upon a public official every morning just for a social call, and Mayor Miller has been in public life long enough to realize this. These newsgatherers when they call on a public official are looking for news, and that is what they have in mind first, last and always, and if His Honor says anything in the course of the conversation, not intended for publication, he should say so, and newspaper reporters will respect his wishes.

When there are rival papers, as there are in Quincy, the Mayor should treat all alike, and the news he gives to one should be given to another, otherwise there is apt to be trouble for the man who gets left, finding that the Chief Executive is using one better than the other, will find other ways to get the news. There are always plenty of people, who have what they claim is inside information, who are ready to talk, and a newspaper man finding he cannot get his information from the fountain head will do the next best thing.

The newspaper men of the city, especially the Daily Ledger, have tried to use the Mayor square. There have been many times that they could, if a sensational story was desired, have found plenty of material for it, but the Daily Ledger is not a sensational, irresponsible paper.

When, however, one of the department officials of the city is suspended, the public has the right to know the reasons, and the newspapers are expected to obtain those reasons and print them. In this particular case both Chief Billings and Mayor Miller were interviewed. The Chief declined to talk with newspaper men, but referred all to Mayor Miller. The Mayor shirked his duty to the public when he declined to give reasons for his public acts. Only a very small part of the column story in Monday's Ledger was printed as an interview. But the facts were supplemented by rumors which were town talk. The Daily Ledger challenges Mayor Miller to quote one instance in an interview where he has been misquoted .When no interview is granted, the Daily Ledger feels that it is justified in printing rumors, especially as it states that they are rumors.

Quincy heard the doctrines of the I. W. W. promulgated the other night by one of the chief exponents, and there will be no regret if no more permits are granted a man to speak who had the effrontery to declare he and his followers had no patriotism or religion except what was expressed in their efforts to get higher wages and shorter hours. Ettor also boldly declared that he did not recognize the right of capital to any returns at all. It isn't any wonder that the I. W. W. has been unable to get a foothold in Quincy. The working classes in Quincy are law abiding and will continue to solve their labor questions through their legitimate labor unions rather than the strong arm methods of the I. W. W.

Attorney General Reynolds is in no apparent hurry to replace District Attorney French. In this he is right, for the man from Randolph is giving entire satisfaction in the way in which he discharges the duties of the office which he holds, and there ought to be some better reason for displacing him than the fact that the politicians want the job. Let good enough alone, Mr. Reynolds and thereby help prove that the Wilson administration has no sympathy with the spoils system.

I cannot see, he continued, why any man can see his father's grave decorated on Memorial Day by strangers, and if our organization did nothing else but assist the Grand Army on that day in placing remembrances on the departed ones resting place we would have sufficient reason for existence.

It is through our organization that patriotism must be nourished, for our flag is an inspiration to those who fought under it and should be to us who live under it. It stands for the integrity of manhood, the purity of womanhood, and the sacredness of all. There is room only for one flag, no room for the red flag of anarchy.

It is the flag of construction, never of tyranny, and always of liberty, and wherever it leads we follow because it is guided by the unseen hand of God. It is the visible symbol of the ideals of American people. We are torn oftentimes by the rancor of political partisanship, and at other times by other causes, but always in a crisis the flag will enfold within its colors its people. It is the emblem of the supreme will. May its clamoring voices ever ring out across the sea and say to the western hemisphere there is a republic where the lowliest born can aspire to the highest office in the land, where opportunity always lives.

Three rousing cheers were given Mr. Donahue at the conclusion of his speech, and after the singing of America many renewed acquaintances with the youthful secretary of state.

ASKS LOAN OF $400,000,000

HUERTA OFFERS TO RESIGN

Declared to Be Ready to Step Down and Out If Necessary to Secure Peace—Would Make Broader Settlement of Mexican Trouble Possible—Succession Not Likely to Fall Upon Military Leader—Situation Now Far Beyond Tampico Incident—Rebels Levy Forced Loan on Foreigners at Tampico—Mexico Agrees to Punish Slayers of Parks

Washington, May 19.—General Huerta has authorized the Mexican mediation delegates to submit his resignation, in case such a course is found necessary to a settlement in the peace negotiations.

This was stated positively in dispatches from a thoroughly competent diplomatic source in Mexico City to one of the foreign representatives in Washington and confirms intimations given by friends of the delegates.

But Huerta still hopes to "save his face" and retire in a blaze of glory by tacking conditions upon his retirement. These terms are said to be:

He will step out of the provisional presidency of Mexico—provided the United States will loan Mexico $400,000,000 and will lease Magdalena bay for $99,000,000.

Huerta's other conditions are: That Carranza shall not be chosen to succeed him; that Huerta shall have a voice in the choice of his successor; that Huerta be allowed to run for president in the July elections, and that the Americans evacuate Vera Cruz.

How Money Will Be Spent

The proposition for an American loan, it is said, contemplates expenditure of the $400,000,000 under supervision of a commission of two Americans, two Mexicans, one representative of France and one of Germany.

The Magdalena bay lease is said to contemplate a ninety-nine-year rental with a payment of $1,000,000 yearly.

It is understood that Huerta is suggesting that Asiatics shall be forbidden to colonize in Mexico.

According to the information from Mexico City, Huerta at first authorized the delegates to discuss only the question of the Tampico conflict, leading to the American occupation of Vera Cruz. Later, it was explained, he came to recognize the necessity of a broader settlement, and then conveyed to the delegates assurances that he was prepared to step down should this course be found necessary by them.

As to Future Government

The problem causing chief concern to diplomats in Mexico City now is that of the form of administration to be established during the interregnum before a constitutionally elected president could assume office. No intimations concerning the name of a possible successor to Huerta were contained in the dispatch, this subject being one in which it would be necessary to consult constitutionalist and other leaders in Mexico.

The information of Huerta's attitude received through foreign diplomatic channels agrees with the view obtained by some of the close friends of the Mexican peace envoys. According to this view, the delegates relized that the present administration at Mexico City was fast going to pieces, and it was inevitable that Huerta give place to some other authority. It did not, however, disclose that Huerta had authorized his resignation if they considered that course necessary, and this more definite phase was first made known in the dispatch through diplomatic channels.

Who will come after Huerta—whether an individual or a provisional commission—still is an open question, but it is gathered that the succession will not be likely to fall on military leaders who have come to prominence "by arbitrary force."

Broad Problem For Delegates

"The Huerta delegates never will agree to the selection for provisional president of any of the constitutionalist military men," said a man who had a long talk with the Huerta representatives. "They want some one for provisional president who will guarantee a fair election to all parties concerned, and who has not been a military partisan. Of course, this would not exclude a number of men who have been in sympathy with the constitutionalists, but not military leaders."

This view coincided with that obtained from other persons who had informal talks with Huerta delegates. The three Mexicans did not divulge the nature of their long conference with Huerta before their departure, but a man who knows the viewpoint of the three men said:

"They are prepared to go the limit in the way of concessions and will recommend to Huerta the reasonable thing. People who talked with the Huerta delegates said they realized the situation has progressed far beyond the Tampico incident and that at Niagara Falls they would be confronted with settling the broad problem of restoring peace to Mexico."

A MOUNTED DOCTOR

© 1914, by American Press Association.

The constitutionalists have levied a forced loan of $500,000 on the foreign business men at Tampico. Some have fled from the city to escape it and the matter has been taken up at Washington and in Europe.

The Villa-Carranza combination will have to be careful how it acts at Tampico. When operating in the interior it killed and robbed Americans and others at will. Now, however, it has occupied a port and is in a position where those who are not willing to see their nationals killed and their property destroyed can get at it.

England, for instance, could make the price of the constitutionalists holding Tampico substantial reparation for the murder of Benton. Germany, France and Holland may not agree to see their citizens forced to feed and pay the wages of the rebel army.

These nations, with ample justification, could make the port useless to its captors. Whether they would take such drastic action, however, against the wishes of the Wilson administration, is doubtful.

Action In Parks Case

Mexico has promised to avenge the death of Private Parks. The Brazilian minister notified the state department of the promise from Huerta's secretary of foreign affairs that he will punish the men guilty of Parks' murder if he finds the killing actually occurred within the Mexican federal lines at Vera Cruz.

The agreement to punish Mexicans in the Parks case was taken here to mean that Secretary Bryan's representations had gone further than a mere request for information. It was believed, as originally intimated and later inferentially denied, that Bryan had demanded reprisals.

SURVIVORS IN BAD CONDITION

Columbian's Men, Rescued by Cutter, Tell Terrible Story

PASSED BY BIG OCEAN LINERS

Boat Half Full of Water During Their Fourteen Days Adrift—Eleven Men, Some of Them Insane, Forced to Succumb—Scanty Supply of Rations Quickly Disposed Of

Halifax, May 19.—With the arrival here of the United States revenue cutter Seneca, bringing the surviving four of the fifteen men of the third lifeboat from the Leyland line freighter Columbian, which caught fire at sea on May 3, the harrowing story was told of the sufferings from which eleven men died.

Five lay almost lifeless in the unguided boat when the Seneca sighted her Sunday. One died soon after the helpless and emaciated forms were taken in slings over the side of the cutter.

The ministrations of the Seneca's physician had kept life in the others, although because of their great exposure and hardships they will probably be wrecks for life. Some may lose their feet and others their hands after their thirteen days of drifting over an arctic sea.

Hunger, thirst, cold, exposure, tempestuous seas, companions made insane by drinking sea water dying in the ravings of delirium and trying to murder them, the frequent alternation of hope and despair and the knowledge that they were hopelessly lost and depended for rescue purely on chance, were some of the factors that combined to bring them to the last gasp of utter prostration when the Seneca sighted them.

All hope had been abandoned then. The eleventh man had just died. For three days six of them had lived on five biscuits and a pint of fresh water. This was now all gone.

The most vigorous of the four on their arrival here was Robert Tiere, the second officer of the Columbian, and he told his story as he lay in the sick bay of the cutter. Although his feet were so swollen from cold and exposure that they may have to be amputated, Tiere betrayed in his speech nothing of the sufferings he had undergone, and his tale of the deaths of his comrades was given in such a way as to give the impression that his great trials had dulled his sensibilities.

What seemed most pitiable to his hearers was Tiere's story of how, within twenty-four hours after the fire, the great White Star liner Olympic, the lights streaming from her portholes and upper works, swept by them in the darkness of the early morning when the lifeboat was less than three-quarters of a mile away.

The next day two other steamships were seen, but they were too far off to catch sight of the small craft tossing about.

The heavy fog that has been hanging over that section of the Atlantic for the past months enshrouded them and for days their horizon was limited to a hundred yards.

Tiere told of the terrible explosion that seemed to rend the Columbian asunder and of the quick sweep of the flames that made the crew hurry to the lifeboats. When they pulled away from the burning ship the sea was running high and for three days after that they were in the middle of the gale.

Through all that time the boat was half filled with water and only by the greatest efforts was she bailed out. Sea anchors were devised to keep her head to the sea, and in this the desperate sailormen showed the greatest ingenuity.

Then came the gradual shortening of rations of biscuits and water, of which there had been only a scanty supply at the start, so great was the haste in swinging the boats from the davits.

The first limit established was three hardtack and a pint of water a day per man. Then this was cut to one biscuit a day and a half pint of water for four men. Some of the men went mad from drinking salt water. When the survivors were down to seven, one, who became crazed, tried to kill the others with an axe. The fight of this madman and his weakened companions was probably something far beyond even the most imaginative of sea tale writers.

HUERTA OFFERS TO RESIGN

Declared to Be Ready to Step Down and Out If Necessary to Secure Peace—Would Make Broader Settlement of Mexican Trouble Possible—Succession Not Likely to Fall Upon Military Leader—Situation Now Far Beyond Tampico Incident—Rebels Levy Forced Loan on Foreigners at Tampico—Mexico Agrees to Punish Slayers of Parks

Washington, May 19.—General Huerta has authorized the Mexican mediation delegates to submit his resignation, in case such a course is found necessary to a settlement in the peace negotiations.

This was stated positively in dispatches from a thoroughly competent diplomatic source in Mexico City to one of the foreign representatives in Washington and confirms intimations given by friends of the delegates.

But Huerta still hopes to "save his face" and retire in a blaze of glory by tacking conditions upon his retirement. These terms are said to be:

Huerta's other conditions are: That Carranza shall not be chosen to succeed him; that Huerta shall have a voice in the choice of his successor; that Huerta be allowed to run for president in the July elections, and that the Americans evacuate Vera Cruz.

How Money Will Be Spent

The proposition for an American loan, it is said, contemplates expenditure of the $400,000,000 under supervision of a commission of two Americans, two Mexicans, one representative of France and one of Germany.

The Magdalena bay lease is said to contemplate a ninety-nine-year rental with a payment of $1,000,000 yearly.

It is understood that Huerta is suggesting that Asiatics shall be forbidden to colonize in Mexico.

According to the information from Mexico City, Huerta at first authorized the delegates to discuss only the question of the Tampico conflict, leading to the American occupation of Vera Cruz. Later, it was explained, he came to recognize the necessity of a broader settlement, and then conveyed to the delegates assurances that he was prepared to step down should this course be found necessary by them.

As to Future Government

The problem causing chief concern to diplomats in Mexico City now is that of the form of administration to be established during the interregnum before a constitutionally elected president could assume office. No intimations concerning the name of a possible successor to Huerta were contained in the dispatch, this subject being one in which it would be necessary to consult constitutionalist and other leaders in Mexico.

The information of Huerta's attitude received through foreign diplomatic channels agrees with the view obtained by some of the close friends of the Mexican peace envoys. According to this view, the delegates relized that the present administration at Mexico City was fast going to pieces, and it was inevitable that Huerta give place to some other authority. It did not, however, disclose that Huerta had authorized his resignation if they considered that course necessary, and this more definite phase was first made known in the dispatch through diplomatic channels.

Who will come after Huerta—whether an individual or a provisional commission—still is an open question, but it is gathered that the succession will not be likely to fall on military leaders who have come to prominence "by arbitrary force."

Broad Problem For Delegates

"The Huerta delegates never will agree to the selection for provisional president of any of the constitutionalist military men," said a man who had a long talk with the Huerta representatives. "They want some one for provisional president who will guarantee a fair election to all parties concerned, and who has not been a military partisan. Of course, this would not exclude a number of men who have been in sympathy with the constitutionalists, but not military leaders."

This view coincided with that obtained from other persons who had informal talks with Huerta delegates. The three Mexicans did not divulge the nature of their long conference with Huerta before their departure, but a man who knows the viewpoint of the three men said:

"They are prepared to go the limit in the way of concessions and will recommend to Huerta the reasonable thing. People who talked with the Huerta delegates said they realized the situation has progressed far beyond the Tampico incident and that at Niagara Falls they would be confronted with settling the broad problem of restoring peace to Mexico."

A MOUNTED DOCTOR

© 1914, by American Press Association.

The constitutionalists have levied a forced loan of $500,000 on the foreign business men at Tampico. Some have fled from the city to escape it and the matter has been taken up at Washington and in Europe.

The Villa-Carranza combination will have to be careful how it acts at Tampico. When operating in the interior it killed and robbed Americans and others at will. Now, however, it has occupied a port and is in a position where those who are not willing to see their nationals killed and their property destroyed can get at it.

England, for instance, could make the price of the constitutionalists holding Tampico substantial reparation for the murder of Benton. Germany, France and Holland may not agree to see their citizens forced to feed and pay the wages of the rebel army.

These nations, with ample justification, could make the port useless to its captors. Whether they would take such drastic action, however, against the wishes of the Wilson administration, is doubtful.

Action In Parks Case

Mexico has promised to avenge the death of Private Parks. The Brazilian minister notified the state department of the promise from Huerta's secretary of foreign affairs that he will punish the men guilty of Parks' murder if he finds the killing actually occurred within the Mexican federal lines at Vera Cruz.

The agreement to punish Mexicans in the Parks case was taken here to mean that Secretary Bryan's representations had gone further than a mere request for information. It was believed, as originally intimated and later inferentially denied, that Bryan had demanded reprisals.

SURVIVORS IN BAD CONDITION

Columbian's Men, Rescued by Cutter, Tell Terrible Story

PASSED BY BIG OCEAN LINERS

Boat Half Full of Water During Their Fourteen Days Adrift—Eleven Men, Some of Them Insane, Forced to Succumb—Scanty Supply of Rations Quickly Disposed Of

Halifax, May 19.—With the arrival here of the United States revenue cutter Seneca, bringing the surviving four of the fifteen men of the third lifeboat from the Leyland line freighter Columbian, which caught fire at sea on May 3, the harrowing story was told of the sufferings from which eleven men died.

Five lay almost lifeless in the unguided boat when the Seneca sighted her Sunday. One died soon after the helpless and emaciated forms were taken in slings over the side of the cutter.

The ministrations of the Seneca's physician had kept life in the others, although because of their great exposure and hardships they will probably be wrecks for life. Some may lose their feet and others their hands after their thirteen days of drifting over an arctic sea.

Hunger, thirst, cold, exposure, tempestuous seas, companions made insane by drinking sea water dying in the ravings of delirium and trying to murder them, the frequent alternation of hope and despair and the knowledge that they were hopelessly lost and depended for rescue purely on chance, were some of the factors that combined to bring them to the last gasp of utter prostration when the Seneca sighted them.

All hope had been abandoned then. The eleventh man had just died. For three days six of them had lived on five biscuits and a pint of fresh water. This was now all gone.

The most vigorous of the four on their arrival here was Robert Tiere, the second officer of the Columbian, and he told his story as he lay in the sick bay of the cutter. Although his feet were so swollen from cold and exposure that they may have to be amputated, Tiere betrayed in his speech nothing of the sufferings he had undergone, and his tale of the deaths of his comrades was given in such a way as to give the impression that his great trials had dulled his sensibilities.

What seemed most pitiable to his hearers was Tiere's story of how, within twenty-four hours after the fire, the great White Star liner Olympic, the lights streaming from her portholes and upper works, swept by them in the darkness of the early morning when the lifeboat was less than three-quarters of a mile away.

The next day two other steamships were seen, but they were too far off to catch sight of the small craft tossing about.

The heavy fog that has been hanging over that section of the Atlantic for the past months enshrouded them and for days their horizon was limited to a hundred yards.

Tiere told of the terrible explosion that seemed to rend the Columbian asunder and of the quick sweep of the flames that made the crew hurry to the lifeboats. When they pulled away from the burning ship the sea was running high and for three days after that they were in the middle of the gale.

Through all that time the boat was half filled with water and only by the greatest efforts was she bailed out. Sea anchors were devised to keep her head to the sea, and in this the desperate sailormen showed the greatest ingenuity.

Then came the gradual shortening of rations of biscuits and water, of which there had been only a scanty supply at the start, so great was the haste in swinging the boats from the davits.

The first limit established was three hardtack and a pint of water a day per man. Then this was cut to one biscuit a day and a half pint of water for four men. Some of the men went mad from drinking salt water. When the survivors were down to seven, one, who became crazed, tried to kill the others with an axe. The fight of this madman and his weakened companions was probably something far beyond even the most imaginative of sea tale writers.

Dollar Wager Causes Two Deaths

WILL FORWARD NEW PETITION

Charter Refused to Sagamore Co-operative Bank

There is disappointment at Atlantis because of the adverse report of the board of bank incorporators on the petition for the Sagamore Co-operative bank, without any reason given. The bank had already sold 1,000 shares and could have sold 500 more at the first public meeting.

The directors held a meeting Monday evening, and were at a loss to understand why the petition was dismissed. About 150 Atlantic people had subscribed for shares and the board of directors elected included well known citizens of integrity who are interested in the development of Atlantic, and the establishment of a local institution for savings. They felt that there was a big field for a co-operative bank in Atlantic and that it is needed.

The petition cannot be immediately renewed, but will be as soon as the law permits, when the directors hope to convince the board that they made a mistake in refusing the charter.

LINEN SHOWER TO MISS McQUEEN

A linen shower was tendered Miss Lillian R. McQueen at the home of Miss Margaret Manning, Water street on Monday evening. A reading was rendered by Miss Grace McKinnon. Miss Margaret Raleigh gave a solo, entitled, "When the sunset turned the ocean blue to gold." Refreshments were served, and a good time was enjoyed by all.

Among those present were: Miss Mary Robertson, Miss Mary Higgins, Miss Grace McKinnon, Miss Christina Stuart, Miss Maude Copeland, Miss Margaret Raleigh, Miss Margaret McQueen, Miss Gertrude Kemp, Miss Isabella Main, Miss Sadie Bisson, Miss Katherine Meade, Miss Alice White, Miss Annie Souden, Miss Rosella Shea, Miss Ethel McQueen, Miss Agnes Crotty, Miss Winifred Bisson, Miss Laura McDonald, Miss Gertrude McQueen, Miss [illegible] Souden, Miss Margaret Manning, Miss Katherine Buckley, Mrs. Fred Nightingale, Mrs. Wm. Carson, Mrs. Mary Sugrue, Mrs. Malcolm McDougal, Mrs. Stephen Wykes and Mrs. R. McQueen.

CITY HALL NOTES.

Things are a little quiet on the surface at City Hall this morning after the display of fireworks at the Council meeting Monday night. There are plenty of rumors however and if these are to be believed something is likely to drop at any time.

The Mayor was out making a trip about the city in an automobile this morning and in the course of his trip called at the Fore River shipyard to pay his respects to the new president.

Chief Billings will probably return to duty from his three days vacation tomorrow.

ENGLAND'S PREMIERSHIP.

A Coveted Office That Brings Misery to Its Incumbents.

The lot of the British premier is like that of the policeman in the Gilbertian ballad—not a happy one. After Lord Derby had been prime minister he said that he had had only two happy days in office, one being the day he entered it and the other the day he retired from it.

Peel wrote: "It is impossible for me not to feel that the duties are above all human strength; at least, above mine." Peel also once made the curious statement that if his nose had not bled every night during his premiership he could not have borne the load of his position.

Lord Palmerston was so much affected by his work that he had a special high desk built, which necessitated a standing position. He explained that if he fell asleep while trying to keep up with his work the fall would awaken him.

Disraeli frequently stated that no man could have any notion of the arduous life, and when Gladstone was released from the duties of prime minister he leaped head over heels down a grass bank at Lord Evans' through sheer delight.

Lord Rosebery once wrote the following concerning the duties of prime minister: "He has to deal with the sovereign, with the cabinet, with parliament and with public opinion in its various kinds and degrees. Some of his colleagues he must convince, some he may have to humor, some even to cajole. It is a harassing, laborious and ungracious task."—New York Times.

A PAIR OF SLIPPERS.

Story of an Eccentric Man and a Curious Monument.

There stands in a church in Amsterdam an ancient and curious monument of white marble which always attracts the attention of visitors, and their curiosity is usually heightened by its inscription. On the monument are engraved two slippers of a singular shape with the inscription "Effen Nyt," which in English would be "even nothing," or, more colloquially put, "nothing else." The story that is told of this strange device is as follows:

A certain rich man who was very extravagant in his tastes became possessed of the idea that he had just so many years to live and no more, and he calculated that if he spent a stated portion of his principal every year his life and his property would expire together.

He was lavishly generous to others as well as indulgent of his own whims and it so happened that he died the very year he had prophesied would be his last. He had furthermore brought his fortune to such a low ebb that after his few debts were paid nothing remained of all his possessions aside from the clothes in which he was to be buried but a pair of curious old slippers.

Some of his relatives to whom he had been kind during his life erected this strangely decorated monument to mark his burial place.—Washington Star.

Human Strides.

Many correspondents have been testing the length of their stride, even those small boys who pace out the length of a cricket pitch in assurance that twenty-two long steps make twenty-two yards. But a walker from the city avers he comes as near as most men to the yard to the step on a long walk. He stands five feet eight and one-half inches, has a swing from the hips and has always between milestones stepped from 1,690 to 1,710 paces to the mile. That, of course, is a solitary walk. In a regiment the pace must be set by the average of the longest and shortest stepper.—London Opinion.

Empty Bags.

Andrew Carnegie once gave a clergyman a donation for his church and at the same time another gift for a brother clergyman who had fallen into destitution.

"But I doubt if he will take this money, Mr. Carnegie," the clergyman said doubtfully. "He is very proud."

"Oh, he'll take it," said the ironmaster. "Poverty destroys pride. How can an empty bag stand upright?"

Mean Man.

Stamp Clerk—This letter is overweight, madam. Woman at Window—Well, of all the mean people! Why, I've mailed hundreds of letters that weren't anywhere near full weight, and now that I'm sending one just a little bit over you want to charge extra for it.—Boston Transcript.

A Safe Background.

A man rather untidy in his personal habits was discussing the question of a new waistcoat with a friend.

"What color would you advise?" he asked the friend.

"Why," said the friend, "I'd get one of soup color!"—Saturday Evening Post.

The Burned Church.

Jim (regarding damage to church by fire)—Good job it wasn't a factory, Bill. Bill—You're right, mate. Only one man put out of work, and he draws his money.—London Punch.

Probably an Accident.

"Did you notice how pale the bridegroom was?"

"No. How did you happen to glance at him?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not ignorant of misfortune, I learn from my own woes to aid the wretched.—Vergil.

THREE COMPLAINTS.

Laura A. Barstow of Wollaston was summoned into court Monday by Inspector Goodhue on three complaints sworn by William V. West of 78 Elm avenue. One of the complaints charged her with uttering a forged check for $100 on Dec. 13, 1911, uttering a forged endorsement to a promisory not of $72, on March 28, 1913, and uttering a forged check for $73 on Dec. 13, 1913. When the cases were called Mrs. Barstow waived the reading of the complaints and entered a plea of not guilty and asked for a continuance, as her counsel was not present. Counsel for the complainant stated to the court that he was prepared to show that the total amount involved would reach $2,000 and he asked for heavy bail. The court continued the cases under bonds of $200 on each count until Friday.

The issue of the Daily Ledger, Wednesday, May 20, will be an important one for Wollaston's club women for it will contain all the reports of the annual meeting of the Wollaston Woman's club as well as other local news. A large edition will be circulated.

SPORT NEWS

The Norwoll club of Wollaston defeated the Wampatuck club of Quincy on Saturday, 5 to 4. The score was tied in the last of the ninth, when Brown singled and brought in Bjorkman who carried the winning run. Thomas pitched a good game for Wampatuck, while Franklin showed up in his usual form. The feature of the game was MacTear's catch in right field. MacTear covered a lot of ground, caught the ball, turned a complete somersault and came up with the ball fast in his hand.

Milton High was defeated Saturday afternoon by Hyde Park High at Cunningham park. The score was 8 to 5 in favor of the latter. Poole did some fine pitching, striking out 13 men, but Milton's infield was very weak. The playing of Robertson of Milton was the most noticable feature of the game.

"Link" Elcock and "Wes" Ganzel have both made good with the Newburg, N. Y., team of the Atlantic league. "Link" although not signed up has been elected captain. Ganzel is going well and is having no trouble with his arm which was fractured last winter. The former is covering second and the latter first.

CIRCUS TOMORROW.

The Wheeler Bros. shows will be here tomorrow. The management invite general and critical attention to all new features in the free street parade, which, unless delayed by untoward circumstances, will leave the grounds at 10 o'clock in the morning. It is really a mastodonic and rich reproduction of a gorgeous fete or pageant of Oriental splendors, with hundreds of men and women seen in indesirably steutatious and lavish display of priceless jewels and costumes. There are hundreds of people and horses in almost endless procession, besides the herds of huge elephants, camels, dromedaries, sacred cattle, zebras and zebus with costly trappings and paraphernalia to give the requisite colorings and embellishment to the perpetuation of a brilliant event which outshines the elastic conception of the most fanciful recorders of pageantry glories.

WEDDING DATE ANNOUNCED.

Mr. and Mrs. John Melvin Nash of 101 Putnam street, Quincy, have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter Alice Mae to Walter Ayer Clarke of Weymouth on Thursday evening, June 4, at 7.30 o'clock, to be followed by a reception from 8 till 9.30. They will reside at 37 Bigelow street, Quincy, where they will be at home to their friends after September first. The bride to be has been for several years, a teacher in Weymouth public schools. She is a graduate of the State Normal Art school. The prospective groom is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and holds a responsible position in the computing department at the Fore River Ship Company's plant.

CONTAGIOUS HOSPITAL.

Local physicians are very anxious that the City Council should take some favorable action relative to the building of a hospital for contagious diseases in Quincy. It is reported that the Mt. Pleasant camp, is to be closed next fall for the lack of funds and the physicians are very anxious that the city should build a hospital for these cases. The physicians would like to have the contagious hospital located near the City Hospital as it would be very much more convenient for them. The order for the hospital which calls for an appropriation of $35,000 is now pending before the City Council.

NO SETTLEMENT.

There has been no settlement of the labor trouble between the Syrian striking reamers and bolters and the officials of Fore River shipbuilding corporation according to a representative of the strikers but a speedy adjustment is expected.

BOGUS COIN PLANT

Moulds, Metal and Loaded Rifles Found by Secret Service Men

Concord, Mass., May 19.—In a little hut secreted in the centre of a heavy growth of underbrush, about four miles from Concord, United States secret service agents discovered one of the largest counterfeiting plants ever located in this section.

Moulds for the manufacture of coins and the metal used in their construction, as well as two loaded rifles, were found by the officers. The presence of the rifles led the officers to believe that the counterfeiters were prepared to make a stubborn resistance in case they were surprised in their work.

All the articles are claimed to be the property of Salvatore Christi and James Mazzullo, Italians, arrested for passing spurious coin in Lowell.

Authors of Ritual Murder Charge In Prussia Are Arrested

Berlin, May 19.—An attempt to revive the ritual murder charge in Zempelburg, West Prussia, brought a signal demonstration of the German authorities' ability.

Anti-Semitic agitators alleged that a Christian boy, Emil Rother, was a victim of a ritual murder. It was proved that the boy died a natural death. The authors of the charge were arrested.

CAVALRY DASH TO REFUGEES TELL

Tentative Plan of the War College For Advance on Mexico City.

CAPITAL NEXT; THRILLING STORIES

Another Revolt, Led by Velasco, Now Threatened. Yucatan Aflame.

War department officers in Washington, who have been working on a cavalry plan of advance against the City of Mexico, believe they have perfected an arrangement by which they can force the Mexican troops under General Maas to abandon their defenses along the Mexican and International railways. The accomplishment of this plan would be followed, in the event of the Mexicans making a stand at the City of Mexico, by the use of artillery in laying siege to the Mexican capital.

The scheme as it now stands would require the use of six regiments of cavalry, contingents of the signal corps, with wireless telegraphy field outfits, and an aviation squadron. Having tentatively worked out this idea, the military authorities have called Brigadier General James Parker, commanding the First cavalry brigade, to Washington from the Texas frontier.

As now contemplated the cavalry movement scheme would comprise a series of detours from the railroad by the cavalry in its movement westward from Vera Cruz, but always with the view of closing in upon the City of Mexico after forcing the retirement of the Mexican federals along the two lines of railway. It is believed by army officers that, despite what General Maas has done, the Mexican troops can be forced back on the City of Mexico with the loss of comparatively few men by the Americans.

Build Railroad En Route.

The plan under consideration and tentatively worked out entails the reconstruction of the railroad by the American army as it forges ahead, with the aid of the cavalry flanking movements, so as to have the railroad available for use in handling heavy artillery. It also calls for special arrangements with reference to the use of wireless telegraph field outfits for communication with the advance base at Vera Cruz.

The war department has obtained reports that special field apparatus used on the Texas border has produced extraordinary results. With this apparatus messages have been sent as far as 150 miles under "ordinary conditions along the border."

The signal corps has been trying out a new field wireless outfit on a specially built heavy automobile truck. Officers developed the special apparatus so as to be able to send messages, in a pinch, 200 miles.

Under such an arrangement the army could go 200 miles from its base at Vera Cruz and still be able to communicate with the base without relay. Under the arrangement thus tried the same power that operates the automobile truck would be utilized in operating the radio apparatus on the truck. These trucks, army officers believe, can be used in a country as rough as that between Vera Cruz and Mexico City.

On the Texas border there are portions of seven regiments of trained cavalry that could be drawn upon at once for use in such a cavalry movement. None of these cavalrymen has been on the border more than a year, and reports to the department show that they are all in fit condition.

New Rebellion Expected.

The outbreak of another military revolt in Mexico, headed by General Jose Refugio Velasco, who was recently driven out of Torreon by Francisco Villa, would not cause any great surprise in the federal capital, according to conservative observers among returning refugees.

General Velasco is said to be grievously discontented concerning the failure of the government in Mexico City to support him properly in the defense of Torreon, and he is declared to have stated that he would never again lead a column of troops against the rebels.

The fall of Torreon and the subsequent disaster to the federal troops are asserted by General Velasco to have been entirely due to the failure of the war department to heed his appeal for ammunition at a time when he says it was perfectly feasible for it to have reached him.

American Women Attacked.

Shocking stories of the ill treatment of American women by Mexican soldiers were told by refugees from the GENERAL VELASCO, WHO MAY HEAD ANOTHER REVOLT IN MEXICO.

Medina agricultural colony arriving at New Orleans. About 100 Americans were isolated there in danger of death or torture until they were rescued and finally brought to this country by the Monterey and other ships.

Henry M. Pierce of Canton, Tex., told a story of a Mexican crime, which he said was typical. He said:

"William H. Shope lived in Medina with his wife and two daughters, aged nine and eleven. Shope was shot dead by Mexicans, and his wife and daughters were treated with extreme brutality. Rescued finally, they had to be taken to the Tierra Blanca hospital. Nothing was done to bring the offenders to justice. The mother finally escaped from the country with her children and got on a ship that went to California. This happened before the Tampico affair."

Mrs. A. F. Meissner and her eight children were among the refugees brought by the Monterey. She said that she and the children were thrown into a foul prison at Cordoba and kept there two days practically without food. Their clothing was taken away. When they boarded the Monterey at Vera Cruz they had no shoes and their clothing was pieces of rags sewed together.

Mobs' Passions Inflamed.

There were about twenty missionaries among the refugees brought by the Monterey, including representatives of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian denominations.

The Rev. George H. Brewer of New York was accompanied by his wife and two children. He was in charge of the Baptist missions in Mexico, with headquarters in Mexico City.

"Yes, thank God, we managed to escape," he said, "but he only knows what has happened to the friends and co-workers left behind us. There are many good people in Mexico, but they are incited to riot by the military leaders, who profit by their patriotic display.

"When the Vera Cruz news reached Mexico City we were driven to take shelter in a hotel. Here we hid ourselves while the howling mobs swarmed the streets, cursing and yelling 'Death to the Gringoes!'

"When we finally managed to get to the coast we discovered that Misses Hayes and Wheeler, two American girls doing missionary work in the republic, were missing. I have every reason to believe that they were incarcerated in the jail at Saltillo."

Tortured, Bought Release.

Case H. Harwood, an American financier of Aguascallientes, one of the recent refugees to reach Galveston, Tex., says that with $6,000 in gold he purchased the release of his wife and himself from Mexican bandits. His cattle and stock were confiscated, and his home was burned. He was awakened in the night by bandits, and he and his wife fled. They soon were captured, he said, and then he purchased freedom for his wife and himself.

"I was tied to a tree half a mile from home," said Mr. Harwood. "Mexicans blindfolded me and told me to prepare to die. I could hear the cries of my wife. She begged for my life. As they were measuring off paces intending to shoot me I told them that I would give the money. I was released and conducted them to the place where my money was hidden. After they obtained it I was told to leave the country at once and did."

Peril In Yucatan.

G. L. Germon, former acting American vice consul at Progreso, who reached New Orleans, says that the Americans in Yucatan are in a perilous situation. According to Mr. Germon, circulars have been distributed in Progreso ordering Americans to get out of the country.

Conditions forcing the departure of Americans from Mexico after the taking of Vera Cruz are described in a letter received by the Presbyterian board of foreign missions in New York from the Rev. J. T. Molloy.

"Peaceful Yucatan went wild at the report of the taking of Vera Cruz, and the cry of 'Death to the Americans!' was attended with such demonstrations as to make all feel that the only prudent thing to do was to flee without delay," wrote Mr. Molloy. "Our presence in Merida or in Progreso not only endangered our lives, but exposed our people to attack on our account. In an anti-American demonstration murmurings against our religion were mixed with cries of 'Death to the Americans!'

"The home of a well known business man was approached by a mob crying 'Death to the Americans!' They tore off the top of an auto that was standing at the door, turned the machine over, shot into the house, broke in the door and but for the arrival of the police would have demolished the house.

HYDROAEROPLANE OVER UNITED STATES CRUISER CHESTER AT VERA CRUZ.

The family escaped by going upon the roof.

"There was no communication with Mexico City, no chance to send a wire to any part of the world; there was no way out but to take an English freight boat bound for Mobile, and we gladly took it.

"I think it is only fair to the people of Yucatan to say that, left to themselves, they would have behaved well, but the people were inflamed by false reports. Extras were got out one after another, bogus telegrams were circulated, such as 'Vera Cruz has fallen bathed in blood, but she fell bravely; —even women slew Americans;' 'the blond faced brutes are marching for the center of the republic;' 'Mexicans, now as ever let us cry "Viva Mexico."' One thing was clearly seen—the whole uprising was brought on by officials."

An American Heroine.

How an American woman, the wife of the American printer at Monterey, carrying an American flag, rushed past the federal outposts and through the rebel forces, reviled and insulted as she passed, and fought her way to the American consulate seeking a physician for her husband, who had been wounded by a federal shell at their finca just outside of Monterey, was told by one of the first refugees to reach Washington. Her husband, J. S. Carnahan, pictured the heroic daring of this frail little American woman, clinging to her United States flag at a time when the flag of her country was a signal for attack.

The Carnahans have lived in Monterey for more than fifteen years. They were both under fire during the two battles at Monterey.

Mrs. Carnahan said they had been forced to surrender their horses and automobiles when the rebel leader, General Gonzales, took the city.

Mrs. Carnahan saw the flag of the United States dragged in the mud and torn by the Banda de Guerra, led by General Massieu, in company with the mayor of the city and his officers and the governor of the state, Salome Botella, who rode about the town of Monterey proclaiming that the United States was going to invade Mexico and calling upon all citizens to take up arms against the invaders.

THE FARM HAND

A Story of a Flirtatious Couple

By MARY C. ETHEREDGE

Nancy Burrows was such a desperate flirt that her mother, who deprecated her treatment of young men, determined, instead of taking her to places for the summer where she would meet them, to pass their outing season on a farm. Mrs. Burrows selected a place in a very attractive region, but distant from any summer resort. Indeed, Miss Nancy was obliged to remain without any attention whatever unless her passion for winning hearts should lead her to prey upon the farm men.

There was no one in the house where Nancy and her mother boarded except the farmer and his wife and several little children. From the front porch or from her window looking out over the fields Nancy could see nothing that resembled a man except a scarecrow set up in the midst of some growing corn. "If I remain here long enough," she said to herself, "I do believe I'll be spooning with the scarecrow. Oh, my goody gracious! What shall I do?"

She thought of the summer hotels full of guests, the country places of friends whom she had visited, the tennis, the boating, the bathing, the music and dancing, and heaved a deep sigh. Then she went to her mother and promised that she would be good, very good, if she might be permitted to spend at least the month of August elsewhere. "You'll be good here," replied the stern parent, "simply because you can't help yourself. I shall certainly not again trust you where there is a man within a hundred miles."

"Don't you expect me ever to be married, mamma? Do you intend to make an old maid of me?"

"I certainly do expect you to be married, and that's the reason I have brought you here. When you get the sense into your head to understand that marriage is the most serious event in a woman's life I will let you out again among men. At present you seem to have no appreciation whatever of the sacredness of love."

From this speech it may be inferred that Mrs. Burrows was a strong woman, quite capable of controlling her daughter. The truth is she desired when Nancy married to have something to say about the man she should choose for a husband. With these flirtations going on, how could she be sure that her daughter might not be caught in some one of her own traps? Once caught, it might be impossible to extricate her.

And, since Nancy was still fancy free, it seemed that this course was wise. Every year she was older than the one before, and perhaps by and by she would have some appreciation of the importance of marriage. She could then possibly be induced to select for a husband a man to be relied on to give her a position in the world rather than one whose only recommendation was that he was an excellent dancer or tennis player.

All this is full of wisdom and might have been carried out had not a certain young man who was as much of a scapegrace as Nancy herself heard the matter talked about—how a certain girl he had never seen or heard of had been buried in the country to keep her away from men because she had a mania for breaking hearts for pastime. The young man who heard the gossip, unterrified by the broken hearts of others, straightway was seized with a desire to have his own heart broken.

He asked the young lady's name and where she had been buried. The former he had no difficulty in learning; the latter required diligent investigation.

One morning when the July sun was shining down on a waving wheatfield Nancy Burrows heard the sound of a distant mowing machine. Going to a window, she saw a pair of horses drawing the machine in question along the edge of a field of wheat. The driver was dressed in a woolen shirt, trousers and a hood brimmed, faded straw hat. Doubtless, the harvest having arrived, a farm hand had been hired to cut the grain.

Nancy put on a shade hat and strolled out to witness the operation of cutting wheat. As she drew near the machine she noticed that the man driving it was not old. Indeed, he was not middle aged; he was young. But his dress was execrable. He didn't wear a cravat, not even a collar. Nevertheless his figure showed to advantage in his farmer's costume. As Nancy approached nearer she saw that he was not bad looking.

Nancy stood where the machine would pass her and as it did so expected the driver would give her an admiring glance such as she had been used to receiving from men, but at the moment he seemed to be interested in something about the harness of one of the horses and didn't even look at her. When he came back Nancy called to him, motioning him to stop. He pulled in and waited to hear what she had to say to him.

"Would you mind explaining your machine to me?" she asked.

"Can't. I'm working by the hour. Git up!" was the response, and the machine rattled on its way.

"Well, I declare!" muttered Miss Burrows. "How little sense of politeness these country jakes have!"

When the farm hand returned he found the lady standing directly in his way, and he was forced to pull up or run over her.

"Would you mind moving aside, miss?" he asked. "You're directly in the way."

"Yes, I would. I asked you to explain your machine to me, and you refused. I have not been used to being treated that way."

Having been brought to terms, the young man did not seem averse to a bit of dialogue.

"Are you working for the man who owns this farm?" asked Nancy.

"I am."

"Are you going to stay at the house?"

"No."

"How long do you expect to work here?"

"As long as I'm wanted—till the end of the season, I reckon."

The man made several attempts to start his team, but every time was stopped with a question which Miss Burrows conjured up for the occasion. At last she permitted him to go on, with the injunction that thereafter when a lady asked him for information he was to stop his team and listen deferentially.

Mrs. Burrows one morning, sitting at a window reading a novel, saw her daughter emerge from the house, look about her irresolutely, pluck a spear of grass and chew on it, then proceed down into the wheatfield where the farm hand was driving the mowing machine. On Nancy's arrival the machine stopped, and a brief dialogue took place between the man and the girl. The man descended from his seat and helped the girl up into it. Then he drove from the ground, walking beside the machine for some distance, when Nancy held out her hands for the reins. They were passed up to her, and with difficulty she maintained her seat and drove the team.

"Great heavens," exclaimed the mother, "the child will fall off and be cut to pieces!"

But Nancy managed to maintain her balance, and her mother, having held her breath till her daughter descended from her perch, breathed easier.

"If he were any one but a country bumpkin," said the mother doubtfully, "I should feel worried."

The country bumpkin remained about the farm for some time, though he did not appear to work very steadily. Nancy found him far more useful to amuse her than the scarecrow and visited him frequently while he was at work. But she usually did so when her mother was busy or taking a siesta, so that she wasn't observed.

One day the farmer said to his hand: "I didn't hire you to amuse city boarders. I reckon you can light out. Here's what's due you." The hand made no reply, but, taking his wages, departed. The next morning, seeing Nancy leave the house to go to the wheatfield, he sauntered toward the fence. She saw him and, approaching, asked him why he was not at work.

"I'm discharged," was the reply.

"Discharged! What for?"

"The farmer says I spend too much of my time with you."

"You don't mean it! That's too bad. I'm awfully sorry. I didn't mean to take you away from your work."

"Can't be helped now. Besides, if he'd take me back I'd do it all over again."

"It's very nice of you to say that," said Nancy, lowering her eyes. "I'm indebted to you for a great deal of pleasure. It's very lonely here. I'm awfully sorry you won't be here any more. Where are you going?"

"I don't think I'll go right away. I'll stay where I am for awhile to see if I can't get more work about here."

"I'm glad you're not going right away."

About the time Mrs. Burrows was thinking of taking her daughter back to the city Miss Nancy was missing one evening from the supper table. The mother went to her daughter's room, but did not find her. Seven, 8, 9 o'clock came and no Nancy. Mrs. Burrows went over to some scattered houses across the road to make inquiries. She was informed that about 5 o'clock in the afternoon the discharged farm hand, driving on the road in a resplendent motor, picked up Nancy and disappeared in a cloud of dust.

Mrs. Burrows was very mad.

Nancy didn't show up again at the farm, but in a few days her mother received a letter from her stating that she had been married after a courtship that was "just too romantic for anything." A young man she had never seen, but had long loved her, so he said, had gone to the country disguised as a farm hand to win her. But mamma needn't worry, because he belonged to one of the best and wealthiest families in the city, was a member of the principal clubs and one of the best bridge whist players in the country.

"Can it possibly be that a man in a faded straw hat and without a collar can be a gentleman?" said the mother to herself.

The object for which she had taken her daughter to the country having ended, to say the least, peculiarly, Mrs. Burrows took the next train to the city. Before even announcing her presence there to her daughter she made inquiries about the man who had run away with her child and learned that Nancy had spoken the truth, but not all of it, for the groom had drawn the financial part of it very mildly. He was heir expectant to several millions.

Mrs. Burrows on getting this information sent for the couple and forgave them.

It has been said that the next summer no fewer than a dozen ladies, who had heard of this episode, took their daughters to spend the season on farms. But it does not appear that any of them married a rich man, while two of them married countrymen.

PLITT OFFERS NEW TESTIMONY

Becker's Former Press Agent Corroborates Other Witnesses

REQUEST FOR ROSE'S MURDER

Declared to Have Been Made by Defendant While on Way to Prison—Witness Urged to Get Alibi on Night of Rosenthal Killing—Rosenthal's Widow Testifies.

New York, May 19.—"If anything happens to me I want you to kill that squealing —— —— Rose."

This was exact wording of a request made by former Police Lieutenant Becker to Charles Plitt, Jr., his press agent and former bosom friend, according to Plitt's testimony on the witness stand in Becker's second trial for the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

Plitt declared in many ways that the relations between Becker, Rose and the gunmen who slew Rosenthal were close. He described carrying messages between Becker and Rose both before and after the murder.

Plitt created a sensation when he swore that the day before Rosenthal was shot Becker warned him to keep away from Times square that night.

"Get an alibi," he swore Becker said. "You'll know why tomorrow."

Plitt declared that Becker urged him to kill Rose in a compartment of a train on which he was being taken to the deathhouse at Sing Sing.

After Rose was arrested Plitt said Becker told him: "I see they have got Jack Rose." The policeman, he said, was excited and told him to see Rose and assure him of protection. Plitt said he communicated this to "Bald Jack."

Later the witness said Becker met him, arranged for Plitt to see Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty and prove an alibi. He did so, he swore, under Becker's escort.

Mrs. Rosenthal, widow of the slain gambler, detailed at considerable length the association between her husband and Becker, told of Becker's raids on Rosenthal's gambling house and how, when she protested, Becker said: "Hush! It was either Herman or me."

Mrs. Rosenthal related how on one occasion Becker put his arms around Rosenthal's shoulders and professed the greatest friendship, offering Mrs. Rosenthal to do anything he could for her at any hour of the day or night. She also confirmed Rose's story of dealings between the slain gambler and the police lieutenant.

Deputy Dougherty told briefly of Rose's surrender after the murder and of Becker's comment thereon.

Police Captain Day testified that after Becker raided Rosenthal's place he received orders from the then Commissioner Waldo to place a patrolman on duty in Rosenthal's establishment. This was in corroboration of Rose's story that Becker told Rosenthal he could not take the guard away because headquarters had put him there.

Following the series of crushing blows by the prosecution Becker's lawyers decided, after a long conference last night, to go ahead with their defense. Becker wishes to go on the stand, and his wife supports him, but counsel is said to be opposed.

Backer is desperate, it is stated, over the testimony of the prosecution, and believes that only his personal tstimony can save him.

UNDER BOMBARDMENT

Dominican Port of Puerto Plata Is Blockaded by Government

New York, May 19.—The Clyde line steamer Seminole arrived here from Dominican ports with news of the bombardment of Puerto Plata.

The Seminole was prevented on her outward voyage from entering that port by the Dominican gunboat Independencia, which signalled that the port was under blockade.

On her homeward voyage she again called at Puerto Plata, and this time was warned by the United States cruiser Washington not to enter. Passengers were brought on board by the cruiser's boats.

FEDERAL TROOPS STAY IN COLORADO

General Satisfaction Over Decision of Government

Denver, May 19.—Assurances given by the secretary of war that there is no intention of immediately removing federal troops from the strike districts of the Colorado coal fields caused general satisfaction among strikers, mine owners and state officials.

Governor Ammons made it known that even if the federal troops are withdrawn he will not send the militia back to the coal fields until its presence there is imperative.

Meantime, steps toward possible mediation are being considered. The legislative committee appointed to advise with Ammons in handling the strike will meet May 22. Under the resolution providing for its appointment it is empowered to assist the governor in considering means of restoring and maintaining order, and under this provision, it is said, it will look into various plans for mediation.

BATTLESHIPS ON PLAN OF NO. 39

A Washington dispatch says battleships Nos. 40 and 41, which are to be provided for in the naval appropriation bill now going through Congress, will be duplicates in all essential particulars of battleship No. 39, which will probably be named after the "old north state," North Carolina. Such changes as may be made will be of minor importance, it is said.

It is the purpose of the navy department to have the plans and specifications ready for advertisement about Aug. 1, and this would permit the bids to be opened about Oct. 1, and the contract to be awarded about Oct. 15.

Smoke from a chimney filled the home of Mrs. Henry Hallowell of Upland road this morning and caused her to summon the fire department by phone. The flying squadron crew found no fire.

DELIVERY PART OF SALE

So Rules Woburn Justice in Liquor Case

A ruling against the delivery of liquor in Winchester, a no-license town by Boston dealers, which may serve as an important precedent for action in other Massachusetts towns similarly situated, was made by Judge Johnson in the Woburn district court the other day.

The case was watched with interest by practically all the wholesale liquor dealers of Boston. Judge Johnson ruled that the delivery of liquor in Winchester, though paid for in Boston, was illegal. He explained that the delivery of the goods was a part of the sale, and that sale was incomplete until such delivery was made.

Joseph Rozen, a driver for D. F. Flagg & Co., 165 Blackstone street, was defendant in the case. He was charged with unlawfully keeping and exposing with intent to sell intoxicating liquor in Winchester. Chief of Police McIntosh took charge of the prosecution of the case.

Rozen was found guilty and the case was placed in file, with the condition that the Flagg company will attempt to sell and deliver no liquor in Winchester for one year, to which the firm agreed.

PROMINENT IN CHURCH WORK

The body of Mrs. Permelia Rockwell, wife of George W. Rockwell of Franklin street, one of the best known residents of South Quincy, lay in state from noon until three o'clock Monday afternoon in the Calvary Baptist church where it was viewed by many long time friends and associates.

At 3, funeral services were held, Rev. Charles C. Tilley, the pastor, officiating. An eulogy was delivered by Deacon Frank G. Pettee, and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Charles Parker of California, the first pastor of the church.

During the service the favorite hymns of Mrs. Rockwell were sung by the regular choir under the direction of Robert Farquhar. The organist was Miss Abbie Livingstone.

Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery where services at the grave were conducted by Rev. Mr. Tilley and Rev. Mr. Parker. Several selections were rendered by a quartette consisting of Mrs. Harding, Mrs. C. Kidder, Miss Tilly Cousins, Robert Farquhar, and Deacon Frank G. Pettee.

During the funeral, the plant of the Vulcan Tool Co., where her husband has been connected for many years, was closed and the floral remembrance from the firm was a wreath of white roses, while the employees tribute was 60 white carnations.

Mrs. Rockwell was one of the charter members of the church and helped in the collection of the money to pay for the erection of the present edifice. Her interests in behalf of the church never waned and her death removes a loyal member from the congregation.

She was the daughter of the late Gov. Andrew Walker, first governor of Nova Scotia under the Canadian Federation and came to Quincy 32 years ago.

Houghs Neckers were out in full force at the meeting of the City Council Monday night to speak in favor of the acceptance of Winthrop avenue, had a hearing been held. They will be out in good numbers at the hearing June 1.

When news is sent to the Daily Ledger by mail it should reach the office early in the morning, not at noon or afternoon. Every day acceptable news arrives too late, and the next day is too old.

Dr. E. H. Bushnell of Quincy Point went to Plymouth on Monday in order to attend the meeting of Plymouth Masonic lodge to witness the exemplification of the work of the third degree. Among those who received the degree was Rev. Charles P. Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

There was once a Woman who was Very Anxious to Have her Daughter well Married. For this Purpose she Selected an Eligible Young Man who had but One Fault. This Fault was great Timidity.

FULLY APPRECIATED THE SOCIETY OF MOTHER AND DAUGHTER.

"If he had Not been so Timid he would have Been Acquired by somebody Long Since," said the Woman's Friends, "and it is Not Likely that your Daughter, who has a very Haughty Appearance, would Succeed where So Many of Us have Failed; for We also Have Daughters."

But the Thoughtful Mother refused to Listen to these Sneers.

"I have Made a Study of These Matters," she said, "and I have Observed that your Efforts are Put Forth at the Wrong Time. You Entertain young Men at Summer Places, where Competition is far Too Keen, and in the Winter Season, when Men are far Too Busy. I have a Better Plan."

In Accordance with this Plan, she did Not go Away for the Summer, but Stayed in Town. Toward the end of August she Invited the Eligible Young Man to Dinner. He Accepted eagerly, for he had been Living in Restaurants, and Depending largely upon Vaudeville for his Entertainment. He therefore Fully Appreciated the Society of the Thoughtful Mother and her Daughter. In Fact, at the End of the Evening he Proposed for the Hand of the Latter, which was His immediately.

"How many Summers I have Spent Toiling in the City with No such Home as This!" he exclaimed thankfully.

So they were All Pleased.

This teaches us that Good Wine sometimes Needs a Bush.

WOLLASTON WOMAN'S CLUB REPORTS

Have Contributed to the Charities of Quincy and Added Personal Service

Has Full Membership of 300, and 194 on Waiting List

After a season of pleasant and profitable meetings, the Wollaston Woman's Club held its closing meeting of the year Tuesday afternoon at the Wollaston Unitarian church with a large attendance of members.

Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes president called the meeting to order for the business session the corresponding secretary giving her report which was followed by several announcements. The children's party to have been held at the Wollaston YaYcht club house June 23, had been changed as the place was not large enough to accommodate the party. It would be held Saturday afternoon June 6 at two o'clock at Alpha hall, Quincy. Children under 16 years would be admitted on presentation of their mothers or some members club ticket.

A vote of thanks was extended to all those who took part and assisted in making the dramatics a success.

Mrs. Charles R. Safford was elected to represent the club on the board of censorship of places of amusement in Quincy.

It was voted to ask for a day in the tea room at the Pure Food exhibition in Boston in October to be known as Wollaston club day and the matter was left in the hands of Mrs. Thompson, chairman of the Hospitality Committee.

There was quite a general discussion over donating various sums from the year's surplus to various worthy causes but the consensus of opinion was that it was best to wait until the year's budget was made up before appropriating any moneys.

A fine musical program closed the regular business session and also interspersed the annual reports, the artists being Mrs. Martha Atwood Baker soloist, Mrs. Adelaide Thomas Sutherland violinist and Miss Florence G. Olney organist.

After the annual reports the meeting closed with all joining in singing the club ode after which coffee and cake were served in the vestry the pourers being Mrs. A. W. Thompson, Mrs. Frederick L. Cheever, Mrs. W. Everett Simmons, Jr., Mrs. Frank C. Blake and Mrs. Rufus B. Tobey.

Following are the reports of the officers and chairmen of committees and they show much progressiveness and enterprise in so young a club, the present being its first year of existence.

RECORDING SECRETARY.

On March 14, 1913, about 150 ladies met in Brasee hall to discuss the formation of a Woman's club in Wollaston. At this time committees were appointed and the meeting adjourned until March 20 when, a constitution and by-laws were voted upon, and officers elected; it was therefore on March 20, 1913, that the Wollaston Woman's club began its existence as an organized club. The first regular meeting was held April 15, 1913, and in all there have been seventeen regular meetings; three of these have been held in the evening, so at these three we have been able to enjoy gentlemen guests.

The Executive Board has held nineteen meetings, five of which have been called for special business. The President, Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, has presided at every meeting of both the club and the Board.

The program presented to the club in this our first year has been a varied one; we have had eight meetings devoted to lectures and addresses on various subjects, two to dramatic readings, two to music; one opera talk, one afternoon of dramatics, one of miscellaneous readings and two for sociability, with a social half hour at seven other meetings.

On the evening of Jan. 6, a large audience of men and women filled the Wollaston School hall to hear Dr. Woods Hutchinson speak on "Which is Man's Life? His Work or his Play?" For the great success of this evening we are indebted to the energetic work of the Home Economics Committee.

Another very large meeting was held May 6, when "The Rivals" was presented in Quincy Music hall by a cast composed of club members. This meeting was under the auspices of the Program Committee, Miss Theodora A. Luard having the special charge of the play. At both of these meetings we had unlimited guest privilege. At other meetings we have had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Henry C. Mulligan, Mrs. Frank Young, Mrs. P. J. Bowlker, Mrs. Waldo Richards, Mr. W. L. Hubbard, Dr. A. A. Berle, our president Mrs. Ropes, who guided us through "The Wonderland of America" and many others of note.

Among the musicians who have delighted us we may mention: The Grieg Trio, Mrs. Margaret Louden Shepherd, James D. D. Comey, Mrs. Rose Thayer Thomas, Miss Marion Moorhouse and many more of undoubted talent.

Our meetings have been held in the Unitarian vestry, the Unitarian church the Park and Downs church, Wollaston School hall and Quincy Music hall.

We have twice been obliged to change our day of meeting and therefore to suspend a by-law for those days.

Some of the most important actions taken at our club meetings are as follows:—On April 15, 1913 it was voted that the Wollaston Woman's club join the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs. On the same date it was voted to raise the membership from 250 to 300. Jan. 20, 1914, the club voted on the by-laws as revised by a committee of three and recommended by the Board. On February 17, we accepted the proposal of the Sachem club to make their proposed new clubhouse our head quarters.

April 7 a committee was appointed to meet with other Women's clubs of Quincy to make plans for federating our City Clubs. On the same date it was voted to invest in five Sachem club bonds at $100 each.

Several special events in the history of our club must be recorded. On February 25, 1914, the club took charge of a special edition of the Quincy Evening Telegram. Our president, Mrs. Ropes was Editor in Chief; Mrs. William C. Crane, City Editor; Mrs. Edward O. Woodward, chairman of the Circulating Committee and Mrs. William E. Rowe, chairman of the Advertising committee. Besides the financial success of the paper which is stated in the report of the Treasurer, this special edition brought out a great deal of latent talent and energy, as well as increasing the co-operation among members of the club. Other events held under the management of the different committees are the Hallowe'en dance, a concert given by the Wollaston Woman's club chorus, Pageant of Trees, three Opera Talks by W. L. Hubbard, A Christmas entertainment given at the City Farm and distribution of Christmas gifts at the Fresh Air Camp; Parliamentary law class; Current Events class, Christmas sale by the Arts and Crafts Exchange and Women's Exchange, as well as many successful classes held by the Arts and Crafts Committee.

April 22, a meeting was held in the Wollaston School hall by the Civics Society of Boston under the auspices of our club; our president, Mrs. Ropes, presided at this meeting and the principal speaker was Rabbi Charles Fleischer.

The President and members of the Board were invited by Mr. John L. Hamilton, president of the Quincy Board of Trade to attend a dinner, on April 15, given to the Grocers' Association; and to assist in entertaining the wives of the delegates. We were glad to be able to invite them to attend Mr. Hubbard's Opera Talk given on that afternoon.

In the spring of 1913, a generous offer of a large lot of land to be used as a site for a club house) situated on the corner of Hancock and Linden streets, was made to the club by Mrs. Thomas Fenno. This offer was very seriously considered by the Board and the club, but it was decided that the land was not sufficiently central to serve our best interests and was therefore declined with thanks.

Other presents of which we have been recipients are—a handsome gavel, the gift of Hon. Charles M. Bryant; four tea urns, two presented by the Hospitality Committee and two

Wollaston Club Ode

(Tune:—"America")

Wollaston Women we,
Working most heartily
For our fair town;
Wherever we abide,
Hill, plain or sea beside
We are as one in pride
For her renown.

Striving to beautify,
Gladden and purify:—
For this we aim;
Our City's needs to know,
Then help her better grow,
May we by action show
This right we claim.

To good and holy laws,
To ev'ry righteous cause
Aid may we lend;
Where there's a wrong to right,
Suff'ring or sin to fight,
May we by wisdom's light
Help and befriend.

Let us then strive to grow,
Learn our true selves to know,
Learn well to live;
So we shall ever stand,
One strong, united band,
Ready for our great land,
Service to give.

FANNY L. JOHNSON.

QUIET TODAY AT CITY HALL

Mayor Explains What He Understands by Interview

Mayor Miller's statement before the City Council Monday night, that he had never been interviewed since he became Mayor, may have been correct according to the Mayor's idea of what an interview meant. The Mayor said this morning that his idea of an interview had always been when a reporter came to him with pencil and paper and took down in shorthand what he had to say. A call from a newspaper man, and a general conversation, he had never considered an interview, although from a newspaper man's standpoint he was willing to admit they might so understand it.

The Mayor further said, that when he said that he had been misquoted and that an attempt had been made to cause unfriendliness between the Mayor and City Council, he did not refer to any one reporter in particular but to reporters in general. The Mayor further stated that as he remembered it, he said "They" meaning reporters in general, "had misquoted."

He said that it seemed to him that newspaper men were trying to create a rumpus, but he did not refer to any one particular man, and that he had about made up his mind that the only thing to do was to exclude all newspaper men from his office.

The Daily Ledger man suggested that the Mayor fix a certain hour each day during which he would see the newspaper men, the hour to suit his own convenience, and at that time he give to all what information of general public interest he might have to disclose. In this way all newspapers would be used alike and there would be no scoops, and that in the end it would be more satisfactory to all. Whether His Honor will heed this suggestion, he did not say.

The Daily Ledger man denied intentionally misquoting the Mayor, and called his attention to the editorial in Tuesday night's Daily Ledger as setting forth his position.

Several instances of rumors were quoted to the Mayor, that the Ledger might have used, had it desired to create a sensation and made things unpleasant for the Chief Executive.

In closing the morning visit the Mayor said he had nothing in the news line to give out today.

The army officers have started schools at Mexico, but Huerta still continues to play hookey.

"Love me, love my dog" may be all right, but most people draw the line at "Love me, love my chickens!"

It is urged that aviators should be forbidden to fly over cities. The aviators, however, will get no satisfaction in risking their necks unless some one sees it.

The Boy Scouts are drilling in many places with wooden guns, but so far Huerta has not claimed that this violates the armistice.

The bird butchers think it is a shame that birds that would make good pie are allowed to fly around loose, killing insect pests for lazy farmers.

A noise is heard from the West Indies that sounds like preparations for exemplifying the work of the Ananias Club's 33d degree.

SPREADING INFORMATION.

A common remark in daily life is about like this: "If I had known that I could get it for so much at ——'s store, I would have gone there. Why did not you tell me?"

If a merchant has to carry goods over another season, the real reason is probably that he neglected to tell the public about them with sufficient clearness and emphasis. The general public are not mind readers. A first class article may be selling for a low price, but if no one takes the pains to make the fact generally known, few people find it out.

Publicity is the basis for all modern success. If a man tries to get up an entertainment and places no notices in the papers, he gets no crowd. Similarly, if a store buys a stock of goods, and is then too slow to tell the public what it has, in an interesting and descriptive way, it will get no substantial trade on those goods.

Huerta is said to be seeking a way out of the Mexican mess. The most practical way out would seem to consist of a 60 h. p. motor-car, with a speedy chauffeur, plus a row-boat and a Jap warship.

There is dissatisfaction among the tourists at Washington that President Wilson is too busy with the Mexican mess to shake hands all round.

THE RISE AND DECLINE.

Gibbon wrote a famous history on the "Decline and fall of the Roman Empire." In the power and pride of Rome on the ascending scale, few would have thought ruin was possible. Similarly in many well established business houses there are the seeds of decay.

The merchants of any community range themselves into two classes. There are those who have established trade, great or small. Some of them think they can now live on the fruits of their past efforts. All they have to do is to sit still and their regular customers will come around and buy their goods.

But population changes more rapidly than it used to. Few people send out roots deep into any soil. Death claims its share. Any given body of people, accustomed to buying goods in some one place, will be cut in two by death and removal in five years.

The older people who bought goods regularly at one store, were almost ashamed to be seen going into another place. They felt as if it were almost an act of disloyalty. Nowadays no one is tied up anywhere. All go where the best bargains are offered Few places have any regularly established trade that can be counted on without persistent solicitation. New customers must constantly be sought to take place of those that drop out.

The other class of merchants are those that are coming. In a year, by persistent efforts to tell the public what they are doing, they build up their own constituency. It is made up not merely of the drifters and floaters, but from wide awake people who are drawn from less aggressive and enterprising stores.

The business that does not advertise is usually the business that is going down. The business that advertises is the business that is coming up.

STRIKER'S CASE IN COURT

Not Guilty of Assault But Fined ed for Drunkenness

The continued case of Charlss Joseph, the Syrian striker, who was arrested while picketing outside the gates of the Fore River shipyard, was heard this morning. Joseph was charged with assault and battery on Patrick Bradley a constable of Quincy, and with drunkenness. He was found not guilty on the assault charge and $10 on a drunk charge. He appealed.

To the disappointment of several score of spectators, Thomas G. Connolly, the I. W. W. counsel, did not represent the defendant, and Harry Levovitch was retained in his absence. Many strikers were in the court room and all of the estimony of the defense was given through interpreters.

Mr. Bradley testified that Joseph grabbed a man on the street, in an effort to force him to join the strikers, and that when he informed the man he was at liberty to go to work Joseph ordered him inside the shipyard. According to the testimony Joseph then grabbed Bradley around the neck and was immediately placed uner arrest. He resisted forcibly and attempted to bite and strike and bit a hole through Bradley's rubber coat. When put into the police auto he turned to Bradley and said "I will get you yet."

Harry Mathews testified that he witnessed the resistance of the prisoner who was aparently under the influence of liquor. He also said that a revolver Bradley carried was partially exposed during the scuffle and that it was removed from the reach of the arrested man as a precaution.

John Johnson corroborated a great part of Bradley's testimony and said that while resisting arrest Joseph was hit several good hard blows on the head.

Edward Herbert said Joseph tried to bite and strike Bradley after being arrested, and said the picketing of the prisoner was hardly peaceful.

Lawrence Moran said that after arrest Joseph snarled and growled and tried to bite Bradley on the arm, and from the patrol wagon sung out "I will get you yet."

Patrolman James Whelan who piloted the police auto to the scene after a riot call had been received at the station, said Joseph was drunk and exhibited the liquor found on his person. Spectators in the court room said it was a mixture of whiskey and anise.

City Clerk Crane officially stated that Bradley was a constable of the City of Quincy and possessed all powers.

Joseph when placed on the stand denied much of the testimony of the government and so did other foreigners.

QUARRY CASE ON TRIAL.

Judge Keating in the Superior court at Dedham is hearing the suit of George F. Smollett vs John C. Ballou. The suit is to recover $15,000 damages for personal injuries, due to the alleged defect of a derrick in the defendant's granite quarry in this city on July 22, 1911.

YOU need the Ledger EVERY DAY. ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

ALL RESULT OF GAMBLERS' WAR

Claim of Defense In Trial of Charles Becker

KING OF NEWSIES TESTIFIES

Would-Be "Sullivan" Says Becker Was "Framed Up" at Investigation of Jack Rose That He Might Save Himself and Companions From Trial on Charge of Murder

New York, May 20.—"Jack Sullivan," former "King of the Newsboys," was the star witness for the defense in the Becker trial.

It was the opening for the defense, and it was quickly apparent that Becker's witnesses would try to prove that the shooting of Rosenthal was the result of a gamblers' war, and that "Bald Jack" Rose, the informer, set out to "frame up" Becker so that Rose might save himself and his companions, "Bridgie" Webber, Harry Vallon and Sam Schepps, from being placed on trial for the murder.

Seven of the defense's witnesses were used to discredit the testimony offered by Rose, Webber and Vallon to show that Webber had repeatedly expressed his sorrow for having taken part in the "frame up" and that on many occasions he had said Becker had nothing to do with the murder.

"The boys used to say that I would be a second John L. Sullivan, that's how I got the nickname, 'Jack Sullivan' and it's stuck to me ever since."

Jacob Reich (Jack Sullivan) thus described himself with some show of regret for lost aspirations, as he squared his shoulders and cocked his head at the beginning of the picturesque story denouncing Rose, Webber and Vallon, the three principal witnesses for the prosecution, with unrestrained epithets of the underworld.

Sullivan waited upon District Attorney Whitman to refresh the memories of his pugilistic days. When once under good headway he verbally walloped "everything in sight," including the judge, jury, district attorney, and even Mr. Manton, chief counsel for the defense, who had guided him skilfully through the direct examination.

The defense had constructed the steel frame of their case on Sullivan's testimony in cross examining the state's witnesses, and it would have been critical for Becker's interests if he had entirely "blown up." It was the impression that the defense had had a narrow escape with Sullivan, but after all he proved to be a pretty good witness for the defendant.

While many of his answers were too much elaborated and absurd to be convincing, he stuck to his main story of accusing the state's informers with "framing up" Becker with a consistent tenacity that suggested a vein of rigid truth.

The defense disposed of seven of their witnesses after Manton had briefly outlined his case to the jury at the opening of court. In conclusion he said:

"There is no action in this case. It is all words, words, words. We shall show you that it is the sordid story of a gambler's fight, in which an innocent man is charged with murder by four worthless ruffians, who switched from the truth to lie and shift the responsibility on the defendant to save themselves."

NOT A "DEPENDENT"

Court's Decision Regarding Wife Living Apart From Husband

Boston, May 20.—A wife living apart from her husband, who has met death in an accident, is not a "dependent" within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act and is not entitled to the benefits of that law.

This decision was handed down by the supreme judicial court relative to the case of Alvin R. Nelson.

The court reverses a decree of the industrial accident board which awarded the widow $7.88 a week for 300 weeks beginning July 1, 1912, the day on which her husband was killed while in the employ of the Bay State Street Railway company.

"SHALL" IS MANDATORY

No-License Communities Must Allow Liquor to Come In

Boston, May 20.—One or more permits to transport intoxicating liquors must be granted by the officials of every no-license city or town in this state to expressmen or express companies, says the supreme court, full bench.

This decision is made on the petition of Arthur L. Rea & Co. for a mandamus order to compel the aldermen of Everett to grant such a permit. The full bench holds the word "shall" in statute 1906, chap. 421, sec. 2, is mandatory, not discretionary.

"The object of the liquor law," says the opinion, "has been to control the sale and transportation, not the consumption. The legislature has sought to control such transportation to prevent illegal sales or keeping, and has shown no purpose of conferring discretionary powers on officers of no-license communities to prohibit transportation of liquors for hire."

FIRES HOME BEFORE TAKING OWN LIFE

Farmer First Commits Murder by Shooting His Wife

Stamford, Conn., May 20.—George Wood and his wife were found dead in their home in the farming district of High Ridge, just across the line in New York state, under conditions which the police say indicate murder and suicide. Neighbors discovered the house on fire and after extinguishing the flames found the bodies. The Woods were each about 35 years old.

The body of Mrs. Wood was lying, charred and unclothed, on a partly burned bed in one of the rooms. There was a bullet wound in the breast. Wood, fully clothed, was lying on the floor nearby with a bullet hole in the head.

The police express the belief that Wood killed his wife, and then, having set the house on fire, took his own life.

DREW HELD FOR TRIAL

Publisher of Suffragette Paper Arraigned In London Court

London, May 20.—Sydney Drew, printer and publisher of The Suffragette, the newspaper representing the militant section, was committed in police court for trial at the Old Bailey, the specific ground of complaint against him being an article inciting members of the Women's Social and Political union to commit malicious damage to property.

An official of the postoffice testified that 237 letter boxes had been tampered with, 4000 letters damaged and 114 pieces of mail destroyed by the suffragettes.

CLERGYMEN AS CANDIDATES

Eventful Night for Wollaston Masonic Lodge

There were a large number of past masters present Tuesday evening at the special communication of Wollaston Masonic lodge, both of the home lodge and other lodges. In addition there was a large attendance of brothers which again emphasized the fact that the present quarters of Wollaston lodge are entirely inadequate. The work of the evening was the third degree, and among the five to receive this, the final degree in the blue lodge wre two of the pastors of Wollaston churches.

Worshipful Master Charles E. Cherrington was assisted in the work of the evening by F. W. Hayden, past master of Mt. Taber lodge of East Boston; Albert L. Barbour, past master of Mt. Moriah lodge, Lime Rock, R. I.; James Brown, sitting master of Massachusetts lodge of Boston and Charles E. Monroe, past master of Wollaston lodge. Music during the ceremony was furnished by the Wollaston lodge quartette. A feature of the evening was the charge, which was given by Rev. I. W. Sneath, chaplain of Wollaston lodge. Refreshments were served at the close of the communication.

Four Wollaston clergymen are now members of the Masonic fraternity—Rev. I. W. Sneath, Rev. George M. Bailey, Rev. Joseph Walther and Rev. Carl G. Horst, all of whom were present and also Rev. A. L. Hudson of the First Parish church, Quincy.

AUTOS IN COLLISION.

GRAND OPERA AT KINCAIDES

The prevalent idea that the coming engagement of a big aggregation of Boston Grand Opera Stars at Kincaide Theatre, Friday evening, will appeal only to music lovers is entirely wrong. True the genuine lover of great music will reap the greatest enjoyment, but so many novelties will be offered at this engagement that the average theatregoer, whether music lover or not, will find in it a most delightful evening's entertainment.

The young ladies are all solo dancers from the Boston Opera House, which is noted for the beauty of the members of its ballet. They make during their number three changes of costume, each more gorgeous than the preceding, presenting in turn, the wonderful "Dance of the Hours" from Gioconda, Copelia and Silvia.

It certainly does not require a devotee of music to appreciate the singing of "The Rosary" as it will be sung by that greatest of all bassos, Edgar Littleton, nor "The last rose of summer" by Mme. Maria DiGabbi, nor the charming group of Irish melodies, including "Believe me of all those endearing young charms" by Mlle. Evelyn Parnell. Neither is a music lover the only one who can enjoy Giovanni Gatti's magnificent rendition of "Because."

Of course there will be opera and plenty of it. There will be eight big arias and ensemble numbers. Applications for seats should be made without delay.

TO REPRESENT WEYMOUTH.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Cook of Weymouth sailed from Boston on Tuesday on the S. S. Arabic en route to Weymouth England, where Judge Cook will represent his town at the dedication of a memorial to John Endicott, the first governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

ANNE HUTCHINSON STATUE.

The movement for the Anne Hutchinson fund is going on actively, particularly among the women's clubs. Attention has been directed to it by Mrs. Lorin F. Deland, who has written as follows: "I most heartily approve of the project of placing a statue of the noble woman, Anne Hutchinson, in the Boston Public Library, and it seems to me it would be a particularly grateful and significant thing if the statue could be placed there through the courtesy of the women's clubs."

The Concord Woman's Club was the banner organization as the first subscriber. Among other clubs which have sent in or are about to make contributions are the Brighthelmstone, the Pepperell, the Dover and the Dorchester clubs.

WHEELER BROS. SHOWS

Street Parade Interested Thousands This Morning

City Square was filled with men, women and children who came from far and near to see the circus parade. Wheeler Bros. Shows are in Quincy today, and the management with forethought postponed their street parade until well along toward noon that the school children might have an opportunity of seeing it without leaving school session.

The street parade was an exceptionally good one. There were a large number of horses, all of which were fine looking animals. In addition to this there were numerous cages of wild animals, on some of which the sides were up so that the animals could be seen.

There were an unusual number of lady riders in the parade and several bands, so that there was almost constant music. Then there were of course the quartette of clowns who made fun for the spectators, the massive elephants and the camels of the desert.

The show made in the street parade gives promise of the tent show being worth seeing. The tents are located on the Water street base ball grounds.

by the Home Economics Committee; a punch bowl from Mrs. Thomas Fenno and four season tickets to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts for two years, from the Arts and Crafts Committee.

The club has made contributions to the Associated Charities of Quincy, to the National Endowment Fund of the National Federation of Women's clubs, and to the Massachusetts Child Labor committee; also recommendations from the Board to be acted upon by the club at the annual meeting, include contributions to the Visiting Nurse of Quincy, the Wollaston playground, Wollaston Free Kindergarten and Whatsoever Circle of Kings Daughters. The club has also through its committees, as is seen from their reports, given generously in many other directions.

We have to record the death during the year of two of our club members, Mrs. Charles L. Seavey, who passed away Jan. 16, 1914 and only a few days later Mrs. L. Torrey Couchier, who died Jan. 20.

The club has now a full membership of 300, 2 honorary members and 194 names on the waiting list.

ARTS AND ARTS AND CRAFTS.

The Arts and Arts and Crafts Committee report a successful year's work. The classes have been well patronized and gratifying work has been accomplished along all the lines attempted. Thirteen classes in Basketry—two in China Painting—two in Millinery and three in Dressmaking have proved instructive and have been as a whole success financially as well as a means of promoting neighborhood sociability among our members.

Some of the work done in these classes would be a credit to professionals. Our teachers have been willing and ready to do their part towards making classes popular and the members of the classes have worked so well together that future success is assured for the coming year.

Our Arts and Crafts Exchange has done good work. Since the second meeting in October, members of that committee have worked hard and conscientiously to make the Exchange a success and thanks to the ready co-operation of consignors and purchasers the experiment has proved so much better than we hoped that our Exchange will be a permanent feature at every meeting next year.

As a means of increasing the amount of money in our treasury we gave a progressive auction party March 11th at the home of Mrs. Whitman. The result was most gratifying and our financial condition greatly improved.

Arts and Arts and Crafts day was Jan. 20 and we had for a speaker Frederick C. Whitney of Danvers. Mr. Whitney is well known by many of our members having spoken before women's clubs in this vicinity on several occasions. His subject was Color Harmony in the Home. His interesting talk was well illustrated and was much appreciated by all who were fortunate enough to hear it.

Early in March we decided to contribute $10. annually for two years towards the running expenses of the Museum for Fine Arts. In return they sent four tickets for the use of members of the Wollaston Woman's club admitting bearers free to the Museum at any time the Museum is open. Six of our members have availed themselves of this privilege.

I take pleasure in submitting the following report of the financial condition of the Art and Arts and Crafts Committee, detailed accounts of which have been turned over to the treasurer.

Money from classes	$37.75
Sale unused tickets	.60
Arts and Crafts Exchange	17.43
Auction Party	20.10
	75.88
Incidental expenses for year	20.30
Balance (National Shawmut Bank)	$55.58

Much of the success of this department is due to the ready and willing endeavor of all the members of its committee and the chairman takes this opportunity for expressing her thanks and appreciation of their efforts. During the coming year we hope to benefit by this year's experience and carry our work on in broader and more ambitious lines.

Anna Whitman Homer

CIVIC COMMITTEE.

For its first year the Civic Committee of the Wollaston Woman's club has been especially active. Many enterprises have been undertaken—some of which have been successfully carried out—while others we trust in due time will have the same successful results.

The first improvement accomplished by the committee was to place rubbish cans on the principal street corners. Money for these cans was raised by bridge parties which were held at the homes of the committee. The need of these cans may be realized when it is learned that they are emptied twice daily and are always full. Next a great deal of energy was spent in trying to improve the R R. Station. The sanitary conditions were well looked into, likewise having the station kept clean and neat. However as the road was in such financial straits at the time nothing definite along this line has as yet been accomplished. A petition for better train service was refused but a petition is still pending for lower steps. Through the efforts of the Civic Committee in connection with the Quincy Improvement Society many vines and bushes have been secured which are to be planted about the station grounds.

In order to raise money for further improvements the committee next turned its efforts towards giving an entertainment. After two weeks of hard labor both on the part of the committee and those taking part in it, a successful Pageant of Trees was presented in the Wollaston School hall on March 26th and 27th. $111.00 was realized from the Pageant and $25.00 of the money the committee gave to swell the fund for the supervised playground. Seeds have been distributed to the school children and prizes have been offered to the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields school for the best gardens.

At present the committee is interested in Safford park. This park is certainly an addition to Wollaston and it is the wish of the committee to have it kept beautiful which of course means expense. As the city of Quincy owns this Park we feel it is their duty to open up a hydrant and see that it is properly watered and cared for. While Quincy is willing to furnish the water it feels it is too poor to pay for the hose and daily care. The committee is considering appropriating a sum of money towards the proper care and up-keep of this Park.

During the week of May 23, clean-up week, the committee hopes to greatly improve the many unsightly places in Wollaston and with the co-operation of all our members we feel that a lot may be accomplished along this line.

Mrs. Edward J. Badger, Chairman

CUSTODIAN COMMITTEE.

During our first club year just ending we have had 549 guests, the largest number (223) attending the dramatics at Music hall, May 6; next largest the musicale, Feb. 3, 76 guests attending; and at the meeting Dec. 5, when Mr. Hubbard of the Boston Opera House gave "The Tales of Hoffmann" 71 guests were present.

The lecture on the evening of Jan. 5 by Dr. Woods Hutchinson, although one of the regular meetings, was in charge of the Home Economics committee, Mrs. J. O. Short, chairman, detailed report of which will be made by Mrs. Short.

Four guests were present at each of the meetings held Oct. 4 and Dec. 16, those of Oct. 4, our first meeting, all being from other states, Exeter, California, St. John, New Brunswick, and Newark, New Jersey.

Out of the 549 guests reported 127 were from out of town. Some of the states represented by guests are California, Virginia, Vermont, New York, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Maine Connecticut, Maryland, Nebraska, New Jersey, Iowa; also New Brunswick and Ontario, Canada, and Buenos Aires, Brazil, South America.

Receipts from the sale of guest tickets, $140.50, fines $5.70, one year book, $.05, total $146.25. Largest amount received at any one meeting was the dramatics, $56.00, and the musicale, second, $22.25.

All money received as stated above has been paid over to the treasurer, Mrs. C. M. Bryant, and receipts taken.

Katherine S. Jameson, Chairman.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

With the Current Events talk March 23, the Education committee brought to a close its active work for the season 1913-14. From all standpoints the committee has had a very satisfactory year.

Our Current Events class of over 80 members, under the splendid leadership of Mrs. Pennock, has been a source of great benefit and pleasure, and all who have attended have been helped to a much better and clearer understanding of the large and important affairs of the day.

The committee has also had the pleasure of introducing to club members, Arthur R. Peck in his illustrated lecture, "Storm Heroes of our coast," which gave an unusual insight into the lives and thrilling labors of these real heroes.

Kate B. Keyes, Chairman.

* * *

HOUSE COMMITTEE.

The House Committee has secured the meeting places for this club and ascertained that everything was in readiness for each and every meeting. Six meetings being held in the Park and Downs church, seven in the Unitarian church, two in the Wollaston school hall, and one in Quincy Music hall. The treasurer's report will show the year's expenditure. In presenting the report of the House committee it may seem to some we have accomplished but little. The securing of this right meeting place for the club to present this varying program has sometimes been somewhat difficult, but the club members have realized our situation and have kindly helped to make everything pleasant and satisfactory. We hope to be in our new home next year where all our meetings may be held and the House committee will try and make a better showing.

Carrie G. Rowe, Chairman.

* * *

HOSPITALITY COMMITTEE.

The Hospitality committee have tried in their small way to do their part towards making our club a success in this our first year.

During the summer we held a committee meeting and decided that we would earn a yard of pennies, so as to present our club with a tea urn.

In the fall we found we had money enough to buy one, but we grew ambitious, and thought how nice it would be if we could have another, so we sent for a barrel of mints as our club paper told you.

With the help of all you ladies, before we knew it, we had our other urn.

Money was allowed us at the beginning of the year for our teas and decorations with a separate amount for reciprocity day.

We have tried to send flowers to the sick ones in our club that we have known of.

Six teas have been given, and if they have been a success, the credit is due not only to the committee but to the whole club as always you have so generously given us whatever we have asked for. With your help, out of the money allowed us and what we have earned, we have (up to the expense for today) in the treasury, $41.42.

May Witham Thompson, Chairman.

* * *

HOME ECONOMICS COMMITTEE.

As the club was in its infancy it was deemed unadvisable to attempt too much. The club dance was taken in charge by the Home Economics committee, and was held in Alpha hall, Hallowe'en night. It was a great success socially and financially. After paying expenses of $99.60, we had a balance of $105.40. January 6th we had for our speaker, Dr. Woods Hutchinson of New York, whose subject was "Which is man's life, his work or his play?" I think it was generally agreed that he was both entertaining and instructive. Guest tickets were sold amounting to $61.75. At the second meeting in February, there was a demonstration of the "Silver-clean Pan," under the auspices of this committee. We presented the club May 5 with two silver tea urns and have on hand to begin next year's work, a balance of $83.15.

Chairman.

* * *

LEGISLATIVE.

The Legislative Committee was formed May 6, 1913. The first thing brought to our attention was the Spanish War Preference Bill, which was brought before the club and voted on.

A parliamentary law class of twenty-five members was formed the last of October 1913. We engaged Mrs. Electa Sherman as teacher. The class was very successful and I am sure the faithful members feel well repaid for the time and small amount it cost them. I hope that next year we will have a much larger class, as Parliamentary law is so essential to a successful club.

Our committee held a very successful card party at the home of the chairman, 67 Prospect avenue, Dec. 6, 1913, and cleared $12.50. One dollar and fifty cents was used to make up Mrs. Sherman's fee of twenty-seven dollars. The balance of eleven dollars has been handed in to the treasurer of the club.

The chairman and a member of the club, represented the Wollaston Woman's club at the hearing of the clean milk bill at the State House, March 2, 1914. The State Forest Bill was brought to our attention and letters have been written to our representative, stating that our club was in favor of this bill, also the clean milk bill.

Mildred M. Waterhouse, Chairman

LITERATURE AND LIBRARY EXTENSION.

Your committee on Literature and Library Extension beg to report as follows: This committee obtained for its afternoons entertainment of the club Otto C. Selzer who read "Disraeli."

We have also had on sale booklets arranged by the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's clubs giving three courses of reading in contemporary literature, selected to illustrate the relation of the literature of our times to the problems of our times.

Soon after we started our work in the fall, we obtained an interview with the trustees of the Thomas Crane Public Library to ascertain what could be done in regard to establishing better library service in Wollaston.

We were informed that funds available for the year 1913 were not sufficient to take proper care of the normal requirements together with such extensions as already had been considered necessary and advisable in a part of the city where there is a large percentage of people who need library accommodations, more than the people of our community. The prospect of obtaining a branch library in Wollaston at present seems to depend upon filling the greatest need first.

Ada J. Bailer, Chairman.

* * *

MUSIC COMMITTEE.

The work of the Music committee has been so constantly before the club as to scarcely need mention. We have arranged music for the different meetings with varied success; not always able to secure the talent desired, for mumps, colds and kindred diseases upset the best laid plans. Besides the artists previously known in Wollaston, we have brought to your notice two new violinists and two singers.

But our crowning success, our pride and delight, is the chorus, this has a membership of thirty-eight voices, with an average attendance of twenty-nine, which shows much enthusiasm among the members. The concert in January netted us $137.00. Ninety dollars have been given to the treasurer of the club to be used in any way that can further Musical appreciation or knowledge in the community, the remainder is kept for a working basis in the early fall.

For this next year we offer to the musical members, that is the singers, the chorus work; for the instrumentalists, we hope to start an orchestra to assist the chorus also do ensemble work for strings, reeds and piano. Any who desire to work in these branches will please hand their names to the chairman. The chorus starts early in the season, the orchestra a little later. For those who have not the leisure or inclination to work actively in the chorus or orchestra, we offer study classes in music listening and appreciation. There is no art which exerts such a great influence on mankind as music. It enters into all conditions of life; in sorrow in joy, in war or in peace it finds expression. We will show how sounds combined with other sounds made up little melodies which grew into folk songs and thence to the opera and symphony. This class will be under competent leaders and will consist mostly of music with explanatory talks.

In closing the committee desire to express their appreciation for the loyal support given by this club the past year and hope to merit their approval the coming one. To the committee who have so ably assisted with their talent, experience and encouraging words I offer most sincere thanks.

Florence J. Olney, Chairman.

PROGRAM COMMITTEE.

The Program Committee has completed its years work and feels satisfied that pleasant and profitable afternoons were furnished for the club.

Words of appreciation have reached our ears which have lightened the work, for after all the labor is soon forgotten if the entertainment only prove acceptable to club members.

The first meeting in charge of the Program committee was the reading by Mrs. Waldo Richards, who treated us to a delightful afternoon of Folk Literature, giving us an idea of the different dialects of several nationalities.

The next afternoon we listened to a stereopticon lecture by Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, our president. Her subject was "The Wonderland of America," which brought us near to the heart of nature, and gave us a vivid idea of the Garden of the Gods, the great boulders and geysers, whose gigantic proportions and wild beauty

DERAILMENT OF QUINCYS

Trolley Team No Match for Taunton Boys

The championship aspirations of the Quincy team of the Trolley league were wrecked at Taunton on Tuesday when the car employees of that city easily defeated them 10 to 1. The derailment came early in the game and was due in a great measure to the exploding of the Italian battery, Malnati the pitcher going in for a course in aerial navigation. He was bumped and hit, and although Louie Ross gave the emergency bell, Malnati did not apply the brakes, and Taunton crew slipped further and further ahead.

Finally Quincy sent out a scout for assistance, and Frank Canavan was discovered in the bleachers. He had gone to that city when he learned the police would not play. Five contagious innings had passed when he took the mound and for the balance of the game he allowed but three hits and only one run was scored. Incidentally Quincy had a man score during his leadership.

The crippled crew came home by different routes, some going to Providence and taking a Boston train, while others met automobilists they knew and came over the road. It was the first time this season that an aggregation of players and fans failed to return at the same time.

FREE PUBLICATIONS.

Congressman Edward Gilmore has procured a number of valuable publications from the Department of Agriculture, which will prove of interest to many of the people of his district, the 14th Massachusetts. The women folks will find these of much interest as the summer approaches, particularly the publication on canning fruits preserves and jellies. The titles of some of them are as follows: "Canned fruits, preserves and jellies," by Maria Parloa. Preparation of Vegetables for the table," by Maria Parloa. "Economical use of meat in the home" by Prof. Langworthy and Caroline Hunt. "The care of milk and its use in the home," by George Whitaker.

For those who are interested in beautifying the home grounds, the school gardens, or the home vegetable gardens, there are some nice booklets on these subjects.

Congressman Gilmore would like his constituents in his district to select from this list the subject of interest and he will be pleased to furnish the booklets to all who desire them. For the convenience of all, use a postal card, stating which booklets are wanted and give full name and street address to prevent delay or loss in receiving them. "RIVER OF DOUBT" IS DECLARED VERITY

Roosevelt Refuses to Discuss National Political Situation

New York, May 20.—Theodore Roosevelt has returned home from his visit to South America. Accompanied by the two naturalists of his party, George K. Cherry and Leo E. Miller, he arrived from Para on board the steamer Aidan.

With a few crisp sentences, punctuated by decisive gestures, he reaffirmed the verity of the "River of Doubt," curtly denied having expressed himself as to presidential probabilities for 1916, declared he would not run for governor of New York, made a few deprecatory remarks about his critics and, with harbor craft tooting and flags fluttering, was taken on board a tug, which proceeded to Oyster Bay.

Friends who had been alarmed by the reports of Roosevelt's severe illness were greatly surprised when they saw him. He was noticeably thinner and he used a cane, but his face wore a healthy tan and he had apparently not lost any of the vigor and energy which have become characteristic of him.

After stopping ten days in this country Roosevelt will go to Spain to the wedding of his son Kermit.

Shot as William Tell

Lynn, Mass., May 20.—Michael H. Davis, a 17-year-old usher in a Lynn theatre, is in a dangerous condition as the result of being shot in the head while acting as William Tell for Mrs. Waunetah Griffin, an Indian theatrical performer, who attempted to shoot a potato from his head.

Former Judge Now Clerk

Concord, N. H., May 20.—The justices of the superior court accepted the resignation of Fremont E. Shurtleff as clerk of the court for Merrimac county and appointed to fill the vacancy George M. Fletcher, formerly justice of the Concord police court.

REED'S WITTY THRUST.

It Silenced For the Time the "Great Objector," Holman.

There are many stories of the caustic wit of Thomas B. Reed, the famous speaker of the house of representatives. One of his most amusing thrusts was delivered at William S. Holman, a member of congress from Indiana. It was perhaps the keenest witticism ever uttered in debate on the floor of the house.

Holman was a constant objector to the expenditure of money by congress and had honestly earned the title of "Watchdog of the Treasury." One day, when the committee was perfunctorily putting through a number of bills for the erection of government buildings in various cities, Holman was constantly on his feet, objecting to their consideration. But when Indiana was reached and the committee began to propose appropriations for buildings in the towns of that state Holman's objections came with much less spirit and finally ceased altogether. When at length a bill was offered that carried a generous appropriation for a building in Holman's own town, he rose and expressed hearty approval. Hardly had he taken his seat when Mr. Reed was on his feet. "Mr. Speaker!" he shouted; and then, in gently sentimental tones, he recited Byron's familiar lines:

'Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep mouthed welcome as we draw near home!

And the "great objector" forgot to object any more that day!—Youth's Companion.

THEY PLAYED MARBLES.

One Street Game In Which Lincoln Took a Hand.

An elderly gentleman now residing in Washington tells this story about Abraham Lincoln:

"I was about ten years of age and given violently to the game of marbles. One cold March day my companions and I were playing on the sidewalk before my father's shop when I slipped on a piece of ice and fell, cutting my chin. The other boys seized as many of my marbles as they could and made off. Wild with anger, I started after them, calling them names and threatening to annihilate them, and so on. Suddenly a hand on my collar stopped me, and a deep voice said:

"'We've got enough ill feeling going on in this country these days without you boys catching it!'

"A big man swung me around and wiped my wounded chin and then went on:

"'I saw what they did, son. Have you any agates left? Good! I'll put up three chiny alleys, and we'll see who'll win.'

"He drew from his pocket three marbles.

"'I got them from my boy Tad,' he explained, and then I knew who he was.

"There on the street I played marbles with the president for five minutes, and he let me win. Here are the marbles — a precious possession!" — Exchange.

Fed the Brute.

Sir Charles Tupper in his book, "Recollections of Sixty Years," recalls an experience of his daughter in Canada during the Riel rebellion in the northwest. She was in the region of trouble, and on a day when she happened to be alone in her home "in walked a strapping Indian, all war paint and feathers. She thought the best thing she could do was to feed him. She cooked everything in the house—potatoes, meat and bread. When all was consumed—and these Indians will eat at a meal enough to lost for three weeks—he had grown to a very large size. As he could not speak a word of English or French, he evinced his gratitude by patting his protuberant stomach, with a guttural "Ha, ha, ha," and left.

Plague of the Black Death.

That terrible plague the black death, originating somewhere in the east, passed by way of Armenia into Asia and thence to Egypt and north Africa. Reaching Sicily in 1346, it spread over Italy, France and nearly all of the countries of Europe, including the British isles. The mortality was appalling, some 25,000,000 of people dying from the dread epidemic. The nature of the great pestilence has been a matter of much controversy, but it is generally conceded that it was closely related to what is known today as the "bubonic plague."—New York American.

Close by Canton, China, is the hill called Queen of Heaven mountain, on the lower slopes of which is the famous City of the Dead. Their bodies wait in their coffins sometimes several years before the priests are able to determine an auspicious day for interment.

Bluffed and Won.

"What is the meaning of this?"

"My dear," he murmured, "I got to thinking about women being denied the right of suffrage, and I took a few drinks."

And he got away with it that time.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Writes Characteristic Letter Regarding Loss of Appetite.

He says:
"Vinol is just the thing
For summer, winter, fall or spring.
Follow directions, take it right,
It will save your lagging appetite.
"I know for I have tried it. For weeks I could scarcely eat enough to keep a snake alive. I have taken three bottles of Vinol and now it looks like I will eat my head off. I am at the table three times a day eating as I did in the good old days when I split rails, dug wells, toped trees, plowed corn and hoed cotton. Try Vinol and see how good it feels to be real hungry."

When you ought to be hungry and are not it is because your stomach does not feel strong enough to ask for food—a sure sign of impaired general health. Better than dosing the stomach with pepsin for temporary relief is taking Vinol, our delicious tonic, which has the strengthening and blood-making power of iron, and the building-up value of cod liver oil. It quickly restores appetite and perfect digestion. If Vinol does not help you it costs you nothing. Edward J. Murphy, Druggist, Quincy Mass.

Two Federal Generals Reported Among the Killed—Leader of Rebels May Have Forced His Way Through Outer Defenses of Huerta's Stronghold—Huerta's Former Right Hand Man Kept No Count of Men He "Removed" Upon Orders of Dictator—Elimination of Huerta Will Be First Step Toward Pacification of Mexico—Fate of Silliman Yet Unknown

Washington, May 20.—Desperate fighting is in progress before Saltillo, but the wires direct from the front, silent, it is believed, under the order of General Villa, have brought no details of the engagement.

Whether Villa has fought his way through the outer defenses of the federal stronghold and is knocking on the gates of Saltillo itself, or whether a desperate defense of the positions north of the town have sufficed to check for a time the rebels' advance, was uncertain from the little news that did come through.

The only direct information reached was contained in a dispatch sent from Durango by Isidoro Fabela, acting minister of foreign affairs in the constitutionalist government, which informed the constitutionalist junta at El Paso, Tex., that Villa had defeated a force of 5000 federals at Paredon, inflicting heavy casualties, capturing 800 prisoners, several machine guns, 600,000 rounds of ammunition and other valuable munitions of war. Two federal generals were among those said to have been killed.

Neither the time nor date of the engagement was specified in the dispatch from Fabela.

Somewhat of a Puzzle

The mention of the engagement of 5000 troops at Paredon has proved a puzzle to men who have followed the campaign closely. The first serious engagement of the war was reported to have occurred near that point Friday, when 300 men of the Zaragoza brigade, under General Madero, surprised and scattered a federal force of 400. Madero then was reported to have occupied the town of Paredon. The federal garrison was said later to have returned to Ramo Arispe, six miles north of Saltillo, after cutting the railroad line from Paredon as they retreated.

This is the last direct news of the campaign to reach El Paso from the front, although other minor skirmishes were rumored. The question of how the 5000 federal troops could reach Paredon and participate in a battle there, forty-five miles from the federal base at Saltillo, remains unsolved.

From Mexico City General Blanquet, minister of war, says there has been no general engagement at Saltillo, only "hot skirmishes." He states that Saltillo has been heavily reinforced from San Luis Potosi, but this must be taken with a grain of salt, as the rebels are conducting a more or less vigorous attack on the latter city.

Parleys For Peace

Everything is ready for the opening of the mediation conference for the settlement of the difficulties between the United States and the Huerta government in Mexico.

It is understood that, among other things, the rules of procedure call for informal discussion as precedent to all formal negotiations.

The negotiations, it is said, will for the purpose of record, take the form of protocols of what has taken place, signed by all parties to the negotiations, and drawn up as occasion demands.

It is generally accepted as extremely probable that the elimination of Huerta will be the first suggestion for the consideration of the Mexican delegates. It is more than ever believed that, with the attitude of President Wilson on the subject so well known, the mediators would be less hopeful of success if the Mexican representatives prove unwilling to grant this important concession.

Other Countries Interested

The broad international scope of the proceedings and the importance which has attached to them by the other countries of South and Central America was evidenced by the arrival at Niagara Falls of Gonzale S. Cordova, minister from Ecuador to the United States.

He declared he had come on instructions from his government and that he intended to inform his government promptly by cable of all important developments during the progress of the mediation. It is understood that other Latin-American diplomats or their representatives also will be on the scene to keep in close personal touch with the mediation work.

Welcome to Canadian soil was extended to the mediators and delegates by Martin Burrill, minister of agriculture, and Senator Lougheed, government leader of the upper house.

No Count of Men "Removed"

Dr. Urrutia, formerly General Huerta's right-hand man, who is alleged to have caused the enemies of the dictator to "disappear," is himself a refugee in Vera Cruz, seeking to escape the knife or bullet of the assassin. Only the protection of United States soldiers prevents Mexicans there from wreaking vengeance upon him. He says that there is secret revolt against Huerta in Mexico City and he would not be surprised if it flared into open warfare.

"I didn't keep count of them." This was the reply of Urrutia when asked how any men had been put to death in Mexico City in the last twelve months.

The "removal" of countless Mexicans of high and low degree during the rule of Huerta was calmly discussed by Urrutia, once minister of the interior and credited with being Huerta's "secret executioner." He admitted many were summarily killed, but denied all personal responsibility.

The former minister spoke bitterly, mindful of the deep resentment still manifested against him by the Mexicans of Vera Cruz. Even as he talked in the Hotel Diligencia, a muttering crowd could be seen in the plaza outside, but American marines kept the crowds coming.

Urrutia fled within the American lines, he said, to save himself and his family from the wrath of Huerta. He is under the protection of General Funston.

Silliman's Fate Unknown

The fate of John R. Silliman, United States vice consul at Saltillo, is still unknown.

Philip C. Hanna, United States consul general at Monterey, has expressed grave fear in his messages to the state department that Silliman may have been killed by Huerta's soldiers, or is still being held in prison at Saltillo. There is a great deal of uncertainty concerning his fate, and official Washington is waiting anxiously for definite news.

When protestations were made to Huerta nine days ago it was stated that Silliman had been released from jail and that he was on his way to Mexico City. That was the last definite word that was received from any source.

There are reports that United States soldiers may be sent from Brownville, Tex., to rescue him if he is still in jail or, at any rate, to determine what has become of him.

WAS KNOWN AS "MORGAN'S MAN"

Mellen Testifies That He Was Proud of the Title

TRAIL OF NEW HAVEN DEALS

Expected to End at Grave of King of Finance Without Fixing Personal Guilt For Railroad Looting—Everything Morgan Recommended Was Endorsed by Railroad Directors

Washington, May 20.—Charles S. Mellen was "Morgan's man" while president of the New Haven railroad because he admired Morgan, stood in awe of him and respected his ability.

His admiration, awe and respect led Mellen to vote for payment of $11,000,000 for the Westchester road, a sum about $7,000,000 in excess of what Mellen believed the road to be worth. Similar faith in Morgan induced Mellen to swallow his objections to what he thought was an overpayment of $1,709,255 to Oakleigh Thorne and Marsden J. Perry for negotiating the Westchester deal.

So testified Mellen himself on the stand before the interstate commerce commission in connection with the board's investigation of the New Haven's affairs in response to the Norris resolution.

Mellen told the commission that he became president of both the Northern Pacific and the New Haven at the request of Morgan, the arrangement being made per telephone and no terms mentioned. He told how in 1908 the firm of Jacob H. Schiff was refused a chance to bid on the $12,000,000 Boston and Maine bond issue because other brokers had been recommended by Morgan.

Mellen described the government of the New Haven system through a finance committee of three or four men, dominated by Morgan, which reported to the executive committee, which reported in turn to the directors, and said that whatever the finance committee indorsed, the other committees, as a matter of course, rubber-stamped.

He told how Morgan allowed the flotation of the French loan through Kuhn, Loeb & Co., presumably because the Morgan firm did not care to handle the matter.

"I was proud to be known as Morgan's man," said Mellen.

That was his attitude throughout. He believed in Morgan and the Morgan methods. Only once had he clashed with the stern financier. Then, he admitted, he was humiliated and shamed.

With a trace of pride in his voice Mellen admitted he was afraid of Morgan, of the dominating manner of the king of finance. And in the same reply he indignantly refused the suggestion that he feared for his job.

It was Morgan the man he was afraid of, not Morgan's power. And he boasted that Morgan's fellow-directors, who had protested an expenditure of $11,000,000 when they had expected to spend $5,000,000, were like himself unwilling to personally demand Morgan's reasons for the act.

Following are the principal points in Mellen's expose:

Mellen said that Roosevelt, when president, had advised purchase of Boston and Maine by New Haven, although he could not pass upon legality of merger.

Whitney said in a letter to Mellen that the "Little Father" in Washington, Roosevelt, might like to "get his finger in the pie." Mellen replied that he had eliminated trouble in Washington and that the ground had been "carefully plowed."

Folk offered record of New Haven directors' meeting to prove that the road instead of Billard had derived a profit of $1,059,000 for the transfer of the Boston and Maine stock. Mellen denied New Haven had profited in the transfer and said reports were either faked or mistaken.

Mellen admitted he used Harriman as bogey to frighten people of New England into merger.

Gardiner Lane of Lee, Higginson company, was first man to suggest merger, and Olney was leading counsel.

American Express contract for twenty years with Boston and Maine is part of price for transfer of stock to New Haven.

Tammany implicated directly in Westchester deal.

Mellen predicted in 1907 that he would be the "goat" of the New Haven road.

It was the most extraordinary chapter yet unfolded in the inquiry into the alleged exploitation of New England's greatest railroad.

Fears that the New Haven's trail of "shameful finance" leads only to the grave of J. P. Morgan are expressed by high officials here. Standing out above everything else in the the story of Mellen is the fact that it was always at Morgan's orders that everything was done.

For eleven months officials of the New England states and the United States have tried to fix personal guilt for the New Haven looting. If Mellen's story is a criterion, their task appears doomed to failure. The trail will end at a grave wherein reposes the ashes of the most dominant figure in America's financial world ever encountered.

Quincy High lost another game Tuesday afternoon when they were beaten 12 to 6 by the base ball team of Weymouth High at Weymouth. Hugh Martin was used in the box a part of the game. Quincy played good base ball but was sadly in need of the services of a pitcher. On Friday they play with Brockton at Merrymount Park.

A pleasing concert is anticipated this evening at the Swedish Congregational church by Prof. Hultman.

The midweek meeting at the Swedish Congregational church this week has been postponed.

The dressmaking class taught by Mrs. Elizabeth Neary at Miss Spear's has just closed for the season. This interesting and profitable work resulted in many pretty model gowns made in various individual styles. WOLLASTON WOMAN'S CLUB leave us impressed with the magnificence of God's handiwork.

Mr. Havrah Hubbard in "The Tales of Hoffmann" was as he always is wonderfully entertaining and instructive. Mr. Floyd Baxter, accompanied him at the piano and altogether the Opera Talk was a delight.

Reciprocity day came next Mrs. Perkins our State President and Mrs. Royal Whiton were expected to be with us, but we were disappointed in their inability to be present. We had, however, Mrs. Henry C. Mulligan, who spoke to us on the Endowment Fund. She can tell us our duty in a sweeter way than almost any other woman and Mrs. John Amee told of the work of the Cantabrigia club.

Mrs. Young, president of the Boston City Federation, spoke upon "Patriotism" with much fervor.

Our gentleman's night was an unusually pleasant affair from two points of view. First, because we had our husbands, bless them, and next, because the music was excellent and everyone was happy.

Our final triumph was the dramatics, "The Rivals," was presented at Quincy Music hall in a manner that did great credit to our club as well as winning a reputation for all who took part as actresses of more than ordinary ability. Miss Theodora Luard deserves our thanks for her untiring efforts to make the dramatics a success. This she did and club members and guests were outspoken in their words of praise.

Besides the regular club afternoon, there were three Opera talks by Mr. Havrah Hubbard. Two were given in the vestry of the Methodist church, and one in the evening at the Park and Downs church. By the music lovers these talks are always looked forward to with eager anticipation, and were keenly enjoyed by the audience. The evening talk had a large attendance, including many men, which is always gratifying.

The sum of twenty-four dollars was realized from these entertainments, which is to be given to the Children's Playgrounds.

The chairman wishes to thank her committee for their hearty co-operation and generous support during the year.

Drusilla R. Salford, Chairman.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

The Press committee, although not a large body is still quite essential for the publicity of advertisement of the club. The work has gone on steadily from week to week and although I have not kept a record of the number of notices sent in each week, still some idea of the work done can be formed when I say that it takes me every club Tuesday evening from 7.30 until nearly 12 o'clock before I clean up the slate. Then, Wednesday mornings the cars must be met to carry the material to the Quincy Ledger and Telegram, and each day has its paper to be notified, or send reports to the Transcript, Record, Journal, Herald, Globe, Traveller, Christian Science Monitor, Quincy Ledger and Telegram.

Many have made the remark that they never see a Wollaston Woman's club represented in the Boston papers. May I say in explanation that there are so many editions that it is impossible to tell which one will print the item. I have been keenly disappointed many times in surmising that my article would appear in the evening edition only to find upon investigation that it had appeared in the morning.

May I also take this opportunity to publicly thank our worthy president for her aid in reporting to the Transcript the past few weeks. Both she and her husband took the responsibility of seeing that the articles were sent in on time. During the short period of illness before I went away it seemed impossible for me to cover all the papers. The Transcript is the hardest to cover as the copy has to be typewritten. Not having the facilities here at home it meant that I must send the copy outside to be typewritten. This alone would often delay me until my copy would reach their office too late.

It affords me great pleasure to realize that it was partly through the Press committee that the project of the special edition of the Quincy Telegram was helped to maturity.

May I thank all the chairmen of the various committees for their prompt reply to my demands for reports and notices and all who in any way have made the work lighter.

Hellen M. Crane, Chairman.

SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

The Social and Industrial committee have held meetings nearly every month since Sept. 1913 at the home of the chairman.

At the first meeting, plans were made for a whist party which was held Oct. 18, 1913, and we cleared $27.30 from the same.

In October we held Donation day when each member of the club contributed something in the line of fruits, jellies or preserves. A generous offering was made by the ladies and these were distributed to the Visiting Nurse, Day Nursery and Associated Charities.

In November we paid $10.50 one week's board for a child in the hospital.

December 23 we co-operated with the Quincy Women's club and the Riverside club in giving a Christmas party to the inmates of the City Farm, which seemed to be greatly enjoyed by them.

A ray of sunshine and a bit of Christmas cheer was sent to the unfortunate people at the Fresh Air Camp, in the form of individual boxes containing fruits, nuts, sweets and holly. Toys and clothing were furnished in some cases at Christmas.

In January and February friendly visits were made to the City Farm and Fresh Air Camp by ladies from this committee, when fruits and cakes were distributed among the inmates. In February each woman at the City Farm was presented with a shoulder shawl.

A very worthy family in Wollaston has received aid since January 1914, the father having been sick since that time. We have been able to furnish food, clothing and provide work for the mother. This committee have assumed to pay the rent $10.00 each month and thus keep this little family united.

We were fortunate in securing a speaker at our meeting of the club on Dec. 16, 1913, when Mrs. T. J. Bowlker gave her services and thus we had $35.$0 with which to do philanthropic work.

In April a worthy woman in our midst had been ill for a number of weeks, we were able to place her for care with Mrs. Lydia Beaulieu, 53 Buckley street, West Quincy, where she remained at our expense of $28.00.

Members of our club have made individual contributions to the Visiting Nurse to the amount of $30.00. By selling candy at the dramatics in May and individuals disposing nut bar chocolate we made $44.09. We have earned in all $106.39 and spent for charity $96.23 leaving a balance of $10.16.

When this committee was organized no definite work was in view but we have found much in our midst and trust that through our feeble efforts, life has been made a little brighter and the rough road a little smoother for those less fortunate than we. Let us ever remember that

"Charitable buildings are excellent things
But charitable deeds are better."

Mrs. C. S. Adams, Chairman.

WOMAN'S EXCHANGE.

The Woman's Exchange committee begs to submit the following report: Food has been sold at nine club meetings. The results of these sales are as follows: 35 loaves bread, 2,340 rolls, (195 dozen), 172 tarts, 44 loaves cake, 5 1-2 dozen tea cakes, 29 pies, 28 dozen doughnuts, 24 dozen cookies, 13 jars marmalade, 14 pounds candy and small miscellaneous consignments.

The receipts	$127.29
Paid consignors	114.78
Commission	12.51
From Treasurer	5.00
Expenses boxes	2.82
Balance on hand	$14.69

This first year has been necessarily experimental. We have made a small beginning. In the year to come, we hope to serve you better and have more food of the highest quality. It is the earnest desire of the committee that the club members cooperate by patronizing the exchange, so that it may grow yearly in importance to the community. When we have permanent quarters in the Sachem club, we want to start a woman's exchange which will become indispensable to you all.

Lillian Albee, Chairman.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

There comes a time in every organization when it is wise to disregard the injunction to "look forward and not back," and stop to take a backward as well as a forward look—not for the purpose of filling the present with vain regrets for the failures of the past, nor to rest content with successes won, but that our failures may help us in the present and guide us to better and higher activities in the future, and our successes be but stepping stones to even higher and nobler things in the year to come.

It is a little over a year since we organized for the purpose of "broadening and strengthening the moral, social and intellectual life of our members, and thro' them making ourselves a power for good in the community." Right splendidly have you all endeavored to live up to these high aims.

It was felt that if we could but get acquainted with each other we should have accomplished much, and it is a source of the greatest pleasure to your president that each and every member has endeavored at our social gatherings and teas to welcome not only the neighbor she knows so well, but the stranger, who has in so many cases become a delightful friend.

The classes under the auspices of the Arts and Crafts committee, the "getting out" of the Special edition of the Quincy Telegram, the Hallowe'en dance, the delightful "Pageant of Trees," the Choral class, the dramatics, all have contributed to the better knowledge of each other. The very successful Current Events class, the Parliamentary law class, (the benefit of which cannot be too strongly urged,) and our year's program, surely have done much for our intellectual need and gain. The reports of the Civic, Social and Industrial committees, and the Woman's exchange, show how earnestly we are striving to be a power for good in the community.

We are thankful that the financial condition of the club is such that it has been enabled to contribute to the many charities of Quincy this first year, and that it can extend its philanthropic work the coming year. Your president would urge that the members do not rest content with a money contribution, but feel that personal service and use count far more—that useful activity is the high ideal of life in the world, and true happiness comes from useful employment and active service. It is a necessary, vital step in any woman's club to cultivate a deep and broad love for all that pertains to the welfare of humanity. We shall have obtained the highest cultural value from our club associations when we let heart and head work together. There is a power in working together, and it is well for each club member to realize that she is a needed part of the whole.

"There's a place for one and all—
Each has his given powers—
Think what a sorry hush would fall
Upon this world of ours
If all the birds in all the vales
That now with songs are ringing
Because they are not nightingales
Should cease their joyous singing."

It is a pleasure to recall that our club so quickly realized the privilege and need of joining the State Federation—and that though not a member as yet of the General Federation, it contributed $25 to the General endowment fund. Delegates have been sent to the State conventions and to the many conferences, and much courtesy and many congratulations and good wishes have been extended to your representatives at the Guest days of other clubs.

As a club, we wish to express our grateful thanks and appreciation to the church organizations which have so generously and kindly furnished us with places of meeting. Our thanks are due also to the Quincy Evening Telegram, whose offer of a special edition enabled us to add materially to our treasury; to the Ledger, the Boston Transcript; and to the reporters of the other Boston dailies who have given such publicity to our work.

We have made a fine beginning—we have gone on record as a club which has done much its first year. Our State president in her letter of greeting for our special edition wrote that "if the remarkable child develops as rapidly in future years as in the first year of its existence, the Wollaston Woman's club will surely prove of great influence in the life of the community."

It is for all of us—not alone the officers and different committees, but for every member of our club, to stand shoulder to shoulder, putting aside the personal and trivial, and with a breadth of view and reasonableness of judgment, to push on with renewed enthusiasm and loyalty to the new visions of work yet to be accomplished.

We cannot measure the need
Of even the tiniest flower—
Nor check the flow of the golden sands
That run thro' a single hour;
But the morning dews must fall;
And the sun and the summer rain
Must do their part; and perform it all
Over and over again.

Your president wishes to thank the officers, the members of the Board, the various committees, and each and every member of the club for their active and helpful part in this year's work, and for the loyal and encouraging support they have given her. It has meant more to her than she can possibly express. With a full appreciation of what this year has done for her, and a sincere desire that she may be able to serve you better next year, and with the conviction, gained rom this first year's experience, that every member will do her part in the onward movement, she can confidently prophesy: "The best is yet to be."

Y. M. C. A. MINSTRELS MAKE A BIG HIT

End Man Says They Are Saving Coupons to Buy Mayor an Automobile

Young Ladies as Tambo Girls Add Much to Show

High class minstrelsy, the verdict of the full house which attended the Y. M. C. A. minstrels at Quincy Music hall on Wednesday evening, the first annual show under the auspices of the association. The whole program was refined, the scenes beautiful and the costume effect grand. The program was under the direction of Andrew J. Dinegan, who has scored many successes at minstrel shows, and Alden H. Blanchard boys work director of the Y. M. C. A. made an efficient business director.

The Hayden orchestra opened the program with an overture and part one was a plantation scene in Old Kentucky, with a river and cotton field in the background. Erastus Osgood as Uncle Tom played the banjo while the plantation hands sang and danced. In a double quartette were Albert Avery, Leslie Andrews, Charles Avery, Everett Rhodes, Walter G. Kidder, Alvah Innis, Sturgis Hunt and Lee Brooks. A solo was rendered by Ed Brown and Leslie Andrews showed skill as a clog dancer. Ernest P. Conlon, the Norfolk county secretary of the Y. M. C. A., impersonated the dignified owner of the plantation.

In part two Mr. Conlon made a capital interlocutor, and the end men were onto their job all the evening. Harry Glover and James McDonald wore rich suits of purple and gold, while Ernest Lindberg, Henry Trask, William Childs and Edwin Brown wore full dress suits of Nile green trimmed with red. The fourteen tambo girls were attractive in hunting costumes—white skirts, red jackets and caps, and black and white striped vests. The men in the circle wore white pants, red and white blazers and red and white stripped caps.

The tambo choruses during the evening were features of the program, all the tambo girls and end men handling them skillfully.

The program for part two was a long and varied one of seventeen numbers, as follows:

Opening Chorus
Walter G. Kidder and Company
End Song—"I Want a Ragtime Bungalow" Ernest Lindberg
Solo—"Zis for You, Zat for You"
Miss Minnie Hardwick
End Song—"My Ragtime Dream"
Henry Trask
Solo—"By the River of Dreams"
Alton Avery
Tambourine Specialty End Men
End Song—"Saving Up the Coupons"
William Childs
Song Specialty Alvah Innis
Singing and Dancing Specialty
Misses Gladys Doan and Grace Dingwell, Messrs. Hunt and Avery
End Song—"All Aboard for Dixie"
Edwin G. Brown
Monologue—Sermon on Apples
Charles B. Thomson
End Song—"I Love the Ladies"
Harry Glover
Singing and Dancing Specialty
Nine Men
Solo—"Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm" Edwin C. Bullock
Dancing Specialty
Miss Whittemore and Ryder Gay
End Song—"Not Me, Never"
James McDonald
Finale—Dance of the Nations
Edward Bullock and Company

All the numbers were encored and it would be difficult to say which was best as all were good. The end song of Ed Brown got the most encores, while William Childs got off some good hits in his original song: "Saving Up the Coupons."

The wave of economy dashes so high,
The Council will let scarcely anything by;
Each bill get the "once over" and then is referred,
To the Finance committee which says "That's absurd;"
They want us to spend all of our money at once,
And we must make it last for another ten months.
Why that Council is getting so terribly man,
They won't buy the Mayor his little machine.

CHORUS

So he's saving up coupons to get one of those
A Jeffrey or Rambler car I should suppose
The kind they are selling at T. A. Winsloe's
He saving up coupons to get one of those.

One day last December, I went out to call,
On the one little girl whom I love best of all;
We went to the dance of the S. P. C. A.,
You can bet your last dollar it was some soiree;
I had a swell time till she chirped in my ear,
I wish you looked like that man he's such a dear.
In my anger I said to her "What the Ding! Ding!
How can I raise a moustache like Delcevare King."

CHORUS.

So I'm saving up coupons to get one of those,
It will take several million of them I suppose,
But I'll be the proud boy with it under my nose,
I'm saving up coupons to get one of those.

Miss Minnie Hardwick who contributed a song was recalled, and so were Miss Eleanor Whittemore and Ryder Gay for the exhibition of new dances. Alvah Innis also made a hit. Harry Glover was assisted in his song by Misses Metherall, Simmons, Barker and Packard.

The nine young men who gave the dancing specialty were Charles Avery, Robert Corthell, Philip Waldron, Louis Wolfe, Lester Sprague, Leslie Andrews, Sturgis Hunt Ben Gouterman and Ralph Prout. In the song and dance specialty of Messrs Hunt and Avery and Miss Doan and Dingwell, the song was "I got everything I want but you."

In the dance of nations, little Miss Irene Pitts represented an Irish colleen, Miss Lucy Brooks a Dutch Gretchen, and Miss Mackee a Scotch lassie, each giving dances of their countries.

In the tableau "On Decoration Day," Edward Richardson of Paul Revere Post represented the veteran, and Eric Nelson the Pickaninny. In the closing tableau Miss Margaret Johnson impersonated "Columbia" and the audience rose while the "Star Spangled Banner" was played by the orchestra.

The tambo girls in the show were: Misses Juanita Wetherell, Marion Simmons, Florence Barker, Daisy Brooks, Eleanor Whittemore, Ruth Packard, Dorothy Packard, Minnie Hardwick, Gladys Doane, Grace Dingwell, Louise Prout, Margery Mosher, Margaret Johnson and Katherine Johnson.

In the circle were: Ralph Prout Leslie Andrews, Lee Brooks, Curtis Arnold, Everett Rhodes, Robert Corthell, Lester Sprague, Fred Ward, Charles Avery, Alton Avery, Roland Avery, Walter Kidder, Charles Holmes, Wesley Brown, Philip Waldron, Winslow Harris, Allen Connor, Louis Wolfe, Ernest Martin, Ben Gouterman, Harold England, Edward Newcomb, Sturgis Hunt, Robert Summers Alvah Innis and Guy Smith.

The Pickaninnies were: Frank Morrison, Eric Nelson, Theodore Brown and Gusta Wester.

The show should become an annual event.

YACHT CLUB SMOKER

The Q. Y. C. Entertain Guests at Clubhouse

The opening smoker of the Quincy Yacht club was held Wednesday evening at the clubhouse, Houghs Neck, and was the occasion for an unusually large attendance of members and their friends, the enlarged hall at the clubhouse being none too large to accommodate those present.

A special car left Quincy for the clubhouse at 7.50, and took down a large party, others from Quincy going down on earlier cars. During the first half hour, there was a sort of social hour in which friendships that had been somewhat broken during the winter months were renewed and the coming season's plans talked over.

Shortly after 8 o'clock Harry Winslow, chairman of the committee in charge of the evening, introduced Commodore Harry S. Crane, who briefly welcomed the members. He said that he was glad to welcome so many members and their friends. He spoke briefly of some of the changes that had been made at the clubhouse, notably the enlarging of part of the piazzas and re-arrangement of the boats. He paid particular attention to the club restaurant which he said was now open for the season. The officers had been to some expense to put the restaurant in shape and he believed that the members would appreciate it. A good cook had been secured, also a competent waitress and the prices would be found reasonable. While the restaurant was primarily for members only, members were privileged to bring their friends. It was also arranged so that members might obtain cards from the secretary or treasurer which would admit their friends to the privileges of the restaurant and the clubhouse. It was hoped, he said, that the members would freely patronize the restaurant during the coming season.

The evening was then given in charge of Harry Winslow. The program was in the nature of a vaudeville and cabaret show with artists from a well known Boston amusement bureau. It included songs and dances, monologues by a comedian, and humorist, closing with a sleight of hand performance in which numerous mysterious card tricks were performed. Most of these tricks were performed on the floor among the audience yet it is very doubtful if any could explain how they were done.

Between the several numbers the pianist played a number of popular airs which were sung by the well known Q. Y. C. glee club and all joined in singing. Cigars were also passed among the club members and guests during the evening, and everybody had a thoroughly enjoyable evening. At the close of the program an adjournment was made to the lower floor where a steaming hot clam chowder was served, also hot coffee, cheese and doughnuts.

A social half hour followed until 11 o'clock at which time the special car left for Quincy. The yachting season of 1914 of the Quincy Yacht club is now formally opened and from now on until late in the fall the clubhouse will be the Mecca toward which the club members move during their spare time from business.

LADIES NIGHT AT BRAINTREE

F. F. Crane Speaks at South Congregational Church

The final meeting for this season of the Men's club of the Congregational church, South Braintree was held in the chapel Wednesday evening. The affair was the annual ladies' night of the club and the attendance of members and their fair guests totalled about 125.

At 6.45 o'clock a banquet of salads, cold meats, mashed potato, coffee, rolls, ices and cake were served by a Boston caterer. The drinking water was from the famous Chickatawbut spring and was donated to the club by the agent, Shelley A. Neal.

The waitresses were the Misses Mabel Borden, Mildred Maxham, Frances Dreghorn, Marion Bradford and Winifred Howland.

At the conclusion of the banquet, all adjourned to the auditorium where after a short address of welcome, the president of the club, Frank A. Read introduced the speaker of the evening Frank Fessenden Crane of Quincy, who gave a very interesting talk on "Inland Waterways." Mr. Crane is vice president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways association and water front commission of Quincy. He is well versed in his subject and talked very entertainingly concerning the many canals of the United States. He told of the wonderful amount of freight which daily passes through the Soo and Erie canals, and how much cheaper the rates are than by railroad. He gave a lot of information about the proposed Brockton and Taunton canal and also about the one across Cape Cod.

To illustrate comparative freight rates Mr. Crane said a dollar would carry a ton of freight 4 miles on a dirt road, 13 miles on macadam, 127 miles on a railroad, 1200 miles on a canal and 2000 miles on the ocean. He also described with the aid of maps the chain of canals which when the proposed ones are all built will make it possible to navigate a vessel by the inside water route from Boston to Florida without venturing on the open ocean.

Mr. Crane is opposed to the tolls system of operating canals. He thinks they should be controlled by the government with no charge to American ships.

He took the club into strict confidence and told the ladies that he was going to be a candidate for Congress this fall. He said the men might forget it, but he knew the ladies wouldn't. Mr. Crane was accorded a rising vote of thanks for his interesting talk.

As a conclusion of the evening's program, C. Everett Wallace entertained the audience with character sketches and impersonations, also banjo and harmonica duets. His rendering of "Betsey and I are out" and the "Volunteer organist" were especially good. In the latter selection he was assisted by Mrs. George Dunn at the piano.

The affair was very successful and enjoyable and was under the auspices of the following committee: Frank A. Read, Benjamin H. Woodsum, Jr., George Dunn, Ralph L. Wiggin, Frank C. Allen, Ernest C. Woodsum, Isaac E. Pearson, Harry A. Simonds, Dudley P. Howland, Louis N. Hathaway, Edwin S. Loring.

ARRESTED AT CIRCUS.

It was reported to the police at the circus Wednesday that one man had lost a watch and another had been relieved of his pocketbook by some of the light fingered gentry, commonly known as dips. Capt. McKay, Inspector Goodhue and other officers were on duty about the circus grounds during the afternoon and evening, and during the evening Capt. McKay arrested two young men against whom he lodged a complaint of attempted larceny from the person. The two men gave their names as Harry Miller and Harry Haven. Both claim to hail from Boston. They were arraigned in court and held in $500 bonds each until Friday for a hearing. In the meantime Capt McKay will look up their record in Boston.

STRIKERS GETTING BOLD

Shipyard Man Assaulted on Way to Work

The strike of the reamers and bolters up at the Fire River shipyard continues with but little sign of the difficulties being adjusted, and daily the pickets are becoming bolder and are constantly threatening loyal employees. Arrests are momentarily expected.

This morning Samuel Dubrow of Massachusetts avenue, was assaulted by three men when he persisted in continuing on his way to the shipyard. Dubrow's story is, that with very little provocation. two pinioned his arms behind his back while the third struck him repeatedly in the face.

Dubrow is one of the leading men of the reamers and bolters and has been harrassed frequently since the strike was declared. On Monday evening he asked to be escorted to his home because of the attitude of several Russians and shortly after his arrival a group of strikers gathered in front of his house and uttered threats which augured ill for his future welfare.

When Dubrow was assaulted this morning very few people were in sight but within a few minutes of the time it was committed over 200 were on the scene.

The police guard outside the gate has been doubled and the yard patrol has been ordered to be unusually vigilant. Foreign strikers of all descriptions have since the strike was instituted made a practice of parading outside the yard. Several times the management of the shipyard has asked for additional police, and this morning a call was received for many extra officers.

DROP IN TEMPERATURE.

It is a little singular to say the least, that the drop in temperature at noon today from what it was at noon on Wednesday should have been identically the same as a month ago during the hot day. On April 19, the temperature at noon was 82 degrees and the day following at the same hour it had dropped to 66 degrees. On Wednesday May 20, the temperature at noon was 82 degrees and today at the same hour the temperature was but 66 degrees.

"The return of Deborah," a comedy will be presented tomorrow evening under the auspices of the Womans guild of Christ church.

So far as heard from, the kissless strike among the Suffragettes is confined to married women.

According to the files of the yellow journals, Tampico fell on about 27 different dates during the past two months.

It seems very careless of the Mexican warriors to go on fighting while Richard Harding Davis was locked up and unable to write up the battles.

THE OTHER FELLOW'S MONEY.

The death occurred recently of Frederick Weyerhauser, a noted lumberman whose home was at St. Paul. According to the statements at the time. Mr. Weyerhauser was one of the richest men in the United States. Long newspapers stories were printed telling how he acquired his vast fortune.

Down in the newspaper corners of the past week could be found a little item giving estimates of his estate filed in proving the will. It is now supposed that the famous lumber king left a property valued at only $875,000.

If this estimate proves correct, it suggests that the list of real millionaires is probably much shorter than people think. The bigger a man's business grows, the higher his expenses rise. The ends in view are so large that it seems foolish to spend time and thought on small savings. Little wasteful leaks of expense keep growing bigger.

The larger a man's estate becomes, the less care he usually takes in his investments. Large properties are bought on slight investigation, often on borrowed money. If the security proves unsatisfactory, the loan has to be paid, no matter how much the principal has shrunk.

The larger share of modern business is done on other people's capital, and on narrow margins. The profits of many a manufacturing plant go to pay interest on unsatisfactory investments. Slight changes in prices turn winners into losers.

Most people overestimate the property of their neighbors. This is partly the result of the conditions suggested above, partly due to the fact that a great many people live beyond their means, and with little provision for the future. It is not the man who has the most automobiles and horses who can draw the biggest check.

SPRING FEVER.

The above name is often given to the languor that attacks most people with the first return of summer weather. It is a time of restlessness. The trammels of daily work appear particularly irksome. Summer sports and outdoor life are tempters. It seems a crime to work on some of these lovely spring days.

Shrewd sellers of patent medicine long ago capitalized that "tired feeling." Who can make even a wild guess at the enormous amounts of of money spent for remedies and nostrums, good and bad, supposed to counteract this physical weariness. Old fashioned people have favorite traditional remedies which they always take at this period for a general internal housecleaning.

Years ago, when industry was less highly organized and specialized, people would listen to the springtime call of out door life more freely. The spirit of the season would seize hold of a merchant and his clerks, or a room full of mechanics. They would lock up and go fishing or picnicing for the day. Probably their product at the end of the year was just as large as if they had stayed in and yawned the afternoon away.

Modern life is more intricate. Few people can yield to the call of the woods and streams for a holiday of idleness. Every man's daily task is fitted into his neighbor's. If one quit his task it would throw a dozen out of work. So the mechanic or the business man has to put out of his head the dreams of vagrant ease, and keep digging to the task.

This regular labor in the face of all counter attractions has disciplinary value. It creates an industrial machine whose product surpasses the world. But it excludes many natural enjoyments and wholesome primitive sports.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

MEDIATORS IN FIRST SESSION

Appear Confident of Agreeing Upon Plan For Peace

NEW HANDICAP FOR HUERTA

United States to Keep Port of Tampico an Open One, Thus Favoring Plans of Rebels—Menacing Situation Relieved by Constitutionalists Understanding Hint From Uncle Sam—Bryan Apprehensive That Silliman Has Met Death at Saltillo—Affidavit Declaring Parks Was Executed—Further Reports of Efforts to Unseat Huerta

Washington, May 21.—Confidence, not only in the amicable settlement of the differences between the United States and Mexico, but also in the ultimate pacification of Mexico through the avenues of diplomacy, was reflected after the first formal session of the three South American mediators and the representatives of the Huerta government and the United States at Niagara Falls, Ont.

Diplomats, and delegates generally agreed that the voluntary retirement of Huerta would be conditioned upon the making of satisfactory terms concerning a successor. It is clear that if an announcement of willingness to retire comes from Huerta in the near future, it will be welcomed as making more remote the possibility of any resumption of hostilities between the United States and Mexico.

The development of a personal friendliness and the cultivation of good feeling was remarked upon by Americans and Mexicans alike as calculated to bring about a helpful spirit of co-operation in the tasks ahead where otherwise antagonism might prevail.

Ambassador DaGama's speech furnished the keynote for the era of good feeling which prevails.

On behalf of the United States and Mexico, Justice Lamar and Emilio Rabasa, respectively, made brief responses, echoing the sentiments of patriotism which were voiced by the Brazilian ambassador and expressing the thanks of their governments for the tender of good offices.

Delegates Non-Partisan

The Mexican delegates incidentally reiterated that they represented no political or personal interests in Mexico and feel they are non-partisan in their views.

"We are as devoid of political connection as Justice Lamar, for instance," said Augustin Rodriguez, one of the Mexican commissioners, in illustrating the disconnection of himself and his colleagues from the cauldron of Mexican politics.

Another of the Mexican delegates based his hopes for the solution of the entire Mexican problem on the ability of all parties concerned to come to some agreement on the complexion of a provisional government which would be able to give sufficient guarantee for the preservation of law and order and which could resolve the land question and other problems considered to be peculiarly fundamental in the Mexican imbroglio.

To Let Rebels Get Arms

That every effort will be made by the United States to maintain the port of Tampico free and open to commerce was declared by Acting Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt. While no definite orders had been issued, the acting secretary said that, if necessary, steps would be taken to prevent a blockade by either Mexican federals or constitutionalists.

Roosevelt declared that no definite order had been given to either Admiral Badger or Admiral Mayo to keep the port of Tampico open by force of arms. The department, it was said, displayed no anxiety as to the movement of the Mexican federal gunboats now at Puerto Mexico. These, it has been suggested, might return to Tampico and endeavor to institute a blockade.

This means that commerce is to pass in and out of the Panuco river without hindrance and that the plans of the constitutionalists to import war supplies there will not be interfered with.

Rushing In Ammunition

Meanwhile the constitutionalists are preparing to rush arms and ammunition through Tampico to the rebels in the field. Two cargoes of ammunition for siege and rapid fire guns, as well as high explosives for the manufacture of hand grenades, are reported to have been contracted for at New York. This is to go forward at once so that if the revolutionists take Saltillo and San Luis Potosi, where fighting is now in progress, the rush on Mexico City can be started at once.

Reports that practically all the federals defeated at Tampico had left that territory without attempting to damage oil wells, and news that the constitutionalists had refrained, so far, from attempting to levy forced loans at their first seaport, relieved a menacing situation. The state department, acting on suggestions from foreign sources, had informed the constitutionalists they should not administer the laws with "severity." Apparently that hint had been understood.

Fear Silliman Was Slain

With a desperate fight in progress at Saltillo and the city entirely surrounded by Villa's troops, interest in the Mexican situation centred in the fate of Consul Silliman.

Consular Representative Carothers, who is with Villa, has already been ordered to determine immediately what happened to the vice consul there. High officials who are friendly to Silliman declare the promises that he would be produced have been disregarded so often that they believe he may have been slain. If this proves true it may have an evil effect upon the Niagara Falls mediation conference.

Evidencing his own apprehension, Secretary of State Bryan telegraphed to American Consul Hanna at Monterey asking if it would be feasible to send a messenger to Saltillo to determine if Silliman ever had been released.

Bryan's directions to Hanna made it plain that he was to use his discretion in prosecuting his inquiries, as Washington officials realized there were many difficulties to be overcome in sending a representative of the Monterey consulate into the Saltillo district, where the constitutionalists and federals are in a death struggle for supremacy. Saltillo is about fifty miles from Monterey.

Parks Was Executed

Captain Willis of the coast artillery at Key West notified Secretary of War Garrison by telegraph that he had obtained an affidavit from A. W. Bland, lately arrived from Vera Cruz, declaring that Samuel Parks, the American soldier who wandered from the American lines at Vera Cruz, had been executed. The Willis dispatch was similar to others that had been received as rumors from General Funston.

Huerta's Position Critical

Continued reports from Mexico City tending to support the theory that an effort soon will be made to unseat Huerta renewed interest at Washington in devlopments at the federal capital. Greatest fear in Mexico City, declare refugees arriving in Vera Cruz, is not that the plot against Huerta will be executed, but that it may not occur before the entrance of the Zapata forces, which might precipitate more serious trouble.

WON'T TESTIFY IN OWN BEHALF

Becker Will Not Take Stand Because of "Graft" Evidence

STATEMENT BY HIS COUNSEL

Indication That Reversal of Verdict Will Be Sought Should Defendant Be Convicted—"Confession" of Cirofici Barred—Testimony For Prosecution Is Refuted

New York, May 21.—Charles Becker will not take the witness stand in his own behalf at his trial for the murder of Herman Rosenthal. The definite announcement was made last night by Becker's lawyers. The advisability of the defendant testifying has been a subject of discussion at prolonged conferences between counsel and client for the last three days.

Martin T. Manton, Becker's chief counsel, issued a statement giving the reasons in a general way, for reaching the decision to keep Becker off the stand. It is evident from Manton's statement that the defense is fearful of the effect on the jury of the admission of "graft" evidence against Becker which would be bound to come out on cross examination by the district attorney.

The statement also clearly indicates that Becker's lawyers are placing some confidence in obtaining another reversal of the verdict by the court of appeals if the jury should find Becker guilty. Manton contends that the state's case is no stronger than it was at the first trial, when a reversal by the higher court followed the conviction.

A strong impression prevailed after court adjourned that Becker's lawyers may have finally reached the goal they have striven for from the first, to create a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury on some important part of the people's case.

Becker will not benefit by the confession alleged to have been made by "Dago Frank" Cirofici shortly before the gunman was executed in the electric chair at Sing Sing prison. Cirofici was quoted as saying he had never heard the name of Becker mentioned in connection with the conspiracy that resulted in the killing of the gambler. Justice Seabury refused to admit testimony concerning the alleged confession into the record. He quoted a number of legal opinions to show upon what grounds he had barred the so-called "confession."

Four former members of Becker's strong-arm squad testified regarding the police raid on Rosenthal's gambling house. The wife of the murdered man has testified that Becker led this raid and that he told her to inform her husband that the raid cancelled the debt between them. One of the detectives swore that Becker was not at Rosenthal's gambling house when the raid started. Another testified that he had heard all the conversation between Becker and Mrs. Rosenthal, and that Becker had made no such statement as that attributed to him by Mrs. Rosenthal.

The testimony of Charles B. Plitt, Becker's former press agent and friend, was contradicted by F. F. Farrell and James Wilters, deputy sheriffs, who testified that Plitt had not entered the compartment on the train en route to Sing Sing where Plitt said the conversation took place.

Joseph P. Shepard, formerly a member of Becker's squad, testified in contradiction of the story of Rose, Webber and Vallon that Becker had participated in the so-called Harlem conference at which, according to the prosecution, plans for the murder was discussed. The witness said he was with Becker on that occasion and that Becker had not talked to any of the conspirators.

John T. Shields and Francis O. Rice, also former members of the "strong-arm squad," corroborated Shepard's story.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

BIRDS.

Last Friday night about 100 children of the West Quincy district enjoyed a most instructive and interesting talk on birds. The talk was given by Mrs. George Pfaffmann in the West Quincy Reading Room and was illustrated by the use of the Balopticon. The pictures shown were very true to nature and the children were very appreciative of the particularly beautiful or familiar species.

This is the season when our bird neighbors are most in evidence. Their cheerful songs and bright plumage may be seen in all parts of the city, and, as Mrs. Pfaffmann pointed out, the fascinating study of our feathered friends is easily enjoyed.

A guide book by F. Schuyler Matthews, Herbert K. Job, Chester A. Reed, or Frank M. Chapman and a pair of sharp eyes are all that are necessary.

The library has books by all these authorities and many other works on the subject which may be studied as the interest increases.

"Bird-lore" is the magazine of the ornithologist and is kept in the Children's Room, but this does not mean that the older readers may not take it. A word to the desk attendant is all that is necessary. "Bird lore" has interesting anecdotes of birds, useful suggestions for closer study, photographs and colored pictures.

Among the books to be read when the interest is aroused are two books by Edward H. Forbush which treat of the conservation of the birds. The one "Useful birds and their protection" contains "brief descriptions of the more common and useful species of Massachusetts, with accounts of their food, habits and a chapter on the means of attracting and protecting birds." The other is entitled "Game birds, wild fowl and shore birds" and its purpose is "first, to show the former abundance of resident and migratory game birds in America and the subsequent decrease in numbers; second, to furnish gunners and others with the means of identifying game birds, that the people may recognize the different species and thus fit themselves to observe protective laws, and third, to demonstrate how these birds may be conserved."

THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The School department received Wednesday the approval by the State Board of Education of its plans for the Industrial school to be opened in September in the old Adams school building on Phipps street. At the same time the board fixed the rate of tuition for all out-of-town pupils at $125 per year. Work has already begun on equipping the lower floor of the school with the necessary machines, a large number having been secured from the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, while the machinery and apparatus for the joiner and electrical trades has already been ordered. It is not intended to start the machinists' trade till 1915, as it seems best to get the other two trades well established first. Beside getting started on their trades, the boys will give half of each day to regular school work for the purpose of getting a thorough training in English, mathematics, civics, history and drawing.

HIGH SCHOOL MUSIC.

The programme of music prepared by the High school department of music for its public concert next week is the most ambitious that has thus far been given by the school. The pupils will have the assistance of competent soloists and orchestra and rehearsals indicate a performance which will bring credit to the school. The standard of public school music is steadily rising in Quincy and the High school hopes to demonstrate this at its coming concert. It is to be desired that a new piano be provided before next year to accommodate the needs of the school. The present instrument has been in use ever since the building was occupied and has long since passed its usefulness.

LARGER ENROLLMENT.

From all indications, the number of pupils at the High school next year will be slightly larger than the present year. Although the new Freshman class will be no larger, the number remaining in the other classes will exceed the number left in previous years after graduation. The grammar school graduates are now busy in deciding upon their courses and studies and their selections are all to be filled by June 1st.

The Old Days at Harvard.

In his "Story of Harvard" Arthur Stanwood Pier quotes a curious anecdote by Professor Sidney Willard of the class of 1798. In spite of its age, the story has some very modern features.

The students who boarded at commons, wrote Professor Willard, were obliged to go to the kitchen door with their bowls or pitchers for their suppers, where they received their modicum of milk or chocolate in the vessel that each held in one hand and their piece of bread in the other and repaired to their rooms to take their solitary repast. There were suspicions at times that the milk was diluted with a mixture of a very common, tasteless fluid, which led a sagacious Yankee student to put the matter to a test by asking the simple carrier boy why his mother did not mix the milk with warm water instead of cold.

"She does," replied the honest youth.

The Pink Sunbonnet

How an Artist Found His Model

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Neal Whitcomb whistled cheerfully as he climbed the hill to the low white farmhouse. On every side the ground sloped away from the hospitable looking domicile. In front was a tree covered lawn, on the north was a vegetable garden, on the south a flower garden and on the east sunny fields of strawberries.

Neal went up the front walk and rang the doorbell.

A middle aged black woman responded to his summons.

"I am looking for Mr. Huxford," said Neal.

"Mistah Huxford am gone to town with a load of berries," replied the servant, "and Missis Huxford am gone to de sewin' s'ciety."

Neal smiled pleasantly. "Then I'm afraid I must call again. Perhaps you can tell me if there is a Miss Huxford here?"

The woman shook her head. "No, sah; ain't never heard of no Miss Huxford. Dere's young Master Huxford, but he's away at school jes' now."

"I am a painter—an artist," explained Neal as he turned away. "I am staying at the hotel. The proprietor told me I might find a young lady to pose for me up here at Huxfords'. I told him I wanted some one dressed as a country girl in a pink sunbonnet—to put in a picture, you know." Then, suddenly realizing that he was doing much useless explaining, he added hastily, turning away, "Of course there may be another Huxford."

"MISS BEMIS, I WONDER IF YOU REMEMBER ME?"

"Dere ain't no mo' Huxfords around heah," advised the woman, and she added, with a twinkle in her eyes: "P'raps mebbe Mr. Dowd down to the hotel meant yo' could find a young lady out in our strawb'ry beds here. Dere's any sight of 'em pickin' berries this minit."

"May I go around and look for myself?" inquired Neal. And without waiting for permission he started around the house.

"Mebbe yo' might find a pink sunbonnet yander in de field," called the servant after him.

Neal Whitcomb went around to the back of the farmhouse, through the green tunnel of a long grape arbor and down a winding path that led to a barred gate. Over the gate he went into a small field, and, crossing this field, where several cows were pastured, he came to another gate, against which he leaned in stunned surprise.

Here were several acres given over to long rows of strawberries, and thickly scattered over the field was a sea of pink sunbonnets!

There was the sound of laughing voices, merry questions and answers, pink sunbonnets bobbing up and down as sun browned hands filled the square wooden baskets, which were quickly removed by several older women, who kept tally of the pickings of each girl.

Out of this sea of pink sunbonnets he was to choose his model! The landlord of the village hotel was evidently a joker. No wonder the black servant at the house yonder had grinned when he mentioned pink sunbonnets!

Neal turned away and tramped with what dignity he could muster back through the grape arbor and around the path to the front entrance. He had started down the path when the servant ran out and spoke to him.

"Scuse me, sah," she said timidly. "I hope yo' all don't think I was gettin' a joke off on yo'?"

"Not at all," said Neal stiffly.

"If yo'll scuse my presumptiousness, mistah, I'd like to say somethin'," went on Delia. "Yo' was sayin' yo'd like to paint a young lady inter yo'r pictur'?"

"Yes."

"I spects dere's money in it fer de young lady, sah?"

"Of course I always pay my models," said Neal.

The woman came closer and spoke confidentially.

"Den, sah, I'd like to recommend Miss Sally Bemis, the pretties' young lady in de county, lak a rose, sah—so pinky and sweet! Her folks has come down in de worl', and dey's livin' in dat little cottage yander on a weeny corner of de big plantashun dat belonged to Miss Sally's grandpap, old General Bemis. Dere's jes' Miss Sally and her ma, and her ma's deliket, and Miss Sally works all kinder ways to earn money. Now she demeans herself by pickin' strawb'rys fer Mr. Huxford. It ain't no ways fer a Bemis to earn money erlong wid de village gals hereabouts."

"Thank you, auntie, for the information," said Neal, who was much interested in the story of the plucky young girl. "Shall I call upon Mrs. Bemis?"

"Well, sah, suppose yo' tak' a look at Miss Sally fust. If yo' spoke fust it might lift up dere hopes, and mebbe she might not suit. If she don't yo' must be mighty perticular!" she ended rather belligerently.

"Where shall I find her, auntie?" asked Neal patiently. "I certainly can't go into the field and face that battery of sunbonnets."

"Why, jes' set here on de end of de veranda behin' de honeysuckle vines. Dey'll all come trailin' past pretty soon, and yo' jes' fix yo' eye on de pretties' and most uppsy one of de whole lot, and dat's Miss Sally. If yo' satisfied yo' can go and see 'em. I gotter go, sah."

He went up to the wide piazza and sat down in a great easy chair close to the honeysuckle that screened the piazza from the path around which the strawberry pickers must come.

Two years ago, at the art school, there had been a little student, and he was sure her name was Sally Bemis or something of that sort. He had given several talks to the students, and he remembered the girl's lovely, earnest face upturned to his. If he had met her oftener he would have fallen in love then and there, but he was very busy at that time, and he was about to sail for Italy, and the little student had drifted out of his memory.

Voices were heard approaching from the rear of the farmhouse, and presently there strolled past, singly or in groups, the strawberry pickers.

Nineteen girls had gone out of the big gate, and he confessed himself disappointed that not one would do. There came a light step along the path and a rich contralto voice trilling softly. Through the honeysuckle vines he saw her coming, sunbonnet slipped back on the dark masses of her curls; her fair face with its magnolia-like complexion tinged with soft pink; her lovely dark eyes, fringed with long, curling lashes; her sweetly curved lips, so tenderly smiling.

It was Miss Sally Bemis. More than that, she was the one girl for his picture. She was the girl of his dreams, and she was the little student of the art school!

Neal overtook her at the gate.

She turned lovely, surprised eyes at him, and suddenly a deep rose flush stained her cheek from brow to chin. There was embarrassed recognition in her glance.

Neal lifted his hat.

"Miss Bemis, I wonder if you remember me?" he asked eagerly.

"One does not soon forget a celebrity like Neal Whitcomb, the artist," she said quickly, holding out a stained little hand. "What are you doing way down here in Dixie?"

"Painting," said Neal, falling into step beside her. "I've been looking for a model to pose in a daisy field. I wanted a girl in a pink sunbonnet, and when I expressed my wish somebody sent me up here to Huxfords'. Fancy my dismay when I went out to the strawberry field and saw twenty pink sunbonnets!"

Sally laughed deliciously.

"The pink sunbonnets are Mrs. Huxford's idea. She bought a piece of pink calico and made sunbonnets for all the girls; said she liked to see us in the field."

"It's an amazingly pretty sight," agreed Neal as he went down the hill beside her. "You are taking home some of the strawberries?"

"Yes, to my mother. She is an invalid. Her failing health, combined with lack of money, compelled me to abandon my art career," she explained cheerfully.

"That was a hardship," said Neal sympathetically.

Sally laughed again.

"It was at the time, but I have found out that my talents are more in the domestic line than otherwise. I am fortunate in finding it out in time, don't you think so?"

"Brava!" cried Neal. "And now tell me, Miss Sally, is this your home that we are approaching?"

"Yes, and there is mother on the porch waiting for me. You will come in and have a cup of tea with us, Mr. Whitcomb?"

"It will give me much pleasure," he said, so emphatically that they both laughed with some sudden knowledge of good fellowship.

Sally led him to the porch and introduced him to the sweet faced little lady who was her mother, and then she disappeared while Neal talked to Mrs. Bemis.

Mrs. Bemis declared that she and Neal fell in love with each other long before Neal fell in love with Sally, but they all agreed that it didn't matter in the least so long as Neal and Sally were married and lived happily ever after.

If you ever see Neal Whitcomb's famous painting "He Loves Me—He Loves Me Not!" showing a pink sunbonneted girl telling her fortune in a daisy field you will recognize the lovely girl stripping the petals from the daisy as Miss Sally Bemis, and those who know will add that she is the artist's wife.

BOARDING HOUSE FIRE

An inside fire in the boarding house of Willard Joyce, opposite the Fore River shipyard, gave the firemen of Central station and Quincy Point a stiff fight on Wednesday evening. When discovered at 9.30 it had worked its way through the upper structure and had secured a good start.

For the first few minutes the firemen were fighting the flames it looked as though they would have a losing fight, but plenty of water between the framework drowned the fire. The damage is estimated at $600.

A boarder, who had just taken up his quarters in the house Wednesday morning, discovered the fire. He ran to the street and because he was not acquainted with the district did not quickly locate a fire alarm box. The delay was to the advantage of the fire. Its cause is unknown but it is thought to have started in several bundles of cloth in the attic.

CROWDS AT CIRCUS.

Good crowds were present at both the afternoon and evening performances of Wheeler Bros. circus. Those who attended report the show to have been an exceptionally clean one. Most of the acts were good and perfect order was maintained throughout both performances, and that the show was well worth the price of admission.

Better Toll Rates

New telephone toll regulations provide that unless you talk to the person asked for there will be NO CHARGE FOR THE TOLL CALL.

Formerly a reduced rate was charged when the number called was reached even though the person asked for was absent or not ready to talk.

Why not make a call now to some one who would like to hear from you to-day? No talk—no charge.

Wouldn't it be worth the price?

If you don't know the rate, ask the Toll Operator. No charge for a call for rates. If you want the Toll Operator to report to you the actual cost of a completed call, please notify her when you give the order for the call.

A toll call is more satisfactory than a letter or a telegram, and in some instances is more economical, because you get the message and the answer for one price.

SPORT NEWS

Will the base ball team of Quincy High school finish the season with a record of 16 straight losses or will they sandwich a victory in the eight remaining games. This is troubling the supporters of the team. At present the situation is almost impossible due to the lack of a pitcher strong enough for an entire game. It looks now as though each man on the team would have to pitch one inning and in that one exert every ounce of strength and judgment possessed. Not even the catcher must be excepted for he throws a fairly fast ball. Individually the men measure up to High school averages this year and acquit themselves creditably with independent organizations. Under the school colors, the weakness in the pitching staff seems to react and affect the boys. All have tried to garner some glory for their team, but have been victims of circumstances. The eyes of the city, instead of looking with horror on the situation as it stands must view it with eyes of hope, hope that will overlook most everything.

George Barry who is with the Lowell team of the New England league, and who, according to the Lowell papers, is one of the most promising backstops since Daley signed up with the White Sox, almost went with Portland the other day. Manager Duffy of that team was sadly in need of the services of a good catcher due to the delay of one Sullivan to report. He wired Barry who closed negotiations by accepting and if Sullivan had not appeared at the last minute, Barry's uniform would have been changed.

Richard Crane, son of City Clerk Crane is a regular on the Harvard freshmen tennis team. Last year he captained the Quincy High team through a successful season.

MORGAN'S POWER IS EMPHASIZED

Mellen Thinks Financier's Policies Were For the Best

UNLOADED A WHOLE RAILROAD

Saddled Upon Boston and Maine When Insurace Company Was Compelled by Law to Sell—Folk Outgeneralled In Discussing Famous Billard Transaction and Other Matters

Washington, May 21.—That the late J. P. Morgan worked his will with the New Haven railway system and its subsidiaries, unopposed by directors or officials, was more than ever emphasized at the interstate commission investigation.

With Charles S. Mellen reciting the various transactions of the company it was shown that Morgan had unloaded control of an entire railroad on the Boston and Maine, paying for it $15 more a share than it was later found possible to buy the minority interest. The beneficiary of this proceeding, the sale of the Worcester, Nashua and Rochester railway, was the Mutual Life Insurance company of New York, compelled by state laws to sell its railway stock.

Morgan had received no authority whatever to do this. He paid $165 a share to the Mutual Life Insurance company for this stock, although Mellen admitted that the Boston and Maine company paid only $150 a share and sometimes less to other persons from whom it bought Worcester, Nashua and Rochester stock.

Mellen told the commission that the Mutual Life owned and still owns 35,000 shares of New Haven stock. He said he thought the insurance people sold the W., N. and R. stock because the price was attractive, but he was surprised when Morgan bought it.

"In the light of the New Haven's developments, do you think Morgan's judgment was justified? asked Mr. Folk.

"I think that if Morgan had lived a few years longer," replied Mellen, "everything he had suggested for the benefit of the New England lines would have worked out for good. Morgan was in the market buying and selling railroads. His judgment was good. His death prevented some of his plans working out. But Morgan never made a dollar in his life that was not honestly earned."

Folk Outgeneralled

Wednesday's session, outside of the further emphasizing of the Morgan domination, was chiefly marked by the outgeneraling of Folk, the commission's attorney, by Mellen.

For more than an hour Folk wrangled with Mellen trying to force him into an admission that the Billard transactions connected with the several deals allied with the Boston and Maine-New Haven merger were paper transactions only, and that at all times the New Haven retained its interest in the Boston and Maine. But Folk failed.

Mellen was plainly thinking faster than either the lawyer or Commissioner McChord, who essayed the role of rescuer. The quiz ended with the matter where it was at the outset, with the seal of bonafide deal placed on the transaction.

Mellen led the members through a labyrinth of high finance which served to emphasize the extraordinary efforts that were made to so complicate the operations of the system that it would be almost impossible "to unscramble the eggs," as J. P. Morgan once graphically expressed it.

Folk was frequently all tangled up, and it was only after repeated questioning that he and Chairman McChord were able to grasp the intricacy of the methods dictated by the master mind of Wall street, J. P. Morgan.

The ex-president was obliged to repeat his explanations time and time again of the various deals entered into when the members of the commission got lost in the maze.

Mellen expressed the whole situation in a word when he said the death of Morgan had left the great system in a tangle. With the death of Morgan the New Haven was like a ship without a rudder.

THREE FINGERS MAIMED

Child Gets Damages of $10,186 For Electric Wire Injury

Salem, Mass., May 21.—Damages of $10,186 against the Beverly Gas and Electric company were allowed Eleanor Scully, 9 years old, by a jury in Essex county superior civil court here.

Suit was brought by Phillip Scully of Beverly, father of the child, after her left hand was crippled by burns from an electric wire. In 1911 Eleanor, accompanied by her father, passed a live wire lying in the streets of Hamilton. Eleanor stooped and attempted to move it aside. Three fingers of her hand were permanently maimed.

Rehearing Is Denied

PENROSE IN CONTROL

Defeats Dimmick by About 175,000 Majority In Appeal to People

Philadelphia, May 21.—Boies Penrose, Republican; A. M. Palmer, Democrat, and Gifford Pinchot, Progressive, will make the campaign for United States senator from Pennsylvania in the November election.

These three won their respective party nominations in the first statewide primary held in Pennsylvania under the new federal constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States senators by popular vote.

Penrose won a sweeping victory over Dimmick. Palmer defeated Budd and Pinchot was unopposed. It is estimated that Penrose has about 175,000 majority over Dimmick.

RESUMES POLITICAL WAR

Roosevelt Proposes to Make Vigorous Campaign Until November

Oyster Bay, May 21.—Twelve hours after Theodore Roosevelt returned from South America he was back in the thick of politics, and is hard at work picking up the threads where he dropped them seven months ago.

Roosevelt looks forward to one of the hardest political campaigns of his career. Except for the time occupied by his trip to Spain for the wedding of his son, Kermit, he expects to devote to politics most of his time until November.

Already a tentative plan of action has been mapped out. Roosevelt has in mind one of the longest campaign trips he ever has made, taking him from the Atlantic to the Pacific and several shorter trips in nearby states.

GALLINGER TO TEST POPULAR ELECTION

Veteran Senator Becomes Candidate For Re-election

Washington, May 21.—Jacob H. Gallinger, senator from New Hampshire for nearly a quarter of a century, announced in a statement "to the people of New Hampshire" that he will ask for re-election this fall.

Dean of the senate because of his long consecutive service and 77 years, leader of the present Republican minority, Gallinger has always steadfastly opposed the onward march of "new-fangled" political measures.

Especially vigorous and determined has been his opposition to the popular election of United States senators, and this lends additional interest to his announcement, as this conservative of conservatives will "stand" for re-election this fall at the first popular election of a United States senator held in the history of his home state.

MAY BE PIGEONHOLED

Prohibition and Suffrage Amendments Likely to Go Over In House

Washington, May 21.—Prospects for action at this session of congress on the nation-wide prohibition or the woman suffrage constitutional amendments faded further away as the result of developments in the house.

While presenting to the house two telegrams from religious gatherings, praying for congressional action on the prohibition resolution, Representative Hobson of Alabama, its sponsor, announced that for the present he did not propose to press it.

Representative Mondell, author of the suffrage amendment resolution, said he intended to urge his measure, and that he had hoped that the Alabama member would join with him with the prohibition proposition.

"ARMY" REACHES CAPITAL

Coxey and His Six Privates Have Honor Escort of Negroes

Washington, May 21.—Marching down Pennsylvania avenue with their white mule in the lead, General Coxey's army made a triumphal entry into the capital. A dense throng of negroes trudged along the sidewalks, lured by the strains of fife and drum, as an honor escort.

Coxey's "army" of six privates was given protection by the police. The bluecoats guarded the "army" against any demonstration.

STUDENTS FLEE IN SCANTY APPAREL

Save Proprietress When Fraternity House Is Burned

Exeter, N. H., May 21.—The Phi Sigma Ipsilon, the most exclusive fraternity house connected with Phillips Exeter academy, was gutted by fire late last night, and Mrs. Lucy Getchell, the proprietor, had a narrow escape from death, being rescued from a room on the third story by students.

Twelve students who made their homes at the house were forced to flee scantily clad and they lost nearly all their personal belongings.

The fire started from an overturned gas stove in Mrs. Getchell's room on the top floor. The building is a complete loss.

HOMES OF THE NAVAJOS.

Stuffy Winter Hogans and Light and Airy Summer "Cottages."

The Navajos are the least gregarious of native American tribes, never congregating in towns and villages and never forming permanent communities. Their homes, called hogans, are mere hovels built of stones or the trunks and limbs of trees, with rounded roofs thickly covered with earth. A smoke vent in the roof and a doorway in the side are the only means of ventilation. In cold weather these cavelike structures are kept tightly closed, so that no one but an Indian could live in them at all.

But when springtime comes the Navajo squaw constructs a summer cottage, sometimes consisting of no more than a windbreak of sagebrush around a circular clear space. Sometimes the summer hogan is a shady bower under a desert cedar tree, with leafy branches piled around as a measure of protection against winds and sandstorms. Sometimes it is a shelter formed by the utilization of old pieces of canvas, sheet iron and other cast away material picked up around the refuse dumps of the railroad towns. In any event, the dwellers in the summer hogans are practically in the open all the time. Fresh air is never for a moment excluded.—Christian Herald.

NAILS IN STONE WALLS.

Easy Method of Placing Them So They Will Remain Firm.

Few women know how to drive a nail into a brick wall, and yet it is what they often need to do for themselves if there is no man about.

The following method is easy and has been found entirely satisfactory: Having decided upon the exact spot into which the nail is desired to be driven, which must be in the plaster between the bricks, provide yourself with a hammer and screwdriver. With these tools commence working out the hard plaster by tapping the handle of the screwdriver. As the plaster turns to dust it must be blown or dusted out so that the size of the hole may be seen.

When a space about one inch long and nearly one inch deep has been worked out get a small piece of wood about the same size and with the hammer wedge it tightly into the space. When it seems firm take the nail and drive it into the wood. It will go in nicely, without bending, and remain firm an indefinite length of time. This same method was used at one time when it was decided to hang a hammock between the fence and the wall, with the exception that the hole was dug out a little longer and deeper than for an ordinary nail.—Minneapolis Journal.

Homemade Barometer.

Those who love experimentation may try the following method of making a cheap barometer practiced in France: Take eight grams of pulverized camphor, four grams of pulverized nitrate of potassium, two grams of pulverized nitrate of ammonia and dissolve in sixty grams of alcohol. Put the whole in a long, slender bottle closed at the top with a piece of bladder containing a pinhole to admit the air. When rain is coming the solid particles will tend gradually to mount, little star crystals forming in the liquid, which otherwise remains clear. If high winds are approaching the liquid will become thick, as if fermenting, while a film of solid particles forms on the surface. During fair weather the liquid will remain clear and the solid particles will rest at the bottom.

Reading Music.

The literary man, writes a correspondent, may very well, when he is lying on his back, console himself with literature. But what is the scientific man, with no particular interest in literature, to do? A certain professor of my acquaintance once got through a month of painful convalescence by the aid of another kind of reading. He read through the scores of his favorite composers. He had no ear for the rhythms of literature, but a fine ear for the rhythms of music, and he assured me that he heard the music as he read the scores. He said that during that month he really came to understand Beethoven and that no performance of his work ever satisfied him afterward.—London Spectator.

A Bit of Blarney.

An Irishman who was begging in the street was asked by a lady how it was that such a fine, strong man as he should be asking for alms. With native blarney he replied:

"Lady, begging is the only profession I know in which a gentleman can address a beautiful woman without having an introduction."

The remark was quite profitable.—London Answers.

Moss Bread.

Along the shores of the Columbia river a kind of bread is made by the Indians from a moss that grows on the spruce fir tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in heaps, sprinkling it with water and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into balls as big as a man's head, and these are baked in pits.

The Lone Watcher

A Story of a Brave Girl's Struggle

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The plain was a level whiteness of snow, broken here and there by wandering trails that crossed each other at various angles. At the foot of the mountains the dark blur of pine trees showed against the pale cloak of winter, growing fainter until at the summits the gray clouds came down and all outlines were lost.

At the base of the mountains were scattered cabins of homesteaders. They were many miles apart, and each roughly built house was half hidden under the heavy snowfall.

On a certain March morning Anne Bellew opened the door of her father's house and drew in deep breaths of the clear, cold air. Her cheeks were tingling with the icy contact when she reluctantly closed the door and threw several chunks of wood into the stove.

She moved about the kitchen, a slender, graceful girl of twenty-two with golden brown hair and eyes and a sweet face that now drooped a little sadly in response to her thoughts.

Her father came in to breakfast fresh from his morning ablutions, a big, strong, ruddy looking man with crisp gray hair.

"Some colder, Anne, my dear," he said cheerily as he sat down to the appetizing meal of corn bread and fried bacon with fragrant coffee.

"Yes, dad. I suppose you will go into the forest today."

"No; I shall try to get to Moonton for more supplies. I shall walk, and I can pack the things back by sled. I rather wanted to go over and see what has become of young Wallace. Haven't seen him for a fortnight. I hope the lad isn't ill. He might be, and no one would know it. That's the worst of the Wallace claim; it's the last one of the bunch and on the edge of all creation."

Anne's face lost its lovely color, and her hand trembled as she poured her father a second cup of coffee.

"If Jim Wallace is all alone and sick, why, there is no one to wait upon him, and perhaps he hasn't anything in the house to eat," she said practically.

"That's the worst of it, Anne. Well, I'll make an early start. Where are my snowshoes? Yes, as I was saying, I'll make an early start and try to get home by sundown. If I don't, Anne, you needn't worry. I shall stop at Gillman's for the night."

When the dusk fell Anne placed a lamp in the window, although she did not expect her father to return that night. The storm was increasing in fury, and now the wind was screaming around the house, seeking entrance through some unprotected cranny.

"I wonder—I wonder," was the refrain of Anne's thoughts all through that lonely day—"I wonder if he is all right."

Anne Bellew was not thinking of her father. She knew that he was safely housed at Gillman's, but there was another, Jim Wallace, who had only a year before taken up a claim on the edge of the government tract. Wallace had worked hard clearing his place and had developed from a pale city bred man into a great sun browned pioneer.

She had seen Jim Wallace many times before they met, and after that Jim's wooing had been very short and sweet as well, for Anne loved him. There wouldn't have been any story to write if Anne and Jim had not quarreled one autumn day, and since then three months had passed by without a word spoken between them.

"I wonder—I wonder if Jim is all right," Anne went on thinking, and at last her thoughts found relief in action. It was 7 o'clock when she set forth clad in a suit of her father's clothing, much too large for her, but comfortably warm nevertheless.

Leaving the lamp in the window, she went out into the storm, bending her head to the piercing blast.

Turning northward, she faced the bitter blast, and more than once she was tempted to go back to the warm comfort of the house, but a premonition of danger to Jim Wallace possessed her, and she fought sturdily ahead.

It was five miles to the Wallace claim, facing the wind every inch of the way. A man would have suffered keenly, but some inward exaltation kept the blood singing through Anne's veins, and her feet stepped out bravely, and her fur gloved hands were as warm as her tender heart.

She was going to Jim Wallace's place to see if he were alive and well, and the last time they had met she had told him she hated him, and he—well, Jim had quoted something about "a woman with a serpent's tongue," which had been the final straw on the camel's back of her patience.

All at once there came an ominous long drawn cry.

"Wolves!" she shuddered and half hesitated in her tracks.

"He might be sick and helpless," she thought, but, though her courage was nearly gone, she kept on doggedly. The cry was growing louder, and she recognized the cry of a solitary wolf.

"I wonder if it is 'the watcher,'" she thought as she sped on. "If it is it means that Jim is in danger. Indian Bill says that the watcher always goes on ahead to spy out victims and that he sits and howls until he draws the full pack. Oh, dear!"

The little feminine cry escaped her unawares, and she closed her lips resolutely and turned into the patch of spruces that marked the beginning of the Wallace claim. By going through the spruces she would reach the cabin by a shorter cut and at the same time be sheltered from the fury of the storm.

Ki-i-i-i-ah-a-a-a-a-uh!

How loud it sounded to Anne's terrified ears!

The animal must be very near the cabin, and where was Jim Wallace that he did not answer with a bullet from his rifle the challenge of the watcher?

Either Jim was away or he was ill, or worse.

Anne walked warily now, slipping noiselessly along the crust of snow, her lantern hidden behind her.

At last she reached the fallen spruce where she had often sat with Jim Wallace.

She strained her eyes in the direction of the cabin and saw nothing save flying flakes that clung moistly to her face.

Nearer she crept and nearer until she made out the dark bulk of the cabin, and against its whiteness at last she descried the dark shape squatting on the doorstep.

The howl suddenly ceased, and there turned toward her two blazing balls of fire.

She crept still nearer and flashed her lantern in the face of the lone watcher. The fiery balls receded as she approached until she gained the doorstep. There she took her stand waving her lantern in the face of the wolf, who was drawing nearer by imperceptible inches.

Anne put her hand behind her and felt for the doorknob. She turned it, and the door gave a little. She threw her lantern at the eyes. At that instant the lone watcher made his first leap at her and fell short by several feet. Anne darted into the cabin's dark interior and closed the door on the muzzle of her revolver just as the wolf made his second leap.

His impact against the door, the flash of fire and the report of the weapon all sounded together and were instantly followed by a howl of pain and a dull thud on the crust of snow outside.

Anne slammed the door shut and bolted it.

Far away, but drawing nearer, was the sound of a wolf pack in full cry.

All at once Anne fell to sobbing softly.

A groan came from the corner of the dark room.

"Who is there?" somebody whispered. "Did you get the watcher, Ned?"

"It isn't Ned McLean; it's I," whispered Anne, suddenly aware of the proximity of her former lover.

"Well, whoever you are, won't you make a light and give me a drink of water? Ah!" Silence from the corner.

Anne's trembling fingers found a lamp and lighted it. When she turned its rays around the room she found Jim Wallace stretched on a couch, white and unconscious. One foot was clumsily bound in white cloths.

Now Anne emptied her pockets of sandwiches and brandy, and she forced a few drops of the latter between Jim's clinched teeth. When that young man opened his black eyes he stared amazedly at the vision of pretty Anne Bellew, blushingly attired in her father's garments, ministering to him as an angel, as he had dreamed of her during the periods of delirium.

"Anne," he whispered hoarsely, "is it really you, or am I dreaming again?"

"It is Anne," she said in a low tone. "Tell me, Jim, what has happened?"

He told her briefly. Two days before he had fallen and broken an ankle. He had dragged himself into his cabin and suffered tortures of hunger and thirst in addition to the agony of his injured ankle. He told of crawling outside and sitting with the foot buried in the snow until almost frozen. He had made painful efforts to keep his fire going and to prepare food and drink. Fever had set in the night before, and he could not remember half of his suffering, but he did recollect with singular vividness that the lone watcher had sat on the doorstep and howled.

"Three times he jumped at the door, and I was afraid the flimsy lock would go," panted Jim as he concluded his tale. "He came again tonight, and I believe he would have got in when the rest of the pack arrived if it had not been for you, Anne. What happened?"

"The watcher is dead," said Anne quietly. "I shot him, Jim, just as he leaped at me. Ah! There comes the pack!"

Outside there was a chorus of yelps that subsided into growls as the wolf pack found the carcass of the watcher and fought over it.

Anne found herself shuddering as she finished binding the horribly swollen ankle in soaking wet cold cloths.

"How came you here, Anne, so far from home, and why were you crying?" demanded Jim, suddenly sitting up and catching Anne's hand.

Anne went down on her knees beside him and told him of her father's anxiety concerning his neighbor's safety and how she had set forth alone to find out whether he needed help. Little by little Jim drew from her the story of her five mile journey through the snowstorm, of her fear of the wolf pack and her determination to reach his cabin.

When Anne had finished her story her face was laid against his, and she felt tears on his cheeks.

"You did it for me, little Anne?" he whispered. "What can I do to make amends for"—

"Just keep on loving me," interrupted Anne as her lips fell lightly on his.

"That is too easy," groaned Jim, but he smiled happily.

NURSED A HOT TEMPER.

Something Had to Give Way When William Morris Broke Loose.

Though explosive tempers may not be admirable and temperamental explosions are not always harmlessly expended, they are always preferable to soreness, sullenness, brooding resentment or cold anger. Arthur Compton-Rickett in his study of William Morris—that "jolly vivid man," as he terms him—relates several new instances of Morris' violent thunderclaps of temper and swiftly ensuing sunniness and sweetness.

Once while he was painting he was called from the room, and presently his startled model heard him furiously anathematizing some one outside whom he dismissed or ejected and then returned a moment later still boiling with wrath. He could not resume his work, but made wild dashes about the room, growling and muttering, until at last in a culminating access of rage he took a flying kick at the door and with a vast crashing and splintering smashed in a panel. It was too much for his model's nerves, and he started to flee, but at that moment Morris, with his ire entirely gone now that the explosion was over, turned with a beaming smile, and assured him genially:

"It's all right, it's all right, but something had to give way!"

FLAVOR OF FOOD.

It Is an Important Factor In Digestion and Good Health.

If it were not for flavor we should not digest our food properly. Epicureanism in eating is the handmaid of good health. Flavor has been called the soul of food. The viands that are most agreeable to our sense of taste, those we enjoy most, are those we are most likely to digest well and from which we are most likely to derive the maximum of nourishment.

A book was devoted to this subject by Henry T. Finck of New York. He called it "Food and Flavor." In a review of it the Scientific American says: "The psychic factor of desire must precede ingestion or results will be unpropitious. To each cent spent for nutriment we add five more for flavor. Flavor, in short, has an appetizing value, a health value, a commercial value.

"The evolution of a discriminating appetite and the education of the cook must go hand in hand. But your glutton is never an epicure. Rational mastication must accompany the highest enjoyment of food, and in this enjoyment lie perfect assimilation and health. It is flavor that stimulates the flow of the digestive juices; it is the digestive juices that prepare the food for the extraction of nutriment."

The Professor Was Wrong.

Several decades ago a learned professor delivered a course of lectures, in one of which he proved to his own satisfaction that the Atlantic ocean could never be crossed by steam. Steam power had been discovered and applied on land, but he was confident it could never be applied to the ocean. Under the peculiar conditions of the heaving tides, the danger of storms, the rolling of the tide, and so forth you could never apply steam to navigation across the Atlantic. The book in which that lecture was published was on the first steamer that crossed the Atlantic. The captain took it along as a sort of curiosity. That book did not have a very large sale, but there has been quite a run of steamers ever since, and the professor ceased to argue that steam could not be utilized on the ocean.—Christian Herald.

Salting One's Smoke.

The strangest way of taking his salt was probably Dr. Parr's. Telfourd records that he used to fill his pipe half with the finest tobacco and half with salt. After that it is not very surprising to learn that he smoked "with a philosophical calmness." On one occasion when the two met Charles Lamb's furious smoking of the strongest tobacco filled Dr. Parr with astonishment. Gently laying down his pipe, he inquired how Lamb had arrived at his power of smoking at such a rate. "I toiled after it, sir, as some men toil after virtue," was Lamb's reply.—London Graphic.

Strychnine.

Strychnine is one of the most powerful vegetable poisons known, but it has very odd effects. Up to about one thirty-second of a grain it is often used in medicine as a stimulant. Very little more is required to bring on that peculiar state known as "tetanus," in which the muscles lock themselves up into such hard masses that they are as rigid as bone. An overdose, however, has been known in at least one instance to cure itself.—Exchange.

How He Felt.

"You act as though you thought yourself superior to the government."

"Well," replied the genial egotist, "I do feel slightly superior. As a taxpayer when I owe the government anything I pay. When the government owes me anything it does as it likes about the matter."—Washington Star.

Plenty of Hopeless Ones.

At the age of twenty-five a man can be forgiven for thinking he knows it all, but if he hasn't changed his mind at forty there is no hope for him.—Toledo Blade.

Faint Heart.

"Have you spoken to father yet?"

"Certainly. I said 'Good evening' when I passed him in the hall."—Pennsylvania Punch Bowl.

Circumstances are beyond the control of man, but his conduct is in his own power.—Beaumont.

That aniline colors have a marked action upon various kinds of microbes appears to be established. It is discovered that aniline compounds in general act to destroy microbes, even in greater degree than does phenic acid. The tar like substance which is put on the streets to keep down the dust is certainly nasty stuff to walk in when first put down. It gets all over the shoes and unless one is careful is tracked into the house ruining floors and carpets. Ladies also are very apt to have their skirts spoiled unless care is used. Once the tar is soaked into the street and covered with a coating of fine sand it is not bad.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial
By HOLLAND.
ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.
Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?
It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

PARISIAN BEGGARS.

Clever Rogues Who Study the Weak Points of Their Victims.

An accomplished mendicant, like a clever salesman, studies his customers, discovers their weak points if he can and trades upon them. In this relation it is of interest to note the skillful methods whereby a certain class of Parisian beggars play upon the superstitions of their victims.

There is a common saying in France that giving alms brings good fortune, a saying that has not been overlooked by the Parisian beggar. If one visits the Sorbonne on the days of examination for the bachelor's degree he will see an interesting sight. The collegians approach, each with his dictionary under his arm, on his way to make the famous Latin version, on the success of which all his future depends. A crowd of beggars surround them.

"A sou, monsieur; a morsel of bread," the beggar will say to a collegian. "It will bring you happiness."

The candidate hurries on. "You will be blackballed, monsieur," the beggar continues.

This sinister prediction always takes effect. The collegian pulls out his purse, and the beggar turns away, chuckling.

A similar scene may be witnessed at the Hotel de Ville on the days of examination for certificate of ability for teaching. When there are no examinations in progress there may be races, and to them go the beggars, for gamesters and sporting men are notoriously superstitious.—Washington Star.

WIGS, HOODS AND CAPS.

Shapes, Colors and Significance of Old Egyptian Headgear.

The reliefs and paintings on the walls of the tombs and temples of the Egyptians show that that race of people wore thick and elegant headdresses. Hats with brims were apparently unknown. Their headgear consisted of wigs, hoods and caps.

"The wigs were very likely made of hair or tow, for their great size could not have been made by dressing of a person's own hair; the caps were also very large and high and made of material which as to its kind can only be guessed at," says Charles E. Keater in a history and development of hats and headgear.

"The largest were cupola shaped, and their use was probably confined," he further says, "to those of royal blood. They were yellow, white and red. It is supposed that the yellow ones were made of brass and were a kind of helmet, that the white was the crown of upper Egypt and the red the crown of lower Egypt. The pschent, a combination of the white and red, was considered as the symbol of the rule over the land. Lower flat crowned caps were worn both alone and over a hood, and sometimes with a strap under the chin to hold the headpiece in place. The huge wigs were probably worn upon the shaven heads, as it is supposed that the clean shaven head was as prevalent in Egypt as it is now in tropical Asia."

A Reason For Tears.

An amusing story about Dr. Archibald Pitcairne, the physician, Jacobite and scholar, is told by Francis Watt in "The Book of Edinburgh Anecdote."

Dr. Pitcairne was not often a churchgoer, but on one occasion he took refuge in a church from a shower of rain The sermon was commonplace, but the preacher was emotional, and he wept copiously and, as it seemed to Pitcairne, irrelevantly. He turned to the only other occupant of the pew, a stolid countryman, and whispered. "What on earth gars the man greet (weep)?"

"You would maybe greet yourself," was the solemn answer, "if you was up there and had as little to say."

Census Reports Take Time.

Each United States census report represents a compilation of statistics for the entire country, and much time is required to make an actual canvass and to publish the results. For example, in the census of manufacturers uniform reports must be secured from more than 270,000 establishments and in the census of agriculture from more than 6,000,000 farms. In collecting statistics from manufacturers, farmers, electric light and power plants, electric railways and other interests it is necessary to allow a sufficient time to fill out the schedule so as not to interfere with the conduct of private business.

Kangaroo Tendons.

In Australia kangaroo farming is an important industry. The hides are valuable, and the tendons extremely fine. Indeed, they are the best known to surgeons for sewing up wounds and especially for holding broken bones together, being much finer and tougher than catgut.—London Globe.

Defectives.

"Here's a story about a man with a cork leg, a cork arm, a rubber ear, a glass eye and a wig."

"He must be one of those defectives there's so much agitation about."—Buffalo Express.

A Question.

"The pen is mightier than the sword."

"Then can the fellow with the fountain pen be said to be carrying concealed weapons?"—Town Topics.

Cured.

"I thought it was a case of love at first sight."

"It was; but, then, I took a second look."—Buffalo Express.

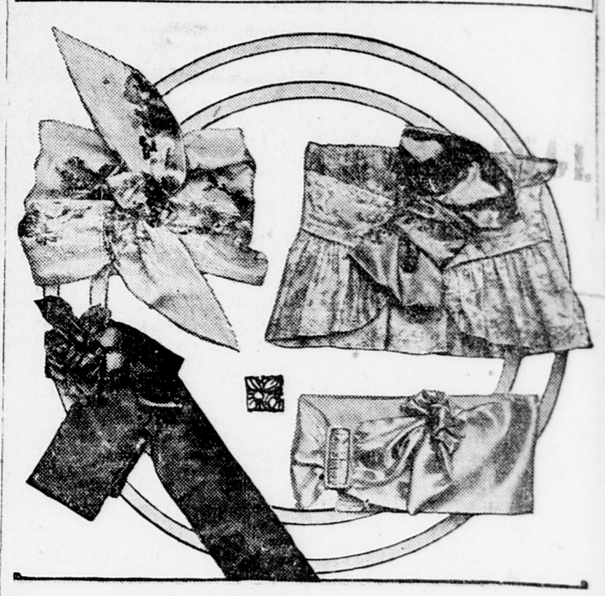
New Sashes of Popular Ribbons



THE handsomest and smartest sashes or girdles are made of the widest ribbons. It is their office to extend above and below the waist line in encircling the figure, and many of them, the newest ones, are so made that they seem to become a part of the bodice and a part of the skirt. That is, a bodice trimming and an overskirt are attached to the girdle, all made of the same ribbon.

A group of the newest girdles is shown here. The first is made of a heavy white grosgrain ribbon with flowered center panel finished with a border of narrow satin stripes at each side. The middle panel shows a splendid pattern of raised velvet roses and foliage all in natural colors and a blurred design, with shadows in pale gray. These really magnificent ribbons are portraits of flowers done in fabrics with such effects as artists in oil might envy. They are expensive and luxurious looking. The girdle is fastened with hooks and eyes at the ends, which are boned to the required width. Two ears of ribbon are doubled and sewed together, with a simple knot at the center.

The second girdle is made of flowered Dresden ribbon having a white ground and small blurred roses and foliage, either printed or woven in. A wide ribbon is used laid in four plaits for the girdle. The ruffles are made of a length once and a half that of the girdle, or more, depending upon the amount of fullness required. Two inches and a half are cut off from one side of this length to form the narrow upstanding ruffle; the wider ruffle is made of the remainder of the ribbon. The ribbon is sloped off toward the ends along the raw edge, which is gathered in two rows to form this ruffle. The girdle is finished with a plain bow of satin ribbon.

A girdle of vivid green velvet ribbon is simply a length to extend about the waist line finished with a flat shallow loop and a plain hanging end. One might not look at it twice, but for the satin rose of the most vivid red imaginable. It could not be brighter or more beautifully made. Its stem is tied in a small bow, made of narrow green ribbon matching the wide ribbon. The combination is so unusual and vivid and smart that it cannot be forgotten.

The pretty girdle of plain satin ribbon has a new and attractive finish at the ends. It hooks under a buckle covered by a narrow satin ribbon wound about it. The end is extended and formed into a bow with hanging loop. This extension to the girdle is to be fastened up on to the bodice and is more or less long, as it is to be pinned more or less high above the girdle. This is one of several new girdles in which extensions of ribbon are introduced to be pinned to the blouse or bodice.

Girdles are loosely adjusted. Long sashes wrapped about the figure and without hanging ends are not new, but are liked by the smartest dressers.

Go to Church! No Man Too Busy to Give an Hour Each Week to God

GO TO CHURCH!

Is there a man in any community who is too busy to spend one hour each week in church?

There are one hundred and sixty-eight hours in every week. No man is too busy to eat during the week. No man is too busy to snatch a few hours of recreation in every week. No man is too busy to sleep during the week. Yet there are men who will declare that they are so busy they can't afford to give one hour in every one hundred and sixty-eight to worship in God's house. In church you will find spiritual food and rest.

Of all excuses for lack of attendance at church the "too busy" one is the flimsiest. Why isn't a man honest and admit that he doesn't want to go to church? Isn't it a fact that a man has a better feeling within himself and the world in general after he has spent an hour in the house of God?

ONE OF THE FINEST SIGHTS OF THE LENTEN SEASON WAS THE NOONDAY CROWDS IN THE CHURCHES LOCATED IN THE BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL DISTRICTS OF NEW YORK CITY. THERE MIGHT BE FOUND SOME OF THE GREATEST MEN IN THE COUNTRY. IT IS A HOPEFUL SIGN OF THE TIMES. NONE OF THESE REALLY BIG MEN WAS TOO BUSY TO GIVE SEVERAL MINUTES DAILY TO THE WORSHIP OF GOD. INCIDENTALLY, THESE BIG MEN BY THEIR EXAMPLE PREACHED POWERFUL SERMONS.

Don't hide behind the "too busy" pretext. It is too thin. If you have an important business or social engagement you will find time for it. God asks you to meet him for at least an hour every Sunday. Can't you arrange your engagements so that you can meet him? The visit will not be a disagreeable one. Surely you are not ashamed to be seen in church? You no doubt have been seen in worse places.

GRAND ARMY PLANS FOR MEMORIAL DAY

Services to be Held as Last Year on Adams Academy Grounds

Will Attend Two Church Services Next Sunday

The general orders for Memorial Day have been issued by Commander Marstin of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., and are printed in full below.

The coming Sunday is Memorial Sunday, and the Post and allied organizations will attend two services.

Next week Friday will be Memorial Day in the schools of the city, to be attended by delegates of the Grand Army, the W. R. C. and the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary.

The Wollaston Cadet Band has been engaged for Memorial Day, and the Sons of Veterans, United Spanish War Veterans, Boy Scouts, W. R. C., and other organizations will take part. The morning exercises will be at West Quincy, and the afternoon exercises on the Adams Academy grounds.

The plans in detail:

General Orders No. 1

With increasing years and lessening numbers we approach the day set apart by legislative enactment and common consent of a grateful people to do honor to the Nation's saviors. We earnestly request all the people of the City of Quincy to join with us in making it a holiday, so that, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, "That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain: that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

No other organization has such faithful auxiliaries; so long as they endure and the patriotic men and women live and the emblem of liberty floats, we may have the sublime assurance that time or distance will never efface the heroic deeds of the Nation's defenders of '61-'65, or that any Union Veteran's last resting place shall be neglected or forgotten.

Comrades will in compliance with well-established custom, fittingly observe Saturday, May 30, 1914, as Memorial Day.

On Sunday, May 24th, at ten o'clock, comrades will assemble at G. A. R. hall, in full uniform, to attend the memorial services in Bethany Church.

At seven P. M. there will be a memorial service at the Washington Street Congregational Church.

These services will be attended by Paul J. Revere Post No. 88, G. A. R. Paul J. Revere Woman's Relief Corps No. 103 Rebecca Wiswell Tent No. 53, Daughters of Veterans, Abner B. Packard Camp No. 95, Sons of Veterans and their Auxiliaries. John A. Boyd Camp No. 2, U. S. S. V., and their Auxiliaries; also all soldiers and sailors and the public are cordially invited to attend these services.

The principals and teachers of the public schools of Quincy are respectfully requested to invite their pupils to bring flowers on the morning of May 29th, and leave them at the school houses where they will be collected by the comrades, for the purpose of decorating the graves May 30th. Kindly make them into small bouquets.

DEPARTMENT HAS CAPTAIN

Duties Are Not Limited to Central Fire Station

At the time of the suspension of Chief Billings of the Fire department and the appointment of Capt. Mead as acting chief, some questions have been asked which the majority of citizens do not seem to understand clearly.

Generally among citizens the understanding has been that Capt. Mead was simply a captain at the Central fire station, and not a captain over the whole department. He is however captain over the whole department.

When the offices of captain and lieutenant were originally created in the fire department it was during one of Chief Litchfield's years, and was done simply that there should be someone in command at the Central fire station during the absence of the Chief.

At that time there was more or less trouble at the Central fire station, for when the Chief was not present the men refused to take any orders for work, and conditions about the station from one of the regular men, each claiming that he had equally as much authority as another.

It was then decided by the City Council, at the suggestion of Chief Litchfield, to establish the offices of captain and lieutenant at the Central fire station, which would at all times leave one man at the station whose rank was higher than the regular men, and a man on whom the responsibility for discipline at the Central station could be placed. A order to that effect, or rather an amendment to the ordinace establishing a Fire department was adopted. This provided that there should be a Captain and Lieutenant at the Central fire station.

This amendment read as follows:

The Chief Engineer of the Fire department shall designate two of the permanent men at the Central fire station, who shall have the rank of Captain and Lieutenant. The Captain shall have full charge of the Central fire station and its apparatus during the absence of the Chief Engineer, and the Lieutenant shall have full charge of the station and apparatus during the absence of the Chief Engineer and Captain."

When the ordinances were revised in 1909 ,they were changed somewhat, and by new wording the captain and lieutenant originally created for the Central fire station became captain and lieutenant for the whole department, for the first paragraph of the ordinance reads today as follows:

"The Fire Department shall consist of a Chief Engineer, three asistant engineers, one superintendent of fire alarm, a captain, lieutenant and such permanent and call men as may from time to time be deemed necessary by the City Council, to be assigned by the Chief Engineer to the various companies, organized as hereinafter provided, or to duty as relief men."

It will be seen therefore by the present reading of the ordinance, the officers of the Fire department are as follows: Chief, three assistant engineers, superintendent of fire alarm, captain and lieutenant.

MISS EMERY THE SPONSOR

Will Christen the Steamship Atlantic Next Week

Miss Dorothy L. Emery, daughter of J. S. Emery of Brookline, has been selected as the sponsor for the Steamship Atlantic, which is building at the Fore River shipyard for the Boston firm of J. S. Emery & Co., Inc., which will be launched at the works next Thursday at high water. The Atlantic is a sister ship of the Pacific also being built at the Fore River plant, the latter to be launched next month.

Both vessels are intended for the Boston-Pacific coast trade via the Panama canal, and will furnish the first practical demonstration of how much the big ditch will mean to Boston shipping interests.

Both of the two new vessels are somewhat larger than the Everett, Malden, Melrose and Newton which were built at the Fore River for the New England Coal and Coke Co. The Atlantic and Pacific are especially designed for rapid loading and unloading ing and will be used exclusively for freight purposes.

NEW SIDEWALK IN CITY SQUARE

It is not perhaps generally understood that the permanent sidewalk order reported to the City Council last Monday evening by Committee on Streets provides for a granolithic sidewalk on the west side of Hancock street between Depot street, at the northerly end of City Hall to the junction of Granite street. The present sidewalk along this street is of brick and it has long been out of repair. When first laid in, it was a good walk, but time has caused some of the bricks to settle so that now it is very uneven, and in these uneven spots, puddles of water gather every time there is a hard rain.

Should the order reported be passed and approved by the Mayor a broad granolithic walk will be constructed, similar to the excellent walk further north Hancock street on the westerly side between Saville and Dimmock streets.

This section of brick sidewalk is not the only section that is in bad condition, for that between Granite street and School street is nearly as bad in places. This section came before the City Council a year ago and an apropriation was made to put the sidewalk in good condition. The appropriation has never been expended, as it was deemed unwise to attempt any repairs on this section of the sidewalk until Hancock street between Granite and School streets was widened and rebuilt as the sidewalk line will probably be changed somewhat. There is now an order pending before the Council for this widening.

CONCERT BY LUTHER LEAGUE

A pleasing concert was given Thursday evening at the Swedish Lutheran church under the auspices of the Luther League. It included orchestra selections, solo by Miss Sigrid Lundquist, baritone solos by F. Swanson, piano and organ numbers by Ruben F. Nelson, tenor solos by Harry Anderson, duets Misses Sadie Nelson and Lillian Carlson and by Miss Sigrid Lundquist and Harry Anderson; and two numbers by the choir. The musical selections were interspersed with readings by Prof. J. L. Larson of Boston and an address by the pastor. The accompanists of the evening were Miss E. Witting, Miss E. Viden and Mr. Preston.

ARRESTS IN SHIPYARD CASE

On Trial Today in the District Court for Assault

The three Polanders, who it is alleged made the unprovoked assault on Sam Dubrow, an instructor at the Fore River yards on Main street Thursday morning as he was going to work, were quietly placed under arrest Thursday evening by Chief Burrell. The men gave their names as Simon Molochuk and Joseph Adomowski of 124 Main street, and Morris Lubin of 91 Sumner street. They were araigned in court this morning.

The strikers at the shipyard this morning were quiet and orderly and although the pickets approached the men of other crafts there was no sign of the roughness which has characterized their actions the past few days. Acting on the advice of their leaders they will refrain from aggressive picketing until the cases of the men charged with assault on Sam Dubrow are idsposed of by Judge Avery.

On Thursday the men gathered in small groups in the vicinity of the shipyard and several delegations were at the station awaiting the arrival of Joseph Ettor, the national leader of the I. W. W. It was not until evening that they received word that he would not reach Quincy that night. This had a sobering effect on the more emotional strikers, who according to fellow countrymen were preparing to make a grand I. W. W. demonstration.

This morning additional officers patroled the district and several in citizens clothes were mixed in the crowd. The department was fully prepared to cope with any situation that might arise but their services were not needed.

Tonight none but members of the I. W. W. will be admited to Wilson's hall where Ettor will address them.

The question has been raised that because of remarks during his reecnt speech in City Square he is not entitled to the privilege of coming here and speaking to the strikers, but it was stated this morning from what can be considered authentic sources, that there is no way open to stop him unless in his speech he is seditionary.

Early Thursday morning proprietors of several boarding houses at Quincy Point that number among their patrons foreign workmen, were warned that they must not permit men to quarter in their houses if they are to take the place of the strikers. One man states that he was threatened with bodily harm but expressed no fear that he would become a target.

BILL FOR BOARD OF SURVEY

Admitted to Legislature on Thursday

The bill authorizing the city of Quincy to establish a Board of Survey has been introduced into the Legislature by Representative Sandberg and has been admitted under suspension of the rules. The resolve requesting the Mayor to petition the legislature for the enactment of a bill for a board of Survey is still pending before the City Council.

PLACED UNDER ARREST.

A young man who gave his name as Rinaldo Scuney, and his home as Connecticut, was found about midnight Thursday loitering about the Wollaston railroad station. He was placed under arrest by Officer Avery and sent to the police station as a suspicious character. On being searched at the police station a revolver was found in his pocket. He was arraigned in court for carrying concealed weapons.

WEDDING AT MILTON

Miss Isabelle Thomas Bride of Dr. Burnett

One of the prettiest home weddings of the season was held Wednesday afternoon when Miss Isabelle Thomas was married to Dr. Raymond Burnett. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents on Granite place. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Mulnix formerly pastor of the East Congregational church and consisted of the plain service. The bride was given away by her father, Harry M. Thomas. The home was very prettily decorated with pink tulips and daisies. The bride was dressed in a beautiful gown of white chiffon covered with exquisite lace and she carried an ivory prayer book which had been carried by her mother, grandmother and great-grandmother on similar occasions. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served. Following this Mr. and Mrs. Burnett left for a wedding trip to Washington D. C. and Atlantic City. Immediately after the wedding trip the couple will go to Peterboro, N. H., where Mr. Burnett conducts a summer camp. Mr. and Mrs. Burnett will make their home in Cambridge at the first of October. During the ceremony about 25 children of the neighborhood covered the front walk leading to the house with dandelions which formed a carpet for the bridal pair to walk upon.

CHAUFFEUR'S LICENSE

Nece sary For All Who Rent Automobiles

In an important decision handed down Thursday by the Supreme court it is found that the owner of an automobile who rents the vehicle for public use must secure a chauffeur's license.

If an atomobile is operated for public purposes on an operator's license, the operator is in volation of the law.

In the opinion of the Massachusetts Highway Commission this finding of the court is one of the most important decisions ever handed down with relation to the automobile laws. Its effects are wide and far-reaching. The owner of every automobile in the commonwealth which is ever used for public or semi-public hire will be affected by the provisions of this finding.

The present outlook is that women will wear their skirts top end down for only a few months longer.

No, Gladys, the hired girl did not forget to iron them. They are merely the new style soft shirts worn with a dress suit.

Postmaster-general Burleson has appointed 23,317 postmasters in 14 months. This leaves only 9,976,683 disappointed candidates.

Wall street is anxiously looking for either very good or very bad news, so that the market will move either one way or the other.

The railroads may not be going ahead very fast while waiting for the rate decision, but some of them are moving enough to pass dividends.

In Paris soft collars are fashionable for men, and how pretty they will look when they get to wearing Dutch necks.

Although John Hopkins university may decide that woman has as great a mentality as man, some people won't believe it until she learns to tell the batsman from the umpire.

Senator Root says that former Charge O'Shaughnessy is the best "mixer" he ever knew. That did not help him much at Mexico City, as Huerta took his straight.

The Canadian Parliament is expected to pass an anti-tipping law. The Americans have such a feeling of pity for the poor hotel and restaurant keepers, that they will keep on paying their bills twice for the same service.

After a few more of these labor troubles, it may occur to some employers that a man is worth a few cents more a day if he has heard of the United States constitution.

The United States may maintain the embargo against arms to the rebels, but it does not look as if it would discharge any of the officers merely because they happen to be near-sighted.

ARMY SANITATION.

War, as it seems to most people, is a conflict of marksmanship and strategy in the moving and distribution of troops. But even more it is a question of protection of the health of the men. This will be the first problem in case our boys go to Mexico City.

Diseases usually kills in war four men to every one killed by bullets. In the Spanish war, disease killed 13 to every one killed by Spanish arms.

Wonderful records in military hygiene were made in the Russo-Japanese war on both sides. The Japs lost but 21,000 odd by disease, to 55,000 in battles. The Russians lost 12,000 by disease, to 31,00 by bullets.

The Japs won that great conflict primarily by their hygienic efficiency. They had a sanitary division of 44,000 men, some of whom went ahead of the troops in every scouting party. The water in wells and springs was analyzed. Meats, vegetables, and fruits were tested. Towns having contagious diseases were quarantined. Lectures were given to the soldiers, about when to drink and when to bathe, even to the paring of the finger nails to avoid bacteria.

In case worst comes to worst in Mexico, the first anxiety must be for the health of our troops. The Mexican soldiers have a way of aiming their rifles in battle at about the hight of a second story window. The bulk of their shots will go wild. But the power of fever germs works blindly against friend and foe.

Certainly there has been progress in the United States army since the woeful record of 1898. Panama and Havana prove it. Anti-typhoid vaccination has reduced cases of that disease in the army to a figure only one-twentieth what it was nine years ago. Let it be hoped that the scientific thoroughness which the bluejackets displayed in the brief bombardment of Vera Cruz, would similarly be shown by the land forces in a hygienic campaign.

MORSE BLOCKED BY ROOSEVELT

Prevented From Gaining Control of Steamship Lines

INSIDE HISTORY MADE PUBLIC

Offer of $20,000,000 For New Haven Fleet Turned Down by Mellen on Roosevelt's Promise—Trouble With New Haven Is Death of Morgan—Some Sharp Epigrams

Washington, May 22.—The unwritten history of why Charles W. Morse, then in the heydey of his prosperity, failed to get an absolute monopoly on Atlantic coastwise shipping in 1907 was made public by former President Mellen of the New Haven.

Only the personal intervention of Theodore Roosevelt, then president, prevented Morse getting the steamship lines of the New Haven system. Morse had offered $20,000,000 for its fleet. Mellen wanted to sell. But he came to Washington and consulted Roosevelt. The latter opposed the sale. Mellen told him if he did not sell then he might have to sell later at a lower figure. He feared the government was about to prohibit railroads owning competing steamship lines.

Roosevelt promised him, Mellen said, if he turned down the Morse offer he would not be interfered with as long as he (Roosevelt) was president.

Morse was turned down and when Attorney General Bonaparte filed a Sherman law equity suit late in 1907 no mention was made in the papers of a steamship monopoly.

Mellen said he did not know if the steamship lines were left out of these proceedings because of Roosevelt's promise, but he said:

"I have always preferred to believe that it was. I respected Theodore Roosevelt very highly and it was pleasant to know that he was a man of his word.'

The story of the Roosevelt episode came as a complete surprise even to Folk. He was examining Mellen on interlocking and monopolistic railway subjects and came upon a letter written Oct. 5, 1907, by Mellen, in which Mellen referred to a trip to Washington to see former Commissioner of Corporations Smith. Folk was about to pass it over, but decided to ask Mellen if he could explain it.

"I certainly can," said Mellen. "In March of that year Charles W. Morse offered me $20,000,000 for the New England steamship lines owned by the New Haven. I wanted to get rid of these lines. I was always afraid of a terrible disaster on one of those floating tinder-boxes."

Mellen was threatened by Morse, the witness testified, that unless he took back the Joy line and returned at least $350,000 he (Morse) would bring suit. Mellen said he laughed at Morse's threat, and would have welcomed the suit, but it was never brought.

Morse offered the New Haven one-half of the stock of his Metropolitan Steamship company, Mellen declared, if the New Haven would withdraw its Botson Merchants' line between New York and Boston and turn the business over to the Morse line. This stock was worth $1,500,000.

According to Mellen, when he put this proposition up to J. P. Morgan, the financier warned him that if he had anything to do with Morse he could break with him (Morgan). "And, of course, I broke with Morse," Mellen added.

Mellen gave utterance to many interesting epigrams, among them being:

"Stockholders in times of prosperity are contented, like sheep, to go out and browse. In bad times they all make for the same hole in the fence and injure themselves trying to get out."

"I tried to keep away from public officials, since I was afraid that when I met them I might have something of value in my clothes."

"It has been my experience that there is not half the attempt on the part of the railroads to influence legislation as on the part of legislatures to influence railroads."

"An unscrupulous person at the head of a powerful corporation can get almost anything from a legislature."

"In time all monopolies will be merged in the government."

"You ask me if the New Haven can be reformed under the present control. The trouble with the New Haven is the death of Mr. Morgan. The only reformation needed is to bring forth another man of the same wonderful brain and ability of Morgan."

"The New Haven road did not spend near as much of its time in looking for favors as it did in looking for lightning rods to shy away the knocks."

"It was necessary to pay big prices for roads. The man who hesitates over the price of one orange would never have the nerve to acquire an orange grove."

"Meetings of the board of directors of the New Haven without Morgan would have been as tame as a herd of cows without a bull."

"I let Mr. Morse have the Boston freight line steamers and got $350,000 in cash. I am the only man living who ever got the cash from C. W. Morse in a business transaction."

PEACE ENVOY FROM REBELS

Carranza Agrees to Participate In Mediation Conference

TRANSPORTS FULLY EQUIPPED

Army and Navy Ready For Immediate Action Should Occasion Arise—Administration Still Confident That Mediation Will Succeed—Elimination of De Facto Rulers of Mexico Insisted Upon by Wilson—Mexican Envoys May Effect Huerta's Effacement—Details of Wholesale Execution of Federal Officers

Washington, May 22.—The constitutionalists are preparing to send a representative to Niagara Falls to confer with the South American mediators who are endeavoring to settle the Mexican problem.

This will be done with the distinct understanding that the representative is to give information as to General Carranza's purposes without committing the constitutionalists to any plan for the pacification of Mexico that the mediators may determine upon.

Jose Vasconcelos, now at Montreal on a financial mission for Carranza, is understood to be the man chosen to go to Niagara Falls. It is said by men in close touch with the constitutionalists that he will arrive there within the next few days.

Prepared For Active Service

The United States army and navy await the word from Niagara Falls. Despite a ban on news at the war department, it was learned that the entire fleet of transports, fully equipped to care for an entire field army, is in readiness for boarding at Galveston. Enough ammunition and supplies to maintain an entire division in the field indefinitely are on board. It is up to the mediators to determine whether it is all to be used or later sent back to New York for storage.

The question of war or peace will be settled within ten days. This is the belief at both the White House and the state department. The United States commissioners to the mediation conferences have already made public that this government's irreducible minimum demand is the unconditional retirement of Huerta. If that comes, well and good. Then they will take up the next step. If it does not, they they will return to Washington, mediation will be at an end and it will be up to President Wilson to determine his next aggressive step.

Meanwhile, however, the administration continues confident that mediation is to succeed. The measures taken have all been precautionary. Secretary of War Garrison determined that, if war was to come, he would have no repetition of the days of 1898, when hundreds of lives were sacrificed to disease because of unpreparedness. If the armed forces of the United States take the field this time they will do so in better condition than ever before in their history.

The President's Plan

President Wilson in an an authorized statement says in effect that he has decided that all of the ills from which Mexico suffers spring from the inequitable distribution of land and its exploitation by its owners and foreign adventurers. For this reason he will insist on a settlement of the land question by constitutional means as a preliminary to the establishment of a righteous and orderly government.

The carrying out of this purpose carries with it the complete elimination of the de facto rulers of Mexico and in the end also of the Villas and Carranzas, as the president says he will fight every man who is now seeking or may seek to exploit Mexico for their own ends.

No Trace of Silliman

The war department now has evidence that Private Parks was executed by the federals. But the fate of Consul Silliman remains enshrouded in mystery that will probably not be cleared until Villa and his forces take Saltillo.

There is no disposition on the part of officialdom to take any action in either instance pending the decision of the mediation conference. It may bring about a restoration of peace that will obviate any action, but if not, either outrage would furnish an excellent vehicle for drastic action by the United States.

More Paredon Details

More details of the conflict between Mexican federals and constitutionalists at Paredon, which culminated in wholesale execution of federal officers, were received in official dispatches to the constitutionalist headquarters in Washington.

Credence generally was given the report from General Villa, confirmed by the later report to the constitutionists in Washington, which was as follows:

"The federals evacuated Monclovia and united with the outposts which they had in Paredon, making a total of 5000 men. The enemy were completely routed. Eight hundred prisoners were taken. Three complete railway trains, 600,000 rounds of ammunition, nine field guns, seven machine guns, all their transports and a great quantity of arms were captured.

"It is believed that Generals Arturo Alvarez and Ignacio Munoz were killed. General Ozorno and a good number of officers were executed by shooting. Our losses were relatively small."

As to Huerta's Fate

Unofficial, but reliable, information was reiterated in official quarters that General Huerta had placed himself unreservedly in the hands of the three commissioners, representing his interests at Niagara Falls. It positively was declared the Mexican commissioners' authority included the right to effect Huerta's effacement as a condition of final settlement.

Information concerning Huerta's possible elimination reached Washington through diplomatic channels free from direct interests in the Mexican political situation. It is conceded Huerta has not directed his commissioners to announce his elimination.

The understanding of officials is consistent with the previous information that Huerta has told his representatives they could go to any limit in their efforts to reach a settlement with the United States, regardless of his personal fortunes.

RAINY SEASON SETS IN

Troops at Vera Cruz Are Drenched by a Tropical Downpour

Vera Cruz, May 22.—The hardships of a rainy season campaign were brought home to the troops by a half-hour's tropical downpour.

The paved streets in the main portion of the city were running curb-high within a few minutes, and the sewers were wholly inadequate to carry off the flood. The unpaved streets were muddy torrents and the sentries at the outposts were drenched.

This was the first heavy rain of the season. Usually the rains begin early in June, when the daily downpours cripple transportation of all kinds.

"Ex-President Roosevelt is in the same boat with me," he said. "Hardly does a man come home from an exploring expedition before the armchair scientists start an academic tango in an attempt to discredit every discovery."

RIOT IN COMMONS

Adjournment Is Forced by the Opponents of Home Rule

London, May 22.—Having exhausted all constitutional means of opposing the passage of the home rule bill, the "die hard" section of the opposition, in a last desperate effort to delay the automatic passage of the bill under the parliament act, provoked a riotous scene in the house of commons.

The bill had reached the third reading stage, and Premier Asquith announced that the proposed amending bill would be introduced in the house of lords.

The premier was immediately subjected to a fierce fire of questions, with a view to inducing him to divulge the nature of the proposed amendments. He declined to reveal this until the third reading had been passed, and after a number of bitter speeches denouncing the premier's conduct, persistent shouts made the continution of business impossible, whereupon the speaker suspended the sitting.

GETS HEARTY WELCOME

All People In Oyster Bay Turn Out to Pay Respects to Roosevelt

Oyster Bay, N. Y., May 22.—In the home town of Theodore Roosevelt there was a celebration which went straight to the colonel's heart.

His old neighbors welcomed him back from the jungles, and they did it in a way which made the former president strangely silent as he arose to face them, and put an unwonted huskiness in his voice.

Oyster Bay's main street was filled with a crowd which comprised everyone in the village who was neither too old or too young to be on hand when the colonel returned from New York, where he had spent the day.

Handshaking, songs by 600 schoolchildren and speeches were the order of the day.

THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD OPERA

There was once a Woman who Thoroughly Understood and appreciated Grand Opera. She was Accustomed to Purchase a Libretto Weeks Ahead, and she Played the Score through on her Piano Before she Went to a Performance. So she always Knew What they were Singing and When it was Over. She had a Cousin who did Not Know an Oboe from a Snare-drum, nor a Tenor from a Basso. Nevertheless she Enjoyed the Opera.

One day they were Presented to a Great Tenor. The Woman who Understood Opera spoke to him as Follows:

"Do you not Think the Overture to 'Tannhauser' is a Beautiful Thing? I Adore Wagner. Don't you? But I Thought that the Brasses were a little Flat and that the Eighth Bar of Your Aria in the First Scene was a Little Hurried. Am I Right?"

ONE DAY THEY WERE PRESENTED TO A GREAT TENOR.

"Very Probably," replied the Great Tenor. "And does your Cousin, too, Like the Opera?"

"Very much," said the Cousin. "Especially since I have learned to Distinguish between the Kinds."

"And How do you Do that?" inquired the Great Tenor, with Interest.

"Oh, there are Many Points of Difference," she replied. "In the First Place, the Women wear Flowing Robes in German Opera, but Corsets and Trains in Other Kinds. Then you Yourself wear High Boots and a Long Mantle in Italian, but Low Shoes and a Short Mantle in German."

"What you Say is True," remarked the Great Tenor, "and More than That, it is Interesting. If I had Known this Before, I should have Saved Myself much Confusion. Pray Continue."

"A Good Way to Tell is by the Chorus," said the Cousin. "In German Opera they are Differently Dressed, but in Other Kinds they all Look Alike and Put their Hands on their Hearts all Together."

"Henceforth I shall Observe the Chorus very Carefully," said the Great Tenor. "You are Evidently an Adept at This. I suppose you Rarely make a Mistake?"

"Not Often," said the Cousin, Modestly. "Although Some Things are Perplexing. They Wave their Arms About much the Same in Both Kinds, and the Heroines almost always wear Bronze Slippers with Two Straps. So sometimes, when Your Mantle is Medium Length, I have No Means of Judging."

"I am Sure that All you Need is a little More practice," said the Great Tenor, "and it would Give me Great Pleasure to Place a Chair in the Orchestra at your Disposal for Tomorrow Night, when I will See that my Mantle is Unmistakably Shortened. I should be Glad to Include your Cousin but Unfortunately I have No More Seats Left."

THE POPS.

Andre Maquarre who is one of the best-liked conductors to appear in Symphony hall, Boston during the season of Pops will take charge of the orchestra Monday night, May 25, and will continue as conductor of the Pops for three weeks. The feature of the fourth week of the season will be the annual "Harvard Night" Tuesday, May 26. This night always brings out the largest crowd of the year and the Harvard Glee club will be in attendance as in the past to sing during the intermissions. Friday night, May 29, Mr. Macquarre will give a programme devoted partly to Wagner. Mr. Maquarre announces that he has a number of new and very pretty pieces that he will play at his concerts.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"The Man o'War's Man," a play of the present hour, and of exciting events in Mexico, will be produced at the Castle Square next week. It is melodramatic and patriotic and its plot involves many incidents of love and war. One exciting situation follows another in rapid succession. The hero is imprisoned in a cell in a prison on the outskirts of the Mexican city of Cordoba, and the scene of his escape in disguise is finely dramatic. He next appears at a war council in Vera Cruz, and last act of all takes place at the Dilligencia Hotel, and from its roof the Mexican snipers may be seen while sounds of the fighting come up from the streets below.

The vigor and intensity of "The Man o' War's Man" runs throughout its entire four acts, and it will be acted by the full strength of Mr. Craig's company. Mr. Craig will himself play the hero, Donald Meek, returning after a few weeks absence, will play the leading comedy role, and Miss Mary Young will be seen as the heroine.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

Miss Joan Sawyer, a modern dancer who has attained great fame and popularity in New York during the past season, will appear at the Shubert Theatre for one week only beginning Monday evening, May 25th, in a series of modern dances, assisted by a large dancing company. Miss Sawyer comes direct from her unique amusement resort known as the Persian Garden, in New York, where she has been dancing for seven months. She brings with her a special tango orchestra and there are said to be over forty dancers in the company. Miss Sawyer herself, assisted by three different dancing-partners, will render her own versions of the tango, the maxixe, the hesitation, the "three in one," and the unique dance which she calls the "Aeroplane Waltz." Her supporting company includes a dozen different dancing couples of various nationalities, with several well-staged dancing numbers. In addition to the regular program Miss Sawyer will give a brief talk upon the right and wrong way of dancing, while various couples illustrate her remarks. At the conclusion of the performance there will be a nightly contest by local amateurs for the Joan Sawyer trophy cup, a beautiful silver creation standing 24 inches high. The winners of the nightly events will receive samller cups and these winners will be entitled to enter the final contest for the large cup on Saturday night. Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

The announcement that "Under Cover" will complete its long run at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, Saturday, July 4th, will be welcome news to New England playgoers. On the completion of this phenomenal engagement the play will have scored the longest run in the theatrical history of Boston. This wonderful record is likely to remain unbroken for many years to come. Another interesting feature is the announcement that seats may be ordered now for the holiday matinees on Decoration Day, June 17th and July 4th. This will enable out-of-town theatregoers who may contemplate visiting Boston on either of these days to witness the greatest show produced in years. It also may be stated that when "Under Cover" concludes its engagement at the Plymouth Theatre, the company will rest up for several weeks preparatory to their New York engagement which is scheduled to begin early in August.

Webber & Fields at Boston Theatre.

KINEMACOLOR.

The presentation of the wonderful Kinemacolor motion pictures at the Tremont Temple, Boston, for the past week proved the biggest success of any engagement at the Temple for the season. These remarkable pictures with their natural colorings represent the last word in motion pictures. They are the perfection of animated photography. The programme for the coming week will comprise six of the very latest and most interesting subjects including Rambles in Paris, Butterflies and Moths, Golliwog's Motor Accident, Storm, Water Babies, A Story of Indian Frontier Life and the U. S. Naval Review. This entire programme is shown in approxiamtely two and one half hours and is interestingly varied. It combines historical, scientific, dramatic, biographical and educational interest. A better presentation could hardly be asked for. There are two performances each day and the prices are more reasonable than were charged several seasons ago when these pictures were exhibited with great success.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Joe Weber and Lew Fields, comprising the most popular theatrical partnership on the American stage, return to Boston for their first joint engagement in ten years Monday May 25, when they will be seen at the Boston Theatre for two weeks only in "Hokey Pokey," one of their biggest musical comedy successes.

It is hardly necessary to comment at length upon the talents of Weber and Fields. They are admittedly the two funniest low comedians on the English speaking stage. In "Hokey-Pokey" they will be seen in their familiar characterizations of two Germans traveling abroad and meeting with many humorous adventures. For sentimental reasons they are reviving for this engagement their famous pool game scene which they were presenting with great success in vaudeville at the time they established their world famous Music Hall in New York City, the theatre which employed the services of practically every star of consequence in the field of musical comedy at one time or another.

This will positively be the last opportunity that New England theatregoers will have of seeing Joe Weber and Lew Fields together. Next season Mr. Fields, emulating David Warfield, who was for many years a popular member of the Music Hall Company, will enter the field of legitimate comedy appearing in the leading role in a comedy adapted from the German. The comedians will positively appear in no other city in New England this season.

WANTS THE MAN BACK OF CRIME

Whitman Asks Becker Jury to Return Verdict of Guilty

POUNDS AT DEFENSE THEORY

Record Crowd at Night Session of Court, at Which District Attorney Charges Defendant With Inspiring and Engineering Death of Rosenthal—Jury Already Well Posted

New York, May 22.—"This old courtroom has rung with the cry: 'Whitman wants Becker.' That is true. Of course I want Becker. I want the big criminal; I want the man back of it all. I want the man who inspired and engineered this whole monstrous crime."

With all the mental force at his command, with jaws set and arms upraised, with an earnestness seldom encountered in the tribunals of the law, and with his voice shaking with emotion, District Attorney Whitman thus hurled his challenge at the defense last night at the trial of Charles Becker for the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

The scene in the courtroom will long be remembered. The night session lent a sombre and solemn atmosphere to the occasion. The crowd had never been equalled in size at any of the previous murder trials and all were silent with a tenseness of attention that never broke.

Becker sat with immobile countenance. He was surrounded by his counsel. There was a smile of satisfaction on his face at the close of the summing up of Martin T. Manton, his chief counsel, at the afternoon session. But the smile was lost when he returned to court in the evening. A frown gathered on his features as the district attorney pounded along, delivering blow after blow, to the theory of the defense.

He was perceptibly nervous. Becker's wife sat in the front of the courtroom, not twenty feet away from her husband. She seldom looked at her husband, but kept her eyes directed towards the jury box as if to catch a signal of hope from the faces of the twelve stern men.

There was no relief in that direction. The jurors sat with respectful attention. It almost seemed as if the men were bored, and knew what they knew before the district attorney began.

The district attorney's face glowed with the flush of excitement when he characterized the crime and prosecution of Becker as "transcending in importance any crime that the district attorney's office has ever prosecuted."

Whitman began his summing up to the jury at 8 o'clock. The courtroom was crowded to the walls. Captain Lynch of the court squad had the doors locked and none was allowed to go out or come in during the long address.

The judge will deliver his charge today and a verdict is expected before night.

Veteran Railroad Conductor Placed Under Arrest at Boston

Boston, May 22.—Charles S. Dean, for twenty-seven years a conductor on the New Haven road, was arrested here, charged with stealing railroad tickets, and Miss Mary Moriarity was arrested with him, charged with receiving the stolen proerty.

Wholesale thefts of railroad tickets, received by conductors and resold instead of being punched and turned in to the company, led to the investigation that resulted in the arrest of the veteran conductor and the young woman in the latter's apartments in the South End.

Dean was a conductor on the "Owl train" which leaves Boston at 1 o'clock in the morning for New York. He was well known to commercial travelers.

COXY'S "ARMY" DISBANDS

Washington, May 22.—Coxey's second "army" ended its march on the Capitol yesterday afternoon. Pressed about by an attentive throng, the "army," consisting of General and Mrs. Coxey, riding in an old buggy drawn by a mule, one bugler, one drummer, one boy on a horse, and six privates, drew up to the Capitol steps.

Coxey made his speech, calling for changes in the currency and banking systems, and concluded by saying: "Or, failing in this peaceful and desirable mode, the revolution. Think it over; is there anything else left for us to do?"

SUFFRAGETTES IN FIGHT WITH POLICE

Forty Arrested In Attempted Raid on Buckingham

London, May 22.—Forty militant suffragettes were arrested in rioting that resulted from the efforts of Emmeline Pankhurst and her army to enter Buckingham palace and harrangue King George. Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter, Sylvia, were among those arrested. Several male sympathizers also were held.

Amid scenes of violent disorder and confusion, several hundred militants attempted to rush the police outside the palace and rescue the militants. They were finally dispersed.

The skirmish between the police and the suffragettes outside the gates of Green Park was very lively while it lasted. Several suffragettes, as well as police, were injured.

MUST SERVE PRISON TERM

Broker Dow Convicted of Conversion of Mining Funds

Boston, May 22.—The full bench of the supreme court overruled the exceptions filed by Stephen R. Dow, the broker convicted of the conversion of $239,000 from three mining companies of which he was president.

Dow will commence at once to serve the term of from eight to twelve years to which he was sentenced. Since the trial last March, he has been free on $25,000 cash bail.

Two weeks were consumed in trying Dow's case, which was hard fought, and in many ways one of the most sensational trials involving "frenzied finance" ever heard in this state.

Previous to his arrest, Dow assigned to his attorney, giving his liabilities as $520,160.56 and his assets at $142,169.82, including $5 in cash.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The regular meeting of the Men's club of the East Congregational church was held Wednesday evening at the church, and there was an extraordinary attendance. George H. Nobbs for four years an engineer in Mexico, spoke on: "My experiences and opinions on Mexico." He gave a very instructive talk and throughout his speech showed that he thought Mexico was not capable of running herself. In one place he said, "I believe the only way for the United States to stop the trouble in Mexico is to go down and take complete control of it." After the talk, refreshments were served by a very efficient committee, consisting of Lawrence Abbot, Mr. Carlton, Mr. Gilbert and Louis V. Gosselin.

No Pie Crust Promises
Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.
They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.
That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.
People know that there is quality behind them.
They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.
This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.
The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.
The world grows better.

Midsummer Dreams in Flower Hats

If you are fretting your mind in trying to make a decision as to what sort of hat you will have for midsummer, let it rest upon one similar in general style to the two pictured here. Have the prettiest, most becoming and most fascinatingly feminine of all millinery, with laces and flowers and ribbons making up a confection to be worn upon the head. For the midsummer hat will sit at the top notch of style when it is a means of wearing a good-sized bouquet fastened to a fair head at some slightly dashing angle.

Roses and small flowers in the natural sizes, the lilac and the violet, forget-me-not, heliotrope, and heather, and small daisies betoken the love for garden flowers which lies in the mind of many wearers of flower hats. But the flower hat bedecks itself with flowers common and uncommon. From the yellow field daisy to the most unusual orchid, like and unlike their prototypes, everything in flowers is fashionable.

One of the hats shown here is a round crown covered with maline, in brown, of the shade of its wearer's hair. Over the crown a brim is slipped, covered in the same way as the crown. It is narrow at the right side, widens and flares up at the left. A fine machine-made lace is laid smoothly over crown and brim. There are plateaus of lace made for this purpose, but milliners fashion for themselves plateaus of laces which they buy by the yard.

The lower part of the brim is covered with lace also in this particular hat, although in others part of the millinery braid is used or part of a body hat, as shown in the second figure. The crown here is of leghorn with the brim, covered with horsehair braid, set in.

The lower crown (or bandeau) of the first hat is trimmed with velvet ribbon in brown and a shaded fancy ostrich feather is in the same coloring, shading off to a very light tint. Deep cream roses, with pink hearts, and natural colored silk wheat, are placed in groups about the brim, with one cluster at the base of the plume on the bandeau.

The second hat is trimmed with silk roses in yellowish pink. They are marvels of delicate coloring, with the shadings and even the veins of the natural petals simulated in the half-opened buds. The foliage also in dark, glossy green is made with loving fidelity to nature.

As types of midsummer millinery these hats may be regarded as criterions. They are not merely modish, but the mode.

It is rather early to announce the program for the Fourth of July celebration, but the athletes of the city are seriously considering not entering field and track competition if any is held. They have not forgotten how they were suspended from the N. E. A. A. A. U. for competing in an unsanctioned meet at which pros and non registered men competed, and so this year, when the time blows around it may be that the list of entries will include but few of our brighter lights unless the meet is sanctioned. Of course there is some talk of omitting it because hot weather usually prevails, but if included in the days' observance, a sanction would be appropriate.

Patsy Duggan is playing good base ball with Haverhill in the New England league schedule. His put-outs in his fielding position have been clean and attracted much attention. His batting form is good, and unless something unforseen develops he should finish his season with a fine average.

Bates is with Worcester, but has not taken any prominent part in the games as yet. His situation is peculiar. First a question of salary was raised and Burkett sidestepped the issue. A compromise was reached and now Bates is being used at odd times. The rooters have not forgotten his good work last season however.

So that the players on the teams of the West Quincy league will make every effort to develop their batting eye, Edward Desmond of the Copeland Club well known along the South Shore as a pitcher, has offered a silver cup to the man finishing the season with the best average. In order to qualify he must have at least played in a majority of the games. The cup will be placed on exhibition this week, in the window of the Walsh store.

Home talent, of superior quality, will be on Saturday's base ball bill, when the Quincy A. A. recently organized and the Fore River league team of the Manufacturers league cross bats at Merrymount park. Charles Knight, the pitcher for the latter expects to repeat his performances of the past two weeks. In two games he has secured 30 strikeouts and allowed but eight hits. The Quincy A. A. aggregation includes good men and the battery will be "Les" Andrews and Ray McDonald. The game is one of the few that Fore River will play outside its schedule.

The Devil's Knell.

Among the famous bells of Dewsbury, Yorkshire, England, is one known as "Black Tom of Soothill," which was presented to the church in expiation of a murder. "Black Tom" is always rung on Christmas eve. Its solemn tolling as it strikes the first tap at exactly midnight is known all over Yorkshire as the "devil's knell," it being the notion that when Christ was born the devil died.—London Standard.

SEVERE BRONCHIAL COUGH

Doctors Feared Lung Trouble, Restored to Health by Vinol.

The medical profession does not believe that lung troubles are inherited, but a person may inherit a weakness or tendency to them.

Mrs. Kate Heckman, Springfield, Ohio, says: "A few years ago I was in a very bad run-down condition, and the physician told me I had consumption. I tried another physician, and he told me I had ulcers on my right lung. I quit the physicians and started on 'Vinol.' Today I am perfectly healthy, and that is why I recommend 'Vinol.'"

Vinol soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces and allays the cough. Vinol creates an appetite, strengthens the digestive organs and gives the patient strength to throw off incipient pulmonary diseases.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

NEW WAR PLANS MADE NECESSARY

Mediation Move Responsible For Changed Program.

LITTLE FAITH IN ARMISTICE

Original Scheme, Which Was to Fortify Plateau at Vera Cruz In Preparation For Advance to Mexico City, Has Been Upset—Toughening Recruits During Suspension of Hostilities.

Exactly what the war department at Washington thinks of the Mexican situation has been learned in the customary unquotable roundabout way that is nevertheless authoritative and designed, says the New York Tribune.

The national guard will be mobilized very soon.

The war department believes the armistice is bound to fail.

Plans for invasion of Mexico that it took four years to perfect have been wiped out by the enforced delay brought on by offers of mediation. These offers came just as the swift execution of strategical moves plotted by the war department was about to begin.

Other plans on a different basis, says the Tribune, are being worked on—plans that would not have been considered if the army had moved at once from Vera Cruz.

According to an officer high in authority and in close touch with Washington, diplomacy has upset preparations for Mexican invasion so badly that it will take two months to do the next best thing.

Vera Cruz a Pesthole.

The war plan made by Major General Wood and his staff elected Vera Cruz as the point of invasion and almost entirely eliminated operations from the border. The idea was to get out of Vera Cruz as rapidly as possible, the sanitary engineers having marked the place as a pest hole, and to take up a position on a plateau 2,000 feet high and about 50 miles from Vera Cruz.

Using Vera Cruz as a base, the army was then to hold the line of communication back to the seaport and so fortify the plateau that it would be impregnable. Division after division was to be brought up to the plateau, ready for advance on Mexico City.

So quickly was the A. B. C. mediation begun that the army did not have a chance to execute the move. Instead, the troops are bottled up in an insanitary city in the lowland climate, totally unsuited to Americans. Outposts have been allowed only twelve miles from the city. If the original plan had been executed the bridge blown up twenty-eight miles out of Vera Cruz would have been safe. As it is, however, army engineers who know exactly how the bridge was constructed reported that it can be replaced by pontoons without great delay.

In the belief of the war department, all the bridges from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico are mined.

Until the militia is ready the regulars along the border will not advance on Mexico. Army officers laughed at the idea printed recently, on supposed expert information, that the national guard might be sent directly to Texas and trained there.

Militia to Be Toughened.

Staten Island has been laid out as a scene for daily skirmishes and war games of an elaborate nature by the New York troops. The militia's "seasoning" is anything but soft, as prepared by the regular army officers. It calls for the carrying of fifty-six pound packs on the backs of citizen troops, who will be marched and countermarched in the hot sun until every ounce of useless tissue in them is gone and the remainder toughened into regular army elasticity. Two months of this seasoning, army officers believe, would transform clerks into cowboys in embryo, at least.

When ready and fit the militia will wait for the regular army to move and will follow them as a reserve. Meanwhile the regular army is being recruited to war strength, of 150 men to a company.

If the present force in Mexico under Funston were to advance as conditions are now the war department is not confident that it would not meet with reverses. The Mexicans have had three years of hard training in the field and know guerrilla warfare.

If the army goes into Mexico now it is the intention of the war department to use at least 75,000 men. The delay that came with mediation and caused a change of plan will be used to harden recruits.

No hope of stable government in Mexico is held by the army. It believes Carranza cannot control the country, and it does not trust Villa.

Training Elephants a King's Hobby.

A little while ago King Ferdinand of Bulgaria invested in four elephants, and now he spends all his spare time teaching his giant pets all that an educated elephant is required to know. The four beasts are housed at a farm on the outskirts of Sofia, and every day King Ferdinand spends an hour or so with them. Not only do the pachyderms recognize their royal master when he visits them, but they can do several simple tricks at his bidding.

Lawn Parties

I have no use for sleepy heads.
Nor have I any words of praise
For those who like to keep their beds
Until the sun begins to blaze.

I'm for the man of industry.
The man with clear and sparkling eyes
Who emulates the busy bee
And to his work is glad to rise.

I like the man who quits the hay
Or feathers, as the case may be,
And, smiling, greets the coming day,
Then journeys forth to earn his fee.

But I can see no reason why
A man should quit his bed at dawn
When other people wish to lie
And clattering mow a stretch of lawn.

GENERAL VILLA HIS BROTHER, ASSERTS COLORED PASTOR.

Wants to Go to Mexico and "Make Him Behave Himself."

Believing that Pancho Villa, leader of the rebel forces in Mexico, is his long lost brother, Spencer Young, the Rev. Alfred Young, colored, pastor of the Whatcoat Methodist church of Baltimore, is preparing to take a hand in the settlement of the Mexican situation, so far as the Constitutionalists are concerned.

"A solution of the Mexican troubles has been found, so far as the Constitutionalist cause is concerned," he said to a reporter, "if the investigations I am about to make should confirm my belief that 'Pancho Villa' is my brother. If I can get hold of that fellow I can make him behave himself. The suggestion has been made to me that I should be sent to Mexico to bring about an understanding with my brother, and the suggestion is undoubtedly a wise one."

The clergyman declared that there was but little doubt in his own mind as to the identity of the Constitutionalist leader. The latter, he says, has changed his name at least twice since he was christened Spencer Young in a little colored church near Cambridge, Dorchester county, Md., where he was born in 1860.

"As a boy," said the minister, "Spencer was continually playing soldier and was a natural leader. From the first time I can remember him in his early youth he was interested in militia affairs, and in 1879, when my mother called him to task for some minor offense, he ran away from home and, I believe, joined the Ninth cavalry. We never heard from him directly after that, but have frequently heard from him through his companions in the service."

A MOTHER TONGUE CENSUS.

English-Celtic Group Largest of Foreign White Stock In United States.

The English and Celtic (including Irish, Scotch or Welsh) group was the largest among the 32,243,382 persons of foreign white stock in the United States in 1910, who represented 39.5 per cent of the total white population of this country, according to the mother tongue bulletin, issued by the bureau of the census.

As thus reported, the total foreign white stock whose mother tongue was English and Celtic (including Irish, Scotch or Welsh) numbered 10,037,420. This number represented 12.3 per cent of the total white population of the United States in 1910, which was 81,-731,957. The German group numbered 8,817,271, or 10.8 per cent; Italian, 2,151,422, or 2.6 per cent; Polish, 1,707,-640, or 2.1 per cent; Yiddish and Hebrew, 1,676,762, or 2.1 per cent; Swedish, 1,445,869, or 1.8 per cent; French, 1,357,169, or 1.7 per cent, and Norwegian, 1,009,854, or 1.2 per cent.

The number of persons in the United States of foreign white stock reporting other principal mother tongues were: Bohemian and Moravian, 539,392; Spanish, 448,198; Danish, 446,473; Dutch and Frisian, 324,930; Magyar, 320,893; Slovak, 284,444; Lithuanian and Lettish, 211,235; Finnish, 200,688; Slavonian, 183,431; Portuguese, 141,268; Greek, 130,379.

AERO STABILITY SOLVED.

Colonel Seely, British Aviation Enthusiast, Tells of Flier That Can't Upset.

Colonel J. E. B. Seely, the former British secretary of war, whose enthusiasm for aviation is equal to that of Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, in a speech at the Wilbur Wright memorial banquet in London said that the problem of stabilizing the aeroplane has been solved, and he believed this marks the greatest advance since the first aviator had made an ascent.

Colonel Seely told of a test he made when he accompanied a pilot to a height of 2,000 feet. When the pilot abandoned control of the machine Colonel Seely steered it. The machine turned to the right and left like a boat. It always took an appropriate "bank" which was suitable for the sharpness of the turn. Gusts of wind rocked the machine, but it always succeeded in righting itself.

Indian to Teach White Men.

Ishi, an Indian who was brought from the wilds of Tehama county by University of California anthropologists and taught the ways of civilization in San Francisco, has returned to the wilderness with Dr. A. L. Kroeber and Dr. Saxon Pope, who developed his primitive mind. Ishi is to teach them to kill wild game with bow and arrow, to build fires without matches and to live as red men lived before the white man came.

Wooing Desdemona

With a Moving Picture Climax

By CLARENCE LINDNER

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Tongues in trees, sang the bard books in the running brooks, sermons in stones—and, by the same token, romance in finger nails.

The idea is not so absurd. Stella will corroborate me.

Drop into Burtscher's tonsorial parlors some day.

Go right through into the little room curtained off at the rear.

Seated at a table, with bowls of warm water, jars of red paste and various delicate instruments set out before her, you will find Stella placidly munching caramels.

As you enter she will look you over impersonally. Sigh if you are tall and dark and saturnine or smile sadly, but kindly, if you are—what you are; say something original that she has heard twenty times a day for three years and offer her your fingers to refine.

When she has massaged them for a few minutes and you think that your soft glances have quickened the beating of her heart, ask her about this romance business.

She will gaze silently at you for a quarter of a minute.

Then a pearly tear will hasten from beneath a quivering eyelid. She will swallow a sob with her caramel.

And if you are not tall and dark and saturnine she may tell you the story. It isn't much of a story as stories go. But judge of it for yourself:

His entrance was soundless. Stella was not aware of him until his shadow fell across the page of her book. She started nervously and looked up to find him seated opposite, gazing at her gravely. Her heart thumped violently as she looked into his eyes. She blushed. Her glance fell. She sighed.

Without looking up again she began to operate on the hand which he offered for her ministration. Her fingers trembled. Twice she almost stuck him with the cuticle scissors.

She never could recall with what remark he broke the awful silence. For the first time in memory she was powerless to inject the element of loquacity into a situation.

She knew before he spoke just what would be the tonal quality of his voice; knew it would be soft and low and compelling. At his first word her gaze was drawn to his. She peered into his black eyes timidly, fearfully, entranced.

Mayhap it was hours he talked, mayhap only minutes.

"In Madrid," he murmured absently, "near the Plaza de Toros, lives a soft eyed maiden whom you remind me of much."

He flinched as the scissors point penetrated a tender spot. But she was far away from cuticle and scissors.

"And once in Delhi, as the regiment marched out, I saw you waving me goodby from the gate of the town"—

From land to land he skipped. He balanced the south pole on the tip of his tongue, derided the hemispheres, twisted the equator in a knot and flipped the top off Mont Blanc. He mopped up the Pacific ocean with his left hand and with his right taught backgammon to an Eskimo in Greenland.

Time and distance were exploded myths to him. He was a citizen of the universe, address anywhere.

"You must know pretty nearly every one," Stella whispered admiringly.

He considered a moment while he adjusted the green jade pin in his necktie.

"Not quite," was his modest admission.

She sighed and applied the nail buffer with feverish assiduity.

When he had gone she wept softly and tried to recall what he had looked like. He was tall, she remembered, and slender and dark.

That night she cried herself to sleep and dreamed she was Madylaine, the heroine of "Love's Last Word."

He came again many times.

There were more tales—tales of hair raising adventures in the crannies of the world. The heroes of them all were friends of his, nameless men mentioned casually, though she knew all the time that it was he who really figured in the leading roles.

She put down his delicacy in omitting names to that innate modesty so characteristic of heroes. There was a man, for instance, who twisted the tail of a blood crazed tiger in Bengal and flung the brute to starve in the branches of a tree.

His visits became more frequent, so frequent that his nails could not possibly have grown between times.

He led her to talk of herself—of her ideals, inspired by the best magazine literature; of the loveless life of a plump manicure lady in a deserted city of 5,000,000 population.

He learned, too, of the $300 she had hoarded up against the traditional day of inclement weather.

And before he left on that occasion they kissed furtively across the table, during which process he spilled a bowl of warm water into his lap.

He confided his name—Montford Reginald McShane. She smiled happily as he blew her a farewell kiss.

Monty, as she fondly thought of him, visited her always in the morning. Whether he had an occupation she had not courage to inquire of him. Suffice she was loved, and to love is to trust, says the heroine of some best seller.

She confided in Rose, her "lady friend," a statuesque blond who circulated comestibles in a lunch room. Rose was skeptical, having proved to her grim satisfaction that the stomach route is the only way to a man's heart.

"Maybe so and then maybe not," she declared oracularly. "This romance business is all very well for them as can do without sleep. What's his name?"

"Montford," breathed Stella.

"And what for dessert?"

"Reginald McShane."

"Too flossy. Keep your eye on the cashier's desk and don't let him get by without punching his check. This Romeo game wasn't invented for us working girls. Good providers is what we need. Remember what happened to me?"

She dabbled a fugitive tear. Stella was in arms immediately.

"Monty's different. There's something about him that—er—well, you know, he's—er"—

"I know; that was Horace's weak point. I couldn't lay my finger on just what it was till he borrowed all my money one day and skipped. Does he take you out much?"

Stella flushed.

"He hasn't yet," she confessed lamely, then flared. "He—he—well, love doesn't need such things to show it's true."

"No, maybe not, but it helps some. Don't let me throw on the damper, though. I ain't saying he's not all right, dearie. I hope so, but"—

Stella burst into tears and flounced to the door.

"You're horrid," she sobbed, "and jealous. I won't listen to another word against him."

On his next visit, however, she met his advances austerely.

"When I was in Algiers," he began reminiscently, after a few well chosen and silently received words about the weather.

"There's a new show at the Lyceum they say is awfully funny." Her tone was dreamily wistful.

He sidestepped warily. "This weather reminds me a lot of Labrador."

"I haven't seen a good show for a long time," she sighed.

"Not that it's so cold in Labrador, you know, but"—

"Have you seen it?"

"What, Labrador?"

"No, the show."

"H-m! Not yet. You see, I'm very busy now nights, my dear. I—I'm entertaining a couple of English bankers this week. Very important, you know. Some time, though," he said vaguely, "we'll"— His words faded into a murmur that lost itself in the puffing of a black cigar.

She melted. Monty was important.

"Some time soon," he promised as he started to leave. "Ah, by the way"—he fumbled in his change pocket—"I forgot my money this morning. Stupid, wasn't it? Have you a dollar handy, my dear, for car fare till I get a check cashed?"

She gave it gladly, receiving a hand squeeze as the receipt.

She did not mention the circumstance to Rose that evening as they sat in the little restaurant where three course meals are exchanged for quarter dollars.

"Want to see a picture show?" Rose asked after supper. Stella agreed languidly.

They dropped into "the travelogue," where for the sum of a dime you may sit in a stuffy room and partake of all the pleasures of a jaunt around the world without the bother of officious customs inspectors or the emotional unrest of seasickness. They found seats well toward the front and opened a bag of caramels to fortify themselves against the fatigues of the journey.

The lights went out. An automaton began harassing a wheezy piano. There was a buzz of expectant whisper.

A square of white light flashed on the curtain, then the legend, "A Trip to the Orient, Personally Conducted by One of Our Lecturers." The audience repeated it to each other in low tones. A Turkish street scene appeared on the canvas.

Some one coughed in the wings. The piano's waltz died off in a flowery tremolo. The whispering ceased. A husky voice proceeded from out the shadow at the left of the stage.

"Ladies and gen'l'men, tonight—hic—tonight we shall have the pleasure of leading—hic—leading you through the—the"—

There was a pause. The lecturer whispered hoarsely to some one behind him.

"Where we gonner lead 'em, Mr. Blank?"

A red and yellow mosque that was just peeping into the house stopped suddenly in its course and withdrew.

There was whispered colloquy in the shadow. Another cough.

"Ladies and gen'l'men," the voice resumed more huskily, "tonight we're going to Shpain."

"No, no, you chump!" clear and grating from behind the wings. "The orient—orient! I told you to study it. You've been drinking again!"

"'Tisn't so." The husky one was evidently aggrieved. "Ladies and gen'l'men, we've changed our minds. We're going to the orient."

A whistle sounded snrilly. The canvas suddenly went blank.

The lights flashed on blindingly to reveal an unresisting figure being drawn behind the wings from public stare.

Stella uttered a little shriek before she collapsed.

"It's Monty," she blubbered.

"No," muttered Rose tensely. "It's Horace!"

SHOWS FARMERS MOVE TOO OFTEN

Census Indicates the Cause of Many Failures.

1,000,000 LEFT WITHIN YEAR

Results Shown In Crop Tabulations Which Prove Smaller Yield In Sections Where Frequency of Removal From the Land Is Greatest—Conditions Vary In Different Sections.

Do farmers in the United States move from farm to farm, from home to home, as much as city people? If they move every few years are they as efficient farmers and can they know their farms as they should? Would constant change mean low yields of crops and little interest in the community? These are some of the questions affecting rural communities that are coming to the foreground, and for the first time a partial answer can be given with authority.

During the agricultural census of 1910 this question was submitted to each farmer for answer: "How long have you lived on this farm?" Of the 6,361,502 farm operators in the United States April 15, 1910, 5,794,768, or 91 per cent, answered the question satisfactorily. From the data obtained from the answers to this inquiry a bulletin will be issued soon by the bureau of the census, department of commerce.

The statistics will show the length of the periods of occupancy of farms in the United States by states, geographic divisions and sections, for different periods of time ranging from less than one year to ten years and over, and these data are further classified according to the character of the tenure and of the color of the farm operators. The statistics are given for 1910 only, as no corresponding data have been collected heretofore.

Cause of Frequent Failure.

One of the most important facts is that approximately 52 per cent of the farmers who answered the question satisfactorily had occupied their farms less than five years. This short period of occupancy for over half of all the farmers in this country becomes all the more significant when it is taken into consideration that it requires three or four years for a farmer to become acquainted with the various conditions on his farm, such as soil, climate, etc., and put it in good condition for raising crops.

Different conditions are found in different sections. In the north 57 per cent, or nearly three-fifths, of the farmers had operated their farms for five years or longer, while only 22 per cent had been there one year or less. In the west the proportions were 44 and 27 per cent respectively, while in the south only 41 per cent had been on the same farm five years or longer and 34 per cent, or over one-third, had been there one year or less. A great number of farmers had operated their farms "less than one year" than from "five to nine years, inclusive." More than 1,000,000 farmers reported that they had operated their farms "less than one year," about 628,000 reported residence of "one year," an average of about 457,000 reported a residence of "two years," "three years" and "four years," and an average of less than 200,000 reported residence for periods of "five to nine years."

The figures returned by the "occupancy of farms" census also show that the farmers classified as "owners, free," move from farm to farm much less frequently than the "share tenants"—farmers who rent farms on shares.

Effect on Crop Production.

The showing of greater stability of occupancy by the farmers in the north as compared with the farmers in the south and the west is more significant when comparisons are made of the production of farm crops. Corn is grown extensively both in the north and in the south and probably is the best crop to use as a basis of comparison. According to the figures from the reports of the census, the average yield of corn per acre in 1909 in the New England states was forty-five bushels; in the middle Atlantic states, thirty-two bushels; in the east north central states, thirty-nine bushels, and in the west north central states, twenty-eight bushels, while in the south Atlantic states, where the farmers shifted from farm to farm more than in the north and west, the average yield of corn per acre was sixteen bushels; in the east south central states, nineteen bushels, and in the west south central, sixteen bushels.

These figures seem to show that in those sections where farmers generally have operated the same farms for periods of five years and over the yield of corn is considerably larger than in the sections where the period of occupancy is more unstable or for shorter periods of time.

Police Dogs Learning English.

A training school for police dogs at Mamaroneck, N. Y., occupies a seventeen acre farm. At the present time seventeen German shepherd dogs are learning all that they should know prior to making their American debut in exhibitions. The first thing that these dogs have to be taught is English, as most of them understand nothing but German.

SOLO DANCERS ON PROGRAM

There will be variety almost without limit at the grand opera this evening at Kincaide's Theatre, and the big two hour program is sure to prove the treat of a life time, not only to the trained music lover, but to the average theatre goer as well.

In addition to the eight big arias and ensemble numbers, there will be the duet from "Forza del destino," made famous by Caruso and Scotti; the great duet from Andre Chenier, and Verdi's "La Traviata." The second act of Martha will be sung in English. Much interest also centers in the solo dancing in costume, which includes the wonderful "Dance of the Hours" from Gioconda, the Copelia and the Silvia.

While Evelyn Parnell, the brilliant prima donna soprano who will appear with the Boston Grand Opera Singers at KincaideTheatre this evening was singing in Europe a year ago, the Boston American of June 15, 1913, had this to say of her success on the other side of the water: "Evelyn Parnell has won the hearts of all Europe giving them a coloratura voice that critics are comparing to the-voices of Melba and Patti, according to news dispatches received in Boston."

Miss Parnell has sung in all the larger European cities, and has taken every coloratura role in the well known operas during her tour. Her greatest success was made at Fiume. One of the papers there said, "Miss Parnell portrayed the sweet and sentimental figure of Gilda in Rigoletto with a truth and delicacy and sang with a fresh true voice that awakened unbounded enthusiasm in her audience."

The dramatic critics throughout Europe have accorded Miss Parnell the most enthsiastic praise. In Fiume they spoke of her as an "exceptional artist" and spoke of her "multiplied triumphs." Miss Parnell made her debut in Italy in Traviata. Frustra Teatrale of Milan devoted two columns to an article on Miss Parnell, headed "The triumphal career of Evelyn Parnell."

By showing appreciation of high grade productions like this, the management will feel encouraged to have them oftener. Application for seats should be made if possible in advance.

ON VAGRANCY CHARGE.

Captain McKay who arrested two young men at the circus grounds Wednesday night, on suspicion that they were dips, and who were arraigned in court for attempted larceny, has ascertained that the young men have bad records. He has found that they are known to the Boston police who have their finger prints and records. The young men gave the names of Harry Miller and Harry Haven and their residence as Boston. When their caps were called this morning the complaint was changed to comply with the new law, so that they were arraigned on a vagrancy charge.

QUINCY MAN PROMINENT.

A copy of the May number of the Lumber World Review, published at Chicago, has just been received and we note that Thorpe Babcock of Tacoma, Wash., formerly of Quincy, was prominent in the recent Forest Products Exposition. He was a member of the committee on resolutions. He is secretary of the West Coast Lumber Manufacturers Association, and reported for that association. An interview also appears in the Review. He says:

"We on the Pacific coast saw what the cypress people have done in their organization and we were not afraid to follow them. The big thing we have done the past year is in starting our advertising campaign. If you can conceive the problem that confronted us in this you will know something of the difficulties it has presented. The hardest thing was to advertise our advertising to our members and that took money and yet we had to do that in order to get money to start the advertising campaign. It seems to me that this is one thing that all the associations must do and I hope the time will come when we have progressed farther that Geo. Watson will come here and admit that they are following us. We have employed engineers and others, but this thing of advertising stands out above all other matters."

Mr. Babcock is the son of the late Walter T. Babcock.

PERMIT NECESSARY.

Lynn liquor dealers learned this week from a decision rendered by Judge Lummus that they cannot legally deliver liquor in Swampscott, a no-license town, unless they hold pony express licenses granted by the Swampscott Selectmen.

The decision was rendered when Michael Dagnese of Pleasant street was fined $50 on a charge of illegally transporting liquor. He worked for a Lynn wholesaler and was arrested in Swampscott Saturday. Judge Lummus declared that regardless of the fact that the money for the liquor was paid in Lynn the question of delivering the goods for hire or reward entered into the case.

WEYMOUTH.

Details from the Grand Army will take part in the Memorial Day services in the schools next Friday, five or six being sent to the larger schools

Four troops of the Boy Scouts will assist the Grand Army veterans on Memorial Day for the first time.

The Weymouth Teachers Association holds a social this evening in High school hall. Dancing is on the program.

Children of the Baptist Sunday School sang the operetta "Voices of Nature" on Wednesday evening in aid of the outing fund. Among the impersonations were flowers, bees, birds, etc. There was also a candy sale.

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION.

The solemn services of the Forty Hour devotion opened at St. John's church this morning with impressive ceremonies. A solemn high mass was celebrated by Rev. Fr. Coan, pastor. Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan deacon and Rev. Fr. Florence McCarthy was sub deacon. Music was by the regular choir.

After mass there was a procession of children who escorted the clergy as they carried the Blessed Sacrament from the tabernacle to the repository where it will remain until the close of the devotions.

MASSACHUSETTS WOMAN SAYS MAYR STOMACH REMEDY CAME AS BLESSING

Mrs. W. H. Brown Tells How She Was Relieved After Long Suffering.

Mrs. W. H. Brown of Danvers, Mass., was a victim of stomach trouble which tortured her for years. She tried many treatments and medicines and got little relief.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and got results right away. In telling of her case she wrote:

"For years I have suffered terribly with stomach trouble. I could find no relief. Then like a blessing from above, I heard of your remedy; sent for it, and after a few treatments am being cured. I am going to tell all my friends of your miraculous remedy."

Such letters come from stomach sufferers all over New England. This remedy is known everywhere because of its genuine merit. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitator, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox's drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

DUTIES OF A BOARD OF SURVEY

Proposed Act Means Much for the Development of the City

Will Control the Laying Out of All New Streets

The bill establishing a Board of Survey for the City of Quincy, as reported by the Council Committee on Legislative Matters at the last Council meeting, and which was introduced this week in the legislature by Representative Sandberg, is an important measure and if enacted will in the future save the city many dollars.

At present land syndicates may acquire a certain section of land for development, and as they desire to get all possible out of it, can lay out streets at such widths, and in such manner as will yield them the greater income. As soon as the territory thus opened is built upon to any extent the city is petitioned to lay out and accept these streets as public ways.

The result is that when the city come to accept such streets it is often necessary in order to conform to required necessities, that the widths of the streets have to be changed, and that the city would also be better served by changing the location, or direction of such streets. Any such changes add to the cost of accepting such streets, as land damages can be collected. Then again these land companies seldom, if ever, pay any attention as to the matter of draining such streets. In fact as a rule they get out of it as cheaply as possible, and when once the land is sold, it is up to the people who have purchased land on the new tract to fight for themselves.

There are many such cases in Quincy, and in fact the City Council is at the present time considering a matter, that was occasioned by such promiscuous laying out of new property.

If the proposed Board of Survey is established it will stop such methods. The act provides that the Mayor, shall appoint, subject to the confirmation of the City Council, three citizens, who shall constitute the Board of Survey, and who shall serve for

TWENTY-FIVE MILLION DOLLARS

To Be Expended in Building Up the Quincy Shipyard and in Welfare Work for Employees of Fore River Corporation

The North American Review says: "Charles M. Schwab of the Bethlehem Steel Company, which now controls the Fore River shipyards, has announced that within the next three years the Company will spend $25,000,000 in betterments on the Quincy plant."

When a statement like this is made by such a reliable publication as the North American Review, the people of Quincy must sit up and take notice. There should be great rejoicing among all the people of the city, for it means the permanency of the shipbuilding industry in Quincy, and a western boom such as no New England city has experienced for a generation.

There should be no pessimists in Quincy with such a bright outlook but all should take new courage and become optimists. It is a good time to work heartily together to make Quincy a better and a busier city.

The assessed valuation of the city of Quincy is less than forty million dollars, but here comes the new management of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation and says it will spend twenty-five million dollars in betterment.

Whatever those benefits, Quincy is sure to prosper. There are already evidences of rebuilding the plant on a more substantial basis, but it is said that the company may go outside its gates and built model tenements for its employees, and build up a model city. Not only Quincy, but Braintree and Weymouth will benefit, for there are hundreds of acres of building land within two miles of the shipyard. Real estate will be active in all parts of the city.

Now is the time to talk-up Quincy. There have been abundant reasons to talk it up in the past but all doubt should now be dispelled.

PUT UNDER BOND TO KEEP THE PEACE

Strikers Fined for Assault But Take an Appeal to the Superior Court

Much Difficulty Experienced in Getting the Facts

Three strikers were fined in court late Friday afternoon on a charge of assault on Sam Dubrow and appealed their cases. They were Joseph Adamofsky, Morris Lubin and Simon Palamachick.

Caleb Howard, the local I. W. W. Organizer represented the defendants and Harry Levovitch was counsel for the government. When the case was called in the morning there were no government witnesses and they were later brought into court by the police.

The witnesses' testimony was vague and it was stated that they had been intimidated. No definite charges of intimidation were made however.

The court room in the morningwas filled with strikers and friends of the defendants and all conducted themselves in an orderly manner.

Dubrow testified he crossed Sumner street Thursday on his way to work and someone asked where he was going. When he answered "to work," men jumped from a crowd and two held his hands while a third struck him four times on the face. He pointed out the defendants as his assailants.

On cross examination he did not change his testimony but added that the men ran away when a police officer appeared in the distance.

On being questioned by his attorney again, he said the man who struck him threatened him Tuesday morning and on Wednesday evening was awaiting him at his back door, but he went into the house because he was frightened. He said he was told he would be fixed if he went to work.

Howard insisted on having Dubrow tell him what was told him in the Russian language, and Dubrow said while they talked in Russian, the threat had been in English.

Judge Avery asked the complainant if he was hurt and he said his face was swollen but not cut. He said he was struck by a closed fist and did not fall because two men held him up.

There is considerable dissatisfaction in the army at Vera Cruz, because they can't go out and get killed.

No newspaper man will vote for suffrage for women, until they learn to read a newspaper without distributing the loose sheets all over the floor.

So far the mediators have reached an agreement that the weather has been good this spring, and it looks like a big wheat crop.

The ravages of the insect pests provide many men with an excellent excuse for not having a vegetable garden

The High school girls are not worrying much about graduation honors, as they are leaving all that to the dressmaker.

It is commonly felt that the memory of the fallen heroes of '61 is not properly honored Memorial day, unless the ball team plays a double header game on the home grounds.

There was a fist fight in Mr. Bryan's ante-room the other day, although Congressmen are the only ones who usually are allowed this privilege.

THE GRADUATION GOWNS.

The estimate is made that the usual cost for graduating a girl in a High school is $50 for gowns, flowers, gloves, etc. Many families spend a great deal more than that. Some spend less, but they are perhaps wealthy people who do not fear criticism if their daughters dress simply.

For the workingman with several girls to put through the public schools this is an item of expense worth study. Parents who have ambitions for their children like to give them a good send-off. They feel obliged to play the game with the rest. The result is that many girls drop out of High schools before the last year, losing the cream of the course and of the social pleasures that go with it.

In view of these facts, the movement for simple gowns for school commencements seems to be gaining ground. It meets with opposition from vain and thoughtless people. But our schools can not be truly democratic so long as this heavy and needless tax is imposed.

ABILITY IN THE ARMY.

The work done by the United States army in its occupation of Vera Cruz will throw some light on a frequently debated question, as to what grade of ability the United States is getting to fill the positions of army officers.

There is a popular impression that the typical army officer is a martinet. He is supposed to spend his life in seeing that guard mount comes off precisely on time, and in ironing out the wrinkles from the "rookies."

A superficial view of West Point and other military schools would perhaps confirm this impression. The boys are subject to great rigidity of discipline and study. One would think the cold fixity of daily routine would freeze out the warmer impulses of ambition and originality.

It has sometimes been maintained that military schools are not able to provide instructors capable of giving such mental stimulus as is found in the best colleges. Too often they are young officers who must sit up nights to keep barely ahead of the boys they are teaching.

Nevertheless, graduates of West Point and like schools have always maintained that there is something in military life that lifts a fellow above any mere dull routine of ceremony. The emphasis on neatness, physical erectness and efficiency, the insistence on truth telling and avoidance of bad habits, turns out a very clean cut man. To this is added the inspiring influence of heroic tradition that surrounds all military education.

Routine as army life may seem, somehow the army men seem able to rise to the occasion when some problem of human administration is placed on them. Having learned to obey, they seem to know how to command. Whether in the Philippines, Panama, or Mexico, they give an impression of mental alertness and grasp of practical situations. Already from Vera Cruz come in the reports thaht even the Mexicans like army government, and will be sorry when the troops leave.

PROTECTED BY THE FEDERALS

Silliman at Last Reaches Mexico City In Safety

UNDER ARREST THREE WEEKS

Grave Features Connected With the Episode, but Great Obstacle to Mediation Is Removed—Official and Diplomatic Circles In Washington Pleased at Report of Carranza's Offer to Send Delegate to Niagara Falls—May Open Way For Settlement of Domestic Affairs—Little Expected From Huerta In Line of Mediation—Oil Wells Saved by Mexicans Who Guarded Properties

Washington, May 23.—The Brazilian minister at Mexico City notified the state department that Vice Consul John R. Silliman of Saltillo, who has been long missing and who was supposed to have been executed, was safe in Mexico City.

The message stated that he had arrived there Friday in company with the British vice consul, Mr. McMillan, and that he would leave today for the United States via Vera Cruz. The Brazilian minister declared Silliman had been under the protection of the federals and that he was well treated.

The news that Silliman is safe removes one of the most threatening complications to mediation.

While Silliman himself is safe, however, there remains several very grave features connected with his arrest. Unofficial reports have indicated that he was placed under arrest while acting as a United States consul, was imprisoned, tried as a spy and condemned to death. Also that the United States consulate was entered, the official archives being taken, including the code of the state department. Siliman's personal safety relieves the situation of its gravest aspect, but the other indignities, if officially verified by inquiries going on, remain to be atoned for in the ultimate settlement.

Missing Three Weeks

Silliman has been missing about three weeks and the news of his safety came just as the state department was making public reports received from refugees that he had been executed May 18 by the federals at Saltillo. The state departmet had been using effery effort to get some word from the vice consul ever since it was reported that he had been arrested as a spy and accused of assisting the constitutionalists.

He has been reported safe a number of times, and the Mexican federal authorities have time and again stated that he was on his way to Mexico City, but he failed to arrive.

The last person to be appealed to was General Villa. After he took Saltillo the rebel general promised to find Silliman if possible, but no further word has been received from him.

The disappearance of Silliman has several times come near breaking off the mediation plans, and his safety has much pleased the administration officials here.

The Carranza Feature

General Carranza's reported consent to a plan for sending a representative to the Niagara Falls conference was an absorbing feature in the Mexican situation in Washington.

Dispatches from Niagara Falls stating that it was not generally believed a constitutionalist representative would be admitted to the negotiations at this stage excited little comment. It was pointed out that if Carranza did send an emissary he would go to inform the mediators of the northern faction's general aims; he would not commit the constitutionalists to any specific plan for Mexico's pacification that the envoys might suggest.

Announcement of the constitutionalists' plans, however, was received with satisfaction in official and diplomatic circles as opening an avenue, ultimately, for a general discussion of proposals to settle the entire Mexican problem.

Northern Faction Looms Up

The agent said to have been chosen to go to Niagara Falls is Jose Vasconcelos. He is in Montreal now on a financial mission from Carranza. It was said he would proceed to the Ontario border town within a few days. If that plan were carried out, it is believed, the South American envoys and the Huerta and the United States missions might have progressed far enough with proposals for settling Mexico's international difficulties to take up the republic's domestic affairs. In that equation, it is recognized, Carranza and his northern faction must be considered as big figures.

Evacuation of Saltillo

Meanwhile army officials, following the situation in Mexico itself, see in the evacuation of Saltillo confirmation of their fears that Huerta does not expect materially to aid mediation. They believe he is concentrating his troops as near Mexico City as possible so that he can meet an American advance. He is hopeful that if such an advance is ordered Mexican public feeling in the north will influence a goodly portion of the constitutionalist forces to come to his aid, thus in part at least uniting Mexico against the invaders.

Saltillo was splendidly fortified and well armed and provisioned, military experts here say, and it could have withstood Villa's attack for three or four weeks. That it was surrendered with hardly a shot is believed to show Huerta's intention of saving the best of his fighting force for stern work near the capital.

The constitutionalist junta here admitted Carranza's action in designating Vanconcelos to proceed to Niagara Falls was on the suggestion of Bryan.

Mexicans Saved Oil Wells

Loyalty of Mexican natives who were left in charge of oil wells at Tampico and Panuco, after the foreign operators fled from the danger zone, was responsible for preservation of the properties, according to R. A. Mestes, an official of the international Petroleum company, whose report of conditions in the oil district has been forwarded to the state department.

Mestes recently returned to Tampico with five American employes. Mestes lauded the fidelity of the Mexican employes who guarded the properties during the conflict between constitutionalists and federals at Tampico.

Foreign interests at Tampico seemed in no danger and the Panuco oil fields were reasonably safe for foreigners, according to the substance of the report from the British consul, who added that the constitutionalists had reopened the custom house at Tampico and were levying the same import duties as under the former regime.

MUST PAY DOCTOR'S BILL FOR EMPLOYE

Employers Who Are Insured Must Give Medical Treatment

Boston, May 23.—Employers who insured under the workmen's compensation act are obliged, in case of injury to one of their employes, to furnish medical treatment for a period of two weeks, according to a decision of the supreme judicial court.

Theodore J. Panansuk was employed by the Taunton Wool Stock Company. He injured his hand. The industrial accident board found he was unable to read and write English and had no knowledge of a notice containing a list of physicians who would furnish free treatment in case of accident.

The board gave him $23.94 as compensation and $22.50 for medical attendance. The company's insurer objected to the bill for medical attendance.

CLASS REUNION AT WOLLASTON

Alumni Proposed at Massachusetts Fields School

The seventh annual reunion of the class of 1907 Massachusetts Fields school was held Friday evening at the home of Miss Ruth A. Taylor on Beach street.

At a business meeting various class matters were discussed and it was voted to endeavor, with the co-operation of the other classes to form a Massachusetts Field School alumni association. Arthur Robinson was appointed a delegate to secure opinions from and make arrangements with representatives of other classes regarding joint meetings.

Following the business meeting various interesting games and "races" were enjoyed, and prizes of certain numbers of beans were given the winners. Each one present was provided with an ingenious silk bag in which to keep these beans until adjournment was made to the dining room, where ice cream, cake, crackers and candy were on sale for certain specified numbers of beans, the prices being obtained from a posted menu.

The class was very fortunate in having four of its former teachers present, Miss Ruth A. Taylor, Miss Florence Gammons, Miss Annie M. Bennett and Mr. C. Ralph Taylor former principal of Massachusetts Fields chool, now of the Girls' High School of Boston.

On leaving, three rousing cheers were given for "M. F. S." followed by a round for Miss Taylor.

Those present were:—Misses Ethel Axberg, Jessie French, Marie Lavery, Marion Peabody, Flora Sass, Dorothy Taylor, Elizabeth Torrey and Mrs. George Tribble (nee Ednah Marr,) and Messrs. Frank Doring, B. Morris Hooper, Remi Langelier, Arthur Robinson, Pitt Robinson and Joel Thayer.

W. J. Vaughn Desires a Hearing on Removal

According to J. J. McAnarney, counsel for William J. Vaughn, recently superintendent of the Quincy Home, many misleading statements have appeared and apparently things are rather mixed. The facts are that in the first place Mr. Vaughn was requested to resign on April 27. Failing to do that he was suspended for 28 days, which time expires on Monday, May 25.

If a hearing is not asked for by that time he will probably be removed. Mr. McAnarney said this morning that up to the present time no charges had been made against Mr. Vaughn; or if there had been, no copy of these charges had been received by Mr. Vaughn. It is rather expected however that charges will be received before the day is out. As soon as these are received a hearing would be asked for.

—The sixth summer institute for religious education will be held at Meadville, Pa., beginning June 22 and closing July 3. It promises a course of instruction of the highest value. There will be five courses of lectures and conferences.

SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY

Enjoy Profitable Afternoon at Art Museum

Members of the Atlantic Shakespeare Society, with guests, visited the Boston Art Museum on Thursday afternoon of this week. Arrangements had previously been made so that one of the small lecture rooms was at the disposal of the party, and the subject of "Tapestries and Rugs" was most interestingly presented by Miss O. W. Sherer.

Miss Sherer took her hearers back to the early days of the primitive loom, that being simply the bough of a tree from which the warp thread hung and was held in place by stones or balls of clay. She described the evolution of the loom, the high warp loom being in use up to the beginning of the 16th century, when the low warp loom was introduced, and has been in use ever since. With this loom the design in full color is placed back of the threads and rolled up with the work as it progresses.

The designs pictured in the earliest tapestries were old Roman and Greek stories, none of which are in existence at the present time. For a thousand years tapestries were lost to art.

After the Egyptian tapestries which were woven in plain colors and used for garments, nothing was woven until the 13th century. The finest wall tapestries were woven in the 15th and 16th centuries in the Rennaisance period. A great number of this period were woven on Bible subjects.

With the 16th century came a change of subjects and methods. A variety of color and detail was introduce; they became pictures instead of wall decorations, and this led to a decadence in the work, but with the coming of the 19th century there was a revival of the Middle Age Methods, and a striving to put the art on its former plane of excellence.

Miss Sherer explained the close relationship between rug making and tapestries. The Khilim, the oldest rug, is woven like a tapestry. This rug, having no pile is fragile, and seldom lasts over a hundred years.

Th making of pile rugs began in the 16th century. Children are employed at a very early age and often work from dictation. The principal characteristics and points of interest and value in the different makes of Oriental rugs, including the Persian, which are the finest. Those of Asia Minor, of which the Prayer rug is the most noted; the Caucasian; the Turkoman; the Indian, showing the Persian influence; and the Chinese, a number of which have been found since the Boxer revolution, were described.

Miss Sherer's talk was illustrated by the use of the stereopticon and followed by a tour through the galleries where she explained in a most charming manner, even more fully the points of her lecture, using as examples the fine speciments of tapestries and rugs in the possession of the Museum.

The afternoon was both delightfully and profitably spent as it stimulated a new interest in one of the greatest arts the world has even known.

OPERA "MARTHA" IS SUNG IN ENGLISH

Splendid Concert by Boston Grand Opera Singers at Kincaide's Theatre

Solo Dancers Charming and Added Variety to Program

Vaudeville and moving pictures gave way Friday night at Kincaide's theatre for grand opera and the theatre was filled with a large and representative audience of society and musical people. Preceding the opera there was a concert program by Boston Grand opera stars and ballet.

The concert program was of eight numbers as follows:

Celeste Aida, "Aida" Verdi
M. Luigi Mainiero
Habanera, "Carmen" Bizet
Mlle. Ernestine Gauthier
Aria, "Simon Boccanegra" Verdi
Edgar Littleton
Duet, "Andre Chenier" Giordano
Mme. DiGabbi and M. Gatti
Aria, "I Puritania" Bellini
Mlle. Evelyn Parnell
Group of English Songs
Mr. Littleton
Vesti la guibba, "I Pagliacci" Leoncavallo
M. Mainiero

Mlle. Parnell

The artists were in fine voice and had the audience with them from the opening number, each being warmly received and appreciatively encored, responses being demanded and generously given by each artist throughout the program. Not only were the devotees of music enthusiastic but the whole audience seemed delighted with the soloists.

The solo dancers from the Boston Opera House were charming and added variety to the program presenting the wonderful "Dance of the Hours" from Gioconda and excerpts from Silvia and Copelia making three changes of costume and dancing with grace and abandon. The dancers were Misses Patten, Ramsdell and Cooney.

Interest centered in the opera Martha by Flotow, the second act of which was given being sung in English by Mme. Di Gabbi, Mlle. Gauthier, M. Gatti and Edgar Littleton. It was well done, the artists making the most of the tuneful score, showing a flexibility, quality and range of voice that can only be found in the finished singer of grand opera. "The Last Rose of Summer" by Mme. Di Gabbi was of course one of the gems and appreciatively applauded as was the well known Good-Night quartet.

The verdict was that it was a delightful evening. The program was pleasing and the soloists were wonderfully good, far beyond what Quincy audiences are able to hear without going to Boston. The management of Kinacide's theatre shows enterprise in bringing to a Quincy audience such an array of talent, every one an artist with a reputation and it must be pleasing alike to artists and management to have had such a large and enthusiastic attendance as filled the theatre last evening.

HONOR NATION'S DEAD.

John E. Foss.

Our flags are at half mast today
For those whose blood did flow
To save unstained that dear old flag,
Way down in Mexico.

No more they'll hear the screaming shot
When foes their band outnumbers;
No more the bugles wild alarm,
Will wake them from their slumbers.

Back to their native land they came,
With all the honors due,
Their caskets wrapped in that old flag
The red, white and blue.

In consecrated ground we lay,
Their mortal clay to rest,
Green are the sods that tender hands
Lay on their manly breast.

And here we leave their mortal clay,
That held our love and trust,
Beneath the flag for which they died
To join their kindred dust.

Down through the long decades of time
That's sure to come and go,
May freedom's flag wave there unstained,
O'er their dust that lies below.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

KATZENJAMMER KIDS BACK.

"Oh, joy of all joys!"
They're coming back.
Who?
The Katzenjammers!

You'll see them in next Sunday's Boston American—right where they ought to be—in the Comic Supplement. Believe us, "dose boys" will be right on the job next Sunday and for unnumbered Sundays to come, piling up trouble on der Captain's bald head, ever scheming new plots for his discomfiture and not at all awed by the retribution that's sure to come in attic or woodshed or wherever der Captain happens to nab them.

From one end of New England to the other, all over the continent, the Katzenjammers are known. As they say of the British flag, the sun has never yet set on the fame of the greatest of mirth-provoking, joy-producing comics.

"Oh, joy of all joys!"

Yes, the Katzenjammers are with us. So order your Boston Sunday American right now from your newsdealer. Better do it now, or you will regret it when the paper man tells you he's "sold out" of Sunday Americans.

WON IN THE FIRST INNING

Brockton High Finds Quincy High Team Easy

Quincy High lost its ninth consecutive game to Arthur Staff's Brockton High boys at Merrymount Park Friday afternoon, 8 to 2. The game was practically won in the first inning when a three bagger and three singles netted the visitors four runs. After the sixth inning they played indifferent ball.

Bates featured in the field for Quincy and Johnson for Brockton. The visitors had no difficulty in finding Martin, the Quincy pitcher, while Burbank of Brockton allowed but five hits.

Bogigian, Brockton's third sacker, was obliged to retire from the game when a pitched ball struck him on the eye. His injury is not serious.

Quincy could have held the score closer if it had not been for errors, five costly ones being credited to their infield. The summary:

Brockton	4	2	0	1	0	1	0	0	0	—8
Quincy	0	0	1	0	0	1	0	0	0	—2

Runs made by Kullman 3, Riordan, Carroll, McGrath, Bogiogian, Burbank, Larkin, Martin. Two-base hits Kullman, Martin. Three-base hits, Riordan, McGrath. Base on balls, by Burbank 2, by Martin 2. Struck out, by Burbank 7, by Martin 4. Time 2h. 15m. Umpire, LaRose.

MAY PARTY AND DANCE

The Junior Order of Moose held its second May party and dance in Alpha hall on Friday evening with a good attendance. Among the guests were Governor Albert J. Williams of their lodge, Dictator William Norrie of the Quincy lodge of Moose and members of the Quincy circle of Lady Moose.

The floor was in charge of Steven Umina and Eugene Neal was his assistant. Oscar Frisk, Jr., was chief of aids and the aids were Philip H. Martin, William Williams, Fred O'Brien, James Manning and R. Walfred Nordquist.

UNIVERSALIST MISSION CIRCLE.

Fifteen members of the Quincy Universalist Mission Circle met Monday with Mrs. Merrill C. Ward at Jamaica Plain. Two new members were received and some Jamaica Plain ladies who attended the meeting became so interested they decided to form a Mission Circle there.

Mrs. R. C. Reed read an instructive paper on "Immigration" which showed the missionary opportunity to help the aliens who come to our shores. Ice cream was served after which the party walked from Greenough avenue through Arnold Arboretum to the Forest Hills station where the train was taken for home. The weather was fine and the trip greatly enjoyed.

ST. JOHN'S DAY.

Quincy Commandery, Knights Templars, are planning for an outing to be held in honor of St. John's day in June. The arrangements are in the hands of the council. It is probable that the outing will be held at one of the summer resorts along the South Shore and that the trip will be made by automobiles. The details of the outing will probably be announced Monday evening at the regular conclave of the commandery.

—The Isles of Shoals meetings will be held from July 12 to 27 inclusive.

DEDICATION AT BRAINTREE

New Memorial Hall for the Grand Army

In the presence of a large audience consisting of the members of the four allied patriotic societies of Braintree and their guests, the new memorial hall in the Town house was dedicated last evening. When the Town house was designed, this hall was planned as a meeting place for Post 87 G. A. R. and as such has been given to the Post by the Town for as long as they shall need it. By an agreement the other patriotic orders are also allowed to meet there.

Commander William L. Gage of Post 87 welcomed the audience to the new quarters in a short but appropriate speech. Henry A. Monk, a past commander of the Post read its history which contains many interesting facts. John M. Woods of Somerville, department commander of the Massachusetts G. A. R. delivered a short but witty speech in which he congratulated the local veterans on their new quarters and incidentally praised th ladies.

Victrola selections followed and Colonel A. C. Drinkwater who was one of the prime movers in having the hall incorporated in the plans gave a most interesting talk. Other speeches were made by Mrs. Laura I. Smith president of the Woman's Relief Corps for the department of Massachusetts and Wilfred A. Wetherbee, Assistant Adjutant General of the department of Massachusetts G. A. R. There were more victrola selections followed by the presentation of a street parade flag to Post 87, the gift of Antietam Camp No. 32, Sons of Veterans and S. of V. Auxiliary No. 16.

The presentation speech was made in a pleasing and graceful manner by Irving N. Holbrook, chaplain of Camp 32, Mrs. W. J. Loring, president of Corps 94, W. R. C. then stepped forward and in behalf of the members of the Corps presented to Post 87 a check for fifty dollars. For both of these gifts, Commander Gage responded for his comrades briefly but feelingly.

Commander Gage then read a letter from the Braintree A. A. officials inviting the members of the patriotic orders to attend the flag raising on the Hollis playground next Saturday afternoon. President Elmer E. Abercrombie of the Braintree A. A. was then introduced and his remarks which were followed closely by his auditors dealt with patriotism and the Mexican situation.

There were more speeches by Councillor Ring of the Massachusetts Division, S. of V., Mrs. Waters, Senior vice president of the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary of Massachusetts and Mrs. Carrie I. Loring, Dpartment inspector of the Massachusetts W. R. C. Others seated on the platform but whom for lack of time were not called upon, were Ralph L. Wiggin, superintendent of schools, Captain James T. Stevens and John Kelley. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served in the banquet hall.

Th committee of arrangements was as follows: Hon. James T. Stevens, chairman, Henry A. Monk, Edwin L. Curtis, William J. Tirrell, Solon David, William L. Gage and Henry B. Whitman.

UNIVERSALIST CONVENTION

Year of Religious Enthusiasm and Increased Activity

A representative gathering, including delegates, from the church, Mission circle, and Sunday School, of the Quincy Universalist church, attended the Universalist State Convention at Wakefield, and returned with an inspiring report of the work of the denomination:—

The past year, has witnessed an improvement in the work of the Sunday School and the money raised for its work has largely increased. Through the General Universalist Sunday School Association, superintendents have been appointed for every department of its work.

The church membership has increased, so that in the denomination, eight hundred members have been received thus far this year more than had been received a year ago at this time.

The State superintendent reported that the regular contributions to the finances of the local churches had increased by a third, and the methods of work are growing more efficient.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to the Women's Missionary Society. The past year has been one of religious enthusiasm, and increased activity. A detailed account of the work, would prove interesting.

The National secretary, Mrs. Theresa Homet Patterson, told of her recent visits to our Missionary stations in Japan and North Carolina. She spoke especially of the Japanese girls in Blackmer Home, the kindergarten work in Tokio and the beautiful death of Yoshire Ochiai, who had known nothing of Christianity, until under the education of Miss Agnes Hathaway, one of our most consecrated missionaries in Blackmer Home.

Mrs. Patterson gave an intimate picture of the homes in the beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina, of the oppositions, and the welcome given to the Universalist faith in the "victory of God, in every life." We are supporting three pastors there.

One new church has been built the past year. Besides several people, and causes, which have been aided, the society have established a fund, for several scholarships in Jackson College and when ever it has been possible, have worked with other denominations, finding increasing opportunities for such fellowship.

Prof. Walter Rauscenbusch, the eminent prophet of Social Service work today, was the closing speaker. As a loyal Baptist, professor of church history, he paid a high tribute to the Universalist church, which he said: "Was a necessary organized effort to redeem the conceptions of God from unchristian things other sects had taught."

A pleasing feature of the convention was the fraternal spirit, exhibited by the other churches, Congregational Episcopal and Baptist houses were freely opened to Universalist guests. As the Universalist church was needed for the convention, the Wakefield Congregational church, which has one of the most complete, beautiful and costly edifices in the state, threw open its spacious dining room, ample rest rooms, useful kitchen, gave the free use of its attractive china, engraved plates and fine table linen also contributing fresh flowers for the tables throughout the convention.

The Congregational State Convention in session at the same time in Taunton sent a delegate the Rev. Austin Rice, to personally express their "Fraternal greetings, and best wishes, to the Universalist State Convention."

In return, The Universalist State Convention, sent, by telegram: "Unbounded good will and best wishes, for the prosperity, of our Congregational brethren."

Such courtesies, mark a new, era, in church history.

Delegate to the Universalist State Convention

LAID ON TABLE.

A petition of a Cohasset druggist for a sixth class liquor license has been laid on the table indefinitely by the Board of Selectmen. Three weeks ago the remonstrants were given a hearing and clergymen and prominent citizens made a vigorous protest. Selectman William Souther voted against laying the petition on the table.

—"The moving picture industry has come to stay. It is for the best citizens of each community to desire and secure its educational value and possible moral uplift. This graphic form of presentation has great possibilities."

PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Burke Arrives at New York From Colon and Surrenders

New York, May 23.—John Burke, whom Colonel Goethals suspended as head of the commissary department in the Panama Canal Zone, surrendered himself to the federal authorities upon his arrival here from Colon, and pleaded not guilty to indictments charging him with accepting gratuities from dealers in supplies in Panama.

Bail was fixed at $24,000, which was furnished by a surety company. Judge Hand set June 8 as the date for Burke's trial to begin. The defendant meanwhile will have opportunity to change his plea.

GRAFTERS PLEAD GUILTY

Several British Army Officers and Eight Civilians Took Bribes

London, May 23.—A plea of guilty was handed in by seven of the nine British army officers and all the eight civilians charged with receiving and giving illicit commissions in order to influence the allotment of contracts for supplying army canteens.

All the officers except Lieutenant Colonel Whitaker were connected with the quartermaster's department of the army and had risen from the ranks.

The civilians accused were employes of the Lipton firm. The bribery had been going on for years. Sentence was deferred until May 25.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

The Portuguese republic has barred the importation of all merchandise bearing crowns and other royal insignia as trade marks.

The kaiser issued a secret order forbidding army and navy officers to obtain wives through matrimonial agencies.

Felipo Caudio raced ahead of five shots fired by an irate husband at New York, jumped a fence to safety, then died of fright.

Peter Mullins, helping unload elephants at Jersey City, got in the way of a crated elephant and it fell on him. He may recover, although his injuries are serious.

Rudolph Tombo, Jr., associate professor of Germanic languages and literature at Columbia university, died at New York after a long illness.

PUT UNDER BOND

His counsel asked why he did not go to work Thursday, and he said he was afraid.

Patrolman Dhooge said when he sighted the crowd they ran. To the Judge he explained the location of the place the alleged assault occurred and said a team, hid his view partially and men could have run away without his seeing them.

David Gilman, another leading man said he did not see the fight. When asked if he had ever been threatened the question was ruled out by Judge Avery.

Counsel Levovitch asked if he had told anyone he would not come to court because he was afraid, but that he knew all about it, and the answer was, no sir.

Judge Avery inquired if he had been told to come to court, and Gilman, after answering no, said a man had held him up and told him not to go to work and that he thought it was one of the three defendants.

Howard objected to the testimony on the grounds that it had no bearing on this case and he was sustained.

He then asked witness if he had heard bosses have been in the habit of keeping back pay of the men, but he dropped this line of examination.

Joseph Richman, another leading man, was a reluctant witness. He admitted after many questions that he saw one of the defendants and Dubrow fighting, and both hit each other. He denied seeing the start of the fight.

In cross examination he said he saw the defendants in the crowd but saw them holding no one up.

Mrs. J. Matofsky of Sumner street was dismissed from the stand after 15 minutes examination in which no information was gained. Counsel for complainant said witnesses were intimidated and Judge Avery stated that they said they were not.

Mrs. Ida Kaufman, another government witness, said all she saw was a crowd but did not have time to stop and therefore could tell nothing.

Oscar Greenburg and Ike Barreck said that although they were in the company of Dubrow when he claims he was assaulted, they knew nothing about it.

Judge Avery here asked counsel for the complainant if he had examined his witnesses, and was told that he could not get them to court without the assistance of the police. The story is around, he said that they were intimidated and now they will not admit it.

Judge Avery then said, if you find these witnesses are not telling the truth, there is another course to pursue, and if they do not tell the truth they must take the consequences.

Dubrow was recalled and said Mrs. Metofsky saw everything and volunteered to testify as a witness, and was asked to come. Also that Barreck and Greenburg were beside him when he was assaulted.

He was asked by Judge Avery if he was afraid he would be hurt and if he would be afraid of the men if he went to work and Dubrow said "sure."

Howard then asked Dubrow if he was aware that petty bosses in most strikes are afraid of the men, but received no answer.

Constable Bradley testified that he was called to Dubrow's house by telephone, and that the complainant had a slight swelling on the jaw that might have been the result of a blow, but told Howard he did not know how the blow could have been received. Chief Burrill also stated he saw swelling on Dubrow's face that might have resulted from a blow.

Howard rested his case about four o'clock and said he did not feel the need of putting the defendants on the stand, and that the case looked like an attempt to discredit the strikers.

Judge Avery said if you care to, you may put the men on the stand and Howard answered "we shall rest."

Judge Avery said then I shall find these men guilty and impose fines of $10 each and order them to furnish sureties of $200 to keep the peace for two months, and especially toward the complainant.

Howard entered an appeal and asked to have the sureties reduced but this was not granted.

A SINGULAR CRIME

And as Singular a Method of Punishment

By EDITH V. ROSS

Tom Arnold was one of those boys who are so full of animal life that it is hard for them to control themselves and impossible for their parents to control them. It became evident to Tom's father that since his son was bound to sow his wild oats he had better have plenty of scope. So when the boy was seventeen his father sent him to what was then the wild and woolly west. Before he was nineteen he had been on different occasions when important work was to be done made deputy sheriff and when he was twenty received the appointment to that office. His tastes not being in the line of money making, he did not accumulate this world's goods, but this was of little consequence, for his father was well off.

When Tom was about twenty-five years old he had exhausted the novelty of the life he led and concluded to make a favorable reply to the many letters his mother had written him to return to civilization for a visit if he could be contented to remain.

On his way east Tom passed through a small town where he was obliged to stop over a day. This stop was fatal to his return—at least, at that time—for another motive than danger detained him. A traveling company consisting of acrobats, tight rope dancers, trained dogs and such like performers was also passing through the town and gave an exhibition during the afternoon and evening. Tom to while away the time attended the show in the afternoon.

There was one number on the program that interested Tom especially. Edward and Blanche Withrow, a young man and his sister, gave a performance in rifle firing, the brother sending a bullet through an apple resting on the girl's head. Whether it was because such a feat was in Tom's line or that the girl was very pretty or that he feared for her life probably

IT LOOKED FOR AWHILE AS IF THE OFFENDER WOULD BE LYNCHED.

Tom himself could not have told. All he knew about it was that he was fascinated.

When the evening performance came on Tom was again in the audience. He waited patiently through the other stunts, and when the rifle shooting commenced it was evident that this alone interested him. When the young man was preparing to fire Tom watched him intently; when he was aiming Tom breathed hard, and after he had fired till it was evident the girl had escaped injury Tom held his breath.

The next day Tom proceeded on his journey in a stagecoach, the performers going in the same direction in their own wagons. The latter stopped at a town to give a performance, and Tom stopped too. From that time for a week he followed the company; then something happened.

At an afternoon's performance preparations were being made for the rifle feat, when Tom was blinded by an instantaneous flash. Happening to turn his eyes to a dark corner of a gallery, he saw a man, and above him on the ceiling, for a moment only, danced a spot of sunlight. Then the man put something in his pocket. Others in the audience seemed to have been troubled by the flash, but only Tom knew whence it came. He felt sure the man in the gallery had caught the sunlight on a hand mirror. But all, including Tom, were intent on the main feat of the show that was coming and thought nothing of the flash.

The girl having been placed against an upright board with her face to her brother, he took his position, aimed, as usual, with great care and fired. A dazed look came over his sister, and she clasped her left arm with the hand of the right. Unloosening her grasp for a moment, she looked at it. There was blood on it. Her brother threw down his rifle and ran toward her. Both were very pale.

A great deal went through Tom Arnold's brain in a very few moments. His experience in gun practice told him that something had disconcerted the marksman. He saw the man he had noticed in the gallery get up and go out. Then it occurred to Tom that the marksman had faced the gallery in which this man had sat. The culmination of all these things was a feeling of certainty that the man had thrown a ray of sunlight into the performer's eyes just as he was about to pull the trigger.

The audience were intent on the girl, who had evidently received a wound in the arm, but Tom Arnold, full of a burning desire to punish the man who had committed the outrage, arose from his seat and hurried out to the door. There he met the man, moving rapidly, evidently desirous to get away.

"What's your hurry?" asked Tom.

"None of your business," said the other.

Tom went close up to him, thrust his hand into an outside coat pocket and took out a little round mirror with a metal back. The man paled. Tom ordered him to go back into the hall. The man demurred, but the cold muzzle of a revolver against his temple brought him to terms. Tom marched him down an aisle close to the stage, or, rather, the platform. The curtain had been rung down, and the audience were discussing the accident. Facing them, Tom said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I am handy with the gun, and that you shall not be disappointed in seeing an exhibition of such skill I would be pleased, if you desire it, to give you one."

The shouts that greeted this offer left no doubt that it was very acceptable.

Tom took the man he had captured up a short flight of stairs on to the platform and behind the curtain. He found a commotion which he quieted and repeated his offer to the manager, who acquiesced. Tom spoke a few words of sympathy to the young performer and his sister, and the curtain was rung up. Tom and his captive standing in the wings.

"What are you going to do?" asked the man.

"Shoot an apple off your head. Proceed."

The man sidled on to the platform. Tom motioned to the manager to stand him against the board and put an apple on his head. Then Tom, drawing his own revolver, took aim at his victim. Several minutes elapsed before a shot was fired owing to the target's unsteadiness, for he seemed on the verge of collapse. Finally Tom told him that if he didn't brace up and stand still he was liable to get a bullet in his brain. This steadied him. Tom fired and pierced the apple, which the manager held up for the inspection of the audience.

Then Tom, taking a silver half dollar from his pocket, handed it to the manager, telling him to put it on the man's head. When it appeared that Tom was intending to shoot the coin some of the audience protested, while others shouted to him to proceed. Stepping to the footlights, he told them that the wounding of the girl was not an accident, but had been produced by this fellow throwing a ray of sunlight into her brother's eyes. Then Tom held up the mirror.

It looked for awhile as if the offender would be lynched. Indeed, several men started up to the stage for the purpose, but Tom, who had a revolver in his hand, drove them back and claimed the privilege of punishing the culprit himself.

At the next shot the half dollar was knocked into the air, fell and rolled over the floor.

Tom now asked the audience if he had not better turn the man over to the sheriff, since he was so limp that he was not fitted for a target. Some cried "Yes," some "No," while others cried "Shoot him down!" But Tom had some time before suggested to the manager to send for an officer to make the arrest, and the sheriff having arrived and learned the circumstances walked on to the stage and took the man away amid howls from the audience.

Tom now went back to the room used in common by the company to find that a doctor had dressed the girl's wound, and she and her brother were waiting for a conveyance to take her to a hotel. The brother thanked Tom for bringing his enemy to justice, and the wounded girl looked a gratitude that was more pleasing than words. Tom drove to the hotel with the two, and before they retired he was put into possession of the man's reasons for his inhuman action.

He was a rough character who had followed them, endeavoring to thrust his attentions on the girl. She had snubbed him, and her brother had told him that if he did not let his sister alone he would take measures to force him to do so.

Both Tom Arnold and the company of players were detained in the town till their depositions could be taken down, and they were required to return for the trial. The man was convicted and sentenced to state prison for a term of years. Meanwhile Tom had returned to civilization, but not fancying city life his father furnished him with the means to return to the west. The Withrows never gave another performance after the one in which the sister had been wounded. The brother having by it been deprived of his nerve for the feat and the sister not again daring to have him try it. Arnold kept in touch with them and when he established his ranch took Withrow into his employ. It was not long after this that Tom married Blanche and found it much easier to settle himself as a married man than as a single one.

SPEECHES IN ALL LANGUAGES

Another Strike Possible at the Fore River

The I. W. W. members of Quincy taxed the capacity of Wilson's hall Friday evening to hear Joseph Ettor, their national leader address them but he failed to appear.

Among the business considered was the strike of the reamers and bolters up of the Fore River shipyard. Caleb W. Howard, the local organizer stated after the meeting that there was nothing to give out in connection with the plans of the strikers.

All nationalities were represented and speeches were delivered in all languages.

This morning, although extra police guard was established in the vicinity of the shipyard there was hardly need of them and last night extreme quietness reigned in the district where the strikers live.

Caleb Howard informed the newspaper men after the meeting that it is the purpose of the men to conduct an orderly strike and that he is certain there is no occasion for the fears expressed by the officials of the company who complained to Mayor Miller that their police protection was insufficient.

Peaceful picketing continued at the gates this morning but there was no infractions of the law. The men are firm in their determination to continue their strike and emphatically state that within a few days the suspension of work in their department will materially effect progress toward the launching of the Atlantic on next Thursday. It is understood that the company will make no concessions.

SPORT NEWS

George Barry of this city who has been with Lowell caught his first game Thursday for Taunton in the Colonial league. He made two base hits, three putouts and two assists and scored three of the runs which helped defeat Woonsocket 5 to 4. Barry would have remained with Lowell if either Wacob or Greenhalge two veterans, had been dropped. Frank Hoyt of Atlantic is on first for Taunton and is playing good base ball. From the encouraging reports in the Lowell papers about Barry it would not be surprising if he became the Colonial league star.

Michael Kiley, at a meeting of the directors of the West Quincy league, announced that he had resigned as manager of the St. Mary's team. The directors voted to buy uniforms and all will appear spic and span on Memorial Day, the opening date.

Frank Gillis has not completely recovered from the effects of an operation. He is coming back slowly but does not possess his usual pep when crossing them over from third. A minor operation several days ago should have a tendency to hurry up matters.

Theo Calvin who was obliged to quit Fred Lake's Fitchburg team in the New England league because of excessive footwork, is practically recovered and will play the early part of the season with Fore River.

CAMP IN QUINCY IS ABANDONED

Coast Artillery Not to Mobilize at Merrymount Park

Plans for the proposed mobilization of the New England Coast Artillery in this city have been abandoned and if required for service in Mexico they will be sent direct from their forts to New York and thence to Galveston.

This information was announced officially today from the quartermasters department of the artillery. It is the opinion of Col. Henry L. Hawthorne, who is in command that there is no immediate possibility of service and he has called off the gentlemen's agreement which existed between Mayor Miller, acting for Quincy which placed at its disposal Merrymount Park and Arthur Adams who offered the Mt. Wollaston farms.

All preparations were complete for the mobilization and the surveys made will be kept as a matter of record by the War Department in case it is ever necessary to drill the Coast Artillery as an infantry body.

APPOINTMENT OF FIREMEN

City Clerk Emery L. Crane announced this morning that Edward A. O'Neil, Miles Creamer and Murdock A. McDonald had been appointed as permanent firemen, to take effect May 25. These are the three firemen, the previous announcement of which a week ago resulted in the suspension of Chief Billings for three days.

ORDINANCE MAY BE ILLEGAL

Dealers in junk and the storage of the same are much interested in the outcome o fthree cases which were heard before the district court this morning. The cases were those of Joseph Cutler, Abraham Ginsberg, and Max Bernstein who were complained of by Chief Burrell for storing junk without first having obtained a license from the City of Quincy. Thomas Buttimer of Hingham appeared as a counsel for the three defendants and City Solicitor Pinkham for the government.

In opening Mr. Buttimer moved to quash the complaints on the ground that the ordinance was illegal, under the constitution. He spoke at length on his motion. City Solicitor Pinkham contended that the city had a right to regulate the collection and storage of junk. The cases went over again until next Friday while the court considers the points raised by counsel.

OPENING DANCE.

The opening dance of the Samoset Club, for members and young lady friends, was given in their new rooms on Newport avenue Friday evening.

The rooms consist of a pool and living room and a dance hall. In charge of the event were Max Pinkham of the house committee and Winslow Weston.

BOARD OF SURVEY

one, two and three years from the first of February, 1915, and thereafter the Mayor shall appoint annually one citizen to serve for three years, the City Engineer to act as clerk of the board.

Any person or corporation desiring to lay out, locate or construct any street in the city, shall before construction is begun submit a plan of the same to the board, so prepared as to show the method of drainage of the contiguous territory, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe. On the receipt of such plans with petition for approval, the Board shall give a public hearing thereon, of which notice shall be given by publication in a local newspaper. After the hearing the board may alter such plans and may determine where such streets shall be located, the widths and grades thereof and shall so designate on the plans. The plans shall then be signed by the members of the board and Mayor, whose refusal shall be a veto. The plans will then be filed in the office of the City Engineer.

The board may from time to time cause to be made by the City Engineer plans of such territory as they may deem necessary showing thereon the location of streets or ways, whether laid out or not, as said board shall be of the opinion the public requires, or will require, showing clearly the direction, widths and grades of each street or way, and may incur such expense therefor, not exceeding the amount of money appropriated by the city for the purpose. Before making such plans the board shall give a public hearing, said hearing to be advertised. After such alterations deemed necessary have been made in said plan they shall be approved, signed, marked and filed.

At any future time the board may make a new plan to take the place of the first plan approved, in the same manner as the original plan was prepared, which said plan shall be the official plan for future development.

The powers in this act do not abridge in any manner the powers of the City Council, but shall be in addition to the powers possessed by the Council.

After the passage of the act no street or way in the city shall be laid out, located anew, altered or widened, and no such streets or way, whether laid out or not, shall be constructed by any public authority except in accordance with the provisions of the act.

If any person or corporation shall hereafter open for public travel any private way, the location, direction, width and grades of which have not previously been approved in writing by the said board, then neither the city or any other public authority shall place any public sewer, drain, water pipe or light in, or do any public work of any kind on such way opened to public travel, contrary to the provisions of the act, provided however that the provisions shall not prevent the laying of trunk sewer, drain, water or gas main, if it be required by engineering necessities.

The act also gives the board, its officers or agents, power to enter upon any lands and make such examinations and surveys and place such monuments and marks as deemed necessary. Any person whose property is injured by such placing, who fails to agree with the city as to the amount of damages, may have them assessed and determined in the manner of land taken for the laying out of highways, on application at any time within a year after such entry or after the placing of said monuments or marks.

The act does not authorize the taking or condemnation of land, or to render the city liable for damages of any kind, except for entries and the placing and maintaining of monuments or marks, nor to authorize said city to lay out and construct any way located on any of the plans, until such way has been laid out as a highway under the provisions of the law.

It also provides that the city may from time to time appropriate such sums of money to be expended by the board, in carying out the provisions of the act, but no expenditure shall be made in excess of such apropriation.

GRAND ARMY AT SUNDAY SERVICES

Addressed in Morning by Rev. B. A. Willmott and in Evening by Rev. S. C. Lang

Better Appreciation Should Be Shown of Sacrifices of the 60's

Paul Revere post of the Grand Army of the Republic and United Spanish War Veterans, with allied patriotic orders, attended two Memorial Sunday services; in the morning at Bethany Congregational church, and in the evening at the Quincy Point Congregational church. At both churches they were cordially greeted and found the best seats reserved for them in the main aisle. Flags were conspicuous in the decorations, and the music was patriotic.

The veterans were particulary pleased with the address of Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, who said in part:

"After the bitterness engendered by the Civil war has been healed by time and the new sense of national unity, what value has Memorial Day to the young people of today? Are we merely to rehearse facts about which these men know more than we do? Shall we use this sacred hour to revive hate and sectional animosities? In this cancluary, dedicated to the worship of the Prince of Peace shall we glorify war? These things we shall not do.

But the nation, like the family, may have certain traditions which inspire the records of devotion to high duty bravely met, of sacrifice for the public good. With such records it is well to keep ourselves acquainted. The deeds of men who at the call of duty suffered and died form a national treasury, on which future generations draw for strength and inspiration for the new and serious tasks which confront them.

This memorial service should ever remind us of the cost of planting and protecting the institutions which we accept and enjoy as a matter of course. We do well to tell our young people, and those who come to us from foreign lands that freedom of all mankind beneath the folds of the flag did not happen by accident, like other and kindred institutions of freedom, it was the result of planning and struggling and immense sacrifices This day should tell to all at what a great cost freedom was purchased. These great privileges did not happen they were made to be. They were fashioned by the intelligence and toil of devoted men; they were protected by the sacrifice of men and women; they were tried by the plummet line of God's righteousness.

This Memorial Day should be a warning against the present cleavage of society on one side Capital on the other Labor; on one side the rich and the other the poor. This nation has had one lesson which should not be repeated, where American was pitted in battle against American, brother against brother. The growing class consciousness can only spell another such clash with consequent suffering.

In this great struggle which confronts us there should be but two sides, on one side the Anarchist, whether he be rich or poor: for the man who is hastening the day of strife is not the poor and ignorant Anarchist but the rich who obey law when it suits their convenience and defy law when it conflicts with their pleasure.

Whatever their standing socially or financially, the man who defies and spurns law is the foe of our institutions. If he is a native or or a foreigner it is the same test by which he must be tried.

On the other side of the conflict will be rich and poor; learned and unlearned; native and foreigner Protestant and Catholic; Jew and Gentile, all those who believe in the orderly development under the control of law. Who demand for all men rich and poor alike, without distinction, liberty under the restraint of law.

We must meet the future as you met the crisis in the Civil War, by sinking minor differences and artifical distinctions that we may rally to protect our institutions which you fought to preserve. The great ideals of social justice must develop in an orderly manner, and we must beware lest in our attempt to escape one evil, or by our lamentable division, we are plunged between tyranny which is as cruel as it is lawless.

Another fact your presence in this house of worship recalls to us is, that this nation was born through and preserved by, sacrifice. Women gave their sons, brothers and husbands that the nation might be preserved; men willingly gave themselves when their country like an august mother called to her sons for protection. And during days of peace we are apt to forget, that those institutions created and protected by the devotion of citizens, can only be preserved by the selfgiving of the young men and women of today.

Our large cities, whose misgovernment is so unworthy of our democracy, must be redeemed by the steady devotion of intelligent citizens to the public good. This country, like all democracies places the burden of government on the shoulders of every citizen, and you must teach the present generation that those great principles for which you men so valiantly contended, and you women so bitterly suffered, can only be kept intact as we understand their value, unite all good people for their protection, and spend ourselves for their improvement.

AT QUINCY POINT. ....

Rev. S. C. Lang of the Washington Street church spoke from the text to be found in Duet. 32:7 "Remember the days of old.....ask thy father and he will show thee, and thy elders, and they will tell thee." From a song of triumph in the scriptures.

He said Memorial Day is a day of sacred memory of the valiant deeds of the men of our country. As memory reverts to the deeds that have our nation great, there comes joy to the hearts of those who participated in these deed, and there is abundant ground to believe that their work was not worthless.

Memorial day brings sacred to our memory the sacrifice of 350,000 Union men who laid down their lives to preserve the republic; enforces the memory of those who have since broken ranks; recalls the work of the relief corps and the army of nurses.

The work of these days, fifty years ago, brings joy in the happy and united nation rapidly assimilating the adventurous of Europe; brought Pickett's charge of July 1913 with a greeting from the sword-hand; produces the abundance of application to enter the service now; and is kept sacred by the love of our youth for the flag, --a love so great that the Bible School of our Church today present the church with a beautiful silk flag for indoors, and a large bunting flag for the front of the church would urge the old men to tell their stories and spin their yarns, for the country wants to hear.

STRIKE BREAKERS JOIN STRIKERS

The first attempt of the Fore River Ship building Corporation to break the strike of the reamers and bolters failed this morning, when foreigners, said to have come from Philadelphia, refused to report for work when they learned a strike was on.

Nearly 45 were in the party and their trip from Neponset to the yard in a trolley car was made with a patrolman in the front vestibule. When they arrived some of the strike breakers were recognized by the strikers and acquaintances were renewed. Th situation was immdiately placed before them and they joined the strikers.

This morning a conference was scheduled between the management and a committee of the strikers, who will present, according to th local organizers, a demand that will include a minimum wage of $1.80 per day and time and a half for overtime.

This morning there was no disorder outside the gates, and to quell any disturbance that might have arisen a squad of patrolmen, in charge of Inspector Goodhue patrolled the vicinity.

A demonstration on Sunday morning alarmed the department however. It was brought about when 25 painters who came here to do some finish work on the Rivadavia left Solomon's boarding house for the yard to sign up so as to be ready for work this morning. During their absence the strikers were told they were strike breakers and they gathered outside the boarding house and refused to disperse when ordered by a patrolman.

He, rather than provoke trouble, asked for assistance, and the police auto was sent down with men rounded up at their homes. When they arrived the crowd broke up.

Sunday afternoon a mass meeting was held on a vacant field on Main street which was attended by nearly 350 men, women and children. The speaker was John Yanishive, the Russian organizer of the I. W. W. The strikers received their first financial support Sunday, when $25 was contributed by the Finish Socialist Party, the Labor League of this city, and a branch of the Socialist party of Boston.

HOODOO CAST ENTERTAINMENT

Dancing Party at Hancock Hall Enjoyable Affair

A dancing party was held at Hancock hall Saturday evening by those who participated in the cast for the recent production of "The Hoodoo" by the Loyal Ladies of Clan MacGregor No. 1. A number of friends and invited guests were also present.

Music was supplied alternately by J. Hilton Marr at the piano and a Victor Victrola. Modern and old fashioned dances were indulged in and it would be impossible to state which was most enjoyed, because everybody danced. Frappe was served between dances and ice cream and cake at intermission.

The dance orders were gems and displayed the art of Miss Ethel M. Schools. The "Frontispiece" of each contained a character sketch in water colors and was especially interesting to those who had taken part in "The Hoodoo," because the characters played by them were displayed on dance orders. The orders will make beautiful souvenirs.

Songs were rendered by Mrs. Margaret Gammon and Everett Clark.

Those present were the Misses Helen Mitchell, Ethel M. Schools, Annie Rose, Helen Schools, Margaret McIntosh, Jean Cramond, M . Robertson, Esther MacDonald, Margaret McLeod, Mary Summers, Ruth McLeod and Georgie Michael;Mrs. Mary A. Smith, Mrs. Henrietta Marr. Mrs. Josie Schools and Mrs. Margaret Gammon. CAHILL IS DISCHARGED

Cannot Act as Assistant Commissioner

Thomas Cahill, who for some weeks has been acting as "Assistant Commissioner of Public Works," received his discharge as such Saturday night. Up to the advent of the present administration Michael E. Shea had been employed as a general foreman. He was requested by the Mayor to resign but refused to do so. The question was definitely settled however by the Mayor abolishing the office. Later he created a new office known as Assistant Commisioner and Thomas Cahill was appointed provisionally under the civil service rules.

A civil service examination was held, at which Cahill failed to pass. The Mayor however desired to keep Cahill, claiming that he was a first class man in every way. The Mayor asked the Civil Service board for a hearing which was granted, after which the Commissioners ruled that as there was an eligible list the position must be filled from that list. There was no other alternative for the Mayor but to discharge Cahill, and he severed his connection with the office Saturday night.

Mayor Miller when asked this morning if Cahill had got through replied that he had. In reply to further questions, the Mayor said that no one had been appointed to fill the position and he did not know when he would appoint anyone. When asked if he had abolished the office the Mayor replied that he had not.

COMMENCEMENT SUNDAY

Rev. Dr. Murlin Speaks at Quincy Mansion School

Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock marked the beginning of the eighteenth annual commencement of the Quincy Mansion school. Lemuel Herbert Murlin, L. L. D. president Boston University delivered the sermon before the graduating class.

The exercises opened with singing "Jesus, lover of my soul." After the reading of the first chapter of Joshua, prayer was offered by Dr. Murlin.

Dr. Murlin took for his text part of the 26th and 27th verses of the 1st chapter of Genesis "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, so God created man, male and female created he them."

He said in part. "Of the sixteen hundred million that the United States government has invested in its educational plant, and the five hundred million paid out annually to run it, What's it all for, this vast sum? Is there a fair return for all the time, effort and money, the best of American life, our educational endeavor, our worthy ideal. Having it do we achieve that ideal, A fair and adequate return, worth while? We must give back to society for others. In the strife and battle of life we're not worthy our day and age, excepting we give back service. An education is a sentence to hard labor, not a life leisure.

Some reasons for a college education are that it gives polish, ease and address, self poise, control, power of adjustment, power of tact, social relations, vocational guidance, practical guidance, practical results. Those ends and aims, all good, are not adequate enough. We must take time to think, some people talk without thinking. How broad Be larger than our profession or it will be our master.

God that day worked good as a Creator. Crowning work was manhood. This is the great end, sustains them; is adequate reward; broadening and significant manhood; refining womanhood justify them.

To the class he said You are highly favored in the age in which you live. Your chance. Your youth. You are rich in kindness, opportunities and the future just before you; a generation so worthy of a glorious past and possible future. Be brave and strong. Going out in life do all you can to establish what is right. Hearts are pure, faithful and true, God's future will take care of you.

BOSTON GUESTS FOR LAUNCHING

The S. S. Atlantic Will Go Over at Noon

The launching of the S. S. Atlantic at the Fore River shipyard tomorrow is scheduled for just 12 o'clock noon. The launch will be witnessed by guests of the Emery Steamship Co., for whom the vessel is being constructed. They will leave Boston by special train at 11 A. M. which will be run direct to the yard. The sponsor will be Miss Dorothy Louise Emery, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Ralph S. Emery of the Emery Steamship Co. It is the first launching since J. W. Powell became president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, but the 113th in the history of the company since 1900.

The S. S. Atlantic, is the first of the duplicate vessels "Atlantic" and "Pacific" building for the Boston Company She is a steel screw steamer and constructed with machinery aft, to the design of George Simpson, naval architect of New York city, and accorded the highest class in Lloyd's registry. The vessel is designed to carry lumber and general cargo between ports on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts via Panama canal.

The principal dimensions are as follows:

Length over all	405'9"
Length between perpendicular	388'0"
Breadth molded	31'8"

The vessel has a straight stem, semi-elliptical stern and a single steel upper deck, full poop, bridge house amidships and top gallant forecastle.

Accommodations are provided in the midship-house for the Officers and wireless operator with saloon, pantry, etc., and on bridge deck is the Captain's suite and chart room, with the pilot house over same.

The long poop encloses quarters for the firemen, seamen and petty officers and in the Liverpool house on the poop deck are arranged their quarters for the engineers, with officers and engineers' mess, gallery etc

The hull of thi vessel is of the single deck type with a deep double bottom for water ballast extending all fore and aft from collision bulkhead to collision bulkhead. The cargo Spare is subdivided by transvuse W. T. bulheads into three cargo holds each operated by large twin hatchways fitted with DeRusset patent covers. The cargo holds are exceptionally large and practically free from obstructions, the only pillars fitted being one in the middle of each hold. The vessel is therefore well adapted for carrying lumber or bulk cargo such as coal, grain, etc. The inner bottom plating has been made exceptionally heavy to withstand the bumping of grob-buckets.

C. H. Johnson of this city will take a prominent part in the Unitarian meetings that are to be held in Boston this week, Anniversary week.

SHALL BRIDGE BE BUILT?

It is questionable whether the city should take the initiative and stand the expense of a bridge across the railroad at the Norfolk Downs station, as proposed by the order adopted without debate in the City Council this week.

When the four track system is established it will be necessary for the railroad to provide a subway or a bridge, both at Norfolk Downs and Wollaston.

There has been talk of a bridge over the tracks at Norfolk Downs for some time, the general idea being that a bridge after the style of that over the tracks at Warren avenue should be built. Nothing definite however was ever done about it until the present time.

There are hundreds of people who cross and recross the tracks between Squantum street and Beale street every day, and with the frequent trains it is a wonder that more accidents have not taken place.

That a crossing over or under the tracks should be built is generally recognized, the only question is, should the bridge be at a point near the Norfolk Downs station or at a point nearer the Wollaston station?

BOYS VS. GIRLS.

A High school in another town in which the writer has a personal interest has just awarded its scholarship honors in a rather surprising way. Twenty pupils out of a graduating class of 52 receive special honors. Of the twenty, only four are boys, and the first thirteen are all girls.

Is this a wholly unique instance? It seems quite unusual. Yet it is probably true that the awards of school honors usually show the girls in the lead. What is the matter with the modern boy?

They will not shelter behind the plea that they lack mental ability. Many will say the boys are so engrossed with athletics that they do not give attention to their studies. Theoretically, the stress of games is supposed to sharpen wits, and the outdoor life and muscular training should keep them physically fit.

Success in athletics seems too terribly vital to the High school boy. When dwelling under the elation of victory, or depressed by the sting of defeat, his attention to his books must be perfunctory.

The school life of former days might be more studious, but there was little in it to develop initiative. The memory was stuffed with the deeds of Caesar and the verses of Virgil. The pupils submitted to lessons and heard instruction, but there was little real action in their work.

Today the boys promote enterprises of various kinds, athletic teams, entertainments, school papers, excursions, etc., not to speak of the many fellows that are working outside of school hours to help pay expenses. The boys need to hustle to equal the intellectual work of their sisters. If they don't they'll be sorry later. But even as it is, they are very active fellows, who are growing and doing things.

WILSON'S WORD TO MEDIATORS

Will Undertake to Pacify Mexico, Whatever the Cost

MYSTERIOUS MOVE BY VILLA

Falls Back to Torreon Instead of Going Direct to Saltillo, Just Evacuated by Federals and Occupied by Rebels—Urrutia on Way to United States—Plot to Slay Huerta Nipped In the Bud—Federals Expected to Give Battle Near Tampico Almost Any Time—Carranza Peace Delegates May Go to Niagara Falls

Washington, May 25.—Sensational details of an alleged plot to murder General Huerta in Mexico City, with the mysterious and sudden return of General Villa and 10,000 of his men to Torreon from Paredon, and the admitted uncertainties in the conference of the mediators in Ontario, causes greater confusion in the Mexican situation than has existed for several days.

President Wilson has taken a hand in the conference of the mediators, and important exchanges of views are going on between Niagara Falls and Washington.

One of the most important developments so far is the statement that the American delegates to the conference have instructions to inform the mediators that, if necessary, the United States will undertake to pacify Mexico by force. Everything is being done to eliminate this possibility, but the fact that it is believed to figure in the program of the American delegates, as a last resort in settling Mexican difficulties, is enough to give added importance to the exchanges now progressing.

There is continued high tension in army and navy circles at Washington, and the war and navy departments are keeping pace with every move in the kaleidoscopic situation south of the Rio Grande.

Confusing News From Mexico

Latest news from Mexico is confusing, and officials of the administration, while still maintaining a belief that further fighting can be averted, are uncertain what to think of Villa's move, which on its face would seem to be a retreat. Reports said within the last few days that Villa was going direct to Saltillo, which has just been evacuated by the Mexican federal troops and occupied by the rebels. That the rebel leader should turn back at this juncture and, with a large force, fall back to Torreon, is puzzling Washington officials and they are awaiting further advices to clear up the situation.

Officials are uncertain what move the federal forces will make following their evacuation of Saltillo, but it is presumed they will fall back toward Mexico City. Fighting around Saltillo has been severe, but the federals did not await a formidable attack by the whole rebel force.

Urrutia Leaves Vera Cruz

Aureliano Urrutia, formerly minister of the interior in General Huerta's cabinet, left Vera Cruz with his family on board the United States transport Hancock for Galveston. General Funston ordered his own automobile to convey the minister and his family to the pier, and the car oved between lines of marines with fixed bayonets.

The populace gathered along the route the minister was compelled to take from his hotel, the Diligencia, but the presence of the marines prevented any outbreak.

Several Mexican military officers are known to be in Vera Cruz, but it is said Funston has no authority to detain them. They are being kept under surveillance, however, by the Americans.

Plot Against Huerta

General Cuasque, inspector general of police in Mexico City, has been summarily dismissed and arrested as the result of the discovery of an alleged plot to murder Huerta. General Quiros has been appointed in charge of the police department, succeeding Guasque.

Rumors of the plot had been heard in Mexico City for several days, but the police under Guasque, it is said, had failed to discover those implicated. The secret service men, however, got an inkling of the leaders and soon communicated the facts to Huerta.

It is understood that more arrests in the plot against Huerta will soon be made. The leaders will probably be tried by a military court, and, if convicted, will be shot within twenty-four hours after sentence is passed on them. It is rumored that the conspirators had arranged to shoot down Huerta while he was entering the Colon cafe. Quiet now prevails in the city and there is not the slightest sign of disorder.

More Fighting Near Tampico?

Further fighting is expected soon near Tampico. General Zaragoza, the defeated federal commander of the garrison there, driven out of the city, is now almost in touch with the constitutionalists. Zaragoza, with his men, has halted sixty miles from Tampico, and is reported throwing up intrenchments.

The rebels are making every effort to drive the federals out of the oil district surrounding Tampico. General Caballero, governor of Tamaulipa, has sent 1100 soldiers into North Vera Cruz state to help the rebel forces in ridding that district of the federals. A battle is expected at almost any time.

President Wilson has the latest reports from Mexico before him, for they are carried to the White House as soon as received by Secretary Bryan and the heads of the war and navy departments.

Carranza Delegates Expected

It is now believed General Carranza will send delegates to the peace conference at Niagara Falls, although definite details of this move by the rebel chief are lacking. Mr. Bryan and John Lind, President Wilson's special adviser on Mexican affairs, are doing their utmost to persuade the constitutionalists to participate in the negotiations of the mediators.

Carranza is said to be willing to have representatives consult with the mediators, but, on the other hand, he does not want officially to enter the conference.

President Wilson is said to be pressing the conference for a definite basis of settlement of the troublesome land question in Mexico. This is recognized to be at the root of the revolution, and Wilson is using every means possible to bring about a more equitable division.

No very definite statement can be made as to what progress the mediators are making, but it is believed that an acceptable solution of the problems may be reached. Still, much will depend upon the personnel of any delegate sent to the Niagara Falls conference by Carranza.

Silliman Documents Safe

Almost together with the release of John R. Silliman, the American vice consul, by the Mexican authorities at the urget demand of President Wilson, word came that Silliman is ill in his hotel in Mexico City, suffering from a severe cold.

Silliman has reported that the documents, money and personal effects taken from him, following his arrest in Saltillo on April 21, have been returned to him. He said that the order for his arrest was issued by General Maas, at that time commanding the federals at Saltillo. Silliman said he was sent to the penitentiary and was well treated there.

FUNERAL OF JAPAN'S DOWAGER EMPRESS

Wonderful Procession Is Viewed by the American Colony

Tokio, May 25.—A million torches and lanterns illuminated Tokio last night when the body of Empress Dowager Haruko was borne through the streets in a beautiful funeral car drawn by white oxen.

Practically the entire American colony viewed the procession from various points of vantage. It is a rule that no Japanese subjects may look down upon a royal personage from elevated points, whether the royalties be dead or alive. In strict observance of this, every door and window above the first floors along the funeral route was closed and dark.

The ceremonies were the culmination of a series of services held daily since the official death of the empress dowager on April 11. Her actual death death occurred two days earlier at Numadzu, but tradition prescribes that no member of the imperial family can die outside the capital, so the body was conveyed to Tokio and driven smartly to the Aoyama palace in a closed prvate carriage. At the palace she "officially" died a few hours later.

Following the service of the "installation of the spirit," cannon thundered as the body was borne away to its last resting place.

COOK TO PUSH SUIT

Doctor Retains Boston Lawyer to Bring Action Against Peary

Boston, May 25.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook has a $35,000 suit against Rear Admiral Peary. The suit is an echo of those bewildering days when Cook vowed he discovered the North Pole and Peary swore he didn't.

Cook has always asserted that Peary took possession of the food and fuel the Cook party had placed at Annoatok, just before the final dash to the pole itself. He has retained a Boston lawyer to bring the suit. In the meantime Cook is endeavoring to find the admiral and attach whatever property he has in this jurisdiction.

DEATH LIST TOTALS SEVEN

Two More Army Aviators Killed In Prince Henry Cup Race

Osnabrueck, Ger., May 25.—Two more German army aviators, Lieutenant Otto Boder and Lieutenant Siegfried Reinhardt, met death in the Prince Henry flying competition, bringing the total since the start of the contest up to seven.

Boeder and Reinhardt were caught in a thunder storm, during which their aeroplane overturned and they were thrown out at a height of 4500 feet.

RESTORING MOST FAMOUS FLAG

Original Star Spangled Banner to Defy Test of Time.

WILL HAVE A NEW BACKING

Mrs. Amelia Fowler, Who Reclaimed 175 Trophy Flags at the Naval Academy, Called Upon to Save One 1,044 Square Feet In Area, Which Dates From Fort McHenry.

Under the able hands of Mrs. Amelia Fowler, whose work in the preservation of government flags has earned her the title of the most expert needlewoman in the country today, the famous Fort McHenry flag, the original star spangled banner, which has been disintegrating at an alarming rate in the old National Museum building in Washington, soon will be delicately sewed all over its 1,044 square feet of area, the largest of any battle banner in the world, and put in condition where it will defy the ravages of time indefinitely.

The initiative for preservation was taken by A. B. Bibbins, chairman of the star spangled banner centennial commission, and a conference with the museum authorities resulted in the summoning of Mrs. Fowler from Boston. With a number of her assistants Mrs. Fowler is now working on the tattered expanse of bunting in the so called chapel of the Smithsonian institution.

Colors Still Bright.

Stretched on long wooden tables, the historic flag, covering about half of the big room, awaits its backing of specially prepared linen—without which it could not support its own weight in hanging—and the deft needlework of Mrs. Fowler to restore its pristine glory. The colors are remarkably clear despite their long subjection to weather and sunlight.

Mrs. Fowler first gained fame by reclaiming the 175 trophy flags at the Naval academy from decay some years ago, a congressional appropriation of $30,000 having been made for this purpose. Some of these valuable banners had become piles of rags, but Mrs. Fowler put them in almost perfect condition.

"I judge that it will take six weeks to preserve the McHenry flag," said she. "We do not 'restore' the war banners, but put them in shape to defy the test of time. No effort is made to patch in missing pieces, but only to render the remainder of the flags durable and to bring out all the original colors and designs with silk thread sewing.

"The work might well be called hand tapestry. When I find the heraldic designs and figures almost obliterated I ascertain the original colors, match them in silks and stitch back the pictures.

"The chief difficulty I have encountered is to find some cloth with which to back the flags, for they must all be hung on some extremely strong and durable material. In the British museum I saw the famous Bayeux tapestry, which dates back to the time of William the Conqueror, and it is in perfect condition. It was backed with linen specially grown of long fiber and wonderful durability. Not satisfied with this, I observed the linen which was used to wrap mummies. As these swathings were 5,000 years old and still intact, I thought that I had before me about the best specimen of indestructible cloth ever known. Accordingly I ascertained the type of linen which the ancients employed for their dead, and since then have used this kind, which can be grown in limited areas of Ireland and Belgium. I think it the toughest cloth obtainable."

PREVENTING FOREST FIRES.

Rules That Are Applicable to the Summer Camper.

The supervisor of the Apache national forest, with headquarters at Springerville, Ariz., has issued to users of forest resources in his vicinity a letter enumerating precautions for the prevention of forest fires. In view of the approach of the camping season these are of general importance. The letter says:

Be careful with your campfire. Dig a pit for it or clear trash from all sides of it. Be sure your campfire is out before leaving it. Be as careful with fire in the forest as you would in your own home. Be sure your match is out before you throw it away. Matches have heads, but they don't use 'em to think with.

Knock out your pipe ashes and throw your cigarette or cigar stubs where they can't start a fire. Cigarette and cigar stubs have no heads at all. You must think for them. Would you put them in your pocket still burning? No. Then don't put them in the forest burning.

Unknown Land Explored Is Belief.

If Crocker Land, seen by Admiral Peary from Cape Thomas Hubbard in 1906, is a vast continent, as it has been supposed, then the world will know in the next few months. It is believed by Dr. Edmund Otis Hovey of the American Museum of Natural History and director of the Crocker Land expedition, that Donald B. MacMillan, head of that party, has reached his objective point and is now on his way back to Etah, Greenland, his base of supplies.

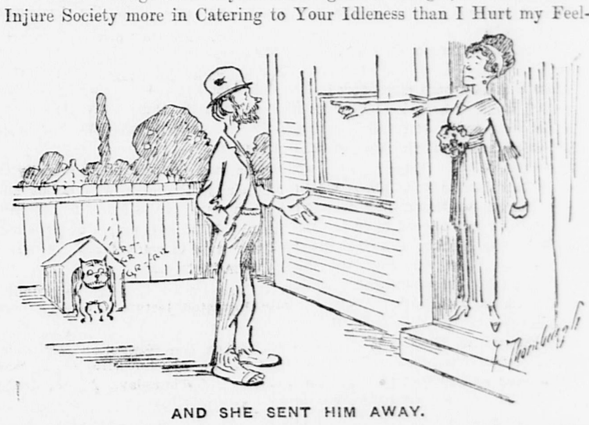
THE WOMAN WHO TOOK THINGS LITERALLY

There was once a Woman who Invited a Celebrated Scientist to Take Tea with her. After Tea a Beggar came to the Door and Asked for a Meal. She remembered the Last Page of the Celebrated Scientist's last Essay, and addressed the Beggar thus:

"While I Regret to see you Suffering from Hunger, I Realize that I Injure Society more in Catering to Your Idleness than I Hurt my Feelings in Refusing your intrinsically Vicious Request." And she Sent him Away.



AND SHE SENT HIM AWAY.

"Great Heavens!" cried the Celebrated Scientist. "It is Hard Enough for Me to act Thus, and I am Forced to in Order to be Consistent. But a Woman, whose Every Instinct should be Charity and Sympathy Incarnate—it is Disgusting!"

This teaches us that What is Sauce for the Gander may be Saucy for the Goose.

These reports showed the church to be in a good condition and received the commendation of the district superintendent.

Morning worship followed the conference at which time the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed, the pastor taking for his text the words of Jesus "This do in remembrance of me." The choir sang "When we gather in the Homeland," J. L. Martin, soloist.

The Sunday School met at 11.45 with an increase in attendance.

PARK AND DOWNS.

The Rev. G. W. Owens of Hyde Park occupied the pulpit at the morning service and his hearers were treated to a very interesting sermon. He took for his text, 2nd Kings, 6th chapter 16th verse. "And he answered: fear not; for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them." The speaker went on to demonstrate the power of God within us—as shown in the above language of Elisha to his servant. That, where the odds seemed overwhelmingly against them yet God was with them and his unforseen forces were at work for them—and as such he went on to portray these forces in the life of each human being. That life without God would be almost intolerable. That God is steadfast and all that is best in life. That God is enlisted for the right; and His will shall be done in all things. That all the nature of man is actually pledged for that which is good and true, nor can it be trampled under foot. That the courts of justice and law do not bring man's mind to the consciousness of wrong, but the small voice of God within them. Macbeth was not facing any court of law, but his own conscience was tormenting him hourly. This was God's work in him. That when a man begins to realize his wrong, his highest noblest nature asserts itself and shows him constantly those wrongs. That God does not always punish wrong promptly, but if we disregard His laws, His judgment surely comes upon us.

Mr. Owen is a man of very pleasing personality and his delivery fine. The evening service by the pastor Rev. William B. Ayers proved, as usual, attractive and interesting.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

The pastor, Rev. George M. Bailey, preached on Sunday morning, a most inspiring sermon from the theme "The ark of the covenant," and in the evening the subject was "Two silences," the silence of unobstructed growth, and of decay and defeat.

The speaker at the Epworth League service was Mr. Shoichi D. Morihira of Boston University, School of Theology, who gave an interesting address upon the religions of Japan and their willingness to receive the Christian religion. One of the characteristics of the Japanese is open-mindedness. They are eager to receive new ideas from the West, and now that the door to Japan is open, the people are easily won when religion is not presented as advice and theory, but carried in a helpful brotherly manner. In other words where the Christian people prove their religion by their daily life, and are willing to extend a helping hand to those in need.

The Epworth League will conduct the Thursday evening prayer service with Rev. F. H. Morgan as leader.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATONAL.

Good music by the quartette, made the Sunday morning church service especially attractive. The "Te Deum in C" by Buck, was sung in a way to delight all lovers of good music. The church quartette is composed of the following—Miss Ruth Hardy, soprano Mrs. Long, contralto; Mr. Rogers, tenor; and Charles Everett, basso. Miss Laura Archambault, the organist, adds much to the service by her efficient work as accompanist.

Dr. Sneath preached upon the subject "The Conquering Christ." He spoke of Christianity as a world-wide movement. A continuous conquering not a passing victory, but a conquest of time through all time. Caesar, Pompey, Napoleon and other generals—conquered by the use of the sword. They and their conquests have passed away but the conquering Christ, with the victory gained by self-sacrificing love, is to reign for ever and ever.

At the Senior Christian Endeavor missionary meeting there was an illustrated lecture on "The American Indian."

The last alphabet tea will be held at the home of Mrs. H. T. Whitman at 2.30 Thursday. All the ladies are cordially invited.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

The congregation at the Sunday morning service of the Wollaston Baptist church had the privilege of listening to a most inspiring and impressive missionary address by Rev. P. H. I. Lerrigo, M. D., district secretary of the American Baptist Home and Foreign Missionary Societies and the Publication Society. He said that the young missionary's first romantic enthusiasm is damped by time, but in its stead come certain fundamental ideas that are soon convictions. He chose three convictions as the basis of his address. (1) This world desperately needs Jesus Christ. (2) All men who do not know Jesus Christ, are infinitely worth saving. (3) The work will be accomplished by all working together.

Dr. Lerrigo also spoke before the Walther and Rand classes at 12. His first missionary work was done on St. Lawrence Island in Berhing strait and his many adventures while there offer fascinating opportunities for a most interesting address.

The Junior C. E. meeting was omitted and the children were invited to meet with the Seniors. The Leader was William Bartlett; the topic, "The Christian meaning of current events."

"What we are to Christ" was the subject chosen by the pastor for a brief talk at the evening service. There was music by the choir.

Thursday evening, at 7.45, the Elliot Woman's Home Mission Society, and the Nearer and Farther Lights Society will hold a public meeting in the hapel, in connection with the regular meeting for praise, prayer and testimony. Mrs. Arthur Pinkham of Watertown, will give a stereopticon talk on Spelman Seminary. An offering will be taken. A male quartette will sing and refreshments will be served at the social hour which will follow. Everyone cordially invited to this service.

Sunday evening, June 7, a Stereopticon Lecture on "A Century of Missions" will be given in the church.

Sunday evening, June 14, baptisms will take place. Those who desire to be baptized should see the pastor about it at once.

The national Baptist anniversaries will be held this year in Tremont Temple, Boston, June 17-25. Baptists are coming to attend these meetings from all over the Northern States.

The annual picnic of the Sunday School will be held June 13, at Glen Echo.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The beautiful duet by Mrs. Frank A. Page and Miss Ernestine Litchfield, the singing of the Girls' choir, the very helpful poem entitled "Give them the flowers now" read by the pastor, the devotional service, consisting of exhortation, Scriptural sentences, prayers, chants, responsive readings from the Psalms and the lesson for the day—all were in keeping with the message of the preacher based upon the text "Now is the acceptable time." II Cor. 62.

Rev. Mr. Horst in his opening remarks quoted one of Agnes Edwards' morning talks in the Boston Herald entitled "Funeral Flowers" and said "Now is the acceptable time," not tomorrow, nor next week, but now. Now is the time to express our appreciation and give our sympathy. There is no time like the present. If we have wronged any one, now is the time to right it. If we have hurt any one's feelings, now is the time to ask his forgiveness. If there exists a misunderstanding, now is the time to clear it up. If we have not given our heart to God, now is the time to do it. If we have not yet joined the army of the Lord, now is the time to unite with the church. Let us, therefore ,speak today the words that we shall wish we had spoken, before it is too late. Let us do the things we shall wish we had done and live such lives as we shall wish we had lived when God calls us to give an account of our stewardship. Do it now.

Many of our church people are planning to attend the Anniversary meetings in Boston this week. There will be daily morning prayer in King's Chapel at 9 A. M. and vespers in the First church at 5 P. M. The public reception will be held at the Hotel Somerset this morning. The Aemrican Unitarian Association meetings are held Tuesday the Y. P. R. U. meetings Thursdays, the Unitarian Temperance Society meeting in Park Street church Thursday, and the Sunday School meetings on Friday.

Rev. Carl G. Horst will be in Boston all the week and may be reached by telephoning to the American Unitarian Association, 25 Beacon street.

Rev. Thomas W. Davison, pastor of the Atlantic Memorial church, and Rev. Carl G. Horst will exchange pulpits next Sunday morning. There no doubt will be a very large congregation to hear the popular preacher of Atlantic, who occupies our pulpit next Sunday.

The delegates from our church to the May meetings are as follows: Unitarian Association, Rev. Carl G. Horst, Mrs. Frank A. Page, Hon. Engene H. Sprague Alliance of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women, Miss Harriet E. Turner, Mrs. William M. Burrell and Mrs. Aylmer N. Hatch; Young People's Religious Union, J. Harry Hooper, Miss Almira Simmons and Leon D. Browne; Sunday School Society, Mrs. A. H. Briggs, Mrs. E. N. Barstow and Mrs. V. J. Emery.

Parish House will be the important topic of conversation in the parish from now on. The Ladies Aid Alliance fair will be held in the new parish house in fall. All friends of the church are urged to help by liberal subscriptions to the Parish House fund.

The Norfolk Conference of Unitarian Church meets in Dedham, June 10.

Children's Sunday will be observed June 21. All who desire to present children to be christened please notify the minister.

Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening, June 26 and 27, will be held our annual June festival.

Rev. Carl G. Horst Sunday afternoon preached in the Church of the Unity in Randolph and addressed the Young People's Guild of North Easton in the evening.

Mrs. Mabelle Patch of Worcester is visiting Rev. and Mrs. Carl G. Horst.

MILTON CHURCHES

One of the largest congregations ever present at a church in Milton attended the consecration service of the Mission church of Our Saviour Sunday morning. The church was consecrated in the presence of Bishop Lawrence and the words which he spoke were beautiful. He spoke about what a church was for and why it should be consecrated. Music was given by the girls' choir. The document of consecration was read by Robert Sweeney. Those who assisted in the service were: Harry Brierly, Robert Sweeney and John Forde. The ushers were Benjamin Graham and Robert Sweeney, junior.

The annual memorial Sunday service was held Sunday morning at the First Parish church. The Huntington F. Wolcott Post 102 G. A. R., Col. Peaboly Camp, S. of V. and Emma Ware Tent D. of R. attended. The sermon was delivered by Rev. C. T. Billings of Lowell. The music was beautiful.

Memorial service were observed at the First Baptist church all day Sunday. The church was prettily decorated with American flags and bunting. In the morning the pastor, Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsum preached on: "Devout patriotism." A patriotic service was held in the evening when Commander Albert W. Mann gave an address on the civil war. At the Woodsum class, Commander Mann spoke on "Personal reminiscences" and there was a large attendance of men. The C. E. meeting was led by George Johnson and the topic was: "The Christian meaning of recent events."

At the evening service of the First Evangelical Church, Stacy O. Sears of Harvard spoke on: "Worship in song; a praise service."

RUN-DOWN FOR YEARS

STRENGTH RESTORED BY VINOL.

Strength and even life itself depends upon nourishment and proper assimilation of food, and unless digestion is good the whole body suffers.

Mrs. C. W. Busby of Moundsville, W. Va., says: "For years I was in a weakened, run-down condition, and I could not find anything that would help me Vinol was recommended and I tried it. Before I finished the first bottle I was better. I continued its use and am as well as ever. I have gotten several neighbors to take Vinol with the same result."

We know the great power of Vinol our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, in building up all weakened, run-down persons, and for chronic coughs, colds and pulmonary trouble and that is why we guarantee to return your money if it does not help you. TELLS HOW TO DESTROY THE MOSQUITO CROP.

Female of Species Does All the Biting, Says University Biologist.

"Among mosquitoes the members of the fair sex are fierce bloodsuckers, which inject an irritating poison into our skins, and they may accompany the dose of toxin with a few fever germs. The males lead a comparatively tame existence, subsisting on the juices of plants and fruits." So says a member of the University of Wisconsin biology department.

"The female mosquito gorges herself with blood in order that the eggs may have abundant nourishment. She deposits her little egg raft on the surface of quiet water during the night, and it floats there until the larvae hatch. The larvae are the 'wigglers' or 'wiggle tails' which are seen in ponds and rainwater barrels the world over. Though mosquito larvae always develop in water, they must breathe air and frequently come to the surface. After a few days the larva sheds its skin and becomes a big headed pupa, which rests at the surface until it splits up the back to allow the adult mosquito to emerge. This emerging business is a delicate operation which cannot be carried out successfully during windy weather. That is one reason why there are more mosquitoes on quiet evenings.

"The best way to get rid of mosquitoes is to destroy their breeding places, for the adults never fly far. This not only means draining swamps and filling in ponds, but gathering up tomato cans, putting netting over horse troughs and rainwater barrels and watching the eave troughs. If it is impossible to get rid of standing water near your premises oil placed on ponds will kill the larvae when they come up to breathe. Kerosene or any light fuel oil will serve for this purpose. About one ounce of oil will cover fifteen square feet. Applications should be made once a week."

CHICAGO'S "CENSUSETTES."

Adventures They Encounter Add Zest to Their Job.

Chicago's speediest school census takers are an eighteen-year-old girl who hops gates and fences and a married woman who "flips" freight trains, according to Stephen A. Ball, a supervisor of the census now under way, in which women are taking leading parts.

The girl mentioned is Miss Catherine Thomas. She is athletic, and obstacles such as high fences and gates do not prevent her from taking advantage of every possible short cut.

The fearless train rider is Mrs. Lillian Bokes. In order to avoid crossing a swamp she "flipped" a moving freight train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railway and rode several blocks, gaining the plaudits of track laborers and the station agent at Gresham.

In the list of experiences encountered by women census takers these are reported by M. T. Canary, an enumerator in the Ninth ward:

Mrs. Crystal Hixson was chased by a water snake she believed to be several feet long while making a short cut through a swampy field. The actual length of the snake is believed to be less than one foot.

Mrs. Norah Hardy was pursued by a large Brahma rooster when she approached a dwelling with a barnyard near by. She ran to a lamppost with the intention of shinning it, but the rooster withdrew, evidently on the theory that his attack was merely one of peaceful reprisal.

Mrs. Nellie MacMahon discovered in Mrs. Smoak a schoolmate of thirty years ago.

A BIRD OF A STORY.

Michael Debold of Gary, Ind., left a soot choked stovepipe on his lawn. A curious white pigeon flew into the pipe. His plumage was blackened. When he went home his immaculate mates, thinking possibly he was a crow, killed him. Then a rain came and washed the stained feathers white. Thereupon the other pigeons, of course, showed great grief over their tragic mistake.

CLARA TAKES FIRST RACE

Cape Cats Open the Q. Y. C. Racing Season

The Quincy Yacht club opened its racing Saturday with a race for the Cape cat class. There was a stiff puffy breeze blowing and the little boats were obliged to tuck in three reefs in order to keep from shipping too much water. Even then they took aboard considerable water and the racing was anything but ideal.

Dr. H. A. Jones came out with his new boat, the Almira, for the first time. The boat had not been in the water long enough to get water soaked and she leaked considerable. In addition to this her rudder did not work well and she was soon obliged to withdraw. Dr. Jones promises to have his boat in first class condition before the next race, however, and says that he will give some of the boats in the Cape cat class a rub The summary:

FORE RIVER TEAM WIN

Score 13 Runs to 8 For Quincy A. A.

The Fore River team of the Manufacturers league beat Quincy A. A. in the first of their series at Merrymount Park, Saturday afternoon 13 to 8. The game was an open one throughout and Fore River's victory was made possible through the use of a substitute pitcher, "Bull Moose" Brown by Quincy.

Brown, until last Saturday when he pitched three innings at Braintree for Quincy had never stepped on a rubber Although hit in bunches he maintained the coolness which has characterized him in all branches of sport in which he has participated. At times he lacked control of the ball and hit several of the winning team. He passed seven and allowed 12 hits.

In the fourth inning he was hit for four singles, passed one man, and hit another which resulted in Fore River batting around and scoring four runs. In the seventh he was unlucky, for Kane smashed out a homer and materially assisted his team in netting five runs.

Williamson, the second string pitcher of the winning team, allowed nine hits and fanned seven, while Brown fanned nine. Knight the regular was in center field. A playing feature was the catching of Wall and Bishop, their handling of the ball at all times being fast and clean.

The spectacular fielding features were contributed by Galvin and Nicol, the former scooping a drive in foul territory after the wind had carried it from a deep centre direction and the latter chasing and getting a bender over the brow of the hill in right.

Captain Bates of Fore River also spoiled Quincy's chance of scoring more than one run in the first when he juggled a hard hit ball and nailed Flynn at the plate for the third out.

The game was a good one to watch but a stiff sou'wester which blew clouds of dust across the field frequently blinding the players and spectators. The teams will probably cross bats again on the morning of July 4th.

Swain pitched the early part of the game and when his team mates secured a comfortable lead retired in favor of Ford who held East Boston in check. The season of the St. John's team has been a successful one so far. The score by innings:

WOOD PROTESTS HIS INNOCENCE

Charged With Murdering Peaslee In His Workshop

SAID TO HAVE MADE THREATS

Men Were Alleged Rivals For Affections of Woman Who Manages Father's Farm—Dramatic Inquest Into Death of Man Shot With Own Gun While Reading Newspaper

Henniker, N. H., May 25.—As the result of a dramatic midnight inquest into the death of Howard W. Peaslee, toy manufacturer and consulting expert for the state highway commission, who was shot in the head Friday evening while reading in his little workshop, Eugene Wood was arrested Sunday, charged with murder.

The authorities say Wood was Peaslee's rival for the affections of Miss Ida M. Barnes, who manages her father's farm here.

Wood steadfastly protests his innocence. At the inquest he was subjected to a grilling examination and replied to questions for the most part in monosyllables. He was the only witness, though two sons of the dead man were questioned by the officials independently.

The accused man was taken to Concord shortly after his arrest. He is about 40 years old and has lived in Henniker for the last year and a half.

Suspicion was directed toward him, the authorities say, because of threats made by him to the effect that there was "too much Peaslee" around Miss Barnes' farm. Wood was employed at the farm and Peaslee was an old friend of the family and called at the place often.

Despite his arrest, the inquest will be continued. Other persons, it is said, may have had an interest in Peaslee's death, and until Wood was arrested these were kept under surveillance.

When Wood's appearance was desired at the inquest he was dragged out of bed at Mrs. W. J. Annis' house, where he boarded, and called to the little workshop where Peaslee's body lay. The inquest was held under unusual circumstances, and the body had not been disturbed in the entire thirty hours following the shooting.

Confronted by the sight of the corpse, Wood's attitude, so far as can be gathered from the authorities, was not that of a guilty man. He denied all knowledge of the crime.

He was arrested by City Marshal Kimball of Concord, who was in Henniker on a sight-seeing trip, and who was asked to serve the warrant by the local authorities. Prior to his arrest, Wood had been about town as usual and had discussed the case with several friends.

The arrest has caused much excitement in the town. It was quite unexpected, for the inquest, conducted by the light of the lamp with the aid of which Peaslee was reading when he was shot, adjourned at midnight with the understanding that it would be continued Monday. No arrests were looked for until after the inquest was completed.

Peaslee's home was about a mile from the village and about a mile and a half from Miss Barnes' farm. The man who shot him fired from a window directly behind Peaslee, who sat in a chair reading. The weapon used was Peaslee's own shotgun and nine .00 shot were found in the dead man's skull.

The murderer left behind a note of warning, printed, in order that the handwriting might not afford a clue, and evidently made to appear the work of an illiterate person. The words were misspelled and the paper was signed with a well-executed black hand.

The police take little stock in the "Black Hand" aspect of the case, except as indicating that some person has tried to leave a false clue. The note found on the window sill when Peaslee's body was discovered read:

Peaslee's two sons are Morrison and Shirley Peaslee. The latter is employed by a Boston detective agency, and has been working on the case since his arrival here Saturday, when he received word of the murder.

Peaslee's murder was discovered Saturday, nine hours, in the opinion of the medical referee, after he had been shot. The body had fallen down somewhat in the chair, but the newspaper the man had been reading was still clutched in his hand.

CHAINED TO MILITANTS

Sylvia Pankhurst Again Falls Into Hands of London Police

London, May 25.—The suffragists gave the police and church officials a busy Sunday, while they themselves, in some instances, received rough treatment from the crowds, who showed their resentment at the recent interference with the king and the damage done to pictures.

Sylvia Pankhurst, who was again arrested under the "cat and mouse" act, and her East End followers provided the biggest excitement of the day. A great procession formed at Canning Town and marched to Victoria park. On the way the women picked up Sylvia Pankhurst, who was chained and handcuffed to fifteen women and surrounded by other supporters armed with clubs.

The police allowed the procession to proceed, but when the park was reached they got the militant leader and those chained to her into the park by an adroit move and then shut the gates against the rest of the women. Taken at a disadvantage, the women in chains put up a stiff fight, but the police finally broke the chains with their truncheons and arrested Sylvia. They allowed the others to go.

Outside the gate a furious struggle went on between male suffragists and anti-suffragists, which the police had the greatest difficulty in breaking up.

Newport, R. I., May 25.—The cup defense candidate Resolute, on a five-hour trial run, demonstrated her sailing qualities in a strong breeze as well as in a light one.

Passing out to Narragansett bay, she sped along in a northwest wind of about fifteen knots, while outside the bay, in a spin round Brenton's reef lightship and back to Newport, she encountered a thirty-knot blow.

BECKER SEEKS SPEEDY ACTION

Urges Counsel to Get Quick Decision on His Appeal

IN GREAT FEAR OF WHITMAN

Wants Decision of Court of Appeals Before Whitman Gets Possible Chance to Become Governor—Counsel For Prosecution and Defense Show Great Strain of Trial

New York, May 25.—With District Attorney Whitman and Martin T. Manton out of the city for a rest and Charles Becker under instructions to be silent, few developments were brought out in the Rosenthal murder case. Becker to all outward appearances is as calm in the Tombs as he was when the jury found him guilty of instigating the murder of Rosenthal, the crime for which the four gunmen paid the death penalty.

Becker is urging his counsel to expedite his appeal to the court of appeals to set aside the verdict. He hopes that his appeal will be brought before the higher court before the end of the year, because if he loses his application for another trial the convicted man wants to be sure that Whitman does not occupy the governor's chair should he be forced to appeal for clemency.

Before leaving for a rest, Manton, chief counsel for the defense, said: "I am tired and expect to take a brief rest, but I am going to press the appeal promptly and vigorously. Our record will not show anything like the 1600 exceptions which were noted in the first trial, but we shall have a ground for argument to the court of appeals on every exception we have taken in this trial as a denial of right to Becker. The charge of the jury will be the principal subject of our appeal."

Both Manton and Whitman outwardly show the strain of the trial more than Becker. The district attorney is now in Newport for a short rest. Becker's calm appearance is partly explained by one of the keepers, who said:

"He was sixteen months in the death house and saw thirteen men go to their death in the next room to him. That made him callous, as it would make anybody callous, if it didn't kill him."

Becker received his wife, his two brothers, Lieutenant John Becker and Jackson Becker, and his counsel, John B. Johnson, in the Tombs and talked over the future proceedings to be taken in his fight for life.

To others who sought to see him Becker sent word that he would not and could not say a word; that he thought silence the best policy and that his attorneys had instructed him not to talk of the case.

DOW SENTENCE DELAYED

Boston Broker Given a Few Days to Fix Up His Personal Affairs

Boston, May 25.—Stephen R. Dow, who worked his way up from office boy to be one of the most successful brokers in Boston, made an impassioned plea to the district attorney for a few more days' freedom to arrange his personal affairs before sending him to the state prison.

Dow lost his petition before the full bench of the supreme court for a new trial. This meant that the sentence imposed by Judge Brown on March 19, 1913, must go into effect.

Dow's name was placed on the list for sentence today by Judge Fox, but as a result of his plea for a few more days of liberty and because of the absence of his chief counsel, the sentence was delayed until Thursday.

Mrs. Griffin was to shoot a potato from Gavin's head, but her aim was poor and the bullet entered his brain.

Marceau has been a consistent point getter for Dartmouth during his course

John E. Byron and Chris Barry are playing with the base ball team of the New England Trust Co. Both are well known to the local fans.

The Quincy High school base ball management continues scouting for a pitcher and it is not unlikely that Captain Paul Larkin will be changed from short stop to the box. Larkin is speedy and has the necessary curves but consistent control and the captain are strangers. Although never used in the box an impression prevails that he will make good and be the means of breaking the hoodoo following the team. Nine straight losses and but little hope of victory in the seven remaining games has the team on the run Nothing but a good mound artist will do the trick.

The day after George Barry of this city left the Lowell New England team to join the Tauntons of the Colonial league he received a letter from Manager Gray of the former to return, but it is extremely doubtful that Barry will send an affirmative answer. His work with Taunton brought him into the limelight in his first game.

SAVED FROM SIBERIA

A Story of the Russian Revolution

By F. A. MITCHEL

Leaving my comfortable home behind me, my dear father and mother, my brothers and sisters, I set out for St. Petersburg, the headquarters of the revolution, where I became identified with the revolutionary party and did such work as was assigned me. In time my clothing was worn threadbare; I became thin and pale from want of proper nourishment and from the condition of a noble was reduced to that of a serf.

One day I was informed that a young girl who was a prominent worker for the revolution had been caught in a house where bombs were found by the police and had been arrested and thrown into prison. I attended a secret meeting of persons devoted to the cause, convened to take measures to free her. Five hundred rubles were raised to bribe her jailer, and one of our number was appointed to interview him.

In a few days the messenger called us together again and informed us that he had offered the money to the jailer if he would contrive the girl's escape, but the man had said that it would be impossible. He had, however, suggested another plan. If one of our own party would marry the girl he would arrange that the priest who performed the marriage service should antedate the marriage certificate so that when she came up for trial her identity would be lost. It would be supposed that a mistake had been made in her case and the wrong person had been arrested. The jailer agreed to carry out this plan for the 500 rubles.

It was decided to accept his terms. The marriage being simply a form to save the girl from Siberia, no importance was attached to it, and almost any of us bachelors was willing to be the groom. But it was decided that we should draw lots for the service, and the lot fell to me.

I went to the prison, not as a groom going to his bride, but as one going to perform a duty of no especial importance to himself. But my first glance at Marya Ivanovna, or Marya, the daughter of Ivan, changed all this. She was not so very beautiful, but there was in her face the look of a martyr—a look of perfect innocence. She had been told of our plan by the jailer and knew that I had come to marry her. She seemed to consider it a great favor on my part and gave me a look of gratitude that went straight to my heart. We were obliged to wait some time for the priest, and I spent it chatting with my bride. Singular as it may appear, when the priest arrived and married us I kissed my wife with all the fervor of a bridegroom who had married for love.

In a twinkling there had been in me a change of motive. I had entered the prison, as I have said, carelessly to perform a duty to the cause of the revolution. I left it with a burning desire to free my bride and possess her in peace. The incentive of the amelioration of millions of people kept in ignorance and poverty had vanished to give place to a matter of individual selfishness.

Yet was it selfishness? Pity had brought love, not for the millions, but for one. I grant that the former is a broader emotion, but love for the individual is not less divine.

At any rate, it seemed to me that I had stepped back to take a new start on a new foundation; that, whereas I had been standing on a vast plain too large for my diminutive power to cultivate, I now stood on my own little plat. The sympathy I had for my downtrodden brethren had become concentrated upon one poor girl in prison.

I rejoined my comrades for a different purpose from that with which I had left them. But I took care not to reveal to them the change that had come over me. I continued to do any duty that was assigned me, but all the while I was thinking of some plan by which I might hasten the release of Marya Ivanovna. There is no habeas corpus in Russia, and a prisoner, innocent or guilty, may remain for years in prison without being brought to trial. The thought of my wife thus wearing out her life behind bars was maddening to me. I went to the prison to see her and to talk with her, but the sight of her sad, pale face so distressed me that, realizing I needed all the coolness that was in me to work for her liberation, I did not go again. Then I settled down to plan in her behalf.

Marya Ivanovna had been in prison but a short time when we were married. Therefore, if I should call the attention of the authorities to her case, she would be remembered, and the plan of losing her identity might fail. I did not on this account dare take such a course—at least, not without waiting. That there was no other had already been demonstrated. The jailer had said that he could not contrive to permit the prisoner to escape. But that was because the money appropriated for the purpose was no more than enough for himself. Might he not, if supplied with sufficient funds to bribe others in the chain of government officials concerned in the matter, be able to accomplish the desired result?

I went to him and asked him this question. He replied that it was possible, but the amount required for the purpose would be considerable. When I asked him how much he said that he would have to investigate, and, considering my shabby appearance and the improbability of my raising any large fund, I did not believe that he would trouble himself in the matter. However, I had a plan by which I might probably raise the amount required, and when I revealed it to him he changed his manner and, I felt confident, would sound those who must be bribed.

Within a week he sent for me and told me that in order to procure Marya Ivanovna's escape it would be necessary to bribe five different persons, including himself; that one of these was an official of importance and could only be bought for a considerable sum. In short, 2,000 rubles would be required to put the scheme through. I left him and immediately started for my father's home in Smolensk.

So shabby was my appearance that when I entered the gate the dogs barked at me, and I was ordered away by one of the servants. But I paid no attention to either of these and, going to the front door, opened it, and there stood my mother in the hall. She recognized me and fell into my arms. I told her that I had come home to make a request of my father and if he would grant it I would agree never again to commit any overt act in favor of the revolution. The boon I asked was the money to free my wife.

My mother used her influence with my father to induce him to grant the request, but he, fearing that I was already so far entangled with the law as to compromise the rest of the family, would only consent on condition that I would leave Russia and not return. I cared to do this only in case I could get Marya to go with me. So I returned to the capital—with means for my temporary necessities given me by my mother—and held a conference with my wife.

Her health was breaking down under her confinement, and it was not probable that she could ever strike another blow for the cause of the revolution. Besides, my interest in her behalf had already won her heart. This last act of devotion served to make it completely mine. She consented to my plan only too gladly, and I left her with high hope for her speedy release and our future happiness in a foreign land.

Returning to my home, I completed the arrangement with my father, receiving 5,000 rubles in lieu of my share in his estate, and returned to St. Petersburg. There I set my friends of the revolutionary propaganda to work to forge passports for myself and my wife on which to leave Russia. At this work we had several experienced hands, and I was not long in securing the necessary documents. Then when all had been made ready I went to the jailer, showed him the money he asked to free my wife and gave him half with a promise of the other half when Marya should be delivered to me.

How he accomplished his work I never have learned, but infer that he bribed those who were a check upon him to wink at certain irregularities, and forged papers probably assisted in the work. Marya was released at 2 o'clock in the morning, and by arrangement I was near the prison with a carriage. I put her in without a word and, having directed the cabman to drive to the railway station, got in after her and closed the door.

Then, locked in each other's arms, we experienced inexpressible delight.

We selected America for our destination and in due time arrived at our new home. I, having been well educated, have found no difficulty in making a living in the United States, though until I learned to speak the language I was at a great disadvantage. Already, having an excellent manager for a wife, I am becoming prosperous.

The Russian revolution is over, many a young life has been taken, many are perpetual exiles, and yet little was accomplished. But though the people have lost their cause they have not been put back to the point from which they started. They have made their first dash for liberty, and as the north pole of the earth was gained after a number of dashes so doubtless will a greater freedom eventually be gained in Russia.

Suffragette Bombs Fail to Work on Glasgow Aqueduct

Glasgow, May 25.—The failure of a fuse saved from destruction the aqueduct which carries half of Glasgow's water supply from Loch Katrine, forty-two miles away.

A watchman while patrolling the viaduct noticed some freshly turned earth. He made an investigation and discovered two powerful bombs with a half-burned fuse. In the vicinity he found a woman's handbag containing two trowels, a copy of The Suffragette and a placard to the effect that the proposed destruction of the viaduct was a protest against the treatment of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst.

The municipal authorities have placed watchmen on patrol along the aqueduct, which cost over $13,000,000.

Talking Shop.

Enthusiastic interest in one's occupation is always an advantage, but, on the other hand, it is not well for a woman in business to talk of her work at all times and places. Naturally, the thing that we do constantly is our most absorbing interest, but we must remember that other people have other things to talk about.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Everett Prout was removed to the Quincy City Hospital Sunday for an operation following a sudden attack of apendicitis.

John Enright, a former employee of the Fore River shipyard is visiting friends in this city for a few days. Mr. Enright is now government engineer on the Panama Canal.

The Hospital Aid Association meets Thursday afternoon with Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur of Elm street, instead of with Mrs. Glover as announced at the last meeting.

The Odd Fellows and Rebekahs of Wollaston will hold memorial services on Sunday, June 21, at the Baptist church, when the pastor Rev. Joseph Walthers will give the address.

Miss Mable A. Favreau of 82 Rodman street a well known South Quincy dressmaker, and Norman W. Lanier of 21 Edison park, an electrician at the shipyard, were married in Roxbury on Saturday. The ceremony was performed by Charles E. Silloway, J. P. They will live in Quincy.

Automobiles by the thousands passed through Quincy on Sunday. During the afternoon and evening there was a almost constant stream of cars of all kinds from the runabouts to the most expensive makes passing in both directions. It was with difficulty that one was able to cross from one side of the street to the other and he must move fast or be run down. Occasionally there would be a loud report as a car passed indicating a blow-out. Then the car would draw up to the side of the street, the owner would put on his overhauls and get to work. No one seemed to bother much, for it was all in the game.

MANY STILL ALARMS.

The Central station apparatus responded on a still alarm Saturday night about 6.15 for a slight fire on the roof of Patrick Reardon's barn on Newcomb place. The fire evidently started from a bon fire and burnt off a square foot of shingles. The loss was very slight.

On Sunday the Central station apparatus went out at 2.30 for a woods fire at Faxon Park, and again at 8.15 for a woods fire off Scammell street.

The Atlantic combination went out at 8.20 Sunday evening for a chimney fire in the house of Mr. Chase on Appleton street.

NEW YORK FASHIONS

Grandmothers Get-ups in Modern Guise—Shirrings and ruchings and Fallals—Tassels and Jets.

A trunk full of grandmother's gowns could easily be brought in line with present modes, which repeat all the styles of the early Victorian period, with variations derived from other sources. When one reads of the footwear that our forebears wore in the ill-paved streets of Manhattan in the 50's and 60's, and the meagre "mantillas" that protected their low bodices, it seemed impossible that these would be repeated. But all Winter, slipper-like pumps, and thin silk stockings have been commonly worn, and to go with Spring attire nothing in footwear is too dainty or elaborate to be seen in the street though really smart dresses incline toward well shaped Colonials and pumps in not too fancy styles for such wear.

BLOUSES AND COATEES.

Counters where blouses are sold are seldom dull, for everyone knows how much a pretty waist will set off even the plainest and least pretentious suit, consequently the new showings of these are of prime importance. From $2. up one can find attractive and stylish waists, but below this figure even the washable styles are apt to be roughly put together, though materials are pretty anl designs good. Now that very loose fitting is the rule and kimono cuts and open necks are leading favorites ,almost any one, with a rellable pattern, can turn out successful waists at small cost. Washable silks, crepe-de-chine which washes well; taffeta and all the host of lovely cotton materials that the shops are showing make up into charming practical waists in blouse or coatee form. Taffetas are especially good in the latter class of tops.

PRACTICAL PLANNING.

The woman who manages to look well turned out on all occasions, and to dress her family well without spending an unreasonable amount, takes advantage of the opportunity offorded by the high grade cotton dress goods, which now reproduce nearly every known fashionable weave. Voiles and crepes and silk mixtures make dainty, dressy frocks, but for the suit than can be depended upon to emerge fresh and unfaded from exposure to hot sun, and laundry suds nothing quite comes up to Renfrew Devonshire cloth. This has the texture and finish of an expensive linen, at the cost of cotton and is patterned in stripes, checks, plaids and solid colors, that never fade because they are dyed in the yarn and woven in, not printed on, as in Galatea. For children's clothes which must go repeatedly to the tub, this is an ideal fabric.

GOLFINES, TWEEDS, AND PLAIN CLOTHS.

Golfines, Tweeds, Plain Cloths and all the Taffetas, especially in changeables, make the fashionable coats and wraps of the season. Golfine is the new form of corduroy—the velvet cords on a voile ground, which serves to make the material especially flexible. Every shade of fashionable coloring is found in this material, and belted coats in the new loose circular cut are things that make discriminating buyers enthusiastic. They are at once so dressy, comfortable and practical, for they clean as only cotton will, so that even white or very light shades of coral and mustard are not an extravagance. Tweed coats in Balmacaan makes, or in any of the popular blouse or Norfolk models are stylish and stand the hardest wear without looking shabby, while the new capes in plain cloths are a revival that everyone who likes the utmost effect for a moderate cost, will appreciate.

BROAD CLOTHS.

By the way, it is whispered on excellent authority that by Fall broadcloths will be leaders once more, so the woman who plans to have her new suit last well will do well to consider this material. Serges are always good, and the new form called "Gabardine" is especially pretty and dressy in effect, and can be had wherever a nice line of ready-to-wear suits are shown.

TASSEL TRIMMINGS.

Tassel trimmings are very modish and are employed to weight the points of draperies, to finish collars, and to end cords that are laced through slits but in jackets and tunics. They are also placed like buttons for trimming effects, and one sees them used a good deal on the ends of small short coats that are apt to fly up and look mussy unless weighted.

JETS.

Jets are increasingly used, especially in button and bead forms. Jet buckles are rather replacing steel for footwear, and jet beads trim hats as well as adorn bodices. As necklaces, few beads are more popular, which is saying much, now that all sorts of bead neckalces are a furore.

THE WOMAN WHO TOOK ADVICE

There was once a Woman who Had the Opportunity of Marrying Either of Two Brothers she Preferred. Since they Both of them had Good Points she decided to Consult their Sister as to Which in her Opinion would Make the Best Husband. "I Think," she said, "that I shall Take John. He is So Good."

"Yes," said the Sister; "but He Sups his Soup and Sugars his Lettuce. To say nothing of Buttering his Bread in Slabs. We have Never been Able to Teach him Better."

"But he Reads Browning so Beautifully!" cried the Woman.

"You will Hear him Eat Soup Oftener than you will Hear him Read Browning," said the Sister.

"I am Sure that he would Never Love any Other Woman but Me so Long as he Lived," said the Woman.

"But he has an Inveterate Habit of Reading Aloud all the Jokes in all the Funny columns of all the Papers, No Matter what You are Reading," replied the Sister. "You would Find that very Trying, as you are Fond of Reading to Yourself."

"I am Sure he would Give his Life for Me!" cried the Woman.

"If you will Pause and Consider," replied the Sister, "you will Realize that the Probabilities of his being Called upon to Do That are very Few indeed. Whereas the fact that he is very Careless about Brushing his Clothes will be Daily Apparent to you."

"Dear Me!" said the Woman. "And are Henry's Manners so Perfect?"

"They are All a Woman could Desire," replied the Sister. "He will Escort you Anywhere Evenings and he Always Admires your Singing."

"But are you Sure that Down in the Bottom of his Heart he is a Perfectly Good Man?" asked the Woman.

"Not at all," replied the Sister. "I have No Means of Seeing the Bottom of his Heart. But he Always Opens the Door for me and Hopes I Slept Well."

"How do you Know," said the Woman, "that in some Tremendous Spiritual Crisis he would not Fail Me?"

"I Don't," the Sister replied. "We have Never had Any of Those in the Family. I should Not Marry with a View to having Them, I Think. But you are Certain to have Soup."

"Very well," said the Woman, "if that is your Advice, I will take Henry."

Which she Did and Lived Happily ever Afterward.

This teaches us to Take Care of the Manners, and the Morals will Take Care of Themselves.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF ARGENTINA

Naval Officials Celebrate With a Grand Banquet at Copley-Plaza Hotel

Officiales De Mar Give a Dance at Colonial Hall

The 104th anniversary of the independence of Argentina was celebrated Monday evening by a large party of the officers of the Argentine navy who compose the Argentine Naval Commission, stationed at the Fore River shipyard to inspect the work of construction of the super-dreadnaught Rivadavia.

The Independence Day was celebrated with a banquet at the Copley-Plaza which was attended by 27 of the officers of the commission.

Chief Warrant officer F. Botalla was the toastmaster, and the banquet was opened with the singing of the Argentine National Hymn. After the banquet there were a number of speeches by the officers present in which a note of satisfaction was sounded, for the new bond of friendship between the North American and the South American republics, as was shown by the prompt acceptance by the United States of the friendly offices of the "A. B. C." mediation commission now in session at Niagara Falls, in the interest of peace in the western hemisphere.

Among the naval officers present were A. DeTommasso, J. F. Santacruz, A. Picardo, A. Capo, A. Marconi, J. Arguello, J. Arrambide, A. Novelli, R. Palavecino, B. Gonzalez, H. Wilkendorf, N. Kroger, J. Tavolia, A. B. Cordoba, B. H. Brooks, F. Kury, F. Reyna G. Varela, C. Lamos, J. Rosales, H. Agostini, J. Gonzalez and A. Sanchez.

The tables at the banquet were gaily decorated with the United States and Argentine National flags and on the coat lapel of each guest was a rosette of white and blue ribbon.

On the return of the party to Quincy, some of the officers dropped in for a few minutes at the celebration of the petty officers which was in progress at Colonial hall.

THE QUINCY DANCE.

The "Officiales de Mar" of the Battleship Rivadavia observed the 104th anniversary of the independence of Argentine Republic in Colonial hall Monday evening when they entertained upwards of 100 of their friends at one of the most delightful dancing parties of the year.

The observance was the first of its kind in Quincy in four years, the day being passed with only ordinary ceremonies since the 100th anniversary was celebrated by the laying of the keel of the Rivadavia at the shipyard four years ago.

The especial guests of the evening were all members of the Argentine Commission and among those present were Capt. John Benitez, Lieut. Com. M. Bianchi, Lieut. Com. John Carcagno, Lieut. V. Masjoan, Lieut. R. Spratt Lieut. A. Harchard, Lieut. John Villegas, Lieut. Loui Igartua. Included in the guests were some of the best known of the residents of the city.

The "Officiales De Mar" of the commission who were in charge of the event were Alfred Tarsia, Carlos Budino, Manuel Pacio, Andrubal Fernandez, Sisto Quiroga and Pablo Garcia.

Although the program was elaborate the affair was carried out in a strictly informal way. The young men received their guests on their arrival, and from then until the wee small hours of the morn, when the party adjourned, they were solicitous of their comfort.

Until nine o'clock an orchestral concert was rendered under the direction of William Wilson and an able corps of musicians. The program was the Imperial March of Bagley, the Reception overture of Hall, Gounod's concert waltz, "Faust;" the Marcelle selection of Luders. The finale was Conradi's composition "America and Himno Argentino."

The first waltz commenced at nine o'clock and the modern dances prevailed. Four tangos, El Talar, Muy D La Bob Vonera, Victoria Hotel and Bolada De Aficionda, were on the order of dances.

An exhibition dance of the Argentine tango was given by Mr. and Mrs. Jose Delgado, after which Manuel Palacio with Sisto Quiroga as his partner and Antonio Soler with Andres Martinez gave a special exhibition of tango dancing in which many intricate steps were introduced. An outburst of applause was given by those present.

At midnight, lacking a few seconds, a flashlight photo of the group was taken after which supper was served in Hancock hall. The menu, provided by A. J. Thompson was:—

Escalloped Oysters
Chicken Croquettes and peas
Salads
Lobster Chicken
Potatoes
Sliced Boiled Ham
Harlequin Ice Cream
Lady Fingers Macaroni
Lemon Cake
Gold Cake Sponge Cake
Coffee

The decorations of the hall were very attractive and consisted of streamers of pink roses, alternating with stringers of pink crepe paper, gathered in a huge knot of friendship about the chandelier in the centre of the hall, and suspended from it was a huge rosette of roses. The flags of the United States and Argentine Republic draped the stage, and the rear of the hall, and many of those present wore the colors of the Southern Republic in the lapel of their coats. On the covers of the dance orders the flags were hand painted in water colors.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

One Application for New Board of Survey

If the bill to authorize the City of Quincy to establish a Board of Survey should become a law, it will not go into effect until 1915. However one gentleman who evidently desired to be in on the ground floor wrote the Mayor a letter this morning asking for the appointment as one of the new board. The Mayor remarked that there was nothing like being in early.

The Mayor when asked this morning if he had done anything about filling the vacancy in the office of Assistant Commissioner, replied that he had not, and that he did not know when he would. When asked if Mr. Cahill had been given a position in any other department he said that he had not.

Mayor Miller has received notice that the Committee on Ways and Means of the legislature will give a hearing Wednesday morning in room 147 at 10 o'clock on the bill relative to the abolition of the grade crossings in Quincy at Water and Saville streets by the plan known as the "City plan for depression. Mayor Miller, City Solicitor Pinkham and other officials will attend the hearing. It goes without saying that Mr. Bates will also be present.

The three men appointed to the permanent fire force, who went on duty, Monday are at present assigned to the Central station. Fireman Barry of the Quincy Point station has also been assigned to the Central Station, and for the present the reliefs in the different stations will be covered by men from the Central station.

SEA FOOD.

During the summer months there is no food as healthful as fresh fish, there is no reason why fish should not be eaten on Monday or Tuesday as well as on Thursday or Friday, there is no reason why fresh fish should not be served on the average table at least three times a week. We make a specialty of handling only the freshest caught fish to be had and we buy in quantities so as to have on hand only fresh stock. There are a great many varieties which can be served in many palatable ways, such as, Bluefish, Butterfish, Brook Trout, Eastern Halibut, Salmon, Mackerel, Shad and Lobsters, live and boiled. APPROPRIATION INADEQUATE

Will It Be Legal to Pay the Extra Firemen?

A fine point has been raised, which is in effect, can the three permanent firemen who have been appointed and went on duty this week be paid their salary from the budget. In other words the point is where is the money coming from to pay them. In the budget which passed earlier in the year a certain sum was appropriated for pay of firemen. The claim is that this is in the nature of a contract. That is a certain sum was appropriated to pay a certain number of men. If the number of men is increased and they are paid from the amount mentioned in the budget it means that there will be deficit.

Opinions differ. Some claim that the men can not be paid unless the council provides the funds, and another claims that they can be paid from the appropriation for permanent firemen and that later in the year when it is apparent that there will be a deficit it is up to the Council to provide the funds.

The City Auditor is of the opinion that there will be no funds to pay the three new men until a supplementary budget is passed or the money provided.

Mayor Miller when asked what he thought about it said that he did not see why the men could not be paid. That the budget provided a certain sum for permanent men and did not specify a certain number of men. That there was no reason why they should not be paid from that appropriation and that later the amount necessary could be provided for in a supplementary budget.

Chief Billings when asked what he intended to do, replied that the men had been appointed and told to report to him for duty and that he should assign them to duty.

William Lynch, Mrs. J. S. Pierce and daughter Muriel and Miss Marion White and Mrs. White, motored to Onset on Sunday covering nearly one hundred miles.

THOUSAND GUESTS AT LAUNCHING

Gala Day for Friends of the Emery Steamship Company of Boston

Launch of S. S. Atlantic Was a Perfect Success

With flags flying, whistles tooting and the hurrahs of 300 guests and 300 workmen, the S. S. Atlantic built for coastwise trade, via the Panama Canal was launched at 12.01 today at the Fore River shipyard.

The sponsor was Miss Dorothy Louise Emery, the fourteen year old daughter of Ralph S. Emery of the Emery Steamship Co. owners of the ship.

Miss Emery is the youngest sponsor that ever officiated at a launching here and because of her extreme youth a pint, instead of a quart bottle of champagne was used in the chrisening.

After the launch a luncheon which was served in the mold loft after which President Joseph W. Powell presented Miss Emery with a gold watch bracelet, suitably inscribed.

The speaker of the day was Hon. James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston, who was accompanied by Frank Prendergast, secretary of the Boston Elevated Railroad and John Daley, president of the Daley Publishing Co.

Mayor Curley was presented by President William H. Randle of the Emery Company and received an ovation. He closed his speech in the midst of thunderous applause.

The guests, nearly a thousand in number came from Boston on a special train which aws run over the Fore River Co. private track from East Braintree arriving at the yard about 11.45. The special cars were run to within a few feet of the launching platform, which had been erected about the bow of the vessel. As Miss Emery stepped from the train she was welcomed by President Powell who presented her with a magnificient bouquet of Richmond roses. The fair sponser was then escorted to the launching stand and as she mounted the steps leading to the raised platform there was a spontaneous outburst of applause.

The launching stand was gaily decorated in the National colors while from bow to stearn of the vessel was a stream of flags of the international code as well as the American and private flag of the Fore River Co.

Suspended from the bow was a tricolored ribbon on the end of which was a pint bottle of wine. This bottle was encased in a steel mesh to keep the broken glass from flying.

Preparations for the launch were soon under way and at the sound of the merry tap, of the hammers as they drove home the wedges that lifted the vessel the launching party was all expectancy. A shrill whistle sounded and instantly the sound of the hammers stopped. There was a short pause, and then another whistle sounded, and instantly the sound of the saws were heard as they tore

The A. B. C. mediators have scored a triumph in persuading Huerta not to invade Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

Housecleaning being about over, it will not be necessary much longer to sleep in the vegetable cellar.

The city of Cleveland claims $4,000,000 odd taxes from John D. Rockefeller, but perhaps they would be willing to compromise for $6.98.

Anyway Huerta's forces will stop running when they get to the Pacific ocean, as they are probably not accustomed to taking baths.

In spite of the Mellen revelations, the stockholders meetings of most railroads will continue to be attended by a gathering consisting of the president and three elevator boys.

HELP THE GRAND ARMY.

Only 26 of the 200 or more Grand Army posts in Massachusetts now have a membership of over 100, the largest at Worcester, the George H. Ward post has 465, and has a close rival in Gen. Lander post of Lynn with 422. Paul Revere post of Quincy now has only 59 members, 29 less than ten years ago. It is very evident that the Grand Army posts need considerable assistance on Memorial Day, and there are many ways in which the people may assist.

Children at school are requested by the general orders to take flowers to school on Friday of this week which will be collected to decorate the soldiers' graves. Contributions of food are asked for the noon day dinner at Faxon hall which may be left at designated places in each ward.

As long as the veterans can march they will insist on marching each Memorial Day, but we believe the time has come when they should ride in automobiles. Whether they march or not they could use to good advantage two or three automobiles on Memorial Day and the day before.

The feelings of the veterans should also be considered and should be first in the thoughts of everyone on Memorial Day. It should not be a day for sports and outings, but observed as a Memorial Day. Show every kindness possible. Show patriotism. The general orders are printed in full in this paper and should be carefully read by all citizens.

JURY IN MURDER TRIALS.

It is probably safer in this country to commit homicide than to be a burglar. The more serious the crime, the harder fight is put up for the criminal. For instance, when Charles Becker was again found guilty of the murder of Hermann Rosenthal, it was the first time in New York city, that two juries had pronounced the verdict of guilty of first degree murder twice in succession in the same case. These twelve men are entitled to credit for their promptness, and their fidelity to the juror's oath.

The lax enforcement of the law against homicide is one of our pet scandals, due in part to a too technical view of the law on the part of the courts, and the disposition on the part of juries to dodge a duty.

Th moment a man comes up for murder, at least in any state having capital punishment,there is a unanimous effort to dodge jury service. Thoughtful men shrink from the task. Murder juries in the United States are not as a rule equal in intelligence or in personal force to the panel assembled to try a man for larceny. The case that calls for the highest sense of responsibility and the broadest intelligence may draw a minimum of these qualities.

It is merely the duty of a murder jury to look at the evidence in a sensible, common sense light. Even it one believes that the penalty imposed is too severe, yet the responsibility for that penalty is wholly upon the citizens of the state, and no more on the jurors than on their next door neighbors.

In almost any murder case, an appeal to mushy sentimentalism is made. The jury is implored to disregard a sworn duty, simply because it is difficult to inflict punishment. It takes iron in the blood to stand up against these apeals to a universal human sentiment. The jury that brushes aside all this fog, and renders an honest verdict on the facts, is entitled to thanks.

LOVE OF WOOD FOR IDA BARNES

Thought by Police to Have Led Him to Kill Peaslee

IS OF PECULIAR DISPOSITION

Stoic and Hard to Understand When Sober but "Wild as an Indian" When Drinking to Excess—Trouble With Murdered Man Started on Barnes Farm Last Summer

Henniker, N. H., May 26.—Intense excitement here over the murder of Howard W. Peaslee resulted in a decision to postpone the arraignment of Eugene Wood, the arrested suspect, and to hold the police court trial in Bradford, ten miles away.

With immediate court action in abeyance, popular interest turned toward the romance of Wood, the farm hand, and his rich, middle-aged employer, Miss Ida Barnes, for love of whom the authorities will try to prove that Wood shot Peaslee.

Wood, it is said, loved Miss Barnes with a dog-like devotion, and with all the intensity of his silent nature. Wood, when sober, was a stoic and hard to understand. When occasionally he drank too much he was as wild as the proverbial Indian.

Wood is well educated, a good penman, can talk to the point when necessary. He is ingenuous with tools. Miss Barnes says he was one of the most capable men she ever had upon the place.

Miss Barnes refuses to discuss the evidence she has furnished to the prosecution. It is known, however, that she has told of Wood's threats against Peaslee, and of an attempted assault with a stone. Her father and mother, who are among the moneyed people of the town, may later be called upon to testify.

It was toward the end of winter that Wood last left the employ of Ida Barnes. Peaslee came back last summer from up country, where he was a railroad foreman. Peaslee took the contract of cutting the hay on Miss Barnes' place last season even while Wood was employed upon the farm. The trouble started there.

After several quarrels, during one of which, they say, Wood brandished a revolver and told what he would do, the parting came in February and Wood moved to his old boarding house in Henniker square.

He had previously announced that he was uncertain as to how long Miss Barnes would remain at the Barnes place. To certain bosom friends Wood occasionally imparted things. Presents had been made to him. One was a silver matchbox which he owned for weeks before showing it. One of the women in the boarding house playfully asked him if Ida Barnes gave him the matchbox. He looked at his questioner steadily until she was confused.

"I like Ida Barnes," he said, "I am not ashamed to admit it. She did give me the matchbox. It makes me very happy."

This was one of Wood's longest speeches in the memory of his Henniker friends.

SHEVLINS ARE GUILTY

Former Customs Official and Wife Admit Conspiracy to Smuggle

Boston, May 26.—Mr. and Mrs. Terence L. Shevlin appeared before Judge Morton in the United States district court and pleaded guilty of conspiracy to smuggle at the port of Boston. When first arraigned last year they pleaded not guilty.

Shevlin was employed in the United States customs service for a great many years and performed the duties of clerk in the foreign baggage division, where the smuggling on a large scale was conducted. The government found that the Shevlins assisted several dressmakers to smuggle women's wearing materials from foreign countries.

Sentence was deferred until next week.

CRUSHED TO DEATH

Worcester, Mass., May 26.—Pinned beneath their automobile where it had overturned on an unfrequented road nearly twenty hours before, the bodies of James W. McDonald of Worcester and Arthur B. Moore of Auburn, Mass., were found.

When the car tipped over the back of the seat pinned both men down by their necks. Medical Examiner Bradford pronounced death due in each instance to strangulation, and said the men could not have lived more than two minutes after the car turned turtle.

HIGH PRICES PAID FOR GERMAN TITLES

Traffic Said to Have Been Carried on In the Royal Palace

Berlin, May 26.—The government ordered an investigation of alleged wholesale traffic in German titles, as charged by Herr Liebknecht, Socialist leader of the reichstag, in The Vorwaerts.

Liebknecht declared that the prices of titles ranged upward from $10,000 for the right to have "professor" before one's name to $100,000 for a title of nobility.

It is said the candidates met mysterious women in an obscure bakery near the palace and by them were conducted by private entrance into the palace, where they bought the titles from an official of the household of the empress, now retired.

THIRTEEN NEW CARDINALS

Several Bishops Also Confirmed at Secret Consistory In Rome

Rome, May 26.—At a secret consistory held at the Vatican Pope Pius X. created thirteen new cardinals. A number of bishops from various countries also were confirmed in their sees. The ceremony was preceded by a short allocution.

The pontiff was surrounded by all the members of the sacred college living in Rome and by those who are now here, including Cardinals Gibbons, Farley and O'Connell from the United States.

The pope appointed Cardinal Volpe to the office of chamberlain, in which position he will direct the affairs of the church during the conclave. Cardinal Falconio, formerly apostolic delegate in the United States, also was raised to the mark of chamberlain.

The allocution of the pope was a strong appeal for political and social peace through restoration of religion and the influence of the church.

FINAL READING ON HOME RULE

House of Commons Gives Measure Seventy-Seven Majority

AWAITS SIGNATURE OF KING

Action of Lords Will Have No Effect Upon It, as Powers Have Been Curtailed—Asquith Hopes For Peace —Ulster Sentiment to Be Tested—Redmond Extends Olive Branch

London, May 26.—The home rule for Ireland bill was passed in the house of commons on the third and final reading by a vote of 351 to 274, a government majority of 77. The bill becomes a law upon its signature by King George.

There is no doubt that royal assent will be given to the measure. In the regular course of events the home rule bill goes to the house of lords, but the action of the peers will have no effect upon the measure.

The powers of the upper house of parliament were destroyed by the act of parliament providing that any bill having been passed in three consecutive sessions of commons becomes a law by royal assent.

The end of the struggle came quite suddenly, the Unionists refusing to debate the bill without further information as to the government's intentions in regard to the proposed amending measure.

Premier Asquith lifted a corner of the veil, but though Mr. Law, leader of the opposition, admitted that the premier's words were as conciliatory as usual, he hastened to add that Asquith had not told them anything. To discuss the third reading under the circumstances would, he said, be futile and ridiculous.

The announcement of the figures showing a majority of 77 for the bill brought out a great demonstration by the Nationalists and Liberals.

Asquith announced that the amending bill would give effect to any agreement which the government was still hopeful might be reached. He said that if at the time of the introduction of the Irish home rule bill to the house of lords no such agreement had been reached, the amending bill would embody the substance of the proposals outlined by him on March 9 in the hope that, after discussion, an agreement might be secured.

On March 9 Asquith told the house of commons that before the bill became operative a poll would be taken of the parliamentary electors of each county of Ulster to decide whether those counties should be excluded from the provisions of the Irish home rule bill for a period of six years from the first meeting of the new Irish parliament. If the majority of the voters were in favor of the scheme the county would automatically be excluded for the prescribed period.

John E. Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, in a statement last evening, expressed the hope that the Ulsterites, "who are genuinely nervous as to their position, will abandon unreasonable demands and enter into a conciliatory discussion with their fellow countrymen with regard to the points of the bill upon their desire for further safeguards.

"Today's division," says Redmond, "marks the death after an inglorious history of the 114 years of the union of Pitt and Castlereagh. . . . . Its place is to be taken by a new union founded on mutual respect and good will between the two islands."

There will be a long, hard contest, possibly civil war in Ireland, before a parliament is set up in Dublin, for the Ulstermen are determined that the Protestant portion of the province shall be excluded from the operation of the bill, and threaten to establish a provisional government as soon as the bill leaves the house of commons.

"TAP LINES" UPHELD

Entitled to Through Rates, Declares the Supreme Court

Washington, May 26.—Another attempt of the government to separate the ownership of railroads from industrial concerns met with failure when the supreme court held that "tap line" railways, serving lumber camps in the southwest, owned by the same interests, were entitled to share with the trunk lines in through rates.

The interstate commerce commission had held that this division of the rates was in effect a rebate and ordered it discontinued.

LETTER FROM VERA CRUZ

Boy on Michigan Tells of The Engagement

Editor Quincy Ledger:

Just a few lines from the boys of the U. S. S. Michigan, who have been at the scene of Mexico's trouble since it started. We left the Philadelphia Navy Yard, April 14, and arrived off Vera Cruz the morning of the 22nd at 9 A. M. As we came into the harbor we could hear the guns firing ashore, and all wanted to get into the fray right away.

As we came to anchor, a boat came alongside with three dead men from our side, and it was a very bad sight to look at. The face of one of the men was blown away. It was caused from an explosive shell.

At 5.45 P. M. the Michigan landing force of 346 men was sent ashore, and they were there only a few moments when one of our men was shot through the stomach by one of the snipers. We all felt very sorry when we heard of it as he was very well liked by all the crew and officers. We got up a collection of over $400 for his people.

He almost had a premonition of what was to happen. Just before he left the ship he gave all his money and other belongings to one of his shipmates and said, this may be the last time I will come back. I have been in other troubles and came out O. K., but I feel funny this time. So you can see we never can tell when we are to go.

The boys often talk of the good time they had in Quincy last Fourth of July. It is awful hot here at the present time. The Army is in full charge ashore and everything is going along fine, and we are ready for action at any time of the day.

We have had concerts every night and moving pictures every other night. We are quite busy at the present time getting ready for Admiral's inspection that takes place tomorrow and will last three days. We have orders to go back July 1 for our repair period of ninety days, but the way things look I don't think we will.

There are seventeen battleships here and a lot of smaller ones. One would think we were having a fleet review instead of trouble. The Rebels have taken Tampico at last after a hard fight that lasted all day. We are all wishing that something would start, as we are ready for fun or fight.

The Michigan wishes to extend to the people of Quincy their best wishes for a happy Fourth. I must bring this letter to a close as all hands must turn in at 9 P. M.

MEMORIAL DAY

General Orders No. 1

With increasing years and lessening numbers we approach the day set apart by legislative enactment and common consent of a grateful people to do honor to the Nation's saviors. We earnestly request all the people of the City of Quincy to join with us in making it a holiday, so that, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, "That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain: that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

No other organization has such faithful auxiliaries; so long as they endure and the patriotic men and women live and the emblem of liberty floats, we may have the sublime assurance that time or distance will never efface the heroic deeds of the Nation's defenders of '61-'65, or that any Union Veteran's last resting place shall be neglected or forgotten.

With two such well known hotel men, the Squantum Inn should regain its place as one of the popular hostelries of greater Boston.

Progress.

Go to Church and Get Acquainted With Your Clergyman; He's Not a Bad Sort

"I CAN'T be a hypocrite," was the ready excuse of one man when asked why he didn't attend church. "I know that I am not righteous and that I cannot practice what the church preaches."

There is hope for this man. He is the kind the church wants. If he is not righteous he is not happy. Let him acquire the habit of GOING TO CHURCH and he will get a broader, better and happier view of life.

We cannot all be saints. But surely a man can forget the temptations of the world for one hour or one day each week. At least for the hour or so that he is in church he can really think over the big things in life. Let him listen to the word of God and do his best. Of course there are some persons in every community who will criticise as freely the man who GOES TO CHURCH as the man who stays away.

NO MAN WHO GOES TO CHURCH CAN BE A HYPOCRITE LONG. DEEP DOWN IN HIS HEART HE KNOWS THAT HE CANNOT SELL GOD A GOLD BRICK. IF ORIGINALLY HE GOES TO CHURCH SOLELY TO MAKE A GOOD IMPRESSION WITH HIS NEIGHBORS—AND THIS IS TO BE ENCOURAGED—EVENTUALLY HE WILL FIND THAT HE IS GRADUALLY BEING LED TO THE RIGHT SORT OF LIFE. IT IS EASY TO ACQUIRE THE GO TO CHURCH HABIT. TRY IT ONE SUNDAY. WHEN ANOTHER SABBATH ROLLS AROUND YOU'LL FEEL A PANG OF REMORSE IF YOU DON'T GO AGAIN. GET ACQUAINTED WITH YOUR CLERGYMAN. YOU'LL FIND THAT HE IS NOT A BAD SORT. TALK TO HIM. IF YOU HAVE ANY CRITICISM OF THE CHURCH OR ITS METHODS, DON'T TALK ABOUT IT ON THE OUTSIDE, BUT TELL HIM. HE'LL MEET YOU HALFWAY. NONE REALIZES MORE THAN HE HOW HARD IT IS TO WORK UP AN INTEREST IN RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS AMONG SOME PEOPLE.

But give him and his church a chance.
GO TO CHURCH once!
Then go again!

WORKING FOR THE PARKWAY

Councillor Charles W. Guy is making some inquiries at the State House as to the delay in the construction of the extension of the Quincy Shore parkway. The State Treasurer informs him that there is no specific appropriation, but that Quincy is probably included in the general Metropolitan loan which covers several years.

With a united effort of the city government members of the Legislature, Board of Trade and citizens generally, the improvement may be secured in a year or two, but there is danger that Quincy may be sidetracked.

THE IDEAL JURYMAN.

His Age and Qualifications From an English Point of View.

There is a general agreement in London legal circles that the best jurymen are to be found among men sixty years of age. The opinion is that jurymen at that age show better judgment than younger men.

A leading London barrister, asked for his opinion, said: "I prefer men about fifty years of age. A defending barrister in, say, a criminal case which has certain sentimental elements will always welcome a young jury. He knows he can touch their emotions far more easily than he can those of men over fifty. Sentiment is very rare at fifty, and a man is cold and purely logical. The average man who has reached the age of fifty looks upon things from a materialistic point of view, and his judgment is therefore unaffected by sentiment.

"Education, save in certain civil cases, is no great asset to a juryman. The bricklayer or the mechanic has just as much knowledge of human nature and a sense of justice as the professor, and in many respects barristers and judges prefer the unlettered juryman to the man of culture, though in the case of the latter he is less susceptible to an emotional plea. The man with sound common sense, learned not from books, but from everyday life, is not so easily led either by judge or counsel as many suppose, and if you add the wisdom of years you get the ideal juryman."—Exchange.

FORCED THEM TO FIGHT.

How "Honor" Was Satisfied by a Compulsory Duel In Hungary.

The code duello as insisted upon abroad is strikingly illustrated by the story of a happening at Budapest, Hungary. It appears that a lawyer, Babocsay by name, quarreled with his wife over a new hat. The wife called her brother, Lieutenant Hajdu, a military aviator, to her aid. The husband used words deemed insulting by Hajdu.

This coming to the hearing of Hajdu's superior officer, the latter ordered the lieutenant to fight a duel with Babocsay. Neither party wished to fight. Babocsay offered to apologize, and Hajdu was willing to accept the apology and thus end the affair.

But the military martinet was inexorable. The duel must be fought to satisfy the honor of the army. Consequently these two men, closely related, were compelled to attempt to try to take each other's life. They met. Babocsay, firing aimlessly, nevertheless sent a bullet through the lung of his adversary, and Lieutenant Hajdu died of his wound.

Upon hearing of the death of her brother at the hand of her husband in her quarrel Mme. Babocsay went insane, twice attempted suicide and was finally confined to an asylum.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Momentum and Velocity.

In answer to the question "Is it not velocity that produces gravitation? If we throw a stone against a window of sufficient resistance with too little velocity it will not break, but if we throw it with sufficient velocity the window will break," the New York American says:

"We do not know the cause of gravitation nor of anything, but the increased speed of a stone thrown is not the cause of gravitation; it is the cause of momentum, which is a product of mass multiplied by velocity. Momentum would be the same if the stone were thrown close to the earth, where the full attraction of its gravitation would be felt, or out in space trillions of miles, where the earth's gravitation would be almost infinitesimal—that is, the glass would break by increasing the speed of the stone as here on earth."

A Clear Wind Shield.

A doctor living in a rainy climate whose calls took him out often in wet weather undertook the problem of maintaining clear vision through the wind shield of his automobile regardless of rain, and he succeeded in making a prescription that would do the work. The prescription calls for one ounce of water, two ounces of glycerin and one dram of salt. This is poured on a piece of gauze and then wiped over the glass, care being taken to have all the strokes downward. The effect of the treatment is to prevent raindrops from clinging to the glass.—Saturday Evening Post.

TRYING TO FIND COMMON GROUND

Mediators' Discussion Thus Far of General Character

DOWNFALL OF HUERTA IS NEAR

Report From Mexico City Says He May Not Last Through the Week—All Is Needed Is Leader Upon Whom Opponents of Dictator Can Combine—Openly Defied by Blanquet, Who Prevents Execution of Hundred Political Prisoners—Military Expediency Led Villa to Retire to Torreon

Washington, May 26.—Smooth progress toward a common agreement on all phases of the Mexican problem is being made by the mediators and the American and Mexican delegates. This was stated with emphasis by the mediators at Niagara Falls.

The three South American diplomats made it plain that, while every aspect of the Mexican situation, both internal and international, had been laid before the delegates from the United States and Mexico, no formal basis had yet been reached for the treatment in any specified order of the issues involved. Nor has the relative importance of the main issues been defined.

Await Mexicans' Move

The discussion thus far has been of a general character. The mediators have taken the position that they are essentially counsellors, and not dictators, of the destinies of the Mexican republic. They will not suggest names for the provisional presidency, nor will they recommend any form of government. From the Mexican delegates themselves must originate proposals concerning the internal affairs of their country, and these suggestions will be transmitted by the mediators to the American delegates for consideration.

On the agrarian problem, too, suggestions must originate from the Mexican delegates. Thus far the talk on the land question has not reached the merits of the subject itself.

No Cause For Alarm

Reports that the Mexican commissioners were endeavoring to save General Huerta caused no alarm in Washington. Officials have all along felt this would be done, and they believed that with characteristic Latin-American procrastination the Huertista representatives will not abandon this method of procedure until given the direct choice of ending the negotiations or making a decision. Then, it is believed, they will probably accept Huerta's elimination and proceed to the next stage of the negotiations.

At least that the position taken by the high officials of the administration. It is the interpretation placed upon the advices received from Justice Lamar by Secretary Bryan. Others in Washington are dubious and inclined to fear it may be found out that, after all, the Mexican commissioners, like the Americans, possess no absolute power and are at all times responsible to their creator.

Huerta In Tight Place

Reports of impending trouble in Mexico City are becoming more and more circumstantial. The South American legations are in possession of information confirmatory of dispatches from the Mexican capital that Huerta faces revolt and uprising.

Their information, from their own representatives, is that all that is needed is a leader upon whom all of the anti-Huerta factions can combine. Given such a one, it is stated, the overthrow of the dictator would be a matter of hours only.

It is believed this crisis will develop this leader, and that long before the Niagara Falls mediators are forced to reach a positive decision Huerta will have been eliminated by his own people.

Huerta Openly Defied

With General Blanquet, minister of war, openly defying Huerta and the dictator meekly submitting, while business houses in the capital are barricaded, foreigners in Mexico City sent word to Vera Cruz that they believed Huerta might not last through the week.

The break between Huerta and his war minister came with the discovery of an alleged plot against the provisional president on Saturday. Almost beside himself with rage when he discovered his subordinates were in league against him, Huerta hurried to the Belem penitentiary, where 100 political prisoners were confined, and ordered their execution. He told the jailer to lead the 100, suspected of connection with the plot, outside and to shoot them against the wall.

The prison keeper secretly telephoned to Blanquet, who was in bed. The war minister went posthaste to the penitentiary. He called Huerta outside and then ordered the prisoners returned to their cells.

Blanquet Man of the Hour

"You must stop this killing of your supposed enemies if you want me to stand by you in this crisis," Blanquet told the dictator, and to the great astonishment of the prison officials Huerta meekly allowed Blanquet to countermand his order for the prisoners' execution.

Blanquet is said by refugees to be the man of the hour in Mexico City and, should a crisis come, it is believed he will take charge and attempt to send Huerta out of the country.

Fifteen French cannon have been placed by Huerta in Capultepec castle, where, it is now said, he will make his last stand if he is unable to escape.

The situation in the capital is tense. Almost all of the shop windows have been boarded up for the last three days in anticipation of street fighting. The store doors are ready to be locked and barricaded on a moment's notice, and customers do their shopping by lamp light.

Little News of War

Rumors that the constitutionalists have already captured San Luis Potosi are not confirmed. It is stated that Villa is now advancing on Zacatecas and that until that city is captured Potosi will probably hold out.

Withdrawal of Villa's troops to Torreon from Saltillo, which recently was evacuated by the federal troops, renewed the interest in the constitutionalists' military campaign. The retirement, it was said, was based entirely on military expediency, Torreon presenting more advantages as a base for movements southward than Coahuila's capital.

Naval Maneuvers

While an occasional hydroaeroplane flight relieved the monotony of the watch of General Funston's troops at Vera Cruz, the dreadnoughts and battleships in the harbor varied their routine by maneuvers outside the bar.

Admiral Badger reported that the Birmingham had arrived at Vera Cruz from Tampico, and that the aeroplane section, with Lieutenants Towers and Smith and Ensign Chevalier, had been transferred to the Mississippi, which would sail for Boston at once. Several refugees who have been waiting at Vera Cruz will be taken home by the Patuxent, which will sail to Key West by way of New Orleans.

Rear Admiral Howard reported from the Pacific coast that Charles Lang, over whom there had been some inquiry, had arrived at Mazatlan.

DECLARES MELLEN'S TESTIMONY UNTRUE

Morgan Willing to Produce Evidence to Back His Charges

New York, May 26.—J. P. Morgan last night characterized as untrue the testimony of Charles S. Mellen before the interstate commerce commission in Washington that J. Pierpont Morgan concealed from Mellen facts regarding the New Haven road which Mellen should have known.

Morgan offered to produce before the proper tribunal at any time the records of J. P. Morgan & Co. and the personal records of his father.

Taking full responsibility upon himself for the change in the road's presidency by which Mellen resigned and gave way to another, Morgan said it was untrue that his father in any sense took from Mellen the management of the road or any part of its affairs.

Regarding the absorption of the Boston and Maine by the New Haven, Morgan said his father deemed it advisable for the public benefit since it was recognized that changing economic conditions threatened the commercial position of New England.

BIRD READY FOR FIGHT

Will Run For Governor If McCall Tries to Get Nomination

Springfield, Mass., May 26.—In a speech delivered at a gathering of Hampden county Progressives here last night, Charles S. Bird, twice the gubernatorial candidate of the Bay State Bull Moosers, virtually threw down the gauntlet to Samuel W. McCall, who is spoken of as the next Republican candidate for governor.

Bird made it clear that if McCall is to be the Republican nominee for governor this fall, the name of Bird will be found among the aspirants for the Progressive gubernatorial nomination, and if nominated, he will fight McCall to the last ditch.

Washington, May 26.—The will of Charles W. Post of Battle Creek, Mich., who killed himself at Santa Barbara, Cal., on May 9, filed here for probate, leaves the bulk of an estate estimated at $20,000,000 to the widow, Mrs. Lelia Y. Post, and a daughter, Marjorie P. Close.

The stocks, bonds and other personal property of the estate are estimated at about $18,000,000. Eight men named as executors gave bonds for $2,300,000.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

A most delicious sandwich butter is made by creaming half a pound of butter and then adding a half cupful of whipped cream, a seasoning of mustard, salt and a dash of cayenne. This butter is used to spread on the bread, and is sufficient for filling as well.

Marzipan.—This is a most delicious confection made of almond paste or powder. Blanch a pound of Jordan almonds in a mortar or use a chopping bowl and a wooden potato masher if a mortar is not at hand. Mix when the almonds are fine with equal parts of confectioner's sugar, moisten with orange juice and mold in any desired shape. The most natural looking fruit may be made of this marzipan, which is tinted to resemble the different fruits. After the paste is molded it is baked and then tinted.

Egg-Plant With Nuts.—Put a good sized egg-plant into boiling water and cook ten minutes, then cut in halves and scoop out the center, leaving a wall an inch thick. Chop that taken from the center and mix with four tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, 12 chopped almonds or half a cupful of peanuts. Season with salt and pepper and fill the shells. Stand this in a baking pan, cover with greased paper and cook slowly in the oven until soft and dark. Dish carefully without breaking.

Rhubarb.—This is the time when rhubarb is plentiful and it should be canned and put on the fruit shelves for the wintertime. Canned in sterile jars after cutting in small pieces, the rhubarb need not be cooked. Put the jar, packed as full as possible, under the cold water tap, and let the water run to overflow the jar, then seal and keep in a cool place. The rhubarb will keep and be ready for any kind of dish, from pies to puddings.

Spiced Rhubarb.—To two and a half pounds of rhubarb, washed and cut in thin pieces, add a cupful of mild vinegar, two pounds of sugar and a tablespoonful each of cloves and cinnamon, tied in a cloth. Cook steadily for an hour and a half. Put this in jelly glasses.

The Four Post Bedstead

Or the Mysterious Workings of Providence

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mrs. Henry Dowd stared coldly at Philippa Fancher, who was sitting on the other side of Lawyer Weems' office. Philippa looked expectantly at the little sandy haired lawyer, who was reading the last will and testament of the late Susan Fancher to the heirs.

"'And lastly,'" droned Mr. Weems, reading, "'I give and bequeath to my nieces, Amanda Fancher Dowd and Philippa Fancher, my mahogany four post bedstead, to be divided as follows.'" Here Mr. Weems blew his thin nose violently and coughed nervously before concluding the important document:

"'To be divided as follows: The two head posts, the headboard and one side rail to my niece Amanda Fancher Dowd; the two foot posts, one side rail and the foot piece to my niece Philippa Fancher, theirs to have and to hold forever.'

"That's all," said Mr. Weems, busying himself with his papers.

The six nieces from Planeville, who equally shared the meager bank deposits and the house and furniture of their deceased aunt, smiled furtively at one another as Mrs. Dowd and her cousin Philippa rose stiffly from their chairs and, without a word to the others, carried their bitter disappointment out of the office.

Although Philippa and her cousin Amanda had not been good friends for many years, now a common cause for complaint united them for a brief time.

"It's an insult!" declared Amanda Dowd, her stout form quivering with indignation.

"It is indeed," agreed Philippa primly. "After all I've done for Aunt Susan too. The winter when she had pneumonia I stayed with her day and night for two months, and when I went home she told me, says she: 'Phil, you'll be rewarded for this when I'm gone. I shall remember you generously in my will.'

"Says I, 'Aunt Susan, I'm not doing it for reward'"— Philippa stopped short and got very red when she saw the sarcastic smile quivering around Amanda's lips.

"Aunt Susan was fond of making promises," said Amanda hastily. "The time when I sewed for her two months steady so that she could make that visit to New York she promised I would be remembered first in her will."

"And you were last!" ejaculated Philippa sweetly.

"Except for your name I was," reminded Mrs. Dowd.

"And each of us only half of a four post bedstead!"

"It's an insult!" repeated Mrs. Dowd.

"I don't understand Aunt Susan's promising us, who have done so much for her, and then leaving us nothing after all, when the Planeville nieces, who hardly noticed her, got everything worth while."

"Except half an old four post bedstead," muttered Amanda Dowd. "I've a good mind to burn my half up or give it away."

"You might give yours to Ida Finney, and I'll do the same," said Philippa. "She told me the other day that if she had another double bed she could take some city boarders. She needs the money."

"And then folks can see that we don't care a snap about the old bedstead," agreed Mrs. Dowd.

So it happened that little Miss Finney, whose hands, crippled by rheumatism, could no longer trim hats, came into possession of the four post bedstead which Aunt Susan Fancher had eccentrically divided between two of her nieces.

Ida Finney put the bed in her sitting room and rented it to boarders from the city.

One autumn day Ida hurried up the path that led to Philippa's side door. Philippa Fancher, who put up fruit and pickles for a living, was stirring a spicy mixture in a huge kettle on the stove.

"Come in, Ida," she called to the little milliner. "Your boarders gone?" she inquired after Miss Finney was seated.

"Not yet, though they are all ready to go on the 2 o'clock stage. Now, Philippa," went on Ida earnestly, "the folks who have been sleeping on that four poster want to buy it from me. They offered me—what do you think?"

Philippa added more sugar to her pickles and tasted them delicately.

"Five dollars?" she hazarded.

Ida Finney laughed excitedly.

"Fifty dollars! There, I knew you'd jump, Phil Fancher! Fifty dollars for the old bedstead that your Aunt Susan left you and that you despised."

Philippa reddened. "Did you accept the offer, Ida?" she asked stiffly.

"I did not. I told them that it didn't belong to me, being only borrowed from you and Amandy, and if it had been mine I wouldn't have sold it because it had belonged to your Aunt Susan."

"We gave it to you, Ida. You can sell it if you want to."

"I'm proud to have anything that belonged to Susan Fancher," said Ida Finney. "She was very kind to my folks once, and when I learned the millinery trade she loaned me the money to go into business. I paid it all back, too, but I ain't forgot her goodness."

Ida Finney arose and moved toward the door. "Well, I must hurry home again. I just thought I'd let you know about the offer."

"And you won't sell the bed and keep the money? We don't care," said Philippa.

"No: I'd rather not sell it. I know Miss Susan set great store by that bed. She said it belonged to her great-grandmother and it had a history."

Ida went out and closed the door rather sharply, as was her wont. She had a way of stirring one's conscience without actually preaching.

Philippa finished her pickles and then, changing her dress, went across the street to see her cousin, Amanda Dowd.

In a few words Philippa related what Ida Finney had told her about the four post bed which the city people valued at $50.

"Something Ida said made me feel ashamed of giving the bed away," ended Philippa sadly. "You see, I was very angry the day Mr. Weems read that letter, and so I didn't care about the bed or my share of it. I've been thinking that Aunt Susan was very kind to me. She did lots of nice things for me when I was a girl, and I ought not to have calculated on her leaving me any money."

Amanda Dowd nodded her head. "I feel the same way, Philippa. Aunt Susan helped my brother Jim to study for the ministry, and I guess I'll get my half of the bed back from Ida Finney. I'll give her $5 toward another one."

"So will I," said Philippa, who could ill afford it.

A week later Amanda Dowd and Philippa Fancher went over to see Ida Finney.

After an hour of lively persuasion the independent Miss Finney reluctantly consented to accept $10 for the bed, which the remorseful owners had given her some time before.

"I feel as mean as getout," said Ida as she placed the money in her worn pocketbook and led the way upstairs.

"As a punishment for my meanness I shall carry my half home piecemeal," said Philippa firmly as they proceeded to dismantle the ancient bed of its spotless coverings.

"And I shall do the same," said Amanda, her broad face grave with regret. "Now, Phil, do you know how to uncord the thing?"

Philippa worked with deft fingers, and presently the bed was apart and divided according to the last will and testament of Susan Fancher.

Philippa lifted one heavy post. "It looks as if it could be unscrewed here. See where the joining is quite plain. It will be easier to carry if it does come apart." She twisted the end of the post, and it moved easily around and around until she lifted the carved top and disclosed a deep, cuplike hollow. The hollow was filled with white tissue paper, which, pulled out and unfolded, revealed a packet of money—ten $100 bills.

In dazed silence her companions watched Philippa while she unscrewed the top of her second bedpost and found a similar sum of money.

Then it was Amanda Dowd's turn, and she, too, was remembered in the same manner by eccentric, kind hearted Aunt Susan.

Little Ida Finney watched them in tearful delight as they made these astounding discoveries, but Ida was to make a discovery on her own account.

"Ida Finney," said Amanda after a short consultation with Philippa, "Philippa and I would never have found this money if it hadn't been for you. You made us ashamed of ourselves, and, Ida, you've got to take this. If you won't do it gracefully I'll have it put to your credit in the Little River bank." She extended a packet of bills toward the little milliner.

"I don't dare decline it because I need it so badly," half sobbed Ida.

"Take it!" ordered Philippa and Amanda, and Ida Finney took the packet and cried over it like a baby, for it contained ten $100 bills.

As for the cousins, they bore the sections of the four poster home, and it is a credit to them both that each one was thinking more of the past kindnesses of Aunt Susan and of the mysterious workings of Providence, which through their own awakened consciences had brought them to a degree of prosperity.

GAY SCENES ON VERA CRUZ SHIPS

Moving Pictures and Boxing Bouts Chief Diversions.

OFFICERS AT THE RINGSIDE

But Bluejackets, Astride Big Guns and Crowding Cage Masts, Form the Court of Last Decision In All Contests—Sailors on Shore Leave Return With All Sorts of Curiosities.

To all external appearances the American fleet at Vera Cruz has put aside thoughts of its vitalizing yet deadly experience ashore and gives no sign of its recent human sacrifices as a result of the "peaceful occupation" of Vera Cruz, says Dudley Harmon in a recent dispatch from Vera Cruz to the New York Sun.

That is the beauty about the navy in a situation like the present, he continues. The new navy has the faculty of making for itself more business than any other institution could conceive of; a faculty which is at times annoying, but under conditions at Vera Cruz a most happy circumstance.

On some evenings and on some ships the fleet is really as gay as it looks. The bluejacket dearly loves a party, and with the relaxations of peace about Vera Cruz opportunities for satisfying the desire for recreation have gradually increased. Every battleship is now a moving picture theater, and the presence of the majority of the vessels of the fleet at Vera Cruz affords opportunity for an almost unlimited exchange of movie films between ships.

Boxing and Vaudeville.

To the landsman, however, the audience at these shows is the most interesting feature of the spectacle. On the Arkansas, for example, Admiral Badger's flagship, and one of the giants of the fleet, second only to the New York, it is a scene long to be remembered when the after deck is transformed into a theater. Atop the extreme after turret the screen is rigged, with the band just in front of it, and then a boxing ring, also used as a vaudeville stage.

Officers are honored with chairs "at the ringside," but above their heads are hundreds of bluejackets with much finer seats. The upper works of the ship are completely hidden, bluejackets covering the turret tops, sitting astride the twelve inch guns and crowding the great cage masts. They are the real gallery gods, the court of last decision from whose verdicts the performer has no appeal.

But it is not all play for the bluejacket at Vera Cruz by a good deal. The boat crews running to shore and to other ships are on duty day and night. All sorts of repairs are under way, while ships are being freshly painted within and without. Every afternoon all the sailing boats are put over the side and the crews drilled in elementary seamanship, but also every afternoon a swimming party goes ashore from each ship for the instruction of those who have not qualified as swimmers, while those who have qualified are permitted to splash over the ship's side at 5 every evening and at 7 in the morning.

Shore leave has been given the last few days, at first only twenty-five men from each ship every afternoon, but gradually increasing as the first parties returned with promptness. As a result the ships are rapidly becoming floating menageries and junk shops.

Parrots have come aboard by the score, with a few canaries and dogs and goats. Strange and sticky Mexican concoctions of sugar and cocoanut have been brought alongside almost by the ton, to be distributed among those not so fortunate as to win out in the drawings for shore leave. Mexican baskets, red pottery, blankets and even the gaudy pictures of which the Mexican peon is so fond are now decorating secluded spots about the ships.

Good Spenders.

Ashore in his captured city the bluejacket is a king. In his neat white dress uniform and black neckerchief, well set up, with fresh complexion and clear eye, he is a sight good to behold in contrast with the slouching, dirty and undersized Mexicans. There is not a corner of the city so remote but what he is to be found there, usually bargaining for something to eat, drink or take home.

The money changers are doing a thriving business, while for the small storekeepers and street venders it is a real harvest. The bluejacket has nothing cheap about him. Every afternoon strings of coaches go to the wharf where the liberty parties land sure of getting plenty of fares as soon as the sailors have provided themselves with Mexican cigars, for according to the Mexican's opinion one does not attain real dignity and affluence by riding in a coach unless smoking a big black cigar.

Vera Cruzans have been quick to learn the bluejackets' tastes, and it sometimes seems as if at least half the population had gone into the merchandising business looking for the soldiers' and sailors' money. Establishments are changing their signs from Spanish to English or adding "English spoken" to their advertisements, though the fact usually is that their English is limited to a knowledge of Uncle Sam's coinage.

TRAGIC BRAVERY.

Sublime Act of a Hero Who Went to a Watery Grave.

In the chapel at Glenalmond school in Perthshire, Scotland, there is a marble slab with this stirring story recorded upon it:

There was once in the school a pupil named Alexander Cumine Russell, who became an officer in the Seventy-fourth highlanders when only a lad of seventeen. In connection with the memorable loss of the Birkenhead he won immortal glory. The troopship struck upon a rock; the soldiers were formed in ranks upon the deck to die; the women and children were being saved in boats.

Russell was ordered into one of the boats to command it, and a little way off he watched with dimmed eyes the doomed ship. When she went down he saw creatures of the deep contending for his beloved comrades. Then he saw a sailor's form rise up close to the boat and a hand strive to grasp the side.

A woman in the craft called out in agony: "Save him! Oh, save him, sir! He is my husband," but there was no room for another, and the boat was laboring heavily as it was. Russell looked at the woman and then at her children, then at those beseeching eyes in the deep, and, rising in the stern, he plunged into the water and helped the sailor into what had been his own place. Then amid a chorus of "God bless you" from every one in the boat the brave young officer turned to meet his death.—Pearson's Weekly.

SOME FAMOUS PAINTINGS.

A Tiny Work of Art and Rosa's Transformed Harpsichord.

The smallest painting in the world of distinctive merit was executed on the smooth side of a grain of corn by a Flemish artist. On this limited surface the artist painted in perfect detail a mill, a miller with a sack of grain on his back, a horse and cart and a group of several peasants standing in a road.

The largest picture ever painted is said to be a panorama of the Mississippi river, executed by John Banvard, an artist who died in Watertown, S. D., in 1891. The gigantic canvas was twenty-two feet high and nearly two miles long. It gave a detailed representation of 2,000 miles of the Father of Waters.

The largest of the old masters' canvases is Murillo's "Appearance of the Christ Child to St. Anthony of Padua." The picture is ten feet wide and eighteen feet high.

It is related that a friend called on Salvator Rosa in Florence one day and found him playing on an old harpsichord. The caller asked the artist why he kept such a worthless instrument.

"Why, it is not worth a scudo!" the friend said.

"I will wager," replied Rosa, "that it shall be worth a thousand before you see it again."

A bet was made. Rosa immediately painted a landscape on the lid that not only sold for 1,000 scudi, but was accounted a work of great merit.

Boasted Too Soon.

When the old Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz was staying at Holkham with Thomas Coke, then commonly known as "king of Norfolk," he boasted one evening at dinner that no man had ever dared to shoot at him and that if any one had ever attempted such a thing he would have shot the man dead on the spot.

The next day at the court the grand duke suddenly felt a shower of shot peppering his legs and, turning round in a fury to find whence it proceeded, saw William Coke with a gun leveled in his direction.

"I've got another muzzle ready," said William coolly. "Will you shoot?"—From "The Life of Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester."

Reincarnated.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.

"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."

This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

His Thirst.

Husband—May, just send up some filtered water. Wife—Which was it last night, "Detained at the office" or "A friend at the club?" Husband—Why? Wife—Because I didn't know whether you wanted a tumbler or a pailful.—London Opinion.

Improving Slowly.

"How is your cousin getting on, Jane?"

"Nicely, thank you, ma'am, but he had an awful time. They performed three autopsies on him at the hospital before he began to get better."—Baltimore American.

Didn't Agree With Him.

"You should never take anything that doesn't agree with you," the physician told him.

"If I'd always followed that rule, Maria," he remarked to his wife, "where would you be?"—London Express.

Pike's Peak.

Zebulon Montgomery Pike, an officer in the United States army, discovered the famous peak that bears his name on Nov. 15, 1806.

VALIDITY OF OF ORDINANCE

In Questioned by Counsel for Junk Men

If the court allows the motion of Thomas Buttimer, counsel for the three men arraigned in court last Saturday, for storing junk without a license, it will mean that the ordinance of the city prohibiting the storing of junk without a license from the city is not worth the paper it is printed upon. The matter of a license for the storage of junk is one that has been before the Council for several years. Some years ago ex-Councilman Flynn introduced an order establishing an ordinance prohibiting the storing of junk, which was passed. There was no penalty attached to the ordinance, however, and it became a dead letter. Last year the matter was again taken up and an ordinance passed which it was believed would hold water.

There have been two convictions under the ordinance, but when the three men were arraigned Saturday Counsel Buttimer raised a point of law and moved to quash. His claim was that the ordinance was unconstitutional and based his claim on a ruling of the Supreme court. The case was one from the City of Chelsea and was entitled Comonwealth against Samuel Maletsky. This was a case where the defendant had been found guilty of picking rags in a building without first having obtained a permit from the Chief of the Fire department.

Chelsea has an ordinance similar to Quincy. The Quincy ordinance provides that no person shall store junk without a license, while that of the City of Chelsea provides that no person shall pick, sort or store rags without a permit from the Chief of the Fire department.

The lower court found Maletsky guilty and an appeal was taken. The ruling of the Supreme court after certain sections of the ordinance in detail was:

"That an ordinance which forbids the use of any building for the picking, sorting or storing of rags without a permit in writing from the Chief of the Fire department is invalid and void, and in accordance with the terms of the report a verdict of not guilty must be returned."

The court took the matter under advisement and the cases were continued until next Friday, at which time the court will pass on the motion of Counsel Buttimer to quash.

HOME RULE BILL PASSED

London—May 25, The Irish Home Rule bill passed its third reading today and in due course will become a law, despite the opposition of the House of Lords, whose veto under the Parliament Act is limited to two successive sessions. The vote was 352 to 274.

Particularly pleasing is the victory to the members of the United Irish Land League of this city, the oldest existing organization of its kind in the country. Peter McConarty, its president stated this noon, that the passage of the bill was the culmination of a century fight for freedom, and the members of the Quincy branch who have not weakened in their support of the cause for 30 years, feel a new era has dawned for Erin.

Arrangements will be made to celebrate the event, after which the league will be continued only in a social way.

SOLAR ENERGY.

Its Constant Radiation Is Lessening the Mass of Our Sun.

The work of Einstein on the principle of relativity shows that a body which radiates energy loses a portion of its mass depending on the energy radiated. It follows that the sun, which continually radiates energy, is constantly losing mass. M. J. Bosler has calculated that the sun loses a mass equal to that of our earth in 30,000,000 years.

If it be assumed that the mass thus lost is gravitational mass it follows that the length of the year increases by six seconds in 1,000,000 years and that in the same time the mean longitude of the earth is affected in such a way as to produce a variation of one-tenth of a year—that is, a retardation of thirty-six days in the seasons.

Such variations are too minute to be observable. In stellar systems possessing a higher temperature the effect would be much more marked, for the energy radiated by a body varies as the fourth power of its absolute temperature.

If, as M. Nordmann believes, there exist stars having a temperature six or seven times that of our sun their radiation is one or two thousand times as intense. Thus, if the temperature of Algol is 13,800 degrees, it is calculated that at the end of 2,000 years the eclipses of Algol suffer a retardation of about twelve minutes.—Boston Herald.

RULE OF THE GLOVE.

Queer Custom of Suspending the Law In an English Town.

By reason of a curious custom the people of the old town of Honiton, in Devonshire, England, are exempt from arrest from dawn to sunset of a certain day of the year. It is while the horse fair there is in progress that the law is thus suspended for awhile. The custom is a survival of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial dating from the days of King Henry III.

At the beginning of the fair the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of a beadle of the old days, appears upon the scene with a pole to the end of which is attached a large gilt glove decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier announces:

"Oyez, oyez, oyez! The fair is begun. The glove is up; no man may be arrested until the glove is down. God save the king!"

Each sentence is chorused by the children standing round, and at the conclusion they scramble for nuts. The glove is taken down at sunset.—St. Louis Republic.

Mme. Adam and the Crinoline.

Mme. Adam has been confiding to an interviewer that she owed her introduction to journalism to the fact that she did not wear a crinoline at the time when fashion decreed the garment. Alphonse Karr, who objected to the crinolines, had been denouncing them in his journal, but had concluded his denunciation with the sentence, "Still, there is not a pretty woman in France who does not wear one." Whereupon Mme. Adam, who was then Mlle. Lambert, took up her pen and wrote: "Mr. Editor—One may be pretty—some people even say that I am beautiful—and yet one may abstain from crinolines." And she went on to develop the thesis. She developed it so wittily that Alphonse Karr printed it in Le Siecle and that was her first contribution to the periodical press of which she has since been one of the pillars.—Westminster Gazette.

SHOWING CONFIDENCE.

It Has a Strong Influence In Making Business and Good Times.

Preachments about the value of optimism are a trifle bromidic, so instead of hurrahing for optimism I have a few instances of the influence that comes from putting a good face steadily toward bad fortune, and contrariwise the bad effect of mourning because business is not better.

"How's trade?" I asked a stationer. "Trade!" he exclaimed. "Trade! There isn't any. Things are rotten." Now, if I had had any intention of buying anything from him, which I had not, that depressing statement would have gone a long way to keep me from buying.

"How's things?" I asked the boss of a men's furnishing store a few hours later. "Little quiet, just now," he smiled; "but I can't complain. We have run ahead of last year and prospects are good." I felt like buying a new hat because the cheeriness of his reply made me feel that money was coming to me.

"How's trade?" I asked a tobacconist. "Good," he replied emphatically. "Little slow today, but trade is mighty good with me, coming right along," and I bought a cigar.

Confidence is the influence that makes good times because it quickens trade. But if all business men were to croak about bad business, would not that influence make us all very careful about doing anything? We would all want to sit tight and wait. The way to get good times is to face the world hopefully and go to work. The croaker is a trade killer.—Inland Stationer.

HAD NO SENSE OF HUMOR.

He Couldn't Clearly See the Joke the Boys Had on Him.

Some people have absolutely no sense of humor. A little London urchin ran into a baker's shop and, placing a halfpenny on the counter, asked nervously and timorously, "Mister, 'ave you a 'alfpenny buster (bun)?"

"Yes, my little man. Here is one quite hot."

"Thanks, mister. Would you mind a-shovin' it down my back?"

"Down your back, my little man! Why down your back?"

"Cos, sir, I'm only a little un, and if those chaps outside know I've a buster they'll take it, and I am so 'ungry, I am."

"Dear me, how wrong of them! Come round here, my little chap. There—there, it is down your back."

The boy ran off. In an instant another entered—a bigger boy.

"I say, mister, 'as a little boy just been in 'ere?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e buy a 'alfpenny buster?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e ask you to shove it down 'is back, as us big fellows would take it?"

"Yes."

"Yah! Where's your watch and chain? 'E's got 'em. 'E's just round the corner."

Out rushed the baker. In a trice the big boy collared the till and bolted.

The shopman never saw the comic side of the transaction at all.—London Strand Magazine.

New York.

New York is the most wonderful city in the western hemisphere. It has the tallest office buildings in the world; it has the greatest bridges on the North American continent; it has more hotels than any other city in the world; its Stock Exchange is the greatest in existence; it is the world's greatest seaport; it has the most magnificent railway stations in America; it is the greatest banking center in the country; more popular songs are published in New York than in all other cities combined; it has more Pittsburgh millionaires than Pittsburgh; it has a larger Irish population than Dublin, a larger Jewish population than Jerusalem had in its most glorious days, and, according to estimates made by some of our most able estimators, it has a larger number of native New Yorkers than Cohoes.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Bit of English Humor.

The boy entered the office as silently as possible, conscious of having taken a very long time to go a very short distance. The cashier eyed him sternly and demanded:

"Do you work here?"

"Yes," stammered the boy.

"Your name?"

"John Thompson."

The cashier gazed long and earnestly at the mystified youngster, then remarked: "Ah! Thompson. Now I remember your face. It's such a long time since I saw you last."—Manchester Guardian.

Too Much Decoration.

Mr. Smith, out walking with his small son Bobby, met Mr. Brown, a fellow architect. They strolled along together. To keep their minds in working trim, the two men patronizingly picked out the good and bad qualities of the new buildings they passed.

Presently Bobby spied a spotted dog. "Look, father," he said scornfully—"look at that dog. I don't like it. There's too much work on it!"—Everybody's.

Gave Him Variety.

"How is your rheumatism this morning?"

"Rather better."

"Has the pain disappeared, then?"

"No, but it has shifted to a new place, and that gives me something of a rest."—Philadelphia Record.

If better were within, better would come out.—German Proverb.

THOUSAND GUESTS

their way through the soul piece, the plank which, held the mass of steel on the ways. Then came a tearing sound, and the next instant the vessel was sliding down the greased ways, as she began to move Miss Emery was told to strike, and grasping the bottle firmly in her hand she struck the steel bow a blow which shattered the glass and sent the sparkling wine trickling down the sides.

It was scarcely a minute before the vessel in her native element and before the shrieking whistles of the tugs in the Bay and in the yard had died away, tugs were along side towing her to the fitting out dock where she will receive her finishing touches.

Mayor Curley was the principal speaker and said it was refreshing to anyone with the welfare of Massachusetts or any of its subdivisions at heart to find assembled such a tremendous gathering. It is an indication of your interest and the interests that are gradually growing throughout the state that always pertains to the splendid opportunity that will be always ours in consequence of the wedding of the oceans through the influence of the Panama Canal. It is certainly fitting that this boat should be named the Atlantic and it pleasing to know that the desires for an old time commercial supremacy is keen and that its revival through its great industry in Quincy, and in all probability in the next decade in Boston, is proving so successful.

Boston rejoices in your success. It is not only cheering to men interested in the ship industry but to the men in the country who have in the past stood out against a policy of governmental aid to American shipping for they are realizing for the first time that if men of every walk of life dependent on the prosperity of the American people, are to make their way in the markets of the world, in consequence of the policy that our doors are thrown open to invasion, only way to make it possible for Aemrican merchants to be successful in the markets of the world is through the supplying of them the instrument to carry on its welfare.

If all our railroads and highways are to end at the waterfront their usefulness will have passed and it will be impossible to place America in the front rank of nations.

In closing he said he hoped a launching event would take place here every month, every week if possible and extended his congratulations to the management of Fore River shipyard.

President Powell who folowed, said if the ships are needed we can build them and then we may be able to have this event often. (Applause.)

Gov. David I. Walsh, who was to have been present, was unexpectedly called to Washington Monday night, and Lieut. Gov. Edward Barry would have represented the commonwealth had he recovered from illness contracted in Northampton Thursday evening. Among the guests was Chairman Bancroft of the Board of Port Directors.

It was announced this morning at the shipyard that the Emery Company had secured a terminal station in Charlestown, representing $600,000 and that buildings would be erected and equipped to trim lumber brought from the Pacific slopes to be distributed throughout New England from this point.

TWO YEARS FOR TAXES.

The Massachusetts Senate passed to be engrossed on Monday a bill to allow cities and towns to collect taxes in two years instead of one year as now required by the new Municipal Finance act.

AGREEMENT AT SHIPYARD

Strikers Will Return to Work On Wednesday

According to the statement made to the judge of the district court this morning by Caleb Howard, the I. W. W. organizer, the strike of the 200 bolters-up and reamers at the Fore River yards, which has been in progress for some weeks, has been settled, and all of the men will return to work Wednsday morning.

The statement was made in connection with the cases of Joseph Adamofski, Morris Lubin and Simon Palamachick who were in court last week for assault on Sam Dubrow, one of the foremen at the yard. When the cases were heard the men were fined $10 each and ordered to recognize in sum of $200 each to keep the peace. They took an appeal at that time.

This morning they came into court and withdrew their appeal, and paid their fine. In asking that the amount of bonds be reduced, Mr. Howard made the statement that the strikers and Company had reached an agreement and that the men would all return to work Wednesday morning, as the company had agreed to take back all of the strikers.

On authority of this statement the court changed its decision of last Friday and released the men on their personal recognizance to keep the peace.

Fore River officials when asked about the reported settlement refused to either affirm or deny the statement.

HOT TODAY.

The weather predictions this morning were that today would be very hot, and for once at least the weather man hit the nail on the head, for up to noon it was by far the hottest day of the season. At noon the thermometer registered 85 degrees which was two degrees higher than the weather has been at noon this year There have been three warm days thus far this month one with an 80 degree temperature, one with 82 degrees and one with 83 degrees. Today however it touched the 85 degree point at noon. It is therefore the hottest day at noon since Sept. 3, 1913, when the noon temperature was also 85 degrees.

WILL ASK FOR PUBLIC HEARING

Some interesting things will probably come out when the hearing is held on the charges preferred against William Vaughn late superintendent of the Quincy Home. The copy of the charges received deal in generalities with no specific dates. In the mind of Mr. Vaughn's counsel these are not specific enough, and it was intimated Monday night that he will request complete detail in the matter of the charges, with day and date, after which a public hearing will be asked for. Under the statutes Mr. Vaughn can ask for and must be granted a public hearing.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

HEARING ON BATES BILL

For Abolition of Quincy Grade Crossings

That the proposed grade crossing bill of four lines does not provide any method of assessing land damages, who shall assess the damages or do the work; that there is no such plan on record as the "City plan of depression;" and that should it pass the city would be left up in the air, was the argument made by those who appeared at the hearing at the State House this morning before the Committee on Ways and Means in opposition to the bill that the grade crossings at Saville and Water streets be separated by the City plan of depression.

The hearing was largely attended and it was only at 12.30 when the members of the committee were summoned to the legislative session by a roll call vote that the hearing was adjourned.

Among those in attendance were Representative M. T. Sullivan who conducted the hearing in favor of the bill; A. F. Pinel, superintendent of the Ward Three Improvement association; Levi H. Turner, President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council; G. B. Bates, Councilman C. A. Ross, John Swithin and James E. Wall, all of whom spoke in favor of the bill; also City Solicitor Pinkham, Paul R. Blackmur, City Engineer Sargent, Nathan G. Nickerson, ex-Senator George L. Barnes representing the New Haven railroad and Mr. Wardwell representing the street railway who spoke in opposition. Mr. Breed the expert of the city came in just as the hearing closed but did not have an opportunity to speak. Mayor Miller sent word that he was sick and unable to attend.

The hearing differed somewhat from other hearings inasmuch as outside of the claim by Representative Sullivan, that the City Solicitor had influenced the Mayor to sign the decree, there was but little in the line of fireworks. As a whole the hearing was a good one and brought out several new facts.

Those in favor of the proposed bill brought out no new facts using the same old argument of a Chinese wall, while those in opposition brought forth several new statements. One of these was that with the tracks depressed and four tracks built, it either meant a subway beneath the depressed tracks for people coming from Boston to use, or to climb a flight of 21 steps to an overhead bridge.

Those who favored the bill also claimed that the cost by depression would be no more than by the decree plan, as the extra cost for land damages by the decree plan would be eliminated by the depression plan.

The arguments in detail will be published in Thursdays Daily Ledger.

TEACHERS AT THE WOODWARD

All the teachers of the Woodward Institute, with the exception of Miss Holland, who resigned, were relected by the Board of Trustees at its meeting on Tuesday. A. L. Barbour was unanimously reelected superintendent for the coming year.

Miss Louise Steele was given a year's leave of absence and her place will be taken by Miss Vivian Taber, a graduate of Boston University, a recent teacher in the Springfield High school, and for the past year a student of the Teachers course at Columbia University.

Miss Adeline Lewis was chosen as Miss Holland's successor. She is a graduate of Wellesley College and is now a teacher of French and German at Swampscott High school.

CLASS PROPHECY.

The Class Prophey by Miss Winnifred Washburn, dressed as a fairy, in fluffy dainty costume and magic wand for she was Titania, Queen of the Fairies. She told how while sleeping in the midst of a bower of nature, she was awakened by the birds' chorus and while sitting upon a mushroom fell to reminiscencing, her thoughts went back ten years to the time when she was a mortal and a student at Quincy Mansion school.

Then the robin came to cheer her up and told of spending the winter in the depths of a forest in Mexico—where he flew to a window sill and found a person seated in a rocking chair darning socks for brother Walter. Nearby on the table was her work bag, briefs and treatise on law. A tall strong man came in and among other things said "Emma you've been a great sister to me."

Then came an emperor moth, half human creature, reading aloud from a newspaper, "Great ball and stupendous exhibition of moth dancing by Lady Marguerete, given in honor of the Governor of Iowa and Mayor of her native city. Her hospitality is surely impossible to excel as is the

It is not expected that many people will take Senator La Follette's 568 page speech away with them as light vacation reading.

It is believed that Huerta would still call the Tampico incident square, if the United States navy would salute the Mexican flag.

After a stubborn fight, the 200 London Suffragettes were not quite able to land 1500 police of that city in the lock-up.

NEWSPAPER WORK.

Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden of Columbus, O., addressing the national newspaper conference at Lawrence, Kansas, referred to the profession as a calling "as sacred as the ministry." He urged that the newspapers should teach people to avoid exaggeration and violent speech, should resist the tendency to substitute mob spirit for deliberation, should uphold character as against money and popularity, should turn attention away from the negative virtue of exposing evil, to the positive virtue of discerning and praising the good.

The editors may not have put these thoughts into words. The newspaper man is apt to be careless about exterior appearances. When a publisher's office is littered with waste paper, and the windows lack washing, it is hard for the public to realize that the man who does the writing at the cluttery desk is really exercising the power and influence of the pulpit. The newspapers have almost invariably been loyal to the ideal of character as against money. The metropolitan public in choosing its newspapers, has short memories. If a lie is told today, by the time night comes the public has forgotten what paper told it. In less overgrown and more normal communities, a newspaper that fails to tell the truth is regarded in just the same light as a falsifying neighbor.

In emphasizing the evils of life, the newspapers reflect the every-day habits of the community. Scandalous gossip leaps from tongue to tongue in a day, news of the good deed moves slowly if at all. The newspaper should print all it can about every movement tending to uplift the community. Most of them do.

SITUATION IS ENCOURAGING

Delegates Nearing Agreement on Agrarian Problem

SHOW SPIRIT OF CONCILIATION

United States Must Be Content With Accepting Best Pledge It Can Secure—Mexicans Have List From Which to Choose Huerta Successor—Rebels Interested In Peace Plans

Washington, May 27.—When administration chiefs resumed their study of the Mexican situation they were encouraged by these cardinal developments:

The Huerta and American missions at Niagara Falls were nearing accord on the disposition of the land problem—one of the causes of Mexican unrest.

A satisfactory basis for resolving the dispute between the Huerta government and the United States—the international phase of the equation—was declared to have been reached.

Denial was made that Carranza had refused to consider any form of mediation proposals.

Of those developments, the view was taken in some quarters that reports that the two missions sought to approach the vexing agrarian problem in a spirit of conciliation seemed most encouraging.

The Huerta delegates were said to have receded from their original position that the land issue was for internal solution only, while the American mission gave ground from their first viewpoint that it should be settled at the mediation proceedings.

With that factor giving promise of adjustment, the hope grew in administration circles that further aggressive movements by American troops in Mexico could be averted, and peace ultimately restored in the southern republic.

The Land Problem

There are indications that the Mexican and American delegates, as a result of their conferences with mediators over the agrarian problem, are converging toward a point where they can meet on some common ground of agreement looking toward an ultimate solution by Mexico herself of the vexed and vexing land questions.

The Mexicans are hopeful of meeting the United States halfway in the adoption of some suggestion to be submitted to the new provisional government in Mexico, which might be used as a fingerpost in pointing the way to a final solution. The Mexican land question is recognized by all as a fertile breeder of revolutions or sectional uprisings.

It is virtually conceded that insistent demands by the United States for a guaranty in precise terms cannot be met by the Mexican representatives, since they have no power to bind such an independent government as this mediation conference aims to bring into existence.

The delegates from the United States doubtless will have to content themselves with the best pledge the Mexican delegates are able to give, and to rely upon this promise that the arrangement will be honestly carried out.

As to Huerta's Successor

The Mexican delegates are about ready to present a list of suitable persons from which to choose a provisional president, the American government and the mediators to indicate one who would be acceptable.

They expect the provisional president to be chosen will appoint a cabinet representing the varied political interests of the country, and that there shall be assured a fair election for a new president and chamber of deputies, with guarantees for the equitable treatment of all factions in the forthcoming campaign. They fully expect the provisional government established as a result of the mediation is to be accorded prompt recognition by the United States. They are very hopeful of the success of the program they have outlined.

Bryan Hears From Carranza

Important dispatches from Generals Carranza and Villa are in the hands of Secretary Bryan. They were sent from El Paso in code by George Carothers, special representative of the state department. They express the exact position of the constitutionalists toward the Niagara Falls peace conference.

While details were withheld, it is understood that both Carranza and Villa agreed to consider carefully all of the recommendations of the mediators and to accept, for themselves and their followers, at least the principles of any settlement agreement which eliminates Huerta and re-establishes constitutional government.

The messages were considered by the cabinet. It was stated that Villa had sent word he and his troops expect to be in front of Mexico City within a fortnight and that if the mediators are to accomplish anything they must act very soon.

Silliman at Vera Cruz

John R. Silliman, United States vice consul at Saltillo, who was arrested by federals and held in jail with threats of death hanging over his head, arrived at Vera Cruz from Mexico City, having been liberated by Huerta.

Silliman's wife will leave Saltillo in a few days.

STEAMER HARD TO HANDLE

Vaterland Sinks Two Barges as She Starts on Eastward Trip

New York, May 27.—The great steamship Vaterland, which took nearly four hours to dock when she came to this port on her maiden voyage recently, sank two coal barges as she steamed out of her berth.

Backing out under her own steam her momentum carried her across the Hudson and she slipped in between two piers where the coal barges, carrying 500 tons of coal each, were tied. Both barges went down almost at once, but no lives were lost.

The Vaterland cut her way into the slip almost to the shore and in coming out the water churned by her screws snapped the lines which held two Morgan liners. These vessels crashed against the sides of the pier, damaging their rails and woodwork.

The damage all told is estimated at $15,000.

FIRE COSTS TWO LIVES

One Man Stifles and Another Drops Dead From Fright

Worcester, Mass., May 27.—A stubborn fire broke out in the business district last evening, and before it was under control one man had been suffocated, several firemen had narrowly escaped the same fate and $15,000 damage had been done.

The blaze started through the efforts of August Wolburg to fix some chairs by the light of an alcohol lamp in the basement of his furniture store at 166 Main street.

James W. Healy roomed in the building and was carried out unconscious from smoke. He died in the ambulance on his way to a hospital.

James Wallace was walking by on the other side of the street when the engines rattled up behind him. He gave a shriek, threw up his hands and fell dead from fright.

ROOSEVELT CALLS ON THE PRESIDENT

Does Whole Lot of Other Things on Visit to Washington

Washington, May 27.—Former President Roosevelt came back to the national capital and into nine hours he crowded a speech on his South American expedition, a call on President Wilson, a political conference with the Progressives in congress, a visit to the Smithsonian institution to see the trophies from his African hunt of four years ago, a meeting with a few members of the diplomatic corps and a dinner with his old friends.

Besides, there were a dozen impromptu receptions from crowds in the railway station, at his hotel, in the streets and wherever else he chanced to stop for a moment. There was no doubt that he had a thoroughly good time.

SHOOTS AND KILLS WIFE

Man Continues Firing After Body Falls Out of Window

Manchester, N. H., May 27.—Mrs. John H. St. Denis was shot and killed by her husband in her home on Mast street, and after falling or being pushed out of a third-story window, her husband dashed down stairs and discharged two more shots into her body. St. Denis was arrested after a struggle with policemen and others and is held for murder.

Mrs. St. Denis is said to have had frequent quarrels with her husband, and she had filed a libel for divorce. Since the pair separated some time ago, Mrs. St. Denis lived with her brother.

The couple had four children, the eldest of whom is 6 years old.

ICE RELEASES POTOMAC

Tug Abandoned During Winter Rescued In Good Condition

Curling, N. F., May 27.—After drifting about over three and a half months in the ice floes of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the United States naval tug Potomac, which was abandoned in the Bay of Islands when she appeared about to be ground to pieces, was brought to Port au Choix, on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, by Consular Agent Gould and a salvage crew.

The tug is apparently in good condition and after taking on coal will proceed south.

PALMY DAYS OF THE OLD CANAL

Formerly Used By Vessels With Freight and Later By Pleasure Craft

Hardwick's Granite Yards Formerly Located There

The "Old Canal" off Washington street has fallen upon evil days. It has been turned into a public dump, and an open sewer, a menace to health and offensive to sight and smell. Those of us who can look back for more than fifty years and recall the days when vessels discharged their cargo within a quarter of a mile of the Town Hall, are led to ask why, when the location of a Public Dock is sought, the possibilities of the old canal are not considered.

As an engineering problem it would seem to be a simple one; make an agreement with the owners of the mill privilege, enlarge the tide gates and there would be a basin in the centre of the city where loaded vessels could lay afloat.

As for the financial side of the question, that is something that amateur engineers do not usually consider. A modern dredge would make quick work of reclaiming what was originally dug out with a shovel, and there would be a chance for wharves half a mile long from Washington street to the mill.

The Quincy Canal Corporation received its charter in 1825, and the work was completed the following year. The bed of Town brook from near Washington street to the Mill pond was changed and deepened. By means of coffer dams, sections were dug while the brook was carried over in a wooden flume, a pump run by a water wheel in the flume kept down the water that leaked in around the planks that formed the dam.

At the mill a lock with two sets of gates, enabled vessels to enter or leave when the water was higher in the mill pond than outside. If the reverse was the case, the gates opened themselves, closing when the tide turned. A tow path along the northerly side provided a way by which horses or oxen pulled vessels to the wharves at Canal street.

My recollection of the canal goes back to 1857. At that time Nathaniel White had a wharf where later was the polishing shop of McKenzie & Paterson. He received cargos of coal, lumber, brick and lime. The Quincy Patriot carried his advertisement as late as June 2, 1860, when he gives notice that he has "Just received, a lot of Nova Scotia wood, extra quality." I have been told that the first cargo of coal landed in Quincy was received at this wharf. On the opposite side was Hardwick's granite yard with its sheds and derricks; along Canal street quantities of rough stone brought by ox teams from the quarries waited for the sloops of which one or more were usually there.

The size of the vessels that could use the Canal was limited by the width of the gates at the lock. Soon after the opening of the canal a schooner loaded with cord wood from Frenchman's Bay, got stuck in the lock, and there was a great time in getting her free, as the vessel had been built for the express purpose of freighting wood from Stave island to the canal it was a great disappointment to the two Quincy men who had bought the island that the shipbuilder had made the craft six inches too wide.

As a business proposition the canal was a failure. The cost of repairs and taxes exceeded the income. In the course of years the tide gates opening and closing twice each day became worn out and the bank of the tow path often broke away. One of the conditions of the charter was, that the mill dam should be kept in repair. As there was no money in the company's treasury, the owners of the mill made the repairs and charged it to the company. Finally, sometime about 1870, the charter was surrendered, the company dissolved and its property the tow path and land at Canal street sold at auction being bought by the late E. B. Souther owner of the mill and the principal creditor. At this time the gates were reduced in width and the canal closed to navigation.

The water replenished twice each day by the incoming tide, was clean and cool, and was a favorite swimming pool. Every pleasant day in summer groups of boys disported themselves along the tow path. We went in like the frogs. I do not believe there was a bathing suit in town. No boy would have dared to wear one if he had it.

With the departure of the sloops, the canal became the mooring place of a fleet of yachts. There was Lewis Cain's Mist, said to have been modeled from the carcass of a turkey, she looked it. The Zephyr and the Bat that Lewis built over till she looked like one of Columbus' caravels, and renamed her Ivy. Then there was: Onward, Millers Maid, Whip, Topsy, India, Mystery, Fairy Queen, Minnehaha, I. X. L., Lincoln, and a dozen or more others. It was a snug harbor, safe from all storms, but if you wanted to get out you had to be there when the gates opened.

Sometimes if the brook was running full and the mill did not grind, the gates remained closed and we lost our sail, for try as we would we could not open the gate against a head of water. There may still be fish in the pond; there used to be. Many a dozen smelts have been caught from the wharves, and in spring at spawning time the water would be thick with them. But if any now find their way up the brook they have to swim among old cans rusty wire and old spring beds, and rubbish, that even the junk man wont take. This has been dumped into what was once a clean wholesome water course. Truly the Canal has fallen on evil days, and those of us who remember its former condition wish the old times back.

OPPOSED TO SMALL COUNCIL

Representative Sandberg Defends His Vote in House

(Special from State House.)

Representative Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy, on the floor of the House of Representatives on Tuesday denied that he advocated the Boston city charter bill because of the solicitation of certain Boston politicians.

Duing the absence of Representative Sandberg, one of the Boston representatives opposed to the charter bill, insinuated that Representative Martin M. Lomasney and other Boston Democrats voted for the Sandberg bill ,to compensate John Stuart of Wollaston, merely to acquire the support of Representative Sandberg for the charter bill.

"The gentleman from Ward 8 (Mr. Lomasney) voted for the bill despite the fact that he knew it to be unconstitutional," declared Repreesntative Wall of Boston."He voted for it in order that he might secure the support of the representative from Quincy on his charter bill."

Upon his return to the chamber, Representative Sandberg was acquainted with the charge uttered by Representative Wall. He then addressed te members of the House as follows:—

"Regardless of what may have been said in connection with this bill and the merits of the resolve which would reimburse a poor citizen of Wollaston, I have no conception of what may have passed through the mind of the gentleman from ward 8 when he voted for the Stuart matter. I did not ask his support. Neither has he asked my support on this charter bill.

"The city of Quincy is not comparable to the city of Boston in size at least. Yet the city of Quincy has a council or city government of twenty-three members. If the city of Quincy small as it is compared to Boston, has twenty-three representatives, why should not the city of Boston have ward representation at least? You can easily assume how I stand on the proposition. I have been before this legislature several times to protest against a bill which would reduce the Quincy local government from 23 to nine members.

"I believe in district representation. In consequence of that belief I will vote for the Boston charter bill. I have not pledged myself to vote for this measure in return for any support I might receive, nor has my vote on the Boston charter bill been solicited because of the treatment that would be given the Stuart bill."

Representative Sandberg subsequently voted for the charter bill, which went to a third reading on a rollcall.

Representative Sullivan was also recorded in favor.

STATE FEDERATION CONVENTION

The Worcester Woman's club entertained the State Federation for its two days' annual session last week at its fine clubhouse, over 1,000 women attending. Everything was done by the hostess club for the entertainment of the delegates and club women.

The Wednesday afternoon programme included a bird lecture by Ernest Harold Baynes and a visit to th new Worcester hospital for tuberculosis patients. The delegates were given a reception that night in the clubhouse.

The two-days' sessions gave opportunity for the presentation of reports which, if compiled in one volume, would be a book of great value. The treasurer's report showed reecipts of $2,159.94 and expenditures of $1901.15 and a permanent fund of $4733.64. The secretary's report showed an enrollment of 272 clubs, with a total membership of 59,726. Fifteen clubs joined the Federation during the year.

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney reported for the resolutions committee, which indorsed the movement to place the statue of Anne Hutchinson in the Boston Public Library.

MARTHA WASHINGTON CLUB.

American women living in Johannesburg, South Africa have a flourishing club called The Martha Washington. They discovered that the site of the first mission of the American Board to that region, and also the grave of Mrs. Alexander Ervine-Wilson, wife of the first missionary and the first white woman to die in the Transvaal, have been completely obliterated by the cultivation of the land and by building operations. So the Club has put on the wall of the railway station, near where the mission stood a bronze tablet, with the following inscription, prepared by J. G. Gubbins, a local historian:

"Two hundred yards to the East is the former site of the station of the American Board mission to the Matabele, founded in 1835. There lie the remains of Mrs. Wilson, the first white woman to lay down her life within the Transvaal, as chronicled by the following inscription on a stone now in the Pretoria Museum; Beneath this lies interred Ja—wife of ye Revd. A. E. Wilson, M. D., Missionary of ye American Board to ye Matabele. Her spirit was called away to join ye assembly of ye just and heaven soon after she commenced her toils in this land. Her flesh sleeps until the resurrection when it will rise to testify ye benevolent desires of her husband and those connected with him to impart ye blessing of ye gospel to ye natives of Afrika. Christian reader remember thy time like hers may be short. Work while thou hast life for Christ."

The stone on which the latter part of this inscription was originally carved is in the museum in Pretoria and is what is known as "Pipestone." The words were evidently cut with a penknife and the stone was probably buried in the grave instead of being placed above it, as it would otherwise have crumbled away.

The Martha Washington Club has written the American Board for further information about those early days in the Transvaal and will probably go on making local history permanent and studying the romance and adventure of the pioneer days in mission life.

PURE FOOD EXPOSITION.

Nation-wide interest will be manifested in the Boston Domestic Science and Pure Food Exposition which will be given next October under the auspices of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, The Massachusetts Retail Grocers and Provision Dealers' Association and the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs at Mechanics' building, for four weeks, from October 5 to 31.

Preparations have been going on for over a year although it will not take place for six months yet, but this great Fair is to be world-wide in its scope and far reaching in its utility which will have a direct appeal to every household and all its members. Although, in the past, there have been seven food fairs given in Boston, under the auspices of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, this is to be the first Pure Food Exposition and plans are now well perfected to make it the greatest of its kind ever held in America. Elgen J. Rowe, who has conducted several of the big food fairs in Boston and over fifty other Fairs in leading cities of the country, will personally direct this Exposition. The active co-operation of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs will undoubtedly arouse a greater interest in the question of domestic science and pure food among the housekeepers of the State and New England at large, and it is also expected that through exhibits of the work carried on by its various departments the public will be given a clearer understanding of the constructive work and activities of the Federation.

The exhibit committee of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association consists of A. A. Fales, C. H. Fosgate H. D. Sabean, W. K. Hutchinson, A. L. Stark, H. A. Spinney and J. H. Brown. Secretary-Treasurer. The Governing Board of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs for the Exposition includes; Mrs. George Winslow Perkins, Miss Georgie A. Bacon Mrs. George A. Slocomb, Mrs. Royal Whiton, Mrs. Henry W. Breed, Mrs. Claud U. Gilson, Mrs. Donald M. Blair and Mrs. W S. Ripley, Jr

LACK OF FRESH AIR

Causes Rundown Condition How to Keep Strong.

Statistics prove that the death rate is very much greater in the winter months than in summer, and that the lack of fresh air is largely responsible for this condition.

If the system becomes rundown, blood thin and watery, circulation poor, no appetite, don't dose with drugs, but take our delicious cod liver and iron tonic Vinol, not a patent medicine, as everything in it is named on every package and if it does not give you a hearty appetite, enrich the blood and create strength, we will return your money; that shows our faith in Vinol.

A case has just come to our attention from Knoxville, Tenn. Miss Carrie King says: "For three years I was all run-down, weak, had no appetite and after all that time I am glad to say Vinol has brought back my health and strength."

Try a bottle of Vinol, on our guarantee. Edward J. Murphy, Druggist, Quincy, Mass.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Men Do It Because They Are More Attentive Than Women.

A German professor who has been making a study of the problem declares that men fall asleep in church because they pay more attention to the sermon than do the women. Further, he declares the average woman does not begin to grasp the purport of the sermon; that she is far slower of understanding than man.

The man will watch the minister every minute, he will concentrate all his mind upon the preacher and what he is saying, he will watch his every gesture and every motion of his lips and listen to every word until finally he drops off to sleep simply because he has watched so steadily, gazed so intently, that he bynotized himself.

If the woman does not grasp the meaning of the sermon so readily, if her mentality is not quite so keen and quick, one would think she would fall asleep. But the fact remains that she has plenty to interest her. A man cannot look about the church and be interested in John Jones' cravat or William Smith's vest or Sam White's cuff buttons. He doesn't care anything about them, but a woman will sit quietly in church, she will hear what the minister is saying without giving much thought to it, but she will be interested in everything every other woman is wearing, and there is enough to keep her just moderately entertained and wide awake.—Chicago Tribune.

HAD FAITH IN HIS IDEAS.

Jules Verne Felt the Things He Wrote Would Come to Pass.

Anything new about that wonderful man, Jules Verne, is invariably interesting. And in the Paris Temps Felix Duquesnel, who knew the author well, tells quite a lot about him that is "not generally known."

"I believe I invent possible things," Verne used to say, "which is very naive of me, because all that I write will be realized. Human knowledge will demolish the impossible." But if he believed in the realization of his imaginings his friends did not at first believe that he would be successful as an author.

One day, according to M. Duquesnel, when Verne was in the company of a number of his friends, he exclaimed with great seriousness:

"Mes enfants, I think I am about to leave you. I have the idea which, according to Girardin, is necessary to a man if he is going to make his fortune. I am going to write a romance in a new form of my own invention. If it succeeds it will be, I'm certain, the lode of the gold mine."

The friends laughed. "Laugh away," said Verne, "we shall see who laughs last." A few weeks later "Five Weeks In a Balloon" appeared and was an immediate success. He had found his "lode," which he continued to develop for half a century.—London Letter in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Promises In Politics.

During a municipal campaign in Chicago a politician dropped in one morning to see a certain grocer. During the conversation that took place the politician asked, "And I may count upon your support, may I not?"

"Why, no, I am sorry to say," replied the grocer. "The fact is, I have promised my support to the other candidate."

The politician laughed. "Ah," said he, "in politics promising and performing are two different things."

"In that case," said the grocer cordially, "I shall be glad to give you my promise, sir."—Lippincott's.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent, "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil, comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'"—London News.

Shattered.

He was a Hollander just arrived in this country to seek his fortune, and he had much to say to his host. But he had great difficulty in regulating his pronunciation, and at times his words were almost unintelligible to his host's small boy, who sat in a corner of the room somewhat mystified. At last the Hollander departed, and the small boy said to his father:

"Daddy, is he a broken Englishman?"—New York Post.

Lost.

The mistress of the house had mislaid her eyeglasses. She asked the old negro servant if she had seen them.

"No'm, honey," said Aunt Missouri, "I ain't seen 'em. But I'll fin' 'em fo' you. Jess tell me now was dey in de shell?"—New York Post.

Not So Sudden.

"I have saved up $500 so that I could ask you to be my wife."

"This is rather sudden."

"Sudden? I've been scrimping for three years."—Pittsburgh Post.

On Memorial Day Honor Women Nurses of the War

THE women who did hospital service continuously, or who kept themselves near the base of armies in the field, or who moved among the camps and traveled with the corps, were an exceptional class—as rare as heroines always are—a class representing no social grade, but coming from all, belonging to no rank or age of life in particular, sometimes young and sometimes old, sometimes refined and sometimes rude, now of fragile physical aspect and then of extraordinary robustness, but, in all cases, women with a mighty love and earnestness in their hearts, a love and pity, and ability to show them forth.

Moved by an indomitable desire to serve in person the victims of wounds and sickness, a few hundred women, impelled by instincts which assured them of their ability to endure the hardships, overcome the obstacles and adjust themselves to the unusual and unfeminine circumstances in which they would be placed, made their way through all obstructions at home and at the seat of war or in the hospitals to the bedsides of sick and wounded.

They were really heroines. They conquered their feminine sensibility at the sight of blood and wounds; their native antipathy to disorder, confusion and violence subdued the rebellious delicacy of their more exquisite senses; lived coarsely and dressed and slept rudely; they studied the caprices of men to whom their ties were simply human—men often ignorant, feeble minded, out of their senses, raving with pain and fever. They had a still harder service to bear with the pride, the official arrogance, the hardness or the folly, perhaps the impertinence and presumption, of half trained medical men whom the urgencies of the case had fastened on the service.—"Woman's Work In the Civil War."

—Is it with the purpose of stimulating the "back to the soil" movement that the Massachusetts General Court is this year asked to legalize work on Sunday in the family garden? But how are the neighbors to tell whether a fellow is really spading up the garden or digging fishworms for Sunday fishing? Hasn't the proposition too many latent possibilities for evil to warrant enactment into law? Where will dad get his "day of rest," for instance, if the law permits and his wife commands him to weed the garden on the Sabbath? If that change is made in the Sabbath laws there will be many a man in a few years who will agree that the legislators didn't know when the men were well off.—Spencer Leader

The Torrey street crew beat the Quincys at Merrymount Park on Tuesday, 5 to 4, in a game that abounded with errors and thereby took second place in the league. HOW FRENCH PEOPLE CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

A household remedy of the French peasantry, consisting of pure vegetable oil, and said to possess wonderful merit in the treatment of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles, has been introduced in this country by George H. Mayr, who for twenty years has been one of the leading down town druggists of Chicago and who himself was cured by its use. So quick and effective is its action that a single dose is usually enough to bring pronounced relief in the most stubborn cases, and many people who have tried it declare they never heard of anything to produce such remarkable results in so short a time. It is known as Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and can now be had at almost any drug store. It is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

BEST GAME OF THE YEAR

Quincy High Held Cambridge for Five Runs

Quincy High was forced to add another mark to its ever increasing column of losses when Cambridge High defeated them 5 to 1 at Merrymount Park Tuesday afternoon. Failure to take advantage of three good opportunities cost the local boys the victory.

Quincy's only run was scored by Reardon in the second inning. He reached first on a hit, went down when Sawyer's slow grounder was poorly handled; advanced to third on a balk by Proctor, and romped home on a hit by Jenkins.

The longest drive of the day was made by O'Connor of Cambridge who slammed the ball to deep right for a homer which was not allowed because his coach assisted him in from third.

Martin worked the entire game for Quincy and allowed 12 hits, most of them being clean. Proctor pitched six innings for Cambridge and when it looked as though Quincy would awake to its opportunities Siebert was sent in and held them scoreless the last three innings.

Although a defeat was registered against Quincy, the team played its best game of the year and showed such an improvement that they may win a game before the schedule is filled.

There were but few spectators present, among them being Thomas Bramhall of Cambridge High, a former instructor at Adams Academy when athletics flourished in this city. The summary:

There was no hitch in the arrangements, and the new challenger slid down the ways easily as the Countess of Shaftsbury christened Lipton's latest champion.

The little shipping town was gaily decorated with American and British flags, with which was intermingled the yellow flag with the big green shamrock of the Royal Ulster Yacht club, and everybody present wore a shamrock.

MISS BARNES STAR WITNESS

Her Former Employe Is Held on Charge of Murder

ENTERS PLEA OF NOT GUILTY

Former Employer of Accused Man Tells of His Love For Her and How He Spied—Cites Instances to Prove He Was Jealous—Peaslee Also Her Friend For Fourteen Years

Henniker, N. H., May 27.—Eugene Wood, the farmhand charged with the murder of Howard W. Peaslee, the rich toy maker, was held without bail for the grand jury after a preliminary hearing before Judge Sanborn at Bradford.

"Not guilty," said Wood as Sanborn asker him to plead after reading the complaint. As his name was called Wood stood erect in the courtroom, the parlors of the Bradford hotel. He looked the judge squarely in the face as the charge was read.

One of the principal witnesses against Wood was Miss Barnes, his former friend and employer and the woman he is said to have loved—who told of his love-making—and for jealousy of whom he is accused of killing the man he thought his rival in her affections.

There was no reserve in the manner of Miss Barnes when she naively told of her friendship for both men, out in the same breath in which she declared he was to her only a "hired man," the spinster of 50 told of long walks she took with Wood, on one of which she said he told her, "I think more of your old shoes than I do for the whole of any other woman living."

She told of his spying on her. She cited instances to prove that the stalwart prisoner was jealous of her. She seemed to glory in the fact that a man so much younger than she and unusually good-looking, from the standpoint of country good looks, had chosen her as the object of his affections. She was eager to testify.

Then she told with a slight hesitancy of her friendship, lasting through fourteen years, for Howard Peaslee; of their confidential talks, his visits and his often repeated advice to her to "get rid of Wood, for there is lots of help around, and I wouldn't stand his foolishness if I were you."

And, in finishing her testimony, she told of having seen Wood write a letter to a seed man while sitting near her in her sitting room.

"He wrote it in pencil, first," she said, "then copied it. I picked up the pencil written letter where he had thrown it on the floor, and kept it. No, I don't know why."

Miss Barnes was then shown the alleged "black hand" note that was found near the gun with which Peaslee was shot.

"Do you recognize any similarity between any of those letters and those you have seeen Wood write?" asked State Attorney Tuttle. Before the witness could answer, there was an objection from Mr. Donigan, attorney for Wood, which finally ended in a sharp altercation, but not before Miss Barnes answered in the affirmative.

Other witnesses who testified were Constable Marshall, Charles F. Carter, Morrison Peaslee, son of the murdered man, Mrs. Eva T. Osgood, Harry T. Holmes, Nelson Young, Robert Bishop, Walter E. Knappon, City Marshal Kimball, Dr. Adams and Dr. Cole.

The Peaslee funeral was held from the Henniker Methodist church. Mrs. Peaslee, who had sued him for divorce, was present with other members of the family. Burial was in Henniker cemetery.

CORNELL OARSMEN WIN

Both 'Varsity and Freshmen Too Much For Harvard Crews

Boston, May 27.—Once again the crews from Cornell, both 'varsity and freshman, demonstrated their superiority over the Harvard oarsmen. The Cornell 'varsity beat their rivals on the Charles last evening by a generous length in the fast time of 9 minutes 28 3-5 seconds and the Ithacan yearlings won their race by a full two lengths in 9 minutes 51 seconds.

Even for so notorious a course as the Basin, the water was rough. So rough, in fact, that the race was postponed more than two hours from the time that had been set for the start.

SPORT NEWS

Mike Brady, who was last year runner-up, will represent the Wollaston Golf club in the Massachusetts open golf tournament today at Belmont.

The usual open regatta on Memorial day under the auspices of the South Boston Yacht club will be held Saturday, starting at 1 P. M. The Quincy, Wollaston and Squantum clubs are represented on the board of judges.

The Boston Yacht club has received a challenge from the Columbia Yacht Club for the Quincy challenge cup. The challenger may be the Caramba although another member is negotiating for a sonder boat.

The Quincy A. A. have added three new men to their lineup, two of whom are of this city. "Dode" Galvin will be in the outer garden, and Joe Commolli will alternate between pitcher's box and short. Jack McCarthy of Neponset will be second. A strong schedule has been arranged.

H. B. Driver of the Wollaston Golf Club had the best net in an open tournament at Meadow Brook at Beverly, on Saturday. His gross was 84 and his net 71.

W. S. Brophy took the golf-ball sweepstakes at the Wollaston Golf Club Saturday with a net of 71. In the final round for the director's cup R. N. Hall beat W. L. Sargent by 3 and 2.

The base ball team of Thayer Academy finished its season at Braintree Saturday when it beat Plymouth 5 to 2. The aggregation lost but one game in eleven and despite their earnest entreaties could not secure a game with the Quincy High team. Richard Blackmur of Elm street played third all season and did good work. The mainstay of the team was Hanson the pitcher of the Holbrook A. A., who not only had his opponents at his mercy at all times, but also batted close to the 100 mark. He is one of the few strikeout pitchers in school base ball this season.

Manager Gray of Lowell has ordered George Barry of this city to report with his team. At present Barry is with Taunton having joined the squad several weeks ago. Whether or not Barry ever received a release from Lowell is open to question, and if not be probably will have to recognize his contract. Otherwise he will continue with the Colonial league where he has already become the star.

Manager Amby Caine of Taunton is about to trade Frank Hoyt of Atlantic for a pitcher from the New England league. Hoyt has turned out to be one of the best second basemen in the league, and may soon be on the Haverhill team where he will play with Patsy Duggan, his neighbor, who is holding down first and swinging a bat with a vengeance.

Non-negotiable.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

...A... Revelation

It Came After a Very Unpleasant Experience

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

I was brought up with Agnes Atherton as my girl chum, for I believe that boys may have girl chums as well as boy chums. When we arrived at an age at which the sexes mate there was no change between Agnes and me from friendship to love.

This state of affairs continued between us until I became smitten with Lillian Gray, and the first person—the only person, in fact—to whom I confided the matter was Agnes.

When I told her of it I noticed a slight contraction of the muscles of the face.

"You don't approve?" I said.

"I neither approve nor disapprove," she replied.

"Well?"

"A choice made by one in love is a love choice, not the result of judgment. You have, I dare say, chosen through love, and even if I knew Lillian Gray well enough to make a judgment choice for you it would avail nothing, for you would not think of abiding by it. Indeed, I would not expect you to abide by it."

"Nevertheless I perceive that you are not especially pleased with the girl who has charmed me."

"Nor displeased with her. You have not asked me to pick out a wife for you."

"If I had you would not have picked out Lillian."

"There is nothing to her discredit in that. Suppose I should fall in love with a man, then ask you to pick out a husband for me. Do you suppose you would select the man I had chosen?"

"No, I wouldn't," I snapped.

I could not define even now exactly what it was in her question that caused me irritation. I supposed at the time I was miffed because Agnes did not show any enthusiasm over my sweetheart. My words ended the discussion, and we proceeded to other subjects.

The withholding of Agnes' approval—or disapproval, for that matter—caused me to defer a proposal of marriage for some time to the girl who had enthralled me. I did not relish marrying any girl over whom my chum was not enthusiastic. Indeed, I would have liked Agnes to love her as well as I. In a subsequent conversation with Agnes on the subject after I had become engaged to Lillian I told her this, and her reply was that there was no more reason why she should love any particular girl because I loved her than that I should love any particular man because she loved him.

"That's all bosh," I exclaimed. "Men don't love men."

This was the second time that I was irritated at a remark of Agnes concerning my affair, and a second time it ended a discussion of the subject.

Another matter troubled me. I was not approved by Lillian's parents. But there was an especial reason for this. They wished their daughter to marry a wealthy man. I was doing pretty well and had some prospects, but that did not satisfy Mr. and Mrs. Gray. Their aim for Lillian was an establishment. She had an excellent position in society, which they desired her to keep up after marriage, and they were well aware that this would require a fortune independent of anything they could give her.

I did not blame Lillian for being distressed at their opposition. A very strong love for me on her part was required to induce her to give up a life to which she had always been accustomed. In opposition to her parents' wishes. I saw plainly that a struggle was going on within her, and after deliberation I offered to release her. She declined to be released. I told her that if she felt a reluctance to leave the gay world she would serve her own interests as well as mine by accepting a release, for no couple could be happy together when one was pining for the unattainable. She replied that she could not and would not give me up.

But the matter dragged. Her parents would not give their consent to our marriage, and since Lillian did not like to marry me without it there seemed to be no prospect of any outcome. At last I told her that she must do one thing or the other, either marry me or break with me, and after much deliberation, in which I detected as much unwillingness to give up the fashionable world as to act contrary to the wishes of her parents, she decided to marry me. But she stipulated that our wedding must be without the knowledge of her parents. We would go to a clergyman, be married; she would return to her home, confess what she had done and secure forgiveness, after which we would live together as man and wife.

I did not like this plan at all. I urged Lillian to do nothing secretly. She replied that she knew her parents better than I and could better judge what course was best to pursue with them. I told her that anything clandestine was foreign to my nature and frankly confessed that I would prefer to give her up than act underhandedly. She burst into tears. Every one knows what woman's tears will do with a man. Smiles will draw him to the edge of a moral precipice; tears will drag him over.

One afternoon I called with my car on Lillian, ostensibly to take her for a drive, really to go with her to a clergyman and be married. She had confided her intention to a bosom friend of hers, a Bessie Angell, and desired that she be present at the ceremony. She claimed that there should be witnesses so I asked my friend Arnold Brown to be of the party. These two were to meet us at the parsonage.

Lillian was trembling when she entered the car. On the way she said nothing to me, and when I spoke to her she replied by monosyllables. I realized that she was not in a condition of sufficient equanimity to take the most important step in a woman's life.

"There is yet time," I said, "to retreat from this step."

"No," she replied faintly. "I am going through with it."

I was half minded to stop the matter where it was, but when we are half minded we are as liable to decide wrong as right. I drove on to the parsonage and pulled up before the door.

"Go in," she said, "and see if they are all there; then come back for me."

"Hadn't you better go in with me?" I asked.

"No; I won't be married without Bess."

Always persuaded to what I did not approve of, I went to the front door, rang the bell and was admitted. I found Arnold Brown waiting for me, but no Bessie Angell. Stepping to the telephone, I called up her home and asked for her. She came to the telephone, and I asked her why she was not at the parsonage. She replied that she had not been certain from what Lillian had said to her when they had last met whether the wedding would come off or not. To this I expressed surprise. After a dialogue, very unsatisfactory to me, it was agreed that she should hold the wire while I went out to Lillian, and if I returned with a request from her friend to come to the parsonage she would come at once. Setting down the receiver, I ran out to the car.

My heart went down like lead. I looked in every direction, though not expecting to see her. Flight was a fitting climax to the vacillation she had shown. I stood on the steps, wondering what to do.

When we are in a hole we naturally turn to something or some one to pull us out. I thought of Agnes Atherton. My own judgment had been led so far astray by Lillian that I could not at once get it in working order. I didn't know what to do about Arnold Brown. I shrank from telling him I had been left in the lurch by one I was about to make my life partner. Returning to him, I said:

"Arnold, there is a hitch; wait here till I straighten it out."

He saw that I was flurried and told me to go slow; he would wait for me there till the crack of doom. Hurrying out, I drove to Agnes' home, and fortunately I found her there.

I told her the whole story.

I had thrown myself on a sofa, and she sat down beside me, taking my hand in hers soothingly.

"It seems to me," she said, "that there is nothing for you to do but tell the truth to your friend, Mr. Brown, and that will end the matter."

"I dare say you're right, but I would rather do a six months' term in state prison than confess to him that I have been such a fool"—

I stopped short, and for a few moments there was silence between us, at the end of which Agnes asked:

"Has Mr. Brown ever seen"—

"Lillian? No."

"I'll tell you what I'll do for you. You seem all cut up, and I would like to help you out. My law of action is the intent. I will go with you to the parsonage, marry you, and we will have the marriage annulled at our leisure."

Never in so short a space of time was a revelation made to any human being. Here was a woman, worthy of the devotion of the best man living, whom I had turned down for the weakest. It all came upon me with sledgehammer force. Clasping Agnes in my arms, I said:

"It will never be annulled with my consent."

Hastening to a phone, I called up the parsonage, got Arnold and said:

"The tangle is unraveled. I and the bride will be with you presently."

In less than half an hour Agnes and I were in the parsonage. I introduced her to Brown; then the clergyman was called from his study and performed the wedding ceremony, neither he nor the single witness suspecting that in a twinkling there had been a change in the bride.

After the ceremony there were still several hours before the end of the day, and I drove my wife into the country. What passed between us could not be condensed within a few words. I would not care to give it if it were possible. We settled our mutual affairs to the satisfaction of both. Agnes confessing before our return that when I told her of my engagement I gave her a shock since she had always wished me for herself. And so it turned out that instead of getting a girl who was not worthy of me I got one of whom I was not worthy. We arranged our affairs so that no one would be shocked at the hastiness of our marriage and in due time appeared before the world as man and wife.

Lillian Gray is married to a very wealthy man. Whether or not she regrets me I don't know, but I doubt if she realized the weakness she displayed in her relations with me. Agnes says that Lillian is so wrapped up in the world of fashion that she doubtless looks upon her affair with me as a narrow escape from a very foolish move, a move that would have condemned her to a humdrum life.

TO LOOK OVER MORGAN BOOKS

Offer of Son of Financial King Accepted by Commerce Board

JOB FOR EXPERT EXAMINERS

Probers Want to Get Whole Truth, Which Mellen Had Pledged Himself to Tell—Persons Likely to Be "Whitewashed" May Not Be Allowed to Testify

Washington, May 27.—That the members of the interstate commerce commission read carefully the statement from J. P. Morgan, present head of the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co., and that they felt that they should not let go unchallenged his offer to let them examine the firm's books and any of his late father's accounts which touched upon the New Haven railroad's affairs, was made evident as soon as the session was called to order.

The commission decided to adjourn this particular hearing until June 3 and, meantime, to have some of its expert special examiners go to New York to look over the books and accounts carefully.

Morgan, in his statement, made it appear that former President Mellen of the New Haven had misrepresented on the witness stand certain facts in connection with his father's dealings with some features of the road's finances and general policies, especially with regard to the attitude towards the Grand Trunk railway.

Now the commissioners are anxious to ascertain "the whole truth and nothing but the truth," which Mellen had pledged himself to tell before he took the stand, so they intend to waste no time in going through the Morgan documents and accounts.

The decision to accept the offer of Morgan to examine the books of his father left undetermined the question of personally examining the younger Morgan.

Chief Counsel Folk denied the inquiry had been "halted" by order of President Wilson. He and Commissioner McChord said it would "proceed as far as is deemed necessary." But the opinion gained ground that the commission would observe the request of Attorney General McReynolds and refrain from examining persons who might be given immunity from federal prosecution.

Four important witnesses still are too sick to appear. Samuel C. Morehouse, George M. Miller, Dever Warner and Morton F. Plant sent physicians' certificates to show they were too ill to be examined on the witness stand.

The commission wants the testimony of Morehouse in connection with New Haven dealings with the Billard company; Miller and Plant are directors and Warner is a former director of the New Haven.

Despite offers of Charles W. Morse to testify, Folk refused to indicate whether the former "ice king" would be called.

TO WED MORGANATICALLY

Prince Oscar Stirs Germany by Announcing His Engagement

Berlin, May 27.—German nobility, society and officialdom were aghast when Prince Oscar of Prussia, fifth son of Kaiser Wilhelm, publicly announced his engagement to marry Countess Ina Marie, daughter of Count Bassewitz of Mecklenburg.

It is the first instance on record where a male of the reigning branch of the Hohenzollerns has been morganatically engaged to wed. While the young countess is a woman of rank, she is not of royal blood.

It is believed the kaiser will either break the engagement or banish his son.

Prince Oscar is in his 26th year. The countess is a half year older.

FLORAL PAGEANT

generosity with which she entertains her guests."

A sparrow told her that he saw a crowd of folks coming out of the famous Willard hall in New York, among them famous artists, authors and such like. He heard an elderly gentleman say "That was a fine speech Miss Fentress Kerlin just gave on "Art and Music." then another said "Tey say the fifth edition of her "God and the Beautiful" is put on the market today."

A thrush said that he was at the White house where a great ball was given to the naval officers of the Cruiser "Wollaston" and looking at a dance order saw "Er Mazurka" by Betty Smith.

A toad explained how he had been captured by a child in a little country town in Maine and taken to the school house, where a slight young woman was embroidering. A little boy exclaimed "Oh look at that peachy diamond, all sparkly and bright." So Doris Haley has found the right one at last, congratulations.

The cuckoo said he spent the winter on the grounds of a new aesthetic college out west, its motto is "Back to Nature" and its principal is Miriam Crowell. Then followed what she had improvised.

The oriole said he was a stranger in America his native home was in Germany. There the only American he had ever seen was a lady in a palm garden at Cologne seated at a table writing a volume intended to benefit society in general. She had investigated the humantistic and scholastic movements of the middle ages etc. It was Catherine Litchfield.

Then along came a butterfly who said "Listen, I am a Houston, Texas butterfly. My home is in a garden at 2016 Main street where they have a little girl, who goes North often but soon returns. I cannot imagine her staying away a whole school year. Now Miss Goldman is at the head of a class of boys and girls in elocution (the majority being boys) which is a great success."

A canary hopped in and said he had escaped from a cage, been wounded, and rescued and nursed by a kind lady who also had a prize cat. She has put her name and address on the little tag on my leg. I looked and there was the name Rachel Kempl.

A dove that had been cooing softly nearby said, "I found today not only a lover of peace but its promoter. In her room were a few of her oil paintings and on an easel an unfinished one. This was entitled "The Hidden Branch" and showed two children a boy and girl wandering hand in hand along the shore of a lake. It was an allegory of life clearly comprehensable, and still with all her domestic duties Stanley Partridge still has time for violin practice."

THE PAGEANT.

The Class planted a silver birch. After refreshments, "The Mansion Garden pageant" orginated and directed by Mrs. Anna Eastman Frost of Rockport, who also designed and made the costumes was given on the lawn. The day was ideal everything was beautiful the green turf, the noble trees, flowers, shrubbery and headges made a perfect setting for this charming pageant.

"The flowers went with the fairies over the hill to play returning just at the break of day. Just in time, the butterflies and bees thought, when they were called to deck the garden. The gardenrs must find the flowers growing well when they make their daily rounds; and the showers too will freshen their little drooping hads. Hark! I hear the music; it is the minuet and the Ladies with their dainty tread to grace the garden come. Summer breezes sing their song as with them all they mingle."

The fairies in gauzy white with gold flowing draperies; the pink roses; the yellow, pink and blue butterflies; yellow and black bumble bees; all colored hollyhock; yellow sunflowers; the beautiful waterlilies; Gardeners in gay bonnets and over dresses; summer showers and thunder storms and then the summer breezes.

The Water lily dance by Mrs. Frost in a flowing gown covered with sparkling crystals was a graceful classic interpretive dance and with her assistants all holding a beautiful lily their measured step and rhythmic motion made a picture long to be remembered.

The Gardners danced the graceful and dignified minuet with all the courtliness of the period.

The summer breezes were introduced by a dance of the winds. The wind spirites were the class of 1914 and in white flowing costumes with pale tinted rippling veils made a beautiful picture in motion.

Mrs. Frost who is well known in Wolaston was orginator and director of the "Pageant of trees" given by the Wollaston Woman's club. She also directed two pageants at Wellesley and many others in different parts of Massachusetts. After directing a pageant to be given in Rockport she sails for Paris, for new ideas as there will be many demands next season for her artistic dances and pageants.

BODY FOUND AFLOAT.

Three Lithuanian fishermen of Brockton found the body of John Horrigan, a former employee of the Bradley plant floating in the Weymouth back river this morning. They towed the body ashore and notified the police. Identification was not difficult, although the head was badly decomposed. Medical Examiner John C. Frazer will perform an autopsy this afternoon. Horrigan disappeared from his boarding house a week ago Sunday. He is said to have relatives in Charlestown.

Women and Tipping.

That women are close fisted when it comes to tipping is the consensus of opinion of all waiters. "I was on duty in the pen—the upstairs room where women are served—all last week," said a waitress in one of the popular priced restaurants, "and I hardly saw a nickel from one week's end to the other. They never give you anything, but I thought the limit was reached when I saw a well dressed woman deliberately pick up a dime which a young man, inveigled up there by his feminine companion, had left on the table for me. I wasn't bashful about telling her that it was mine, and she handed it over without a word—but it just shows you one of their lovely little ways."—New York Tribune.

Memorial ...Day...

By JOHN E. DOLSEN

[Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

THE few survivors left of all
That mighty host of stalwart men
Who answered once the country's call
For help are gathered now again.

While 'neath the flag they fought to save
They totter on their weary way
To deck a fallen comrade's grave,
Their dreams are of a vanished day.

As memory takes a backward sweep
What recollections crowd their souls!
They see again the red flame leap;
Above the plain the dun cloud rolls.

Below the locks now thin and white
And wrinkled brow of age we see
From those old eyes leap into sight
The deathless soul of '63.

Those four dark years, when tears and blood
Mixed in a carnival of strife,
To us are but an episode;
To them they shaded all of life.

The march through cold, heat, snow or rain,
Body and nerve strained overtime,
The wounds that maimed with racking pain,
Made of them wrecks before their prime.

The few now left are marching on;
They'll cross the river soon and rest.
'Tis well before the last are gone
That they should know we hold them best.

BATTLE HYMN'S BIRTH.

Story of Writing of Famous War Song by Julia Ward Howe.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe told the story of how she came to write her stirring song, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

"It was during the second year of the war," she said, "and I had gone to Washington with my husband and my pastor, the Rev. James Freeman Clarke. I had wished many times that I could do something for my country, but the way seemed closed. My husband was too old and ill to go; my son was only a boy. My children were so young that I could not leave my home for long myself. While we were in Washington there was a great review of the troops across the river. We drove out to see it. While it was in progress there was a dash made against some of our troops by the enemy. It was repulsed, but the review was abandoned, and the troops came thronging back to Washington and we with them.

"The progress of our carriage was slow, for the roads were crowded with the soldiers. To encourage the men we began singing various songs and hymns, and they would join in the chorus. After we had sung 'John Brown's Body' Dr. Clarke turned and asked me why I did not write some new words for that music. I replied that I had tried several times, but never could seem to write any good enough.

"The next morning just about 4 o'clock I woke suddenly. As I lay there in bed the words of the hymn began to form themselves in my mind. I got up and by the faint light of the early morning scrawled them on a piece of paper and then went back to bed and sound asleep again. That is the way the hymn was written."—Saturday Evening Post.

"Five Minutes For Memories."

A custom which is becoming national is the silent dedication of the five minutes beginning at noon on May 30 to those civil war heroes who now are passed away. Soldiers, veterans, public men and just plain citizens all help to observe the beautiful custom of devoting five minutes to the memory of the men who fought to keep this country one nation.

First Northern Memorial Day.

The first observance of Memorial day in the north was in 1866 at Waterloo, N. Y., when General Murray had the veterans of his post decorate the graves of their comrades. In 1867 T. C. Campbell of Cincinnati marched his post to the graves and laid wreaths on them. In 1868, following General Logan's request, there was a general observance of the day wherever Union soldiers were buried.

MIX-UP OVER THE LOST COAT

Amusing Sketch at the Hall Place Church

An interesting program, and one thoroughly enjoyed by all, was presented by the "Adelphians" at their entertainment in the vestry of the Hall Place M. E. church, Tuesday evening.

The program was as follows:

Piano solo, Miss Harriet Fuller.

Baritone solo, J. Lawrence Martin, accompanied by Miss Jessie Burke.

Duet, Messrs. Harold Williams and Camille Fuller.

Violin solo, Miss Beatrice Costello, accompanied by Miss Costello.

Tenor solo, Charles Goss, accompanied by Miss Harriet Fuller.

One Act Sketch, "The Last Coat."

Piano solo, Miss Harriet Fuller.

Tenor solo, Charles Goss.

Violin solo, Miss Beatrice Costello.

The hit of the evening was the sketch, "The Last Coat." The cast of characters included:

Thomas Dana, painter, J. Lawrence Martin

Richard Wagner, musician, Ed Newcomb.

Wolfgang Goeth, poet, Robert McCormick

Jones, landlord, Camille Fuller

Isaac, clothes dealer, Warren Jordan

The scene reveals the three artists—painter, poet and musician—all reduced to a state of abject poverty and likewise hunger. Failing in their efforts to secure food on credit, each one sells his coat, thinking he can borrow one of the others as they will not "all want to go out at once." The scene is better imagined than described when all three find themselves without coats and without the prospect of being able to borrow one, especially as they receive an invitation to Judge Smith's house for that evening.

The long and short of the story is that the three men set out to buy second hand coats with the money they take from the landlord for intercepting the letter from Judge Smith. When they return investigation reveals that they have bought each others coats and at good prices too. The evening's program was in charge of the executive committee of the class with the following sub-committees: Entertainment— George Stewart, Lawrence Martin and Julius Fuller. Refreshment Committee—Edward Newcomb, Camille Fuller and Warren Jordan.

QUINCY RENDERS VALUABLE ASSISTANCE AT WEYMOUTH

TOWN HALL AND OTHER BUILDINGS BURNED

Including Plant of Leatherette Company Large Garage and Houses

Loss Estimated from $85,000 to $100,000

Weymouth had another conflagration on Wednesday evening, which would have been much more serious but for the timely assistance rendered by the fire departments of Quincy, Hingham, Rockland and Hull. The fire had about half an hour's start before the aid of Quincy was asked which was a serious handicap. No time was lost, however, by the Quincy apparatus after the call came, for a record run was made by Chief Billings the Auto Chemical, Combination 1 of the Central station and the Quincy steamer.

The fire started about 7.30 in a small barn near the East Weymouth Leatherette Co., on Pleasant street, and quickly spread to the factory building, and also to the storehouse full of wood alcohol and other inflammable goods. Explosions followed and soon the large garage of Percy R. Bicknell on Water street, and the Town House on Pleasant street were on fire.

All these buildings were doomed when the Quincy apparatus arrived and fifteen or more houses took fire. The Quincy steamer was located at a hydrant on Pleasant street between Jackson square and the Town Hall and played two powerful streams into the gun on Combination 1 which did effective work and stopped the spread of the conflagration on Pleasant street.

The new incompleted Police station is near the Town Hall but is of brick and was saved. The house of Daniel Reidy and others on that street were threatened. In all Quincy had four streams on the fire.

The Weymouth Hingham and Rockland apparatus was located in the vicinity of Water street and attacked the Town hall in the rear. Several houses on this street took fire as burning embers were scattered for almost a mile.

The Town Hall was a two and one-half story wooden building, 60x100 feet. The loss was $25,000. There was no insurance.

The garage, owned by Percy Bicknell was a one and one-half story wooden building, 60x200 feet. Formerly it had been used as a storehouse by the Weymouth Iron Company. The loss was $25,000, partly covered by insurance.

The business of the East Weymouth Leatherette factory was owned by George H. Lowe, the building by Percy Bicknell. The loss on the building was $20,000; on the stock and machinery $15,000. The building was of two stories with a basement. its floor space was 30x100 feet.

Blowing sparks ignited the house of Albert B. Smith, High street; Edwin E. Merchant, Water street; Patrick Sheehan, Water street; Everett Loud, Water street; H. C. Belcher, Myrtle street; Mrs. J. H. Ronan, Water street; H. C. Benner, Water street; Frank Hobart, Hih street, and two belonging to Hiram Raymond in Myrtle street.

Mr. Hobart's house was saved by the Hingham apparatus on its way to the main fire. Mr. Merchant's house was saved by the fire department and the other houses were saved by means of hand hose.

The town records were not in the Town Hall at the time, as they were being used by the Board of Selectmen, in their room in the Bank building. The loss to the town from the Town Hall and the police station is considerably over $30,000.

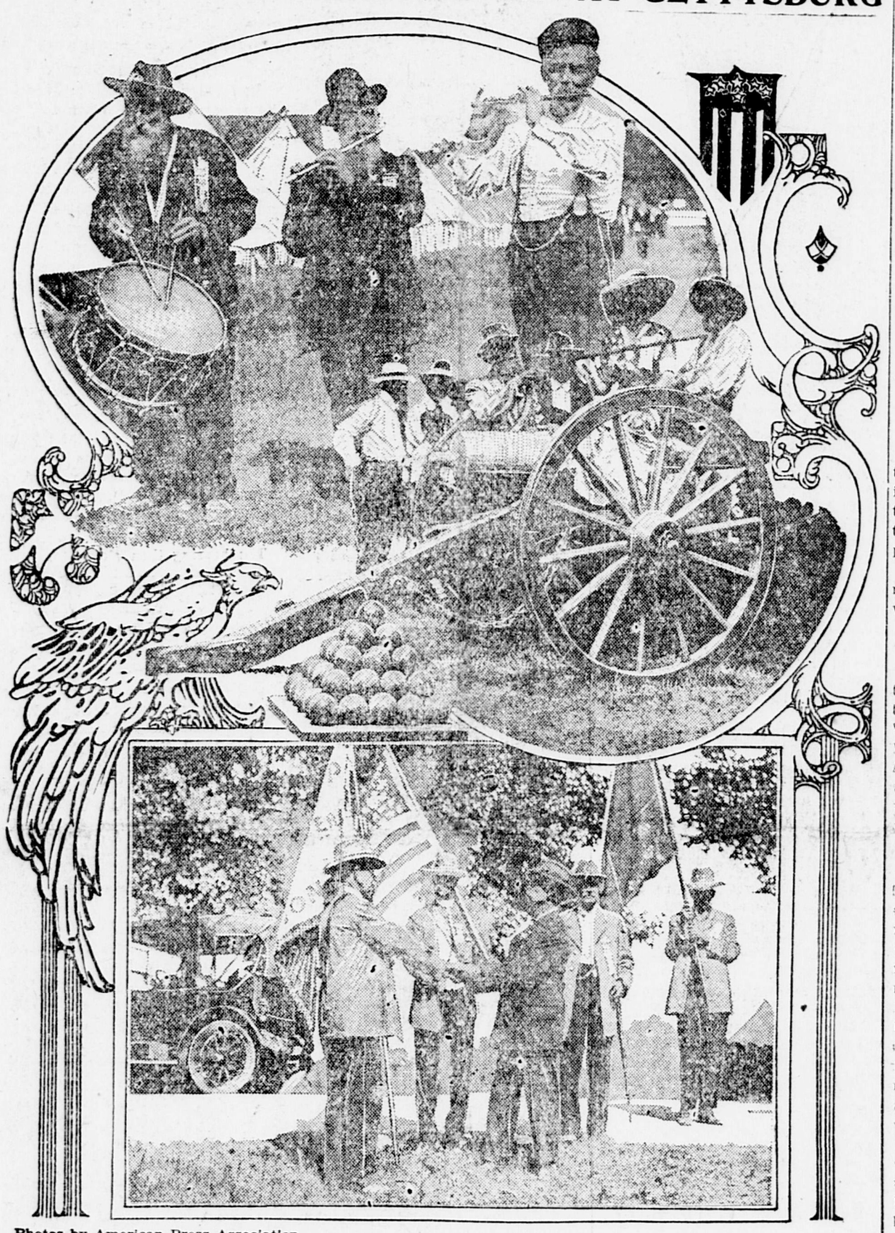
GREATEST OF ALL MEMORIAL DAYS WAS THE REUNION AT GETTYSBURG



Photos by American Press Association.

THREE SCENES AT GETTYSBURG DURING THE FIFTY-YEAR-AFTER CELEBRATION.

NEVER again will the world see so splendid a reunion of veterans of the civil war as that which assembled at Gettysburg July 2, 3 and 4, 1913, the fiftieth anniversary of the greatest battle of the war. Fifty thousand veterans of both sides gathered to participate in the formal and informal celebrations and to fraternize not only with their brethren of their own side, but with the survivors of the other cause. It was the glorious climax of the "one land, one flag" movement which has united north and south since the unhappy days of the war.

NO SUCH THING AS CITY PLAN

Says Ex-City Solicitor Blackmur at Hearing on City Grade Crossing Bill

Representative Sullivan Tells of Mayor's Change of Heart

(Special from State House.)

LATEST—The Legislative Committee on Ways and Means of the House, in executive session this morning voted to report that the bill to abolish the Quincy grade crossings by the depression plan, ought not to pass.

This report goes to House and may not be reached for action for a week, when another fight is expected.

WEDNESDAY'S HEARING.

That the citizens in general are interested in the grade crossing question was shown by the attendance Wednesday before the Ways and Means committee at the State House. At this hearing several new points were raised which may have considerable weight with the committee in making up its report.

REPRESENTATIVE SULLIVAN.

After some preliminary sparring, Representative Sullivan said that for six years the Mayor had been in favor of depression, but in the first six weeks he was in office he changed his mind. The fact that the Mayor has changed his mind does not imply that everybody else has changed their mind. This is a matter that should be settled right, and for all time. It is claimed that progress is being retarded by holding up this matter, but he never knew the gentleman who claimed building was being retarded, meaning H. M. Faxon, to build other than than a one story building. Quincy is on a ridge and the proper way is by depression. The decree plan would change the contour. We want to keep it as it is. It means besides closing present streets other crossings must be provided. It means that there will be a prohibitive grade at Beale street as well as at School street. The decree plan should be called the plan for the railroad interests. Mayor Miller was known as a depression man until three days after the present City Solicitor took office when he changed his mind, due to the influence or other parties. He believed that the present City Solicitor was the man who advised the Mayor to change his mind. The City Council repudiated his action later.

The Mayor did not inform the City Council that he was to sign the decree and nothing was known of it until the deed was done. He should have notified the City Council of what he intended to do. Six different City Councils have been in favor of depression and the two previous Mayors as well. He had understood that one of the three members of the special commission had opposed the decree plan. When this job is done it should be to the satisfaction of the people. No land will be taken by depression and the amount thus saved will offset the extra cost.

PRESIDENT WHITON.

President Whiton of the City Council said that four-fifths of the citizens favored the depression plan which would be shown if a referendum was possible. There was no argument but what it would cost money, but this was a job for all time. He did not want to be sarcastic but there was a tremendous land scheme going on. Take for instance the crossings in Lynn where the tracks are raised. Will anyone say that is a good job? They are trying to put something over on us.

If the tracks are not depressed at Wollaston the grade at Beale street bridge will be prohibitive. Col. H. L. Kincaide, a public spirited man, had done as much for the development of Quincy as another gentleman, meaning Mr. Faxon ,and he is in favor of depression. School street will be absolutely prohibitive. The people are unanimous for depression. Give us the referendum and we will show you. The development business is all bosh. There are other people just as public spirited as Mr. Faxon.

LEVI H. TURNER.

Levi H. Turner said that this question was settled by the Public Service Commission without the knowledge of the citizens. Had it been known that they were to act on the matter there would have been opposition. We ask you in the name of true Americanism that this decree plan shall not be foisted upon the people. The people's rights were not regarded. This hearing was by an

THE MAY QUEEN AT HIGH SCHOOL

School Chorus Present a Very Pleasing Concert

A concert of very high class was given by the High school chorus on Wednesday evening at High school hall and was thoroughly enjoyed by an appreciative audience. The concert was given under the personal direction of Miss Maude Amsden, supervisor of music of the public schools, assisted by the Angelus quartet composed of Elizabeth Blair Miller, soprano; Florence Gifford Bradstreet, contralto; Horace Weston Sawyer, tenor; and E. Payson Groesbeck, basso. Also by the Tempo club, with Miss Ethel F. Raymond, pianist and director.

Part one of the program opened with a selection from Carmen by the Tempo club, being followed by the quartet who sang Carmena, a duet "cheerfulness" by Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Bradstreet, and two selections by the quartet, "It was a lover and his lass" and "Rosary."

It was not until the second part that the High school chorus appeared and the fine musical training which they have had under the direction of Miss Amsden was apparent. This was the pastoral cantata "The May Queen" with words by Henry F. Chorley and music by William Sterndale Bennett. The cantata was finely rendered, and as it included a number of solo parts it gave opportunity for individual work which was highly appreciated.

SHIPYARD CASE SETTLED.

The suit of John J. McDonald vs. Fore River Ship Building Corp. to recoverer $10,000 damage for personal injuries, sustained June 11, 1912, while employed at the works of the defendant company, and alleged to have been due to being struck by a falling tank or bulkhead, was settled Tuesday by agreement of the parties at issue.

AFFECTED BY HEAT.

A man giving his name as Nicholas J. White, 35 of 500 South street, Quincy, attracted the attention of two Boston patrolmen as he stood gazing up at the Winthrop building, on Spring lane on Wednesday. His strange actions made the officers curious and they approached and asked him what he was doing. "Why, I'm waiting to see Aviator Hamel land on the roof of that building," responded White. "He's scheduled to land about this time."

The incoherent statements of the man prompted the patrolmen to take him to the station and from there he was sent to the Psychopathic Hospital for observation. The police believe his mind was affected by the heat.

FUNSTON HOLDS GERMAN SHIP

Unloaded Cargo of War Supplies For Huerta Forces

REBELS PLANNING TO MEDIATE

Said to Have Taken Steps to Reopen Question of Representation at Peace Conference, Which They Have Hitherto Declined to Do—Carranza Will Approve List From Which Huerta's Successor Will Be Chosen

Washington, May 28.—Brigadier General Funston reported from Vera Cruz that the German steamer Bavaria had been held there upon her arrival without manifest at his order. The Bavaria recently landed a large quantity of ammunition upon Mexican soil.

It is estimated that the Bavaria put ashore 1,800,000 rounds of ammunition. The cargo was destined for Vera Cruz, but was diverted to Puerta Mexico. The steamer reached there Sunday. The captain could not produce a manifest, declaring to the captain of the port that it had been taken away from him by the American authorities. Later he admitted landing the cargo, which included also 3000 rolls of barbed wire.

Funston understands that the ammunition and wire reached Cordoba by way of Tierra Blanca.

Ypiranga Also Lands Arms

Ammunition consigned to the Huerta government in Mexico, which had beeen kept in the hold of the German steamer Ypiranga ever since the American occupation of Vera Cruz, was also reported to have been landed at Puerto Mexico.

Consul Canada at Vera Cruz cabled this information to the state department and it also was reported from other sources to the war department that arms consigned to Huerta had been landed at Puerto Mexico from the German steamer Bavaria. Both steamers belong to the Hamburg-American line.

Delivery Not Prevented

No effort to prevent the delivery of the ammunition consignments was made by officials of the United States, Puerto Mexico being an open port and the United States having agreed to a suspension of hostilities during the mediation of the Mexican imbroglio at Niagara Falls.

It was made plain at the state department that the only possible way for the United States government to have prevented the shipment of arms through Puerto Mexico would have been to seize the custom house there, as was done at Vera Cruz when the Ypiranga was about to land her cargo at that port. This would have been an open violation of the suspension of hostilities and would have disrupted mediation at once.

Rebels Reverse Attitude

Representatives of the constitutionalists in Washington took steps to reopen the question of representation at the Niagara Falls mediation conference.

John Lind and C. A. Douglass, legal representatives of the constitutionalists, held what was termed a neutral conference and later took up the subject with Secretary Bryan.

Neither Lind nor Douglass would disclose under what conditions the constitutionalists were willing to participate, but the opinon was revived that the powers of a Carranza representative would be very limited, perhaps without plenary authority and only for the purpose of furnishing information. What sudden turn in the negotiations had brought about the new attitude of the Carranza group was not disclosed.

The development undoubtedly was one direct outcome of long conferences General Carranza has been holding over a special telegraph wire with Emilio Zubaran, his minister of the interior, in charge of the constitutional agency in Washington.

Whatever might be the first conditions upon which Carranza would send representatives to the mediation conference, the fact that he may be willing to send them at all is generall regarded as a very favorable indication.

That Carranza will approve the list from which Huerta's successor is to be selected or there will be no result from the Niagara Falls peace parley was said to be certain. Carranza himself will not be included unless something unforeseen developes. He is perfectly willing to wait his own candidacy, pending a general election. But he has made it very plain that no provisional president approved by Huerta will be satisfactory to him.

As to Huerta's Successor

The plan of submitting a list of selected names to the Mexican congress and of its choosing one to succeed Huerta has in effect the approval of the constitutionalists. But they insist these names must be of men opposed to the elements that have recently dominated Mexican affairs.

It is this proposition that contains the "dynamite" of the Mexican situation. Carranza and Villa are a unit in their insistence that they hold Mexico in their power. They will not be robbed of the fruits of victory. Unless the mediators take their views they will refuse to be bound by mediation. Bryan is as a result keeping in direct touch with Carranza through the junta officials. Hardly a day goes by that Lind, acting for Bryan, does not consult Douglass and the other constitutionalist lawyers. It is as a result of these conferences that instructions are prepared for the American commissioners at Niagara Falls.

Meanwhile congress continues to chafe over the lack of authentic information regarding what is going on behind the scenes. Even the chairmen of the foreign affairs committees are without knowledge of what is going on.

Hope For Early Solution

The president was encouraged by statements that substantial agreement on many of the cardinal points involved in the conference has been reached by the two missions. Hope for an early solution, expressed in Niagara Falls, is reflected in Washington.

As nearly all nations have a personal interest in the outcome of the mediation negotiations and can better handle such international questions as may arise with their diplomatic representatives in Washington, vacation plans of the entire diplomatic corps have come to a halt.

The middle of May usually finds the envoys preparing to leave for Europe or making arrangements to open up their summer homes in this country, but this season all such plans have been held in abeyance. Many members of the corps either intend to stay in Washington during the hot days or be near at hand to await the outcome of the Niagara Falls conference.

HUERTA READY TO QUIT?

Said to Be Prepared to Relinquish Power to Commission

Vera Cruz, May 28.—Reports reaching here through private sources declare that President Huerta has specifically committed himself to turn over the government to a commission composed of prominent members of the various factions in the republic, such as has been suggested at the Niagara Falls peace conference.

He is also said to have agreed to relinquish power to any successor which such a commission might select.

The report further says that Huerta's determination has already been communicated to the Mexican delegates and probably directly to the Washington government.

STOLE FROM MESSROOM

Sing Sing Convict Convicted by Court of Fellow Convicts

New York, May 28.—By a court of his fellow prisoners a convict in Sing Sing prison was found guilty of having stolen six pounds of cooked meat from the messroom, and Warden Clancy, acting upon the recommendations of the judges, fined the thief 360 marks, which means he must serve four months in addition to his minimum sentence.

This is the first time in many years, it is said, that a convict court has been called together at Sing Sing.

Bookkeeper Goes to Prison

Boston, May 28.—A. L. F. Holbrook, former bookkeeper for the Burkhardt Brewing company, was sentenced to one year in the house of correction after he had pleaded guilty to making false entries on the books of the company.

An Easy Way.

One of the easiest and most effective ways of escaping the hardships of prison abuses is found in the simple old process of keeping out of prison.—Chicago Record-Herald.

CITY PLAN

invitation to the Mayor. He would not say that the Mayor was influenced by the City Solicitor, but for six years before he was known to be in favor of depression. If you allow this bill to be withdrawn it deprives us of our rights. It severs the last life line. It was all a land scheme. The railroad alone desire to elevate the tracks.

A. F. PINEL.

A. F. Pinel spoke of the action of the Ward Three Improvement association which were against the decree plan. He spoke of the raising of School street and also the tracks at Water street would be elevated ten feet. If the city plan was adopted the street would be raised slightly and School street if anything lowered. The Quincy Board of Trade and all other similar bodies were against the decree plan.

JAMES E. WALL.

James E. Wall said that he stumped the city last fall for Mr. Miller, and everywhere the people he met were in favor of depression. He represented the Houghs Neck Associates, and whenever the matter was discussed by them it was in favor of depression. This is an improvement for all time and should be done right.

G. B. BATES.

G. B. Bates said that with the city plan of depression every street would be left open which was what the people wanted. One side of the tracks would be just as valuable as the other, which it would not be with a Chinese wall. A Chinese wall will stop up streets. There is a great land scheme on foot. They want to ruin our city. If this stone wall is erected they will be able to put up buildings at the expense of the city and state. Why does the railroad want the tracks elevated? I will tell you; it is so that instead of paying 65 per cent of the cost, the city will have to pay nearly the full 100 per cent.

Councilman C. A. Ross did not speak but was recorded as in favor of the bill.

JOHN SWITHIN.

John Swithin said that sometime the city would have to adopt a system of surface drainage and if the tracks were elevated it would mean that Town brook would be overflowed and entail a great expense on the city. It was impossible to get a system of drainage with the tracks elevated.

THE OPPONENTS.

City Solicitor Pinkham disclaimed the influence given him with the Mayor. He then went into the history of the separation of the grades in Quincy, the appointment of the special commission and the various hearings at which everybody who desired presented plans. When we were called before the Public Service Commission we asked for certain changes but were informed by the Commission that they could make no changes in the decree. It meant that they must approve or disapprove. After this, and in view of the desirability that the matter should be settled, the decree plan was agreed to as for the best interest of the city. We had no option in the matter.

If this bill, which is but four lines long, is passed, it leaves us up in the air. There is no approved city plan of depression. If the tracks are depressed at Quincy it means that a subway must be built under the four tracks for the outward passengers to pass under when alighting from a train. If not a subway it means that they must climb a flight of twenty-one steps to the overhead bridge. The depressing means the expenditure of too large a sum simply to save Saville street. Under the decree plan there is to be no change of grade at the Quincy station. If the tracks are depressed at Water street you will have a wall running east and west. If built by the decree plan the wall will be north and south. You will have a wall anyway. There will be a raise of the grade of School street, but that will be no worse than the present grade of Beacon street. As to Wollaston it will make no difference which plan is accepted.

PAUL R. BLACKMUR.

Ex-City Solicitor Paul R. Blackmur appeared for Mr. Faxon as well as for himself, as his wife owned property at South Quincy. For seven years the people living in this vicinity have had their property tied up waiting to learn what was to be done, and they have thus been prevented from developing their property. Mr. Blackmur also spoke of the engineers who had been engaged, all had agreed that depression was impracticable. Then the Commission engaged Prof. Swain of Harvard, the highest authority, and an impartial man, and he said that depression was impracticable from a railroad standpoint which must be considered.

Not an engineer has said that depression was practicable. You can not find an engineer that will father Mr. Bates plan. Are you going to set aside the opinion of all these engineers? Mr. Faxon does more for Quincy in way of development than any other man. He had the good fortune to live in the vicinity of a place which Mr. Faxon had made beautiful by the expenditure of $15,000.

Mr. Bates is the only man who is injured by the decree plan. The difference in the cost of the two plans at Saville street was $230,000. This bill means nothing. No one would know how to act, and there would be no abolishing of grades in Quincy. He also believed the bill to be unconstitutional. The special commission has now ceased to exist. Who would take the matter in hand and who would assess the damages, etc. There is no such thing as a Chinese wall through Quincy and no such thing as a city plan of depression.

CITY ENGINEER SARGENT.

City Engineer Sargent briefly explained the plans and said that he was ready to answer any questions.

RAILROAD COUNSEL.

Ex-Senator Barnes, representing the railroad brought out a new fact which was that the signing of the decree, and its being filed at Dedham, meant the taking of the land in question, and if this was upset who would have to pay these damages. The railroad pays 65 per cent and the state 25 per cent and they should be heard. No matter whether we agree or not we have to take the advice of these experts.

STREET RAILWAY COUNSEL.

Mr. Wardwell representing the street railway said that the railway was satisfied with the decree plan.

N. G. NICKERSON.

Nathan G. Nickerson said that the statement that four-fifths were in favor of depression was an error, for he could say that Wollaston was practically unanimous in favor of the decree plan.

The hearing then closed.

STRUCK AT CANTON.

MOUNT WOLLASTON MORE BEAUTIFUL

Lawn System at Cemetery Is Being Extended and Handsome Memorials Erected

New Flags Now Flying at Graves of G. A. R. Veterans

The meanest kind of a thief is the one who will visit a cemetery and steal from the graves flowers that have been placed there in loving remembrance of some dear friend who has gone before. One would hardly suppose that a person could stoop so low as to rob a cemetery, yet that is what some person has been doing at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

A visit to this city of the dead on Tuesday found Supt. Nicol in anything but a calm mood, for during the previous night some vandals had entered the cemetery and carried off many geranium plants that had been set out on several lots. On two or three lots near the Valley street side, three or four plots that had been laid out on lots and filled with flowering geraniums, had been stripped. Some of the plants had been pulled up bodily and carried off and in other cases the blossoms had been broken off.

Just off from the entrance on the Valley street side, Supt. Nicol had a large and handsome bed of pansies, and here someone had tramped all over the bed selecting the plants which had the largest blossoms which had been pulled up and carried off. It is believed that the pansies were carried off by two Italian women, for two were seen coming from the direction of the cemetery and going toward Canal street. In their arms were a large number of pansies. Mayor Miller will be requested today to have an officer detailed for duty at the cemetery until after Memorial day.

A visit to the Mt. Wollaston cemetery found Supt. Nicol had a large gang of men at work clearing up lots, so that the city of the dead may look at its best on Memorial day. Apparently work is a little behind today, but things will be in shape before Saturday. The great trouble is that people wait until the last minute almost before ordering their lots cared for, and then expect them to look in prime shape, a day or two later. For instance on Tuesday morning cards were received for thirty-two lots to be cared for. If these orders had been received a month earlier, things would be in better shape, but the owners neglected to place their order until almost the last minute, and then if their lot does not look as well as a neighbors who placed his or her order earlier in the season there is fault finding. However the superintendent says that he will have things in shape.

During the past year many more lots have been placed on what is known as the lawn plan, and it will not be many years before the whole cemetery will be one immense lawn, with nothing but an occasional path, and a small granite post set down flush with the earth to mark the boundary line of the lots. When Mr. Nicol commenced a number of years ago to place a half dozen lots, each surrounded by a narrow path and raised a foot above the path, on a level, and to fill up the paths, so that the whole would look like a large lawn, there was some kick but as the beauty of the plan became more and more apparent, everybody was anxious that their particular lot should be done likewise, with the result that every year orders for regrading are more numerous than can be done in any one year..

During the past season a large section, near what is known as Greenleaf extension has been regraded and is now all ready to be surveyed and laid out into lots. The new section is of course on the lawn plan, and today it looks like one big lawn upon which the new grass has already started. The section on the Sea street side at the northerly end has also been graded off between the old and the new lines and is much more attractive.

Tuesday morning a delegation from Paul Revere Post, 88, G. A. R., visited the cemetery and placed small flags at the grave of every departed comrade whose remains are buried there. One can hardly realize what a harvest death has created in the ranks of these defenders of the Union until they look about the cemetery and see on every hand the emblems in defense of which so many gave their lives. Just how many are buried here is not known, but it seems as if almost every lot, had its flag. OOther cemeteries throughout the city, where comrades are buried are also being marked in the same way.

While many new memorials have been erected in the cemetery since Mmorial day a year ago the greater part of them are of the smaller or medium size monuments, yet while not as imposing perhaps, it shows that those remaining behind have not forgotten those who have gone before.

One of the most striking memorials erected this season is that to the memory of the late Councilman William Farquharson. This memorial has a fine hammered base 6-9 by 2-5 from which there rises a half circle, resembling somewhat a horse shoe. This circle is all-polished except the edges which are moulded and finely hammered. On the front of the circle in raised polished block letters is the name "Farquharson," while below are the inscriptions.

Another handsome memorial on the Greenleaf street side is the massive and highly carved celtic cross which has been placed on the lot of ex-Councilman William T. Spargo. Near by is a sarcophagus memorial marking the lot wherein lies the body of Karl W. Sidelinger, son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Sidelinger.

In this same section, nearer the Valley street side, is a large sarcophagus memorial erected to the memory of the late Thomas Gurney. The bases of this memorial are finely hammered and the die highly polished, the family name appearing on the face in large block letters.

Just a little distance away is the handsome all-polished sarcophagus memorial erected just after Memorial Day last year on the Joseph L. Whiton lot.

For many years lot owners about the Soldiers' Monument rightly found fault because the crowds attending the Memorial Day exercises, without a thought as to who was buried beneath their feet ruthlessly trampled upon the graves. Last year the Grand Army omitted the exercises about the Soldiers' Monument and held the exercises about a minature monument on the grounds of the Adams Academy. This plan will be carried out again this year. Delegations, however, will visit the cemetery during the morning hours, and see that wreaths are placed about the Soldiers' Monument and that the grave of each departed hero is decorated with flowers.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL LEAGUE STANDING

The schedule of the grammar school base ball league is rapidly nearing a close, and the world's series to decide the city champions may be played next week. The only remaining games were postponed during the season because of rain.

The tie for first place in the American league was brought about when the Parker Round Table composed of teachers, declared a recent Cranch-Washington contest no game.

The latter team was the winner 4 to 3, but because a Cranch man's tieing run was not allowed because he took more than one base on a wild throw a protest was made by Principal A. L. Townsend.

He based his protest on the fact that the ground rules which read "one base on a wild throw over first, third and home" did not limit the number of bases a runner could take and his claim was upheld.

The committee that ruled on the protest the only one of the season, was Messrs Goodspeed, Wood and French, the latter taking the place of Mr. Townsend who is a member.

MEMORIAL DAY

General Orders No. 1

With increasing years and lessening numbers we approach the day set apart by legislative enactment and common consent of a grateful people to do honor to the Nation's saviors. We earnestly request all the people of the City of Quincy to join with us in making it a holiday, so that, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, "That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain: that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

No other organization has such faithful auxiliaries; so long as they endure and the patriotic men and women live and the emblem of liberty floats, we may have the subline assurance that time or distance will never efface the heroic deeds of the Nation's defenders of '61-'65, or that any Union Veteran's last resting place shall be neglected or forgotten.

POLICE GAME WON BY METS

The season of the Massachusetts Police Base Ball Association opened in this city Tuesday when the Quincy bluecoats were defeated by the Mets 15 to 7 in a runaway match. Lack of practice and numerous errors were actual causes of the game going against the home team.

Walter Ferguson took the mound but was relieved by Fallon in the third inning, after 11 runs had crossed the plate. The men tightened better behind Fallon and the Mets added but four runs.

Quincy's seven runs were the result of taking advantage of every mistake of the visitors. The team gives every evidence of being a star one under the proper conditions.

In Quincy lineup was Manager-coach Dineen, right field, Black, centre; Thorne, left field; Doran, first base; Farrell, second; Canavan, third; Duane, catcher. Truesdale, pitched for the visitors.

Very Probable.

"I don't know what it is," gushed the animal lover, "but there is something about cats that sort of takes hold of me." "Oh!" said his matter-of-fact friend, "I'll bet it's fleas."

QUINCY MAN'S LUCKY FIND

Will Interest Readers of the Ledger.

Those having the misfortune to suffer from backache, urinary disorders, gravel, dropsical swellings, rheumatic pains, or other kidney and bladder disorders, will read with gratification this encouraging statement by a Quincy man.

James W. Murray, River Road, Quincy, Mass., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills for irregular kidney action. They promptly relieved me. I don't have any need of a kidney medicine now, but I keep a supply of Doan's Kidney Pills on hand. Another of my family has taken Doan's Kidney Pills as a kidney tonic and the benefit has been very pleasing."

If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Murray had—the remedy backed by home testimoney. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

ARE PLEDGED TO VIOLENCE

The I. W. W. Has Little Respect for Law and Order

One hears much these days about the labor organization known as the I. W. W., its aims and objects and its efforts to obtain a strong foothold in this city. It is a well known fact that the organization has but little respect for law and order, but that it stops at nothing, even being ready to kill, to gain its end is perhaps not generally known. These facts were brought out at a recent session of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations in New York. when the prime mover of the organization, Vincent St. John, a pale, rather insignificant little man, calmly told the members of the Commission how the hundred thousand or more members of the Industrial Workers of the World are pledged to violence—murder if necessary—the destruction of goods and property, and violation of the law they deem necessary to gain their point.

"The point with us is to gain our end," said St. John. "It does not matter to us how we gain that end. If violence against human life is necessary, all right; the end justifies the means. If it means the ruin of property, all right. Again the end justifies the means."

This is the organization, one of the leaders of which was allowed to speak in City Square one night recently and speak in what is called a disrespectful manner of Corp. Haggerty of Cambridge who lost his life at Vera Cruz. It is the same organization which has been conducting the recent strike at the Fore River. The same organization of which Joseph Ettor in his address in City Square calmly advised the members if they were working eight hours a day to strike for seven. if working seven hours to strike for six. If they were receiving $2 a day to strike for $3. if receiving $3 to strike for $4 and so on. That capital had no rights. And still such a menace to the public was allowed to speak in a public square to a crowd of workmen, many of whom are without education, and ready to follow out the will of these self appointed leaders, no matter what that will may be.

SHOPLIFTER HAS $2545 IN POCKET

Found by Police When Woman Is Arrested For Second Time

New York, May 28.—Nellie Bradley, who had been convicted on a shoplifting charge, was arrested again in a Fifth avenue department store. When she was searched for stolen articles the detectives found $2545 in her purse, including two $1000 bills and one $500 bill.

The woman is 30 years old and handsome. Store Detective Larkin recognized her when she went into the store where he is employed. He followed her and saw her take three pieces of silk and a beaded lace robe, all valued at $73. The woman was convicted of shoplifting eight months ago and was sent to the island for thirty days.

WHITE SLAVER SENTENCED

Year For Man Convicted by Testimony of Sister-In-Law

Boston, May 28.—Charged with white slavery, with his sister-in-law, Mrs. Marie Geraminia, who is charged with manslaughter in causing the death of Lewis Gold, a newsboy, as the principal witness against him, Juinto Geraminia was sentenced to one year in the house of correction.

In passing sentence, Judge Creed said that the man was of the worst type. He directed attention to the fact that Geraminia had taken his brother's wife from her home and had caused her to lead a life of shame.

Geraminia appealed and was held in $1000 for trial in the superor court.

RESCUED BY FIREMEN

Thirty Aged Women Give Thanks by Singing Hymn of Praise

Providence, May 28.—After thirty aged women had been saved from a fire at St. Elizabeth's home, an Episcopal institution, they, with quavering voices, joined with the firemen who rescued them in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Many of the inmates were carried down ladders and all were in their night clothes. The damage was slight.

Despondent from ill health, James W. French of Fall River, Mass., blew out the gas when he retired and neighbors found his lifeless body.

IN THE SCHOOLS

SCHOOL NOTES.

Election blanks already filed at the Quincy High School by the three classes that will be left in the school, indicate a startling increase in attendance for the new year irrespective of any gain that there may be in the Freshman class. Compared with the three similar classes last year, a gain of 110 pupils already appears and the total enrolment in the fall will be between 1000 and 1100. There will be several additional High school teachers required to take care of the many new divisions to be formed, and it will be a difficult problem to arrange room for all the pupils. Last September, chairs were placed in front of the rows of desks and laboratory rooms were in use as class rooms, the pupils keeping their books on the floor when not in use. Compared with 1909, the gain in High school enrolment next year will be practically 50 per cent. In view of the rapid tendency toward increase of High school pupils, the future of High school accommodations is a decided problem.

DECREASED ATTENDANCE.

In sharp contrast with the other schools of the city, the steady and rapid decrease in attendance at the Gridley Bryant school attracts attention. That decrease has been most rapid this past year. There has been no building in the district for a long time to draw new residents, and the children of the older residents have been passing beyond the school age. The committee has already transferred one teacher to another field and in September it is possible that only six rooms will be in use, as the attendance is expected at that time to be smaller than in any building in the city.

WOODWARD INSTITUTE.

The graduating class at Woodward Institute this year will be largest for many years, and the number of pupils to go to college and normal school will be the largest of any year on record at the school. Likewise there has been a very rapid gain in the last year or two in the number of pupils seeking this preparation, until this year 75 per cent. of a total enrolment of 201 are taking these courses. As these are always the more difficult courses and generally sought out by the better scholars, the tendency has been to raise the standard of scholarship.

The entering class at Woodward in September will be about 50, as last year. and the total enrolment will again be about 200.

The College entrance examination Board has recently renewed the certificate privilege of the school for a term of three years.

SUMMER USE OF SCHOOLS.

Three requests for the privilege of using the school property in the summer vacation, all granted by the school committee, indicate how such use is being extended. Summer supervised playgrounds, kindergartens for foreign children, schools for instruction in the Swedish tongue, widely varying in purpose, but all commendable, will make use of the school property for their purpose.

SCHOOLS DISMISSED.

Yesterday was the most uncomfortable school day experienced in a long while. In several of the rooms of the city, the pupils were dismissed in accordance with the rule which provides for such action when the thermometer registers above 90 degrees during the school session.

LIBRARY NOTES.

The Thomas Crane Public Library, which is on the Government's mailing list, has just received a number of these useful publications relating, mostly to food, its nutritive value, methods of preparation, prices, care in the home etc.

Besides those mentioned in the Ledger article, we here present the following suggestive titles:—Eggs and their uses as food, (Bulletin 128), No. 1 in 491; Household tests for the detection of oleomargarine and renovated butter, (Bulletin 131), No. 1 in 491; Home manufacture and use of unfermented grape juice, (Bulletin 175), No. 1 in 491; Okra (Bulletin 232), No. 1 in 491; Preparation of vegetables for the table Bulletin 256), No. 1 in 491; Nuts and their uses as food (Bulletin 332) No. 1 in 491; Bread and bread making (Bulletin 389) No. 1 in 491; Care of food in the home. (Bulletin 375) No. 1 in 491 and Cheese and its economical uses in the diet (Bulletin 487) No. 1 in 491.

The value of these pamphlets can hardly be overestimated and as comparatively few housewives know of the wealth of material available by simply sending a postal, the library is pleased to second our Congressman's efforts by putting the bulletins in the hands of our readers.

BRANCH NEWS.

About thirty litle girls of Atlantic recently enjoyed a very pleasant hour at the Reading Room the occasion being a Story Hour given by Miss Ella Packard. Miss Packard told them six stories, three of them nature stories, the first about the caterpillar that turned into a beautiful butterfly the next a bird story and the third a plant story.

After these, the game of "Stage Coach was played, Miss Packard giving each child the name of some part of the coach then telling a story about a most wonderful drive on this coach. As she named each part of the coach, the child who represented that particular part, got up and turned around, and when she said the words, "Stage Coach," everyone got up and turned around. This pleased the children very much.

The "Story Hour" ended with two fairy stories, one called "The Golden flower of happiness," which pointed the moral that is found in personal help to others.

SQUANTUM'S NEW CHURCH

Work Will Be Started Monday on a New Site

Plans are completed for starting work on a $5,000 church in Squantum on Monday morning. Innumerable difficulties have been overcome, and it now looks as if the work would go ahead at once and that within a month Squantum people would have a place of religious worship.

A new location has been secured and the church plans now include the rebuilding of the Vacation House, which was partially destroyed by fire some weeks ago. The new plans call for the raising of the structure to the first floor, the raising of this floor for possibly two feet, and the reconstruction of the rest of the building. This will give the church an auditorium 30 by 48 feet on the main floor with an addition which will contain a church parlor 20 by 20 feet and a large vestibule.

On the ground floor will be a large hall 40 by 30 feet, which will be light and airy. This will provide a room for entertainments and suppers which will be a feature of the church work. There will be a kitchen connected which will be 20 by 20. The plans call for the finishing of the building in stucco which will make it ornamental as well as durable. There will be a tower to add to the attractiveness of the building architecturally.

The completion of plans for the building reflects great credit upon Rev. T. W. Davison of the Atlantic Memorial church who has worked indefatigably for the success of a church in Suantum. Some weeks ago it was announced that a church would be built on Huckins avenue where a church lot had been reserved for a church by Messrs. C. E. Carlson and John R. Nelson when they began land operation there. But it was recently found that there were restrictions on the land making it impossible to build anything but a residence upon land in Squantum Park. It will be four years before these restrictions run out. As there are nearly 300 land holders in Squantum it would have taken the unanimous consent of every land holder to have gone over the restrictions in the building of a church.

Great enthusiasm is being shown at Squantum over the church plans and over $1500 has been subscribed. Two Boston societies are to give $2500. The plans will be turned over to Mr. Currie a well known Squantum builder who will have charge of the building. The Vacation House was owned by Councilman C. E. Carlson who made a generous offer to the church workers for the location upon this site which was promptly accepted.

THE ORIGNIAL GUY.

The Brockton Enterprise says: Councillor Guy of Quincy, a brother of Ex-Councilman Herbert E. Guy of this city and who calls himself "the original Guy," certainly bears out this cognomen once in awhile. His latest diversion has been to supply a number of his constituents with packages of sugarcane seed, and he explains that he has demonstrated to his own satisfaction that sugarcane can be grown in this latitude.

MOCK TRIAL AT MILTON

There was a large attendance of members and lady friends at the regular meeting of the Woodsum class of the First Baptist Church, at East Milton, which was held Monday evening in the church vestry. The evening was observed as ladies night, and it proved a grand success. A business meeting was held first, George S. Johnson presiding. Plans are being made for an outing in automobiles some evening the latter part of June. Following the business meeting, the entertainment of the evening, a mock trial was enacted. The trial was very humorous and kept the audience laughing the whole time. James Lewis, George Jones and William Johnstone were very clever.

The cast included:

Judge,	Rev. J. H. Woodsum
Court Clerk	J. H. Leatherbee
Court Officer	William Johnstone
Police Officer	Winifred Geddes
Claimant	Mr. Robie
Counsel for claimant	Mr. Porter
Defendant	Victor E. Landstrom
Counsel for defendant	George S. Johnson

Witnesses—James Lewis, Mr. Hope, Br. Blodgett, Winifred Geddes, Chester Carder and Robert Forbes.

Disturbers in the court room—George Jones, William Jones.

Following the entertainment refreshments were served by an efficint committee consisting of Mr. Blodgett, Chester Carder, James Lewis, Mr. Hope, Winifred Geddes and Gordon Lewis.

MORE ARRESTS ARE EXPECTED

Growing Feeling That Wood Did Not Murder Peaslee

SUSPECTS CLOSELY WATCHED

New Clues Said to Show That Other Persons Had Motive For Killing Henniker Toymaker—Both Wood and Peaslee Were Named In the Osgood Divorce Suit

Henniker, N. H., May 28.—Sentiment to the effect that Eugene Wood, the farm hand who is held for the grand jury charged with the murder of Howard W. Peaslee, the wealthy toy maker, is not guilty is growing steadily here.

Clues which have been unearthed point to the fact that there are other persons who had as strong, if not stronger, motives for wishing Peaslee out of the way, and it is the declared intention of Joseph Donegan, Wood's attorney, to run these all down separately, and to ask for other arrests if the evidence he can collect will justify this.

In the meantime, the village authorities, believing the case against Wood weak, are keeping these persons under surveillance themselves, and other arrests at almost any moment would not come as a surprise.

Aside from the story told by Miss Ida Barnes, who testified that Wood was in love with her and jealous of Peaslee, it is generally admitted that there is little on which to hold Wood.

Through a circumstance learned yesterday much of the reason back of the spinster's stsory was explained. Both Wood and Peaslee, it has become known, were named as corespondents in the counter suit for divorce which Clarence Osgood brought against his wife, Eva L. Osgood, last fall.

Mrs. Osgood testified to hearing the shot at the hearing in Bradford, and she and Miss Barnes were the only two witnesses who claimed they had ever actually heard Wood make threats against Peaslee.

That there are a number who may possibly know more of the murder than Wood is the opinion of Donegan, and he is sure that by a process of elimination he will be able to discover the real murderer of Peaslee.

THE OLD, OLD STORY

Mrs. Pankhurst and Other Militants Win "Hunger Strike"

London, May 28.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst was again released from Holloway jail, suffering from the effects of a "hunger strike." She had refused to eat from the moment of her arrest during last week's raid by the suffragettes on Buckingham palace, when they tried to carry a petition to King George.

Eight other militants who were sentenced in connection with the raid also gained their liberty by hunger striking.

The refusal of King George to see a suffragette deputation and alleged needless brutality on the part of the police in resisting their attempt to reach the palace appear to have exasperated the militants. Window smashing in London now is of nightly occurrence.

POTOMAC SAFE IN PORT

American Tug Undamaged and Will Prove Valuable Prize

St. Johns, May 28.—The United States tug Potomac, which got frozen in the ice in the gulf last January and drifted north through the Straits of Belle Isle while she was abandoned by captain and crew, was brought into Port Sanders and safely anchored.

The ship is undamaged and will prove a valuable prize to the crew of Newfoundlsnders who stood by her for four months when she got caught in the ice.

THE STRATHCONA ESTATE

Former High Commissioner For Canada Left $27,928,000

London, May 28.—The personal property left by the late Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal, former high commissioner for Canada, amounted to $23,257,010. This was disclosed when probate was granted.

The precise value of the real estate left by the testator was not made public but the fact that the duty paid amounted to $4,189,190 indicates that his entire estate, real and personal, had a total value of $27,928,000.

Resolute Is Hauled Out

Bristol, R. I., May 28.—The Resolute was hauled out on the marine railway to have a new rudder post put in. A flaw has been found in the brieman post. Machinery for handling the sheets will also be put in while the yacht is here.

To Protect Albanian King

Vienna, May 28.—An international force under command of a British general will be sent from Scutari to Durazzo, Albania, to protect King William, foreigners and foreign interests.

Minister Egan Very Sick

Washington, May 28.—The American minister to Denmark, Maurice F. Egan, is seriously ill here. An operation for an intestinal trouble may be necessary.

NEW PRESIDENT OF Y. M. C. A.

Frank Burgess of Boston Gear Works Elected

Last evening the twenty second annual meeting of the Quincy Young Men's Christian Association was held at the building.

Owing to the indisposition of President Sidelinger, vice president Delcevare King presided.

Reports were received from the various officers. The Womens Auxiliary was complimented, and the activities of the year in social, physical, and religious work reviewed.

The Nominating Committee reported the following list of directors:

Term expiring 1915, Roy Prout.

Term expiring 1916 John F. Hunt.

Terms expiring 1917, Delcevare King, Charles A. Campbell, Eric H. Ewertz, John L. Hamilton and Dr. H. E. Diehl.

At the close of the Association meeting the Directors held their annual meeting for the election of officers:

The following were chosen:

President,—Frank Burgess.

Vice President,—Delcevare King.

Clerk,—John L. Hamilton.

Treasurer.—William G. Shaw.

Auditor, Joseph A. Sedgwick.

It was deeply regretted that President Sidelinger could not serve the Association longer as its leader. Mr. Sidelinger has been on the board nearly ever since it was organized. His health is such at the present time that he found he could no longer serve in this important position.

Mr. Burgess, who was chosen President, is no novice in Association work. Thirty-four years ago Mr. Burgess went to Detriot as their physical director. He has always retained interest in the work. With all the other arduous duties Mr. Burgess is a deep student of the times, and he is well posted in the up-to-date methods of doing things.

The new year promises well for the local Association, for while there will be a number of faces familiar about the board of the Association's council ho will be greatly missed, yet their places will be taken by men who in the work of the Association are recognized in the community as men of ability. They will need the interest and support of every friend of the Association.

SPENT LARGE FORTUNE

Inventor Who Perfected Shoe Machinery Kills Self by Hanging

Hartford, May 28.—William N. Haas, aged 80, perfecter of the Goodyear welt shoe machinery and credited with originating numerous inventions, committed suicide by hanging.

The reason for his act is attributed to ulcerated teeth, which have at times caused him almost unbearable pain.

With William Pease, Haas perfected what is now known as the Goodyear welt shoe machinery. When his partner sold out the royalties made Haas rich beyond want, but he died practically penniless because of his propensities for spending money.

TWO MORE TO BE TRIED

One Defendant In New York Trunk Murder Is Convicted

New York, May 28.—Karal Drandwicz, one of the three men indicted in connection with the "Pitt street trunk murder mystery," was found guilty of murder in the first degree.

Drandwicz and two others lured Ivan Martysewicz into a house on the East Side, gave him "knockout drops," robbed him of a small sum, then placed the body in a trunk and dumped it on the sidewalk.

The two other men are yet to be tried.

BACK IN NEW YORK

Siegel's Trip to England Was Limited by the District Attorney

New York, May 28.—Henry Siegel, under indictment here for grand larceny and violation of the state banking laws, growing out of the failure of his private bank and department stores, returned to New York on the steamship Olympic.

Siegel made but a brief visit in England, the district attorney's office having insisted that he return within a prescribed time. He is under bail, pending hearing of his case.

Death of Inventor Swan

London, May 28.—Sir Joseph Swan, inventor of the first incandescent lamp, died here. He was 86 years old. He also was probably as well known for his photographic appliances.

Babies Hot Weather Victims

New York, May 28.—The first hot weather of this year put the roofs in use again and two babies were killed and one fatally injured, falling from their high playgrounds.

FIRST REUNION CLASS OF 1913

The reunion of the Class of 1913 of the Quincy High school, the youngest alumni of the city, will take place on the evening of June 19 in Alpha hall. The affair will take the form of a dancing party.

Most of the members of '13 are in this city, but few having taken up their life's work in other places, and from the early responses secured by the committee it is apparent that a majority will be present. An elaborate program is being aranged.

The committee in charge is the same that directed the class reception following the graduation exercises and consists of Allen Miller, Richard Crane, Ralph Prout, Roland Estey, Miss Mary Morrison, Miss Eva Linton, Miss Millicent Chapman and Edward Brown.

NOTICE SERVED BY SHERIFF

Through Deputy Sheriff Field, William J. Vaughn, the deposed superintendent of the Quincy Home, has requested a public hearing in the matter of charges preferred against him. The request which was served upon the Mayor and Overseer of the Poor reads as follows:

"Hon. John L. Miller, Quincy, Mass.

Dear Sir; You are hereby notified that I request a public hearing in the matter of the charges preferred against me May 23, 1914, by Perry Green, acting Overseer of the Poor, and that I be allowed to answer the same.

Yours respectfully,
(signed William J. Vaughn."

The notice served on Mr. Green is identical, except that it is addressed to Mr. Green as "acting Overseer of Poor" and the words "by you" are used in the body of the letter instead of the words "by Perry Green, acting Overseer of the Poor."

CAP AND GOWN FOR INSPECTOR

One of the most far reaching changes introduced by the present Board of Health is the adoption of a cap and gown, to be worn by Inspector Lennon during the fumigation of houses in the city. It is the opinion of the board that this will prove to be one of the most effectual ways of preventing a spread of contagion.

Even since the institution of the Board of Health and the appointment of an inspector, no specific precautions, other than due care, have been taken in carrying out the duties of the office. It has been the opinion of many that it was impossible to escape transmitting germs from infected places through the system in vogue, although no actual cases have ever been traced to that source. The cap and gown are of white material which will be worn only during the fumigation, after which it will be enclosed in a fumgiated room and given a strong disinfection.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Mrs. Clara Duffield, wife of Clarence F. Fuller of 7 Rawson road, died at the Quincy City Hospital suddenly on Wednesday where she was taken a few days ago for treatment. She was the daughter of Mrs. John Q. A. Field and was well known in Quincy, residing for many years on Cherry avenue. She leaves her husband and mother.

DISTRICT COURT.

Angelo Chignoli was fined $5 for neglecting to send his children to school in Quincy.

Arthur B. Clarke was fined $10 for violation of the automobile laws at Milton.

John Winders was fined $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Swedish Methodist church will celebrate its tenth anniversary tonight by giving a well selected musical program and serving of refreshments. The church will be decorated for the occasion with greens and flowers.

For the fifth week of the Pops beginning Monday, only one special night is scheduled. This will be Tuesday evening, June 2nd, when Williams College will have its annual evening as a prelude to the ball-game with Harvard the next afternoon. "Williams Nights" are always very pleasant affairs and bring out large audiences. Mr. Maquarre is having his usual success as conductor. His programmes are light and tuneful and he is playing a good deal of the new dance music so popular with the public nowadays. He has but one week more after next week to conduct and then his place will be taken by Mr. Lenon for the remainder of the season.

TODAY'S COURT.

Helen Weir, arrested by the police several days ago and charged with a serious offense, did not appear in court this morning and was defaulted. It is understood that the defendant has suffered a nervous collapse and is now in serious condition.

Wiliam W. Blaisdell who was arrested at the same time was found guilty and his case was continued to June 3 for sentence. Judge Avery intimated that a heavy fine would be imposed.

Leigh Liggett and David R. Arnold, both of Boston were fined $20 in the court this morning for violation of the auto laws in Milton.

BURIAL IN HANCOCK CEMETERY.

The Duggan tomb in the old Hancock cemetery in City square was opened Wednesday to receive the body of R. Augustus Duggan, formerly of this city, who died in Boston on Monday. He was the son of the late Dr. William B. Duggan of Atlantic. Funeral services were conducted at the undertaking rooms of John Hall by Rev. A. M. Thompson.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

Ruling of Supreme Court Relative to Junk Zone

At the State House hearing on Wednesday, on the propose bill to abolish the grade crossings at Saville and Water streets by the so-called depression plan City Solicitor Pinkham stated that the vote on the resolve of the Council repudiating the signing of the decree plan was by a very close vote, and that President Whiton cast the deciding vote. The City Solicitor was in error in regard to this statement, for the vote on the resolve was not taken by rollcall, but by a rising vote, the vote being 11 in favor of the resolve and 8 against.

Mayor Miller was confined to his home by illness Wednesday, due largely to the excessive heat, and he was unable to be at his office this morning.

Although in response for aid from Weymouth, a part of the fire apparatus was sent out of the city. care was taken to see that the city did not go unprotected. The Atlantic auto chemical moved up to the Central station, and all of the call men connected with the Central station apparatus were kept at the station until the apparatus returned from Weymouth. The Wollaston station was informed that Atlantic had moved up and to cover that section, while the West Quincy and Quincy Point stations were notified that some of the apparatus was out of town. Had a fire occurred in Quincy the city would have been well protected until such time as the apparatus could have been called back from Weymouth. The apparatus returned from Weymouth about 10 o'clock.

It will be of interest to members of the City Council, as well as to those engaged in the junk business that a ruling of the Supreme court is that cities and towns may establish a zone in which the business shall not be carried on but can not establish a zone in which it may be carried on. The City Council last year undertook to establish a junk zone, in which the business might be carried on, but was informed by the City Solicitor that it would be illegal.

MRS. JOHN C. STEWART.

Mrs. John C. Stewart of 103 Faxon road, Norfolk Downs, passed away at her home Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, after an extended illness, death being caused by the effects of a paralytic shock experienced last December. Mrs. Stewart has been a resident of the city for many years, and was well known in the section of the city in which she lived. Her cheerful disposition and pleasant manner endeared her to many, and she will be greatly missed by a large number of friends.

She is survived by her husband, her three daughters, Miss Sarah Stewart, Mrs. Ernest McDonald and Miss Mabel Stewart and two sons, Malcolm C. and Duncan Stewart, all residing in this city.

GRADUATING EXERCISES

Many States in Quincy Mansion School Class

Mrs. Willard is heartily congratulated on this the eighteenth annual commencement of the Quincy Mansion School.

The graduation exercises were held Wednesday afternoon in Livermore hall, which was filled with pupils, alumnae, teachers, parents and friends.

Soon after 2 o'clock lavender cords were drawn down the aisle and the processional, "Angel of Peace" was taken up by distant voices accompanied by Messrs. S. Newton Cutler at the piano and William Howard Violinist. The voices became more distinct as the juniors and undergraduates entered the hall. The continued to the front where they faced the audience as the seniors in beautiful white gowns made their appearance.

The class followed the usual custom of the previous graduates of massing all the flowers on the platform. It was a veritable bower, roses predominating.

Mrs. Willard read a few messages of congratulations, among them one from Daniel Crawford and spoke briefly of her regret that the time had come for leave taking of the class of 1914, some of whom have been here five and six years. She, as well as Dr. Willard, liked the old-fashioned graduation and there was no apology to make, for the audience were all friends of some one. She was given hearty applause.

Mrs. Willard said the class had selected their own subjects, and she had been asked if Miss Washburn had written entirely the Class Prophecy of Wednesday and she wanted to say that it was entirely her own idea and production. The class had done their work well and earned their diplomas.

Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of Bethanny Congregational church, Quincy offered the prayer.

The chorus, "O come let us sing" by Thayer and "Blow soft winds" by Vincent, showed they had cultivated the singing voice. The applause was merited.

Miss Litchfield delivered the salutatory address, in which she bid all a hearty welcome. At last, after years our goal is reached. It is with pride and satisfaction. She paid a loving tribute to the noble character of Dr. Willard, and the noble aspirations given them by Mrs. Willard whose character and ideals were ever before them. There was a tone of sadness in her leave takings of teachers and classmates.

Miss Haley's rendering of First Mazurka in G. minor—Saint-Saens and Miss Kerlin's "In deep woods, Indian Idyl"—Edward MacDonad, showed the result of careful instruction combined with natural talent.

The Cliff Palace in Mesa Verde National Park by Miss Woodward was described most interestingly.

Julien Dubuque by Miss Ferguson was a pen picture of the pioneer and explorer born Jan. 10, 1762, on the banks of the St. Lawrence; a noted mineralogist and the man for whom the city in Iowa was named.

Miss Goldman gave the Flower scene from Ingomar which she interpreted beautifully, showing versatility.

The class history by Miss Kerlin told what diminutive mischievous sprites supposed to haunt wild places had said to her. These little twilight elves climbed on her shoulders and whispered many things about the girls.

Miss Crowell gave an excellent description of "The Pilgrim Monument" at Provincetown dedicated in 1910 to comemerate the first landing of the Pilgrims.

Miss Washborn told very sympathetically of "The children of silence." She said I like to think of them as that for they are in reality inhabitants of a silent kingdom and my theme is to explain the method by which they are introduced into the great wide-world of knowledge and thought. Deaf children are not necessarily dumb, their vocal cords may be just as perfect as yours, but being unable to hear they can not learn to imitate sounds and thereby talk. The child who is born deaf has no conception of the sound of his own voice. I have seen many deaf persons go into ecstasies of delight, because they derived such intense pleasure in feeling the vibrations of a piano through its wooden frame.

The chief aim of all schools for the deaf is two-fold, first to give each pupil some comprehension of the production of the voice and to help him to imitate aloud the motions of the mouth of those who can speak until he can be understood by any one who hears; second to study the forms and shapes of the lips, throat, mouth and tongue of others, until he can understand the average conversation of those about him.

Miss Partridge expressed herself most sympathetically in the valedictory. She spoke of school days ended. They never saw, but loved Dr. Willard; the example of Mrs. Willard's true Christian character; the helpful teachers and ever faithful Annette and sorrow of the class in leaving Quincy Mansion school, and she finished with an appropriate poem.

Mrs. Willard then presented the diplomas handed her by her assistant Miss C. Belle Kenney. The class picture was presented by Miss Kempl and Miss Mary Sheffeld president accepted the picture for the alumnae.

Rev. Mr. Willmott pronounced the benediction.

The graduates were: Miriam Crowell, East Dennis, Massachusetts; Anna Marguerite Ferguson, Dubuque, Iowa; Adelena Elizabeth Goldman, Houston, Texas; Doris Ernestine Haley, Rangeley, Maine; Rachel Burtch Kempl, Braintree, Massachusetts; Fentress Saurin Kerlin, Boston, Massachusetts, Catherine Litchfield, New Rochelle, New York, Josephine Stanley Partridge, Denver Colorado, Betty Dent Smith, Quincy Massachusetts, Winnifred Washburn, Forest Hills Massachusetts. Maude Emma Woodward, Denver, Colorado.

In the studio was a very attractive exhibition. The pupils have the usual merit of using figures, flowers and accessories from every day life, yet in such a way that they are elevated into the realm of the poetic.

The alumnae business meeting was held at 11 o'clock. President—Miss Mary M. Sheffield, Newport R. I., vice president—Miss Frances C. Minor, Waterbury, Conn., Secretary and treasurer—Miss Margarethe C. Frankel, Mercer, Penn.

CAR PLUNGES INTO THE RIVER

A freight car and a valuable casting are at the bottom of the Fore river and a lighter and a diver are attempting to get it back on land today. The car runaway was being pushed through the shipyard by a locomotive when its coupling broke and it started down the ineline toward the waterfront, near the submarine boat basin.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to catch it before it reached the end of the track. It wrenched the bumper from its fastenings and plunged over the end where it overturned and submerged.

MCLEAN—CARLIN.

Instead of becoming a June bride as as intended, Miss Hazel M. Carlin, who has been connected with the pharmacy of Charles C. Hearn in City square for several weeks, became the bride of John McLean of 7 Temple street on Sunday. Only their immediate friends were aware that the ceremony had been performed. Rev. A. L. Hudson of the First Parish church officiated.

Miss Carlin is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Young, both of whom are at present in Maine. News of the ceremony was made known Wednesday by the happy groom, who informed several of his friends. He is employed by F. H. Crane & Sons of South Quincy, and is well known in this city. His bride is a popular young lady.

MR. SULLIVAN HAS A NEW BILL

For the Abolition of Grade Crossings in the City of Quincy---Filed in House

Will Move That It Be Substituted for Adverse Report

(Special from State House.)

Representative Michael T. Sullivan of Quincy filed with the House of Representatives on Thursday a new draft of the bill for the abolition of Quincy grade crossings by the depression plan.

When the question of accepting the adverse report by the legislative committee on ways and means reaches the House, Representative Sullivan will move the substitution of this bill.

During the hearing before the committee this week, the City Solicitor of Quincy and the former City Solicitor characterized the bill under consideration as unconstitutional, and they further said that the bill was so negligible in its provisions that absolutely nothing could be accomplished by it.

In order to overcome that difficulty, Representative Sullivan has decided to present the substitute bill, which is in full, as follows:—

"That the crossings at grade of public or private ways of the Old Colony railroad, (the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, lessees,) in the city of Quincy, be altered and abolished according to the plan known as the 'City Plan of Depression' filed with the Public Service Commission.

"Persons damaged by the construction of this work shall receive compensation in the manner provided in chapter 463 of the acts of the year 1906 for the recovery of damages caused by the abolition of grade crossings.

"The cost of said work shall be borne by the city of Quincy, the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, the Old Colony Railroad, and the commonwealth of Massachusetts in the same proportion as is provided in chapter 463 of the acts of the year 1906 for bearing of costs of abolition of grade crossings.

"The said work shall be done in the same manner provided for doing the work of abolition of grade crossings in chapter 463 of the acts of the year 1906.

"This act shall not take effect until it is accepted by the city of Quincy in the manner hereinafter provided.

"At the annual municipal election to be held at the city of Quincy in the year 1914, there shall be placed on the ballot the following question: Shall chapter X of the acts of the year 1914, being an act relative to grade-crossings in the city of Quincy be accepted The vote on this question shall be canvassed with the other votes at said election, and if a majority of the votes cast upon said question are in the affirmative, this act shall take effect."

FREE USE OF HALLS WANTED

For Lectures of New England Civic Institute

Upwards of fifty women were present Thursday afternoon at the Coddington school hall at the lecture under the auspices of the New England Civic Institute, of which Dr. A. A. Berle is the head. The lectures are a sort of college extension education. Similar classes are being given throughout different cities of the state. It is understood that no fee is charged for attendance, except that a registration fee of fifty cents is required.

Application has been made to the School Committee for the use of the school halls free of charge, for these lectures. The School Committee under the law, are allowed to grant the use of school halls for educational purposes, and the question with the School Committee is whether these lectures were of an educational nature, and if the use of the hall should be granted free of expense.

In order to determine just what the lectures were, Chairman McKay and Dr. Bushnell and Dr. Bruce of the school board attended Thursday's lecture to learn first hand about them.

The lecture of Thursday was given by A. A. Berle, Jr., a son of Dr. Berle. He is a very young man, almost a boy yet unusually bright, for it is said of him that he was able to graduate from Harvard college at the age of sixteen years. His lecture was on political economy and science, and it was a very interesting talk. Many of the ladies had a pencil and pad with them and made copious notes during the talk.

It dealt with the origin of the modern state. The elements of the modern state are first the state and the nation, the family and the state, the church and state, and the law and state.

First we have economy, the need of the housekeeper of the state. From this came the autocracy who held independent and arbitrary power of government. Then came the aristocracy which was government by the rich, democracy which was the rule of the crowd and last of all come ochlocracy or mob rule.

Each of these forms were explained in detail, the governments of Germany Russia and England being used as illustrations, in telling how they worked out. In connection with these the speaker made the startling statement that of every dollar tax collected 71 per cent. was given to war purpose and 29 per cent. to peaceful pursuits.

He then spoke of the early government of this country by the church and state. An example of this form of government can be had here in Quincy, where in olden times it was necessary for one to be enrolled in the Parish church in order to exercise his right of franchise. This illustration however was not used by the speaker.

In the early days said the speaker the church was as esesntial as the school now is. Lastly he spoke of the law and the state, and why it was necessary that laws should be made in relation of matters of health, schools, etc.

The lecture was certainly an interesting one and the speaker was followed closely during his hour's talk.

REPUBLICAN OUTING.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Ward One Republican committee was held Wednesday evening at which routine business was transacted. It was voted to hold an outing in September at Nortemans, Houghs Neck, similar to the most successful outing held a year ago. Last year the gathering was confined to Ward One but this year the committee has decided to include the whole city at the outing.

LADIES AID ANNIVERSARY

Celebrated at St. Pauls Church Last Evening

The Ladies Aid Society of the St. Paul's M. E. church celebrated its tenth anniversary Thursday evening when a crowd filled the spacious church. The auditorium and vestry had been beautifully decorated with garlands, flowers and bunting for the memorable occasion.

The well rendered musical program included selections by a young ladies octette, and the society choir. Miss Muldoon of Newton captivated all by her excellent vocal and violin solos. Miss Hannah Sandberg and Miss Ruth Lagerstrom both did credit as excellent pianists.. A poem written for the occasion was read by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Hillman.

At the conclusion of the program, refreshments were served in the vestry by a committee under the direction of Mrs. Alida Lagergren and Mrs. S. Steele.

The society was organized ten years ago under the leadership of Rev. S. L. Carlander, who was pastor of the church at that time and it has since continually grown in membership and usefulness.

CITY HALL NOTES.

The district court in dismissing the complaints against the three men for storing junk in Quincy without having obtained a license from the City Council, practically said that the ordinance which was passed last year is of but little use. Thomas Buttimer, counsel for the three men, moved to quash the complaints, basing his claim on the ground that the ordinance was unconstitutional. The court however heard the evidence in the cases and in dismissing the complaints said that it did not want to pass on the validity of the ordinance under which the complaints were brought, and recommended that any further action taken should be under some other ordinance bearing on the question.

The Assessors are now at work in Ward One, but probably will not be able to complete their field work by June 1. It is expected however that they will complete the field work next week. Stormy weather has interfered considerably with the field work.

Mrs. Sarah Knowles died at the home of her daugher Mrs. Harvey, Conant road, last Friday, burial being in Wellfleet, Mass.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

Memorial Day will be observed as a holiday by the Daily Ledger, no paper being issued on Saturday. The Friday Ledger will contain the Sunday services and other Saturday features. See Monday Ledger for report of holiday happenings.

June 14 is flag day. It is generally felt that everybody else should hang out a flag.

Kansas is calling for 40,000 harvest hands. Coxey's army won't march anywhere near that state.

The dancing teachers urge dancers not to embrace their partners. If they don't look out they will lose their job.

As long as it is merely the stockholders who object, the railroad directors feel perfectly safe.

The Decoration day addresses all exhort the sons to emulate the heroic efforts of the fathers, which they immediately put into practice by lining three baggers into the outfield.

HAND TO HAND FIGHTING.

The popular impression of Latin-American revolutions has been that they were comic-opera, much like French duels. The armies moved up in sight of each other, fired a few shots, performed their evolutions, and the stage play was over.

The Mexican fighting, seen in the capture of Tampico and the previous taking of Torreon, has been real war. Although unscientific, it has had a brutality and bloodiness like the days of the sword and the spear.

The war correspondents say scientific war has been growing less deadly. To be sure arms and ammunition are far more effective and frightful. But the soldiers know how to protect themselves. No longer do they stand up in rows of close formation, a sure mark for the foe, according to the pictures of all the older battles.

Instead they are trained to hug the ground with their bellies, dodging from rock to tree, seeking every inch of shelter. In the Russo-Japanese war many traditional conceptions were destroyed. The general was no longer a personal leader at the head of his troops, or survey the whole conflict from some hill.

His army was distributed in detachments covering as much as 40 miles in some cases. The various battalions were connected by telephone with the general's office at some central point. Orders were dictated in this office to stenographers. The romance of personal daring was gone, but the whole vast formation moved with the efficiency of a machine.

The fighting in Mexico seems like a reversion to primitive war. Villa, leading his troops personally at Torreon, or the hand to hand fighting in the plazas of Tampico, seem like Richard Coeur de Lion personally swinging his battle axe on the heads of the Saracens at Acre, way back in the 12th century.

A MEMORIAL POEM.

By John E. Foss.

In April eighteen-sixty-one.
As I remember well,
The rebels opened on our fort
And the walls of Sumter fell.

Then o'er the northern hills was heard
The bugles wild alarm,
The brave and true in answer came
From village, home and farm.

They rallied round that dear old flag,
That Washington to victory bore
That's waved unstained o'er freedom's soil
Since the British left our shore.

Four long and dreary years they fought
Their country's flag to save
And the pride of many a northern home,
Went down to a nameless grave.

Wrapped in the faded coat of blue
They donned and proudly wore
Their bones are mouldering neath the sod
On many a field of gore.

Long years have rolled away since then
When Slavery's chains were broken
When General Lee gave up his sword
And the words of peace were spoken.

When the Boys in Blue came marching home
Beneath the flag they loved so well
Whose tattered folds on freedom's air
So proudly rose and fell.

Then Posts were formed and the day was set
When comrades kind and true
Should decorate the graves of those
That wore the coat of blue.

For those who fought on board our ships
And found a watery grave
Fresh flowers are cast by tender hands
Upon the rolling wave.

The hand of time depletes their ranks
And their locks are turning gray
They find new graves to decorate
On each Memorial Day.

When the bugle call has sounded
And the boatman takes them o'er
No clouds of war will o'er them roll
Or cannons loudly roar.

When all who fought for Freedom's cause
Are marching on that golden shore
Their deeds in history will live
Till time shall be no more.

Two young men had a narrow escape from injury on Randolph avenue Quincy, Thursday evening by jumping from a National roadster a few seconds before the gasoline tank exploded. The force of the explosion wrecked the machine, scattered burning parts, and started a fire in the woods on the roadside, which was extinguished by the Milton fire department. SUDDEN DEATH AT WOLLASTON

Arthur Sibley Has Had a Very Eventful Career

Arthur Sibley, a medal of honor man and one of the most prominent residents of this city, died suddenly at the breakfast table at his home on Grand View avenue this morning. He came down to breakfast at seven o'clock, seated himself at the table and when the maid came into the room she found him lifeless on the floor. Dr. Curtis who was called said that death was due to heart disease.

During his early years Mr. Sibley held many positions of trust, and while at Harvard participated in athletics and was a chum of Tad, the son of President Lincoln.

Arthur Sibley was born in Chelsea, April 9, 1840, the son of Steven, a prominent woolen manufacturer of his day. He attended the Chelsea public schools and was a member of the Class of 1862 at Harvard. He rowed with the class crew and was a substitute on the varsity crew, a popular student and was a member of the Hasty Pudding Club and the celebrated Med Fae.

While in college he became the chum of Tad Lincoln and he gave him a letter to President Lincoln who made him assistant paymaster in the navy.

He served on blockade duty in the Gulf of Mexico and also in the Red River expedition,in the campaign against Vicksburg and a few years ago was awarded a congressional medal for distinguished services during the war, principally in carrying secret dispatches.

He was promoted to the rank of paymaster of the first squadron during the war and was later made fleet paymaster. At the close of the war he was brought to Washington to pay off the entire naval force and paid out over $13,000,000 over his signature.

He returned to Boston after the war and associated himself with his father who had started one of the first large steam laundries in Boston.

He was married Nov. 4, 1870 to Sarah Ann Timmerman. For many years he was treasurer of the First Universalist church of Chelsea and was one of those instrumental in the founding of the Frost Hospital in Chelsea and also the Mount Pleasant Home for Aged People. On the death of his uncle Solomon Sibley he took charge of his manufacturing business and conducted it for his widow until the plant went out of business. He came to Wollaston in 1891.

Mr. Sibley was a member of the Loyal Legion of the Grand Army of the Republic and was appointed warden of Ward Five by the late Mayor William T. Shea. His wife died Feb. 15 ,1913. He has six children living, Frank P. Sibley of Hingham, a special writer for the Boston Globe; Arthur E. Sibley of Newton, Mrs. F. H. Wright of Hingham, Miss Catherine Sibley, an instructress at Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y., Margaret and Robert H. of Wollaston. He leaves also six grandchildren, a brother Edwin E. Sibley of Chelsea and one sister Mrs. Otis Hinsman of Sullivan, Me.

His funeral will be held at the Forest Hills crematory Monday afternoon.

FOR DELICATE CHILDREN

A Mother's Letter to Mothers.

Mrs. E. W. Cooper of Bloomfield N. J., says: "My child, seven years old, had a bad cold and was weak and quite run down in health. She had been in this condition for about six weeks when I began giving her Vinol. It was a wonderful help to the child, breaking up her cold quickly and building up her strength beside. I have also found Vinol a most excellent tonic for keeping up the children's strength during a siege of whooping cough."

Vinol is a wonderful combination of two world-famed tonics the medicinal body building elements of cod liver oil and iron for the blood, therefore it is a perfectly safe medicine for children, because it is not a patent medicine, everything in it is printed on every package, so mothers may know what they are giving their little ones.

Therefore we ask every mother of a weak sickly or ailing child in this vicinity to try Vinol on our guarantee. E. J. Murphy, Druggist, Quincy, Mass.

DISTRICT COURT.

James F. Regan, the man who wandered about the Quincy Point district Wednesday night, minus the garments which one usually covers himself with was arraigned in court this morning for drunkenness. It appeared that he was in court May 4 on a similar complaint and fined $15 which sentence was suspended. This suspension was revoked and the fine paid and an additional fine of $10 was added for the offence of Wednesday night. Being minus the $25 he was committed to Dedham.

The cases of Max Bernstein, Abraham Ginsburg and Joseph Cutler, for storing junk without a license in Quincy was heard. The court did not pass on the motion of Counsel Buttimer to quash, but called the witnesses in the cases, each of which was tried separately. At the conclusion the court ordered the complaints dismissed.

QUINCY HIGH SHOOK HOODOO

Won from Hingham By Grand Batting Rally

The Quincy High school base ball team shook the hoodoo that has followed it all season, and won its first game by defeating Hingham High at Merrymount Park on Thursday afternoon, 11 to 2. All the runs were scored in the eighth inning when the local boys batted two pitchers out of the box.

The game until then had been played in the ordinary way, Hingham getting their two runs in the first inning through loose playing.

Whet Brown started the fireworks by placing a single over shortstop and Captain Larkin bunted and reached first. Pratt, the Hingham pitcher hit Stedman and filled the bases, and then passed Dolan and Sawyer forcing Qiuncy's first runs. Jenkins emptied the bases by getting a pretty double and Jenkins scored on Bates' drive which the short stop stopped by throwing his glove in the air, giving Bates third. Creedon was passed and Hamlin walked to the plate and took a single for a squeeze play. Bates was nailed at home. Brown made his second single and Hamlin crossed home on Larkin's hit. The captain went to third on Stedman's single and scored on a passed ball. Dolanwalked and Stedman scored on a balk. The Hingham coach then took out Mitchell who has succeeded Pratt, and Thaxter saved further inquiry by fanning Jenkins and Sawyer.

The batting rally has not been equalled by any High school team this season and created so much excitement among the fans gathered on both lines that they cheered themselves hoarse.

Hingham's best play was made by Thaxter, while he was on second. He speared a high line drive with one hand and made a double unassisted.

The pitching interests of Quincy were guarded by "Dun" Hamlin, who filled that position for the first time. He had good control of the ball and through good head work fanned 10 of the visitors. He was hit for only two safeties and passed five men.

Sawyer played a good game at first base, handled several poor throws well and scored from second during the rally on a short two-base hit.

Whet Brown who started the slaughter has reached first base seven out of ten times at the bat and has played a winning game in the right garden.

HENRY SIEGEL

Indicted Banker Is Back After Visit to England

DATE OF SIEGEL TRIAL

Depends on Court's Decision on Motion For Change of Venue

New York, May 29.—The trial of Henry Siegel, under fourteen indictments with Frank E. Vogel on charges of wrecking the Siegel shops and banks, probably will not take place before October.

Word came from the district attorney's office that if Siegel and Vogel are not tried in June they will not be tried until fall.

The trial in June is entirely dependent on the decision of Justice Blanchard on the application for a change of venue and the action of Siegel's attorneys after that decision. If it is unfavorable to Siegel an immediate appeal is expected, with a stay of trial. In this case it will be almost impossible to reach trial in June.

THINKS FRIDAY IS HIS UNLUCKY DAY

Becker to Hear Death Sentence Pronounced For Second Time

New York, May 29.—Despite his plea for a postponement to some other day of the week than a Friday, on account of his superstition that Friday is his unlucky day, Charles Becker will today hear for the second time sentence of death for the murder of Herman Rosenthal pronounced against him.

The proceedings will contain the conventional motions on the part of his counsel, which will bring him the usual delay pending his appeal.

Becker, who is very superstitious, was found guilty on a Friday. Anticipating an unfavorable verdict he appealed to his counsel to prolong the proceedings so that he would not come up for sentence on what he called the unlucky day. Becker was deeply depressed after Mr. Manton had told him he could not obtain a delay of today's ordeal.

ATTACK KING'S HOME

Militants Hurl Stones Through Windows of Buckingham Palace

London, May 29.—Buckingham Palace is to be no longer exempt from the window-smashing raids of the suffragettes. Between 11 and 12 o'clock at night two militants succeeded in evading the sentries outside the palace.

Entering the quadrangle, they began throwing stones at the windows and had smashed two of them when the sentries seized them and took them to the police station within the precincts of the palace, where they gave their names to the police. The master of the royal household refused to prosecute them and they were released after a few hours' detention.

Big Fire Starts From Sawdust

WOMAN STOMACH SUFFERER FINDS HER PAINS ENDED BY FIRST DOSE

Hartford Resident Gets Quick Relief From Use of Mayr Remedy.

Mrs. S. E. Johnson of 61 Whitmore Street, Hartford, Conn., was a victim of stomach and digestive disorders, attended by much pain. She suffered from pains in the side and other discomforts.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and found quick relief. In writing of her experience she said:

"The pain left me the next day after taking the remedy. It's simply wonderful how it relieved me, and you may be sure I shall tell every one who has stomach trouble about it."

Similar letters have come from thousands of people in all parts of the country. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy has a wonderful record. The first dose will convince—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

THE PLAYHOUSE

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

At Kincaide Theatre beginning Monday J. W. Gorman's Musical Comedy Co., presents "7 Reasons Y". Its catchy songs smart dances and witty dialogue are sure to please every one, George Parsons Monroe invites his friend, Thackery Irving Kean, the Duke of Villford, to his home. Just about this time, the Monroes have descended financially and are in a pretty bad condition, so much so, the servants leave without a moments notice. Mrs. Monroe and her daughter Mary, decide to act as servants during the Dukes stay Mrs. Monroe acting as housekeeper and Mary as the maid. The Duke arrives and through a misunderstanding, is mistaken for the valet. It would not be fair to Mr. Ott, to tell the complete story. The many musical numbers help to make this piece the most tuneful ever whistled. Pretty girls swagger costumes, and funny complications guarantee a pleasant evening's amusement. Another fetching feature of this splendid show will be "The Perils of Pauline" in two reels.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Joe Weber and Lew Fields, who have scored one of the biggest successes of recent years with their big musical comedy "Hokey-Pokey" at the Boston Theatre, enter upon their second and last week at that playhouse Monday. The engagement will close on Saturday night, June 6, which date will positively mark the last joint appearance of these world famous fun-makers on any stage. They will not appear in any other New England city and next season will once more go their separate ways, Mr. Fields to enter the field of legitimate comedy and Mr. Weber to devote himself to managerial activities. Not to have seen Weber and Fields together will be to have missed seeing the most poplar "team" in the entire history of the American stage.

"Hokey-Pokey," the piece in which they are appearing, is a spectacularly staged musical comedy abounding in screamingly funny situations and containing nearly a score of singing and dancing numbers interpreted by one of the most beautiful and one of the liveliest choruses seen in Boston in many years. The costuming is especially elaborate. There are more than a dozen complete changes during the hours of the performance.

Weber and Fields themselves are seen in a number of deliciously funny scenes including their famous pool game satire which they are reviving for the first time in many years.

WILBUR THEATRE.

It is claimed for the attraction at the Wilbur Theatre, beginning its second week Monday evening, June 1, that it is as bright as the sunshine in June and filled to overflowing with the joyfulness of youth. "Sylvia Runs Away," as the play is known, is from the pen of Robert Houarm, a newspaper man of Cleveland and is produced by William A. Brady, who has gathered a cast of well-known players including several who are already established as favorites with Boston theatre-goers. Among the players are Albert Brown, Alice Brady, Geraldine O'Brien, Ned A. Sparks, Elmer Booth, Charles Guise, J. V. Hutchinson, Charles Lothian, Edward Langford, and Charles Homer. Those who have seen the play state that it is charmingly original as to plot and the working out thereof. The Sylvia of the piece runs away from home when things happen there that she cannot endure, and her father offers the wealth of Golconia for her return unharmed. A party of roystering young men who are dead broke believe they recognize the wanderer, and start out to scoop in the reward, but the girl they capture and hold for ransom, as it were, is not the one who is being sought, and all hands immediately find themselves in the midst of troubles of their own, producing situations which are quite funny enough to satisfy the exactions of any person who has a laugh left in him—or her, as the case may be.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

These are remarkable motion pictures at Majestic Theatre, presented every afternoon and evening. In presenting them entitled "How Wild Animals Live," the management is associated with the pioneers of a movement that is about to revolutionize educational methods. Books of natural history and travel, illustrated with numerous photographs, cannot give those lasting impressions of facts which are imprinted on the mind by the living, moving records of the motion picture camera.

These motion pictures show you the beasts of the field and jungle in their methods of living and feeding; and how species prey upon species to preserve their own lives and perpetuated their kind. The photographers have penetrated into the forest and jungle, kept patient watch on banks of streams and in branches of trees—risking health and even life itself, to bring a fuller knowledge of animal existence within the reach and sight of students, scholars, scientists and the general public. The pictures cover a very wide range of animal life in every quarter of the globe and depict a genuine reproduction of how wild animals live, how they feed, how they fight and play.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD

Unique Event to Close Year of Women's Club

This novel event is an open air carnival to be given on the afternoon and evening of Thursday June 11, from 2 to 5 and 7 to 10 p. m. The Carnival consists of conducting automobile parties to the various countries included in the trip and back to the starting point in eighty minutes.

Mrs. Chandler W. Smith will be the hostess at the clubhouse where America will be represented. Amid a profusion of flags, bunting, electric lights, an attractive program and the hospitality of American people, voyagers may register and enter into the festivities of the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann of Goffe street will entertain in true Russian style, and merrie England will be found at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus King, Adams street. Typical Japan will be represented at 102 Grand View avenue, Wollaston, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Stone and as one journeys westward they will arrive at Germany with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Park as the host and hostess. Then travel on to the land of Dutch Cocoa and wooden shoes and find the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fenno, representative of Holland. As one enters the seaport of Jamaica, they will be conducted to the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Doble, South street will be little Italy in full swing studded with bright and catchy music and the ladies receiving in the costumes of the country. Once again the voyagers are conducted to the land of classic and Grecian Goddesses to be received by Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Kitson of Park lane.

The Carnival promises to be unusually attractive as no time, labor or expense has been spared to make each country a scene of splendor. Enthusiasm prevails and with the generous response from citizens co-operating with the use of their automobiles, the committee feel assured the weather man will also be in their favor and their efforts be crowned with success.

The past year for the club has been a busy one each and every committee being active in their respective line of work and now closes with the grande finale bringing together the members from all sections of the city in unity of thought and action.

"THE CARE OF THE BABY."

Congressman Edward Gilmore has secured a number of copies of pamphlet entitled "The care of the Baby" from the United States Public Health Service, which will prove highly beneficial to mothers and those having care of babies. This publication will prove of untold value, at this time, when the hot weather is about to set in, as it tells how to feed, dress, bathe and in other ways care for the baby. The document was prepared by a committee of the American association for the study and prevention of infant mortality. Any person desiring a copy of this pamphlet may secure same by writing to Congressman Edward Gilmore, Washington, D. C.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION

As Told By a Paper Printed at Vera Cruz

Charles S. McLennar, whose Quincy address is Granite street, writes to the Daily Ledger from Vera Cruz, under the date of May 17. He is now serving aboard the U. S. S. Georgia, and says everybody is anxious to see a little action before they return. At present the crew is getting regular liberty at Vera Cruz. Letters addressed to him should be sent care Postmaster, New York City.

Mr. McLennar forwards a copy of the Mexican Herald, published at Vera Cruz under date of May 17. It is the only newspaper in English with a general circulation throughout Mexico. The following editorial from the Herald, on "Our duty to a nation," will be of interest:

"Few if any editors or writers have written more kilometers of matter during the last three years in support of the justice of allowing Mexico to settle her own affairs than we have. We consistently and conscientiously supported in turn administrations of Diaz, Madero and Huerta and urged their own people to do so to the end that peace and order and prosperity might be restored to this unhappy land.

"We supported Porfirio Diaz until his fall believing that his beneficent dictatorship was bringing wealth and stability to a nation that through the centuries had know nothing but revolution and poverty. Education and broadening occupation were gradually fitting more of the people for greater exercise of political rights.

"We supported Madero writing columns of editorials and printing pages of news matter, urging patience upon the Mexican people for the development of his program and it was not until evidence of the corruption surrounding his administration became so notorious and he himself began with weak and inefficient hands to attempt the role of dictator, that we opposed him.

"So it has been with President Huerta.We argued for his recognition, believing that with all his faults he was eminently better qualified to restore order in Mexico than the rebel elements who opposed him. We supported him as long as there was a chance for him to accomplish the pacification of the country. And if we abandon his cause now it is only because there comes a time when the life and property and future happiness of an entire nation must be put above the fortunes of a ruler. It may be said that Huerta has not had a fair show, that he has opposed not only rebels at home, but unfair prejudice abroad, that to local troubles have been added foreign interference that precluded success.

"Grant all this, today the fact is patent that he cannot possibly succeed Victim of circumstances he may be, but it is not his destiny to adjust Mexicos troubles. We may even regret that a brave old man has not had a chance, but no one can be blind to the fact that his course is run. Huerta cannot dominate the situation. The success of a rebel leader would bring no positive or permanent relief.

"We did not advocate intervention while we considered that a chance remained for Mexicans to settle their own difficulties. But Mexico cannot survive further temporizing. It is time, now, to end consideration for individuals and save a people."
